I beg to tell you how I, myself, have been treated by Carinish crofters for the last two years, and I think if Providence has sent me any help that I am needing it.

In the first place, I beg to inform you that I have been residing here for 35 years, and had some cattle, and paid for them for grazing on the hill pasture during summer and autumn, and I fed them in the byre in spring and winter. I had even to pay for a lamb to feed out in the hills. During the last two years the crofters would not take payment, but told me to lift them away. I never refused to pay if they would take it, but they would not. At last they took further steps, and summoned me to a court, a thing which was never done in the Highlands. They wanted me to send them away. Where was I to send them? I did not know, unless they meant me to go and drown them. The prices were low, and the cattle were not worth selling. I think, my Lords, since you are out for administering justice, that the poor cottars will get it as they are needing it, for they are nearly starved, without a place to plant potatoes or corn.

About five years ago, the proprietor gave the cottars a piece of the common ground to plant potatoes in. They did plant some for two years, but the third year the crofters would not allow them to plant any. So that is the way how the poor cottars were treated. Some of the cottars have no cattle, but one of them had a sheep, to get its milk, because he had not a cow, so they sent the sheep to the hills for fear it would be grazing on the common ground.

I hope, my Lords, since you have come, that you will give land to those who are wanting and able to keep it, as soon as possible, for no person knows what the cottars are suffering. There is plenty of land at Carinish, such as the common ground, on which rent was paid before, as crofts. There are three like crofts now, not used at all, and these three would do for some of the 12 cottars of Carinish. But, my Lords, we will take land wherever we get it.

My Lords, I, on my own part, will take one of these crofts, if my Lords would see it suitable, as I have some cattle and could work at it in the house where I am staying.

The other cottars agree to this, and are quite as needful as I, although I did this paper by their order. Any questions that you want to ask, My Lords, I am able to answer them in my own language.—I, am, Lords, Yours truly, (Signed) ARCHIBALD MACDONALD, Cottar, Carinish.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.
Archibald Macdonald.

41,333. What stock have you?—Three cows, a horse, and two sheep.

41,334. Where do you keep these animals?—Sometimes on the hill, and sometimes on the common.

41,335. You keep them on the crofters' ground?—Yes.

41,336. What rent do you pay?—I used to pay for the grazing of the cattle till within the last two years, and now they won't take payment.

41,337. To whom did you pay for the grazing?—To my father-in-law at first, but he died, and after that I just got grazing here and there.

41,338. Are you aware that crofters are prohibited from giving the grazings, not only by the estate regulations but by the law of the country?—I did not know that.

41,339. But you seem to fare fully as well as the crofters, if you can graze all that stock upon their land and pay no rent?—I was paying it till within the last two years, and since then they would not take anything, because crofters would not give grazing. They wanted all the cottars in the township to remove the cattle altogether.

41,340. And very naturally so. There is no doubt your case is plain evidence of the overcrowding in the township by other animals than those belonging to the crofters themselves. You would like to get a croft for yourself?—Yes, I would be very thankful to get one.

41,341. Did you hear the evidence given by the other witnesses?—Yes.

41,342. Do you agree with it?—Yes.

41,343. Is there any other place that you would suggest as being suitable for new holdings than those mentioned by the previous witnesses?—There are no fresh places that I am aware of. There is Cnoc-cuithein that has not been mentioned yet. I would be grateful to get lands anywhere.

41,344. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—How many in Carinish are in the same position as yourself?—Twelve.

41,345. Before the passing of the Crofters Act the crofters were quite willing to give you land?—No, they were not.

41,346. But you got land from them for grazing, did you not?—Yes, except within the last two years.

41,347. And you keep the cattle there still?—Yes, the cattle are there still.

41,348. You stated in the paper that about two years ago the proprietor gave the cottars a piece of the common ground to plant potatoes in?—Yes, he did that; he sent the ground officer to point it out to us.

41,349. Are you aware of his having any right to do that?—I don't know.

41,350. Are you not aware that the common belonged to the crofters, and that they were paying for it?—We were not sure; some said it belonged to the crofters, and others said it belonged to Sir John.

41,351. How did they imagine it was Sir John's when the crofters were paying rent for it?—It was said at the time the Crofters Commission inspected it that it did not belong to the crofters; that it was outside the limit of their crofts.

41,352. But it was not outside the common? They had common as well as arable land?—It was part of the outrun.

41,353. For which they undoubtedly paid rent?—It is likely.

41,354. Are you not aware that it is quite impossible for the crofters to sub-let land, to take money from you for land let to you?—Whoever is in want of anything has only to ask for it to see if he can get it.

41,355. That is not an answer to my question. Are you aware that it is illegal for the crofters to sub-let their land?—I did not know that.

41,356. Are you aware that Sir John circulated notices to the effect that if the crofters did give potato hmaddy, th Uist.

hibald donald.

land or sub-let their lands in any way they would be evicted themselves?—They said so themselves.

41,357. You heard it stated here to-day, did not you?—Yes.

41,358. Have you any doubt about it?—I cannot say.

41,359. Now, when he sent and allotted part of the common ground belonging to the crofters, were the cottars to pay any rent for that?—He did not ask rent from them.

41,360. And has he been asking rent for the house stances?—No.

41,361. Then, is it your opinion that the condition of the cottars is very much worse than that of the crofters?—It is well known that it is.

41,362. Would they be very much the better of getting crofts of their own? Would they be able to make a very much better living?—Yes, they would indeed.

41,363. And the crofters also would be much relieved by the cottars being removed from their ground?—The crofters would have far less trouble.

41,364. And do you think there is sufficient land then in the island to satisfy the needs of all the cottars?—Yes, I think so.

41,365. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—When Sir John put those cottars on the common grazing of this crofter township, did he exact rent at first?—No, he did not ask rent.

41,366. Did the cottars of your quarter look to getting new holdings out of the common grazing of crofting townships, or did they look rather to the tacks, the big farms?—If it would not hurt the crofters much we think we might have some of the lands, but if it would hurt the crofters we would not like that; we would prefer to take it from the farms. It would hurt the farmer less than the crofter.

41,367. Are you aware that the proprietor did put cottars on the common grazings of crofter townships already, and that he made crofters of them?—No, I am not aware of that.

41,368. Are you satisfied that the creation of new crofts on the common grazing of crofting townships would act very prejudicially upon the present crofters?—I believe they would be very much the worse of it, and we would not like that.

41,369. And that being so, is it to the large farms that you look for new holdings?—There is none less to spare.

41,370. Which farm in North Uist would you yourself prefer to see a colony of cottars emigrated to; yourself one of them?—The farm of Griminish, and Airidh-Mhic-Guairidh, and part of the farm of Vallay.

41,371. It is in the north that your hope lies?—Yes, but I would take lands anywhere.

xander clellan.

ALEXANDER MACLELLAN, Loch Efort, North Uist (55).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

41,372. Mr Gordon.—Are you a sub-tenant at Loch Efort?—I live on my mother's croft.

41,373. Have you a house upon it?—Yes.

41,374. Have you part of her land?—Yes.

41,375. What is the size of her croft?—I don't know the extent of the croft.

41,376. What rent does your mother pay?—Two pounds sterling.

41,377. How much stock does she keep upon her croft?—Two cows, six sheep, and two stirks.

41,378. And what stock have you upon your part?—One cow, one calf, and four sheep.

41,379. Has your mother a horse?—No.

41,380. What rent do you pay for your share?—I pay £1 of rent.

41,381. How many crofts are there on Loch Efort?—Thirty-four.

41,382. Are any of the crofts divided except your mother's?—Yes.

41,383. How many?—Four.

41,384. Then there are 34 crofts and 38 crofters?—Yes.

41,385. Are there many cottars in Loch Efort?—Yes. Lochmaddy, North Uist.

41,386. How many?—Six.

41,387. Is your mother's croft of an average size in Loch Efort township?—There are some larger and some smaller. Alexander Maclellan.

41,388. How many crofters would have to be removed from Loch Efort before the crofts would be of a sufficient size?—If the third of them were removed, the rest would be comfortable.

41,389. Would there be room for 24 crofters, do you think?—No, I don't think there would: there were only three originally.

41,390. And the remainder were put there at what time?—When they were evicted from Sollas.

41,391. Do you remember that?—Yes, I was at the battle.

41,392. There was some evidence given to-day in regard to the land immediately opposite the township of Loch Efort, i.e. on the north side of Loch Efort. One witness said there was an old crofting township at Breinish, and also one at Cainish. Do you know that land?—Yes, I know these lands well; they were promised to us when we were sent to Loch Efort.

41,393. Do you consider these lands suitable for new holdings for crofters?—Yes, very suitable.

41,394. How many crofters could you set down there comfortably?—About ten.

41,395. Now, can you tell us anything about the fishing at Loch Efort? Do the present crofters carry on the business of fishing there?—Yes.

41,396. Are most of the crofters fishermen?—Those who remain at home fish, but the younger people are obliged to go away to earn wages elsewhere.

41,397. Do they go to the mainland?—Yes.

41,398. Are they fishermen?—They sometimes go to the fishing, and sometimes to the sea, or work as general labourers in the south.

41,399. Do the steamers come in to Loch Efort at all?—Yes.

41,400. How far do they come in?—More than half the length of the harbour. They used to come in to the pier.

41,401. Where was the pier?—At the head of the Loch.

41,402. On the north side or the south side?—On the south side.

41,403. Do you know the farm of Lee?—Yes.

41,404. Is there any land on that farm suitable for new holdings,—I mean on the Loch Efort side?—There is only room for one or two tenants.

41,405. On the shores of the Loch?—On the south side of Ben Lee, but there is plenty, I suppose, on the north side.

41,406. Do you know the farm of Eaval?—Yes.

41,407. Is there any land suitable for crofters in the south shore of Loch Efort, on the farm of Eaval?—Yes, the whole of Burrival.

41,408. Is there any low land there that would be suitable for cultivation?—Yes, it was cultivated before.

41,409. Near the sea-shore?—Yes.

41,410. That farm is, I think, at present tenanted by Mr Macdonald of Balranald?—Yes.

41,411. And the farm of Lee is in the proprietor's own hands?—Yes.

41,412. What size of crofts would you suggest should be made on the north shore of Loch Efort; would they be fishermen's crofts?—Partly.

41,413. And partly of a size that would keep the tenant working throughout the year?—It is very wild land, and would take a long time to bring under cultivation.

41,414. It is not very suitable for cultivation?—It is suitable enough for cultivation, only it would take some time to reclaim it.

41,415. Now, take the north side of Ben Lee. Is there land on the shores of Lochmaddy here that would be suitable?—Yes.

41,416. Is the land on the north side of Ben Lee better than the land on the south side?—Yes, it is better. The land on the south side is very bold and steep and craggy, but that on the north is better adapted for cultivation.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Alexander Maclellan.

41,417. You think the north side is the best side?—Yes.

41,418. Are you a fisherman yourself?—I fish sometimes.

41,419. Do you know the different harbours here, Lochmaddy and Loch Efort?—Yes.

41,420. How can you account for there not being any fishing at Lochmaddy?—I believe it is for want of material.

41,421. Is it a good harbour?—Yes, I believe it is the best harbour in the island.

41,422. And do you think that if encouragement were given by the proprietor, in the matter of giving stances for fishermen's holdings on the shores of the inlets about Lochmaddy, the fishing industry would be revived?—I should think so, because they have nowhere to live.

41,423. Do you think, if the proprietor were to give off stances there, they would be taken up?—I think so; that is what they say at any rate.

41,424. Can you tell us anything about the land at Liernish?—Yes, I know it. I don't know it very well, but I do know it.

41,425. Is that land let along with the hill of Eaval?—It belongs to the farm of Eaval.

41,426. How far down does the crofters' grazing extend towards Liernish?—There is a chain of lakes, and the march is between these lakes.

41,427. Do you know the west march of Liernish?—Yes.

41,428. Do you know the old township of Cnoc-Chuithein?—Yes.

41,429. Is that on the farm of Liernish?—No.

41,431. Do you know a place called Clett-feora?—Yes, beside Cnoc-Chuithein; that is a crofting township.

41,432. Then Roderick Macaulay occupies the land lying between the crofting township of Clett-feora and the grazing lands of Liernish?—Claddach Carinish intervenes between Liernish and Cnoc-Chuithein.

41,433. Do you think that Cnoc-Chuithein and Liernish would be suitable for new holdings?—Yes.

41,434. Do you know the island of Ronay?—Yes, I have been there.

41,436. Are there any people living on the island?—A shepherd.

41,437. Is there any land on that island suitable for new holdings?—It was all divided into crofts at one time.

41,438. Have you any idea when the crofters were cleared out of it?—No, I have no idea. I was on the south side of the island, and I don't remember much about that part.

41,439. You do not remember seeing crofters in it?—No, but I remember seeing people who had been crofters there.

41,440. There is another place mentioned called Kallin: do you know it?—Yes: I was at service there for a number of years.

41,441. Is that place suitable for crofters' holdings?—Yes, very good.

41,442. How is that place occupied at present?—By Captain Macdonald of Waternish.

41,443. Is that place upon the island of Grimsay?—Yes.

41,444. Do you know the march of the township of Grimsay?—Yes.

41,445. There is a place called Bagh-Mor: is that nearer the march?—Very near it.

41,446. Does the march follow the line of lakes lying between Bagh-Mor and Kenare?—Yes.

41,447. Is Kenare upon the Kallin tack, or is it on the Grimsay township?—It is outside Kallin march.

41,448. It is on the township of Grimsay?—Yes.

41,449. Now, could the fishing industry be followed by crofters living at Kallin and Liernish and the south shores of Ben Eaval?—Yes.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Alexander Maclellan.

41,450. Are the harbours there pretty good?—Yes.

41,451. Are the harbours of Island Ronay safe harbours?—Yes.

41,452. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I think you said that you remember the Sollas evictions?—Yes, I remember the people being thrown down and bruised and battered by the police.

41,453. How long ago is that?—About 42 years ago.

41,454. Do you know what the reason of these evictions was?—It was understood at the time that the place was to be cleared for one Cooper; and the factor took away some cattle and sold them for arrears.

41,455. Would there be any truth in the pretext that the place was not suitable for people?—It is just as suitable as it was before.

41,456. Were the crofters of Sollas in comfortable circumstances when they were there?—Yes.

41,457. Did they pay their rents regularly until the time of the potato failure?—Yes, between the kelp and the other work.

41,458. And do you think their rent was increased during the time of the kelp industry?—Yes, I think it was: the rents were higher then.

41,459. And when the kelp industry failed, and also the potato blight came, did they get any reduction of rent?—No.

41,460. Was it in any way to better their condition that they were removed from Sollas?—No, it was not: they knew very well it was not.

41,461. Were they removed to better land, and did they get larger holdings elsewhere?—No; the houses were pulled down about their ears, and they were dragged out of them and sent away to languish. They were left for a time in mud huts, where they were for a time kept busy in reclaiming the land and sowing it with seed.

41,462. Was that place to which they were sent at all suitable for crofter occupation?—No. They were not left there anyhow; they were sent to Loch Efort.

41,463. Did they reclaim the land at Loch Efort also?—Yes.

41,464. And have they improved very much the land they have now?—Yes, it is very greatly improved: in some places a depth of four peats or moss were taken off, and that land is cultivated now. When I went there there was nothing but houses.

41,465. What sort of houses did they build for themselves on Loch Efort side? What houses have they now?—They first lived in mud houses, but they gradually made stone ones. The original houses were so leaky that many a night they were obliged to be all night baling out the water.

41,466. But have they now fairly comfortable houses?—Yes.

41,467. All put up by their own industry?—All put up by ourselves: there was no help from the estate. In fact, they did not want them to put up houses at all, and they were prohibited from putting up byres or stables.

41,468. Do you think that these lands were cleared rather because they were suitable for forming into large farms, than because they were unsuitable for crofters? Is it because the lands were too good for them that they were removed?—I think it was in order to make one farm of it.

41,469. Because the land was so good, it was coveted?—Yes.

41,470. How many tenants were in the Sollas district, do you know?—Twenty in Sollas, and ten in Dunskellar. I have a few words more to say. The witness Mackinnon spoke about the people in Loch Efort being more comfortable there than they were in Sollas. Some of the tenants were obliged to build four houses before they could get a suitable house, and they are not more comfortable than they were in Sollas. When the people were sent away they were promised the lands of Langash and Breinish, but they have not got any of them to-day.

ALEXANDER MORRISON, Crofter, Loch Efort (61.)

41,471. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

41,472. Have you heard the evidence given by the last witness?—Yes.

41,473. Do you agree with what he stated?—Yes.

41,474. Tell us the size of your own croft?—I have two crofts, but they are intersected by a large fresh-water lake, so that I think 10 acres each is about the utmost extent.

41,475. What stock have you?—Two cows, a horse, and about 12 sheep.

41,476. There was one point which we did not get from the last witness. What hill pasture is attached to the township of Loch Efort?—It is very bad hill pasture we have; scarcely any hill pasture at all, it is all cut up by the feet of the cattle. [The Secretary.—The total extent is 1923 acres and is common to Loch Efort and Claddach Carinish. There are 30 crofters' holdings in Loch Efort and 9 in Claddach Carinish.]

41,477. The township grazings of Claddach Carinish and Loch Efort divide the tack of Liernish belonging to Captain Macdonald from the tack of Cnoc-Dhuibhean belonging to Mr Macaulay?—Yes.

41,478. Are you a fisherman?—Yes.

41,479. Is Loch Efort a safe harbour? Has it a good anchorage?—Yes, very good.

41,480. Do you find your crofts too small?—Some of them are too small, particularly those that are cut up by fresh-water lochs.

41,481. How much of your land is arable?—About four acres.

41,482. Do most of the people in the township engage more or less in fishing?—Yes.

41,483. Do you fish for white fish?—Both white fish and herring,—long line fishing.

41,484. Are there good-sized boats in the township?—We have no good fishing boats.

41,485. Have you boats large enough for going to the white fishing as far as the island of Canna?—They could do nothing: they are too small for that.

41,486. Is there no boat of that size in your township?—No, not one.

41,487. Can you not get boats from the Government?—No, we never asked for them.

41,488. Is there any difficulty in getting out and in to Loch Efort?—No, it is quite easy.

41,489. There is no difficulty with wind or tide?—No.

41,490. Do you know Lochmaddy?—Yes, very well.

41,491. Is it a good safe harbour?—Yes, some parts of it, very good.

41,492. How do you account for there being no fishermen in Lochmaddy?—Because there are no suitable places to reside in near it; and those who live near are not up to fishing.

41,493. Do you think if facilities were given for house sites here, fishermen would come to Lochmaddy?—I doubt whether they would be able to live by fishing alone unless they had a bit of land along with it.

41,494. You heard what Mr Maclellan said about the land on the north side of Loch Efort?—Yes.

41,495. Do you agree with what he said?—Yes.

41,496. You think the north shores of the loch are suitable for new crofts?—Some of it in the middle is not suitable for new crofts, but both ends are.

41,497. And would the north and south sides of Ben Lee be suitable for them?—The south side of Lee is not suitable, but the north side is.

41,498. Have you anything to add to what the other witnesses have said?—I have nothing more to add.

41,499. Tell us how many crofts of sufficient size you think could be formed in your township? How many would have to be removed from Loch Efort before the crofts would be of a size that you would consider sufficient?—It would keep about a dozen; not more than that.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Farquhar Macdonald.

FARQUHAR MACDONALD, Herd, Tighary, North Uist (44).

41,500. Mr Gordon.—Are you the herd for the township of Tighary?—Yes.

41,501. Have you a croft there?—No.

41,502. Are you a cottar in the township?—I am grasskeeper for the township, and am paid partly by grazing the land.

41,503. Have you any stock?—Yes: three cows, a horse, and ten sheep.

41,504. Do you pay any rent?—I pay for six months in the year.

41,505. Did you hear what the other witnesses said?—Yes.

41,506. Have you anything to add yourself?—No, I have not anything particular to say.

41,507. Is the township of Tighary very thickly peopled?—Yes.

41,508. It is a pretty good township, is it not?—Middling.

41,509. Is there any land in the neighbourhood of the township which you think could be formed into crofter holdings?—Griminish is the most suitable piece of land that I know.

41,510. Do you think Griminish would be a suitable place for a new township?—Yes.

41,511. Is there a general desire among the tenants of Tighary for larger crofts than they now occupy?—Yes.

41,512. And do you think any of the crofters would be willing to remove from Tighary to Griminish, or to any other place where holdings could be got?—Yes, I believe they would, because a number of the Tighary tenants were originally tenants in Griminish.

41,513. Are there many cottars in the township of Tighary?—Yes.

41,514. How many?—Sixteen.

41,515. How do they make their living?—Some of them fish, some go to the militia, and others work on the farm of Balranald and elsewhere.

41,516. They live by labouring at home and abroad?—Yes.

41,517. Would the cottars be willing to take holdings if they got them?—Yes, they would indeed.

41,518. Is there a general desire among them to get land?—Yes, the majority of them would like it.

41,519. Do the cottars in Tighary have stock?—About the half of them have some stock: some have one cow and a horse, others two cows and a horse; but some have no stock at all, and pay no rent.

41,520. Do you think they would be able to stock crofts if they got them?—Yes, most of them would.

41,521. What is the average size of the Tighary crofts?—Some of them have 12 acres and others 23 acres.

41,522. Have they any hill pasture?—Yes.

41,523. They have a pretty large extent of hill pasture, have they not?—Yes, a good piece.

41,524. Have they a sheep stock?—Yes.

41,525. How many sheep have they got on an average?—Some have a score, others have not half a dozen.

41,526. How many crofters are there?—Sixteen. There are 16 crofters but only 20 crofts.

41,527. Would there be 300 sheep on the hill altogether?—No.

41,528. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Do you know the crofting township of Houghary?—Yes.

41,529. What rent do the crofters there pay on an average?—I don't know, but there are people present from Houghary who can tell.

41,530. Are they small crofts?—Yes.

41,531. Is there land adjoining that township that could have been added to Houghary, very much to the advantage of the township?—Yes.

41,532. What land?—Ard-an-Runnair.

41,533. Does it form part of a tack to-day?—Yes.

41,534. What tack?—Balranald.

41,535. Is that land suitable for cultivation?—Yes, I believe it is: it was considered so very suitable for cultivation that they were deprived of it.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Farquhar Macdonald.

41,536. Is it because it was under lease that the crofters of Houghary did not fight for it before the Crofters Commission?—There was some talk about applying for it at the time, but I don't know whether it was really done or not.

41,537. Do you believe in the abolition of leases for the erection of new crofts and the extension of holdings?—That would be our wish and our most earnest desire.

Alexander Macdonald.

ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Agricultural Labourer, Houghary (54).

41,538. Mr Gordon.—Are you a cottar at Houghary?—Yes.

41,539. Have you any land at all?—No.

41,540. Where do you get work?—Most that I do is on land.

41,541. To whom do you work?—Balranald, and on the club land of Kilmuir.

41,542. Did you hear the evidence given by Farquhar Macdonald?—Yes.

41,543. Do you agree with what he said?—Yes.

41,544. Is the township of Houghary congested?—Yes, there are too many people in it.

41,545. Is it one of those runrig townships?—It is not formed on the same principle as Hosta.

41,546. They have separate crofts?—Yes, the half of them on the machair and the half on the upland.

41,547. How many crofts are there?—I think it is 18. [The Secretary.—There were 20 separate holdings before the Crofters Commission; the total extent arable of these holdings is 187 acres, with 15 acres of outrun and 369 acres of township common. The crofters have also a share in the general common of 1027 acres along with Hosta, Balemartin, and Tighary. The total 'present rent' of £91, 10s. was reduced to £65, 9s.]

41,548. Do the people of Houghary engage in fishing at all?—No.

41,549. How do they get their living?—By working the lands, and what does not grow for themselves they import from Glasgow.

41,550. But where do they get the money to pay for what they import?—I cannot say, but they do the best they can.

41,551. Is there a general desire in the township for larger holdings?—Yes.

41,552. You heard what the last witness said about Ard-an-Runnair?—Yes.

41,553. It has been a part of the farm of Balranald within your memory?—Yes.

41,554. So there is no other land near Houghary that could be got for an extension of the present holdings?—Nothing but Aird-an-Runnair and the machair at Penmor, which is also attached to the Balranald lands. It originally belonged to Houghary, and the marches are still visible although now attached to the tack: also the hill of Burrival was attached to the same farm.

41,555. There is no other suitable land in the neighbourhood?—Not nearer than Griminish.

41,556. How many of the present crofters would have to be removed from Houghary before the crofts would be of a sufficient size?—The half of them.

41,557. And you think if the crofts were double the present size the people would be comfortable?—They would be very much better off.

Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—There is a matter that I should like to bring before the notice of the Commission. I find from the Valuation Roll for the present year that Mr Arthur J. Campbell Orde is entered as proprietor of Balelone, Scolpeg, Vallay, and Griminish. I have heard Mr Orde say here that he had no authority to represent anyone at this meeting. I find that Mr Orde is present, and I should like you to ask him whether he is prepared to come forward to represent himself as proprietor here, to assist the Royal Commission in eliciting very important facts.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Alexander Macdonald.

Mr Gordon.—This is a matter for Mr Orde to judge for himself.

Mr Donald Macrae.—He is here, the proprietor of these lands, and he said that he had no authority to appear on behalf of the proprietor.

Mr A. J. Campbell Orde.—I may explain that I was asked by the Chairman whether anyone was here to represent my father to-day, and I answered that I had no authority to do so.

Mr Gordon.—That is so, sir.

Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I think the question really was whether there was anybody to represent the estate of North Uist; and I understand from what is now said, Mr Orde, that you represent a good deal of the estate of North Uist yourself.

Mr Orde.—I have two of the tacksmen's farms, that is all, and I am tenant of another farm, but the estate is my father's.

Rev. Mr Maccallum.—But you are proprietor of some of the lands?

Mr Orde.—I am proprietor of the farms of Vallay and Balelone. Griminish is part of Vallay Farm.

Mr Munro.—But you decline to make any statement, Mr Orde?

Mr Orde.—As far as we have gone yet, I hardly see any reason for doing so.

Mr Gordon.—It is quite optional on your part of course.

Mr Orde.—I should be very glad to be of any help to the Commission, but, as far as I can see, there has been no difficulty hitherto.

Mr Gordon.—You see no reason to interfere?

Mr Orde.—Not yet.

Donald Maclean.

DONALD MACLEAN, Cottar, Kallin, Grimsay, North Uist (58)—examined.

41,558 Mr Gordon.—You are a cottar at Kallin?—Yes.

41,559. Do you occupy any land at all?—No.

41,560. Is your house upon the farm which is occupied by Captain Macdonald of Waternish?—No, our township has nothing to do with Kallin. Our township is Grimsay: Kallin is only part of Grimsay.

41,561. But Kallin is said to be let to Captain Macdonald of Waternish along with the island of Ronay; and I ask whether your house is on the land let to Captain Macdonald of Waternish?—No, it is on the Grimsay land.

41,562. Are you in the township of Grimsay?—Yes.

41,563. How many crofts are in Grimsay?—Eighteen full ones and five half-ones. [The Secretary.—The Crofters Commission dealt with 25 holdings in the Island of Grimsay, 11 in Airdnastruban, 3 in Rhudubh, 3 in Scotven, and 8 in Gearraidh-dubh.

41,564. Which of these townships is your own?—Airdnastruban.

41,565. Did you hear what the other witnesses said who came from that part of the country?—Yes.

41,566. And do you agree with what they said?—Yes.

41,567. Is there a general desire in your township for additional land?—Yes.

41,568. Is it for additional pasture land or for agricultural land?—Both for grazing and for agricultural.

41,569. Are there many in your township?—Fourteen.

41,571. Do the cottars generally engage in fishing?—Yes.

41,572. That is their means of livelihood?—Yes.

41,573. But they would like to get some land along with the fishing?—Yes.

Alexander Fraser.

ALEXANDER FRASER, Crofter, Boreray Island, North Uist—examined.

41,574. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter at Boreray?—Yes.

41,575. Is that a crofting township?—Yes.

41,576. What number of crofts are there?—About 20, but in some cases there are two families living in the one croft.

41,577. How many families are there?—About 30 crofters and cottars.

41,578. How many cottars are there?—About 10, I believe. [The Secretary.—The Crofters Commission dealt with 22 holdings in Boreray, the total extent being 192 acres arable, no outrun, and 436 acres of common. The old rent of £100 was reduced to £68.]

41,579. Are you a fisherman there?—Yes.

41,580. Are most of the crofters fishermen?—A good many of them.

41,581. Is there a harbour on the west side of the island?—No, except a very bad harbour. We are expecting to get a pier soon: we applied for it and there is every prospect of getting a pier. We hope that will improve the fishing industry.

41,582. Is that upon the east side of the island?—Yes.

41,583. Do you find that the township is congested?—Very much so.

41,584. You have a difficulty in making a living, have you?—It is hard work to make a living.

41,585. Have you any big boats suitable for the fishing?—No, there is not a harbour for them as yet.

41,586. Now, suppose you could get small crofts in the neighbourhood of Lochmaddy where there is ample harbour accommodation, do you think that some of the Boreray people would come here and build houses, and follow the fishing?—I well believe they would; that is to say if they would get as much land as would make their circumstances a good deal better than they are. There is no use leaving one bad place and going to another bad place.

41,587. But in a case like this where the extent of land available is extremely limited the people who would build houses here would require to take to fishing as the main part of their subsistence?—Yes.

41,588. Now, do you think you would find men in Boreray or elsewhere in the island who would be content to follow the fishing as their main industry, and be content also with a small portion of potato land and a cow's grass?—I believe the crofters would hardly be pleased with such a small patch of land as that.

41,589. Do you think you would not find people in North Uist who would willingly devote their whole time to fishing?—I think not.

41,590. They don't follow the fishing in this country the same as they do on the east coast, say, Morayshire?—No.

41,591. The fishermen in Morayshire, Banffshire, and Aberdeenshire have no land?—No, but perhaps a few cottars here who have no land, and who engage in the lobster fishing, might take such a holding.

41,592. There are not many people in any part of the island who go as far as Canna for white fish?—No.

41,593. And you think there would not be people found on the island who would devote their time to that?—No.

41,594. Therefore, there is no use of speaking about any fishing village in which there is not a sufficient quantity of land to keep at least three or four cows?—They would require that, and a horse or so.

41,595. I am afraid the habit here is to keep too many horses?—Well, I don't know.

41,596. Did you hear the evidence we have already had about the farm of Grimsay?—I am not so well acquainted there.

41,597. Do you know of any land in your own neighbourhood that you think suitable?—Plenty land.

41,598. Where?—All the way from Sollas to Cheesebay, to the Minch, including several big farms, Sollas, Granetote, Trumisgarry, and Newton.

41,599. We heard a good deal about Sollas and Granetote; do you think these two farms would make good crofting townships?—Yes.

41,600. And Trumisgarry?—Well, hardly so good.

41,601. Would not there be a want of arable land there in proportion to the hill ground?—Oh, there is a good deal of arable land.

41,602. It was not the same solid lump of ground as there is in Sollas and Granetote?—Well, no.

41,603. And have you anything to say about the farm of Newton?—Any amount of land there.

41,604. Is not the farm of Newton principally under cultivation?—No, very little of it is under cultivation; only sheep and grouse. I would say not the tenth part of it is under cultivation.

41,605. No, not the hill ground, but the great bulk of land is on the north side of the road?—That is just a border to the Atlantic.

41,606. The greater part of it is under cultivation?—Yes, and Clachan too.

41,607. Now, do you know anything about the island of Berneray?—I have seen the place, and have lived on it. I was through it.

41,608. Is there a good harbour at Bays Loch?—Very good.

41,609. Do you think that the south or west end of the island of Berneray would be a suitable place for fishermen's holdings?—Yes.

41,610. Is the township of Bruist congested?—I believe so.

41,611. Is there anything else that you would like to say?—We were trying to get an enlargement to our holdings, as much as we could: we have been before the Crofters Commission, applying for pieces of land on the Newton Farm; and, in fact, we got it from Commissioner Macintyre, — everything was settled, and we thought it was our own, but Sir John appealed to the three Commissioners and we lost the place, for which we were very sorry.

41,612. What place did you apply for?—We applied for two places, such as Screvan—

41,613. That is next Berneray Island?—Yes. Then we applied for and got the island of Stromay, but lost it on appeal.

41,614. Do you know why you lost it?—No, I don't know, but we were very sorry to lose it.

41,615. Was it for peat pasture that you wanted it?—Yes, and for grazing too. We have a very narrow place where we are.

41,616. You have no peat land where you are?—No, nor heather.

41,617. The Secretary informs me that he has looked up the Crofters Commission Report, and finds that the application was finally refused on the ground of what was called 'contiguity;' it was too far away from you?—If we had applied for another place I suppose we would not have done any better. We are worse off than any other part of the country; we are congested, and the cottars are worse off than the crofters. They are quite willing to leave and to get lots.

41,618. Both the crofters and the cottars would be willing to leave?—A great many of them.

41,619. A sufficient number would be willing to leave to make the township suitable for the remainder?—I believe so.

41,620. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Can you tell us what townships there were on Newton Farm?—Every bit of it was townships at one time; the whole of it was under crofters.

41,621. And do you know when they left?—I believe Newton was constituted a farm about the year 1830 or 1832. It was then taken up by one Sheriff Maclachlan. He was the first that went into Newton Farm, but it was of small size then. Through time Loch Portan and Cheesebay which were full of crofters were added to Newton Farm, the crofters being chased away.

41,622. When was that addition made?—That was after the year 1840,—I don't know the exact date, but it was about that time.

41,623. How many were removed do you think from these places?—I cannot say; I was rather young at the time.

41,624. Then, has there been any other addition made since then?—I understand that Clachan and Reumis-

Lochmaddy, North Uist.
Alexander Fraser.

garry were occupied by Balranald for a length of time, and these were added again to Newton Farm.

41,625. Do you know at what date they were added to it?—I am not very sure of the date; I think it was Sir John Orde or Mr Orde, but I do not recollect very well. If I am not mistaken I believe it was in Mr Macdonald, the factor's time, that it was added to Newton. Clachan was a farm before the year 1840, but there was an addition made to it after that of the name of Reumisgarry; that was between Mr Macaulay's place and there.

41,626. Was Reumisgarry a crofting township?—Yes, it was a crofting township until after the year 1840, but Clachan was a farm before that.

41,627. Reumisgarry was added to it then?—After that.

41,628. Can you give us any idea as to the number of people that were in Reumisgarry?—No, I was rather young at the time.

41,629. Do you think then that the whole of Newton Farm is suitable for occupation by crofters?—Oh, yes, I have not seen a bit of it but what is suitable enough for crofters; in fact, all the best places in Uist were taken up for farms, and all the worst left for crofts.

41,630. Because they were good they were taken for farms?—Yes, and the people were chased away; and they left the worst places to the last.

41,631. I suppose at the time the Trumisgarry church was built, there was a large population in that district?—A very large population; I don't remember of that myself, but I understand the place was full of crofters at that time.

41,632. I suppose there are not people there that would fill that church now?—Very few people about there now; only herds and shepherds and one thing and another.

41,633. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—How many crofters are in Boreray?—The place is put for about 20, but some of these crofts have two crofters.

41,634. Are some of the crofts sub-divided?—Yes, they are sub-divided, although not in the proprietor's book.

41,635. Did the whole of these join in the application for the land at Stromay?—Not at first, but in the end we did. Mr Wilson there knows about it.

41,636. Was this island of Stromay a part of the farm of Newton?—Yes.

41,637. In that case you served notices upon Sir John Orde and Mr Orde,—upon the proprietor and upon the tenant of Newton Farm, did not you?—We just applied to the Commission for the place: we took the usual means as legally as we could.

41,638. Who appeared before the Crofters Commission to object to your application?—Sir John.

41,639. Did Mr Orde?—No, I don't think he did; it was Sir John.

41,640. What grounds of objection did he state?—Oh, I suppose, he was stating that it would injure the letting value of his farm, and one thing and another.

41,641. And Commissioner Macintyre gave it to you and fixed the rent?—Yes, and it was published in the paper, that it was given to 13 of the Boreray crofters; and then the next thing we heard was that the matter was appealed.

41,642. Who appealed?—Likely Sir John; we did not hear who it was.

41,643. Did you see the final order issued by the three Commissioners?—Yes, we got notice of that, and we were very sorry indeed; we were not proud of getting it.

41,644. Did Mr Macintyre join with Sheriff Brand and with Mr Hosack in upsetting his own previous decision?—I don't know indeed; I believe he did. I may add about our own place that it is so small that we cannot keep even a horse. Our township is very much congested, and is getting worse every year. The soil is very light and we have to buy peats from Mr Orde. Of course, we got the peat stance from Mr Orde for five days' labour or 10s. of cash for every family, and, in fact, we were glad to get it for that sum. We were very thankful to him for the same, because we could hardly live.

JOHN MACASKILL, Crofter, Malaclett, North Uist (47)—examined.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.
John Maccaskill.

41,645. Mr Gordon.—How many crofters are there in Malaclett?—Twelve.

41,646. What is the average size of the crofts?—Fifteen or twenty acres.

41,647. Is the bulk of that arable? [The Secretary.—There were 15 holdings dealt with by the Crofters Commission. These extended to 196 acres arable, 16 acres outrun, with a township common of 191 acres, and a share along with ten other townships in 10,000 acres of general common.]

41,648. Your arable land is of pretty good quality, I think?—Only middling. Practically it grows no potatoes, hence the necessity of paying for suitable plots on the large farm.

41,649. Is your township congested, or your crofts too small?—Very small.

41,650. Do you live exclusively upon your crofts, or do you fish?—No.

41,651. You live mostly by your crofts?—Yes; but the crofts are too small, and we are obliged to work for the large farmers for additional pieces of land at exorbitant charges.

41,652. What stock have you yourself?—I have five cows.

41,653. Any horses?—Two horses.

41,654. Any sheep?—Twenty sheep.

41,655. Do you keep the sheep on the hill?—Yes.

41,656. I suppose there is nothing of the nature of a 'club farm' on this island,—each man keeps his own few sheep. Have you a common shepherd?—No.

41,657. Who attends to the sheep on the hill?—There is no shepherd at present.

41,658. How do you manage your sheep? Do you clip all in one day or in different days?—All in one day.

41,659. And do you all dip in one day?—We smear, we do not dip.

41,660. And how do you manage the wintering; are they wintered down in the low grounds?—Sometimes on the hill and sometimes on the low ground, where they are hand-fed.

41,661. But you winter the whole stock at home?—They are all wintered on the farm.

41,662. During the winter time do they attempt to separate their small flocks and to keep their own sheep on their own crofts, or do they generally keep the whole flock together?—They are all mixed together as in summer.

41,663. Have you not got a shepherd in the winter time?—We have no shepherd in winter, and we have no shepherd now. There was some talk of engaging a shepherd but it has never been done.

41,664. Are you not troubled with your sheep straying?—Yes, some of them do stray.

41,665. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Did the township of Malaclett apply to the Crofters Commission for an enlargement of holdings?—Yes.

41,666. Did you find that the farm of which you applied for a part was represented by Sir John Orde to have been sold to his son, and that being part of another estate the Commission had no power to deal with it?—Yes, we heard some talk about that. There was a more convenient piece of land than that, though—the farm of Grenitote. This farm we could work from our present holdings.

JOHN MACASKILL, Crofter, Berneray, South Harris (56). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

John Macaskill.

41,667. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter in Berneray?—Yes.

41,668. Are you a fisherman also?—Sometimes.

41,669. Are you in the township of Bruist?—No, Risgarry.

41,670. Is that township very congested? Are the crofts small?—Yes, as small as they can be.

41,671. How many crofters are there in Berneray?—Twenty-two.

41,672. And how many cottars?—Sixty-seven.

41,673. Have these cottars any stock?—A few of them have.

41,674. And do they keep their stock on the crofters' land?—Yes.

41,675. What stock do the cottars generally have?—Some of them have a cow and a horse, others a cow without a horse.

41,676. What stock have you?—I keep a horse and a cow, but I keep another horse and cow, for which I pay separately.

41,677. Do the cottars generally pay anything to the crofters for the grazing of their stock?—Yes.

41,678. Have you any idea what number of stock there is on the part of the land that is under crofters?—About 50 cattle altogether in Risgarry.

41,679. How many in the whole crofting townships?—It is the crofting part I mean, in Risgarry and Bruist.

41,680. Fifty cattle, and how many horses?—About 40 horses.

41,681. Have you any sheep?—About a dozen sheep.

41,682. Then, there may be two or three hundred sheep altogether?—Yes, about that.

41,683. Is there a desire for larger holdings among the crofters generally?—Yes, the crofters would like to have more or less, and so would the cottars; they applied for it long ago.

41,684. Is there any land on the other part of the island that would be suitable for new holdings?—Yes, very suitable.

41,685. How is that land occupied at present?—By Roderick Campbell, Harris.

41,686. It is under a tenant?—Yes.

41,687. How many people were on that part of the island?—About 20.

41,688. Have you any idea how many there would be upon the crofting part of it?—I don't know the population of our part.

41,689. But there will be at least a couple of hundred?—Over 300.

41,690. Whether is the crofting township or the farm the larger part of the island?—The farm is the larger part and the better part.

41,691. There are only 20 people upon the better part and 300 people upon the smaller portion?—Yes.

41,692. To whom does the island belong?—To Lord Dunmore.

41,693. Did you ever apply to the Crofters Commission for an extension of your holdings?—Yes, we did. Commissioner Macintyre twice visited the island.

41,694. Was your application refused?—We did not get the lands.

41,695. Did he say why?—They did not tell us. We sent some of our stock there on one occasion, and as a result some of us were imprisoned. [The Secretary.—The application was refused because the rent of the farm was less than £100.]

41,696. Does the farmer reside on the island?—No.

MALCOLM MACLEOD, Cottar, Berneray, South Harris (53).

41,697. Mr Gordon.—Are you a cottar in Berneray?—Yes.

41,698. Have you a statement to submit?—Yes, in Gaelic.

41,699. Mr Gordon asked the delegate to hand the statement in. It was as follows:—

'A DHAOINE-UAISLE,—Tha mi air son, ma's e sin 'bhur toil, gu'n eisd agus gu'n gabh sibh bhuam beagan 'iomraidh air cor na bheil gun leud troidhe aca de 'thalamh air son an lòin a thoirt as ann an Eilean 'Bhearnaraidh; agus as deigh dhuibh amharc thairis 'air ar suidheachadh tha dòchas againn gu'n cur sibh 'sinn ann an seilbh air an fhearann a bha air a thoirt 'bho ar n-athraichean. 'CALUM MACLEOID.'

41,700. Were you appointed a delegate at any public meeting?—Yes, five years ago.

41,701. You were not appointed to come before us and give evidence?—Yes, I was appointed on this occasion also.

41,702. Does this statement which you have handed in represent the views of the other cottars on the island of Berneray?—Yes, we are just as one man.

41,703. The last witness told us there were upwards of 60 cottars on the island. How many do you say there are?—Seventy. They are getting more numerous every day.

41,704. Are most of these cottars heads of families, or are there a good many widows amongst them?—Principally men, but there are a few women.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Malcolm Macleod.

41,705. How do the men make their livelihood?—By fishing.

41,706. They do not go for white fish, do they?—No, only lobster fishing.

41,707. Do they go to the herring fishing?—A few, but it is very little we do in that way.

41,708. Is there a general desire among the cottars for crofts?—Yes, ever since the passing of the Crofters Act. The cottars are asking it, but they are earning the displeasure of those in power.

41,709. Have you asked land from the proprietor or his agent?—Yes, we asked it of him, and he promised it to us in his own house at Rodel.

41,710. Who did?—Lord Dunmore.

41,711. But he did not give you anything?—He gave us a promise, but nothing else.

41,712. You never got the land?—We did not.

41,713. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Do you agree with what the former witnesses said as to the comparative value of the land held by the crofters and the land held by the farmers?—Everybody knows that what the farmer has is better; that is why the crofters were deprived of it. The crofting part is full of rocks.

41,714. What is the rent paid by the farmer for his farm? We are told that an enlargement was refused because it was under £100?—I don't know what the present rent is, but in 1885 the rent was £140. The law provided that no land should be interfered with that was under £100 of rent, so these lands were divided into two lots; the islands in connection with Borve were made one lot, for which £40 of rent was charged, and the remainder was rented at £100.

41,715. How are these islands held now?—By the same tenant and the same proprietor.

41,716. I see that the rent entered for Borve is £80, and your 'fair rent' for the crofting part of it is £69, 2s.: which of the two do you think is more fairly rented?—I know that Risgarry is more highly rented than Borve, but Borve is twice as good as Risgarry.

41,717. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—There is a large number of cottars in this island?—There are 335 of a population. There are 70 cottar families.

41,718. Supposing the lands of Borve were made available for new holdings, is there good arable land for crofts, and a good proportional share of hill grazing to attach to those crofts?—Yes, but if a person were hungry he would be thankful for a small portion, even though he did not get enough.

41,719. Is it a suitable place for making crofts?—We think so, at any rate. There are no houses on it except the house of the farmer who rents it.

41,720. If it was offered to the cottars, would they be able to erect their own houses there?—Yes, but we thought that for the first year they should get some help in paying their rents.

41,721. Supposing the rent was fixed in such a way as that they would sit easy the first year, with practically no rent; would they be able by their own industry and otherwise to erect the buildings without any Government assistance?—I think most of them could. I know that some of them won't build a house supposing they were left outside for ever.

41,722. How many of these cottars do you think would be able to live in fairly comfortable circumstances in Borve?—There were 40 crofters there previous to 1848, and then the number was reduced to 20. They were only left in possession for five years. The rent paid by the original 40 was laid on the 20.

41,723. But did the 20 get the lands which were occupied by the 40?—Yes, but it was too dear.

41,724. Were the 40 able to live comfortably there?—I cannot say, I was very young at the time.

41,725. Were the 20 able to live comfortably there?—Yes, I was there myself. I was about ten years old before I left.

41,726. Was the rent they were compelled to pay a rack rent?—It was on account of its being too heavily rented that they left it.

41,727. Did they leave voluntarily, or were they evicted?—They were evicted and deprived of their stock by the proprietor and the ground officer.

41,728. Because they fell into arrear on a rack rent?—Yes. All the cattle were driven off and sold except our cattle and those belonging to another tenant. They were put within the walls of a house and kept there because we were not able to pay for the lands.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Malcolm Macleod.

41,729. Who sold the cattle?—The factor and the ground officer.

41,730. Had they a Sheriff's warrant for doing it?—I don't know: I was very young at the time.

41,731. Who was the proprietor?—Lord Dunmore.

41,732. Are some of the cottars in Berneray willing, in the event of all the land in Borve being given as far as it goes, to migrate to suitable lands in another part of the country?—No, they would not go to any other place but Berneray: they would not like it.

41,733. Do you believe that Borve is sufficient for the 70 cottar farms?—Not if they were all to get some, but it would be a help along with the fishing.

41,734. Is the Borve side of the island of Berneray a suitable place for prosecuting the fishing?—The landing place is not in Borve, it is in the middle of the island, between Borve and Risgarry. There is only one bay; when the wind blows from one direction the boats are left on the one side of the bay, and when it blows from the other they are left on the other side.

41,735. If cottars were settled in Borve, would they be able to prosecute the fishing?—Yes, I have seen cottars selling hundreds of barrels of potatoes raised in Borve while the late Macdonald had it.

41,736. Do you believe that these cottars, if they got the land, would be able between the land at a fair rent and the fishing to live as comfortably as the 22 crofters who are in Berneray?—Yes, and much more comfortably.

41,737. Because the land is better?—Yes, and what they would do at the fishing.

41,738. Has anything been done by the estate to assist or develop the fishing industry in that island?—No, nothing.

41,739. Do steamers call there?—No, the steamers cannot call there.

Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Before Mr Wilson's * evidence is taken, I should like to submit a motion,—which is, that the Royal Commission invite Mr Orde to come forward and assist them by giving evidence; and that in the event of Mr Orde refusing to give evidence the Royal Commission exercise the powers conferred upon them under the Royal Warrant,—which power they claimed and exercised at Glen Urquhart last year,—and ordain Mr Orde to appear and answer questions.

Mr Gordon.—I am not disposed to adopt that course, but I invite Mr Orde now to come forward if he chooses, leaving it to him to do so or not, just as he pleases.

Mr Orde.—I stated already that I was quite willing to be of any help to the Commissioners, and when the surveyor came round I helped him to the best of my ability with the marches of the different farms. Beyond that I do not see how I could be of any use to the Commission. I know very little of the working of the affairs of the estate, and I do not see that I would have any right to speak, or to act for the estate without any authority.

Mr Gordon (to Mr Orde).—You have not hitherto taken any part in the general management of the estate?—Mr Orde.—No, I may say certainly not. I have sometimes been asked for my advice, but that was simply privately.

Mr Macrae.—Mr Commissioner, objections have been lodged to applications by crofter townships for an enlargement of holdings, on the ground that while the crofts were on the estate of Sir John Orde, the lands applied for were on the estate of Mr Orde. Mr Wilson, solicitor, Lochmaddy, who appeared as agent for the crofters, stated before the Commission that there was no deed of sale, and that the transference of the lands from the name of Sir John Orde to that of Mr Orde was a bogus and fictitious transfer. That statement was made before the Crofters Commission in Sir John Orde's presence, and the Crofters Commission gave effect to the objections on the ground that Mr Orde was a very extensive proprietor in North Uist. If Mr Orde now declines to come forward, I move that the Royal Commission exercise the powers which they possess under the Royal Warrant, which powers they claimed openly and put in force in Glen Urquhart, and ordain him to come forward and give evidence.

Mr Gordon.—I don't think the cases are at all parallel. On the occasion you refer to, you had been present and had made your presence felt at the inquiry in Glen Urquhart in the cross-examination of a witness, in which something was brought out of which now I forget the exact import, but to which one of the Commissioners took exception, and he asked the Chairman that you should be called on to substantiate the statement which appeared to emanate from you. In the present case Mr Orde's presence here may or may not be as a proprietor: he may be here simply as a member of the community who came to listen to the court; and for my part I do not see what benefit the Commission could derive from any statement which Mr Orde could make. I, therefore, decline to order Mr Orde to submit himself for examination, but I invite him to come forward if he has anything to say.

Rev. Mr Maccallum.—There is no doubt that it is an important point that has been referred to, that these extensions could not be carried out on account of Mr Orde being proprietor and the crofters being on his father's estate; and it would certainly be very desirable that that point should be cleared up. I think it is very important, if Mr Orde has any statement to make with regard to the objections brought forward to the extension, that he should do so now because the matter has come up in our inquiry to-day. We have been told that the applications were opposed on that ground. We have also heard evidence that the properties standing in the name of Mr Orde are very suitable for crofter occupation, and, undoubtedly, as he is here present and has heard all these statements, I think it is very important that he should come forward to make a statement.

Mr Munro.—But Mr Orde, I understand, says that he declines to come forward, and in coming to that decision he is quite within his right. Now, I should like to put a question to Mr Macrae if he has no objection. [Mr Macrae.—None whatever]. Would you kindly mention what the incident was which took place in Glen-Urquhart upon which you now found? I would like to have my memory refreshed as to what exactly took place between you and the Chairman on that occasion.

Mr Macrae.—Relying upon my memory at this distance of time, I may say that the circumstances were to the best of my recollection as follows:—I either put a question or made a remark upon an answer given to a question, and from what I said it was inferred that a serious reflection was made upon the administration, in fact, the estate management, in connection with the home farm. Mr Shaw Stewart, a member of the Royal Commission, asked that I should immediately go into the witness-box. I was acting as agent for the people, and I begged leave to be excused at that particular moment, on the ground that I was there in another capacity, and that I was taken at a moment's notice. While I had no objection to appear before the Royal Commission, still I begged notice, reasonable notice, short notice, and that I would appear. Mr Shaw Stewart submitted to the Royal Commission that they had the power to put me there at once. I made a remark, to the best of my recollection, that I questioned whether the Royal Commission had that power, and I appealed to Sheriff Brand, who was in the chair at the time. Sheriff Brand ruled that the Royal Commission had that power, and commanded me to go immediately into the witness-box and give evidence. I bowed to that ruling of the Royal Commission. Sheriff Brand, in that ruling of the Royal Commission, said that they had the power under the Royal Warrant and that the moment had come for giving effect to that power, and he ordered me at once to go into the witness-box.

Mr Munro.—In point of fact you say that the Chairman on that occasion ruled that Mr Shaw Stewart could insist upon you going into the witness-box and giving evidence.

Mr Macrae.—Well, that the Royal Commission had the power.

Mr Gordon.—The wording of the Warrant is simply that the Commissioners have authority and are empowered 'to call before you or any 'three or more of you such persons as you may 'judge necessary by whom you may be better 'informed of the matters herein before submitted 'for your consideration.' Now, I must say this: if it was a matter that concerned the scheduling of any lands, or that would make it more apparent to the Commission whether certain lands were suitable for new holdings, I would hesitate before objecting to Mr Orde being called on to come forward. But this question does not affect this land, nor does it affect in the slightest manner our duties here. This matter undoubtedly affected the action of the Crofters Commission, and if they thought that there was any imperfection in the transfer of the land from Sir John Orde to his son, it was their duty to call upon him to come before them and substantiate or see that there was really a bonâ fide transfer of the property from father to son. As regards the transfer we have nothing to do, and whether Mr Orde chooses to come forward or not, I have no hesitation in saying that his coming forward here would not help the Commission in the least, one way or another, and I decline to call upon him or to exercise any power for the purpose of calling him to come forward. I invite Mr Orde to come forward if he has anything to say, but I can go no farther.

Mr Orde.—Perhaps it might help you if I was to verify what you seem to have heard as to the transfer having been produced to the Crofters Commission. It was questioned here by Mr Wilson, who said distinctly that there was no such thing, but it was produced to the Commissioners and they saw that it was all right.

Mr Gordon.—If you wish to give any evidence, Mr Orde, we shall be glad to hear you.

Mr Orde.—I don't see that I could help the Commission at all; if I did I would be only too glad to do so.

Mr Macrae.—As representing the people of this locality, I say on my responsibility that it will help the inquiry if Mr Orde comes forward.

Mr Gordon.—In what way?

Mr Macrae.—It will help the inquiry in this regard: it will enable us to hear from Mr Orde himself how the applications for more lands stood.

Mr Gordon.—No, I don't think so; that might help the Crofters Commission, but not this Commission.

Mr Macrae.—The remit to the Royal Commission refers to lands suitable not only for the creation of small holdings, but for the extension of crofting township areas. [Mr Gordon.—Admitted]. Applications were made with the view of extending crofting township areas. Mr Wilson, as agent for the crofters, said before the Crofters Commission, that the so-called transfer,—and he said it in Sir John Orde's presence,—was bogus and fictitious, and he challenged Sir John to produce the Deed to show that there was any real bonâ fide transfer. Such a Deed has not been brought forward, and any dereliction of duty on the part of the Crofters Commission in that matter should not, in my humble opinion, be brought forward here as an argument why that question should be shelved again. I don't think an argument can be founded upon any possible neglect of duty by the Crofters Commission.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Malcolm Macleod.

Mr Gordon.—If you hint that I am founding any argument upon it, I may tell you I do not. I found my argument upon this, that whether the land belongs to Sir John Orde or whether it belongs to his son is perfectly immaterial to me.

Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I must say that for my own part, I consider it would help the Commission very much that Mr Orde should give evidence. He must know well about these lands which he holds; he must know the difficulties that were put in the way of the crofters getting access to the lands. These matters are most important, and I think should be cleared up now. That is my decided opinion. The statement Mr Macrae has made just now is a very important statement with regard to the working of the Crofters Act, and it is in Mr Orde's power to clear up the matter entirely.

Mr Munro.—I should also like, Mr Chairman, to express my own mind and opinion on this matter. Certainly, very grave charges have to-day been made against the management of Sir John Orde's estate, but whether Mr Orde is in a position to repudiate any of these charges or to give us any additional information is more than I can say. Still, I am bound to say this much that I consider it exceedingly unfortunate indeed that there is no person here appearing to-day in the interests of Sir John's estates. I also remember, substantially, what took place on the occasion when Mr Macrae was ordered to appear in the witness-box and give evidence, and on that occasion the question of the scheduling of land was not under dispute; it was purely a question affecting the management of the Seafield Estates; and when Mr Shaw Stewart put a question to the Chairman of the Commission on that occasion whether he could compel Mr Macrae to give evidence, the impression on my mind is that the Chairman then ruled that Mr Shaw Stewart, as one of the Commissioners, could insist on his appearing. Still, of course, Mr Orde is here to-day able to speak for himself, and, probably he is quite within his right if he chooses to say that he cannot assist the Commission in any direction whatever.

Thomas Wilson.

THOMAS WILSON, Solicitor, Lochmaddy (38)—examined.

41,740. Mr Gordon.—Did you make any statement at the last meeting of the Commission?—No, I made no statement at the last meeting.

41,741. But you think you can give such evidence to-day as will be helpful?—I don't know; that is for the Commission to judge. I am asked by the people of Barra, South Uist and North Uist if I would put my evidence at their disposal, and I have no objection to do so.

41,742. You act, or have been acting, as the agent for the crofters in procuring evidence for this inquiry?—Not for this inquiry. I acted as agent for the crofters of Barra and South and North Uist, before the Crofters Commission.

41,743. Have you been taking any part on behalf of the crofters and cottars in this island in connection with the present inquiry?—To some extent I have.

41,744. Have you found in your communication with the crofters and cottars that there was a decided wish on their part for enlarged holdings?—That wish does exist, decidedly, by the crofters for enlarged holdings and by the cottars for new holdings.

41,745. And do you find, or is it within your knowledge, that in most of the present crofting townships congestion exists?—Speaking of the land from Barra up to North Uist, I think, with the exception of Benbecula, congestion exists in almost every township.

Lochmaddy North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

41,746. You don't think Benbecula is overcrowded?—I think not. In Benbecula there may be a little congestion, but not much. In the year 1881 a very good plan of re-division of the crofts was carried out in Benbecula by the proprietrix, which did a great deal of good. It may have had other effects, but certainly it was a good scheme of division.

41,747. But in the island of North Uist you believe congestion does exist?—Largely exists.

41,748. Does your opinion apply to the small islands as well as to the main island?—Yes, I think so. There is congestion in Grimsay and in Boreray; also in Heisker to some extent, but not so much.

41,749. Do you know how the cottars occupy themselves,—how they find a living?—Yes, they cultivate a piece of land where they can get the opportunity, from which they raise a few potatoes, and a little corn in the following year. They go to the fishing at the east coast, to railway work and the like; a number of them are militiamen; their wives work at the tweed industry in some parts of the island; their children go to service,—the girls as domestic servants, and the lads as militiamen or naval reserve men. But each district must be taken by itself, because the occupations, habits and circumstances, are different for almost every different district. I have given you the principal occupations however.

41,750. And a great many of the cottars occupy themselves with lobster fishing?—A goodly number, in some parts.

41,751. Is the death-rate here heavy from drowning at sea?—Not heavy, considering the amount of boating there is.

41,752. Do you know Lochmaddy well?—Yes, I have been resident here for 12 years.

41,753. Can you account in any way for the great advantage of one of the best harbours in Scotland not being better recognised by the people?—I account for it because the proprietor, Sir John Orde, will not grant privileges to fishermen to stay here: he will not grant sites for houses. Those who have been here have been put away, and fishermen who have come to prosecute their calling from other places, and who put up shelters, have had the shelters torn down by his own hands. He has given no assistance to fishermen here, but has placed every obstacle in their way.

41,754. And, from your knowledge of this part of the country, do you believe that if sufficient facilities were given for the building of houses, in and about Lochmaddy, the fishing industry would be assisted?—I say the fishing industry would improve in Lochmaddy, and would come back, perhaps not to the same degree as it reached 16 or 18 years ago, when 200 or 300 boats were fishing here for herring, but it would improve very largely. I have seen as many as 15 to 20 boats lying in this bay, prepared to fish, since I came here; and, before my time, I know from undoubted information that the number of boats was very much larger.

41,755. Do you not think that it would be possible to raise a fishing village here, where the people would devote their time to white fishing in the winter?—Not so long as fishermen are refused places to live in.

41,756. Assuming that they got facilities to build houses?—Assuming that they had facilities for building houses here, with security of tenure, then I think this could be made into a very good fishing place.

41,757. What distance are you here from Canna?—I don't know the exact distance.

41,758. About 40 miles?—Possibly between 40 and 50.

41,759. That is supposed to be a good fishing-ground?—A very good fishing-ground during the last two years.

41,760. It is largely fished by people from a greater distance than Lochmaddy?—Yes, fishermen even come from Ardrishaig to Canna; Barra men come to Canna, and men from all directions away down the west coast, twice as far distant as Lochmaddy.

ochmaddy, orth Uist.

homas Vilson.

41,761. Canna is so situated that they could run either to Lochmaddy or to Dunvegan?—Yes, that is so.

41,762. Or to some of the harbours in Skye?—Yes, to Bracadale; or they could run into Lochboisdale or Castlebay.

41,763. But this harbour here would be one of the most convenient centres from which the fishing at the island of Canna could be carried on?—I think the fishing between this and Canna can be carried on very well from Lochmaddy.

41,764. That is my idea also. Now, do you think generally that if the cottar population was moved off the crofting townships, that in itself would be a great relief?—A great relief, undoubtedly.

41,765. It might not cure the whole evil, but it would be a relief?—It would not cure the whole evil, but it certainly would be a very great relief. There are in most island townships many small crofts, much too small, where, even though the cottars were all removed from that township, still the number of crofters left would be too large.

41,766. The best crofts, I think, are on the south and west side of the island?—On the north and west side of the island.

41,767. Mr Maccallum.—Has there been anything done to help the crofters by the estate in any way? Has there been any outlay on the crofters' holdings by the proprietor of late years?—Not that I am aware of; none whatever. I don't think there has been any outlay by the proprietor on the crofters' holdings since the Crofters Act was passed.

41,768. Has any good been done by proprietors in the way of road making?—By means of the district Committees of the County Council from funds derived from Government, a great deal has been done towards improving districts by laying down footpaths and roads among crofting townships, but not from any other source, unless it be from work done by the crofters themselves.

41,769. No help has been given in the district of which you speak in North Uist to improve the houses?—Not that I am aware of in North Uist. In South Uist Lady Cathcart in 1880 did give the people very considerable assistance. In Benbecula she supplied them with material for the roof and the woodwork inside of the houses which they built at the re-allocation of their holdings, and, in some instances, slating, I think. The cost of such improvements was placed against the holdings as a rent charge; but certainly it was a very great deal to do, and it was done before the Crofters Act. I think that even she has done nothing since that Act was passed.

41,770. And was there anything done here before the Crofters Act was passed?—Not that I am aware of.

41,771. And, since the passing of the Crofters Act and the crofters obtained security of tenure, have they been improving their houses themselves?—The people have improved their houses very largely. Within my own knowledge there has been a very considerable improvement in the housing of the people. The number of houses in which human beings and cattle are kept is not now so great as it was at the date of the passing of the Crofters Act by a very great number; there are many fewer such houses. There is a gradual improvement going on since the Act was passed. Not only are the crofters improving their houses by putting the cattle out of them, but they are erecting separate byres, and they are also to some extent draining their holdings here and there, and building dykes. There has been since the Act was passed a slow but certain improvement in the crofters as regards their houses.

41,772. I suppose they are only now perhaps realising that they have absolute security?—That is so. I think that even at the present day many of them do not understand that they have absolute security,—many of the older men do not, though the younger men certainly do.

41,773. And you think that the condition of the crofters has improved very much in respect of comfort since they got the benefit of the Crofters Act?—I think it has, and I think it will be more marked in the future, because, since the Act was passed, they have had to pay up the arrears and instalments of arrears of rent which were left upon them, and which to some extent was a burden, preventing improvements which will in future take place.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

41,774. And are they paying their rents in this island with regularity?—I cannot say as to that, although my belief is that they are.

41,775. Has there been much done here for the enlargement of holdings?—In North Uist the enlargement of holdings has been a dead letter.

41,776. How do you account for that?—In the Crofters Act there are a number of enlargement clauses, containing conditions which are very difficult to get over, and there is one clause in particular which applied to North Uist,—and it is this, that the land which had to be taken for enlargement should belong to the same proprietor as that upon which the crofter applicant resides. The proprietor of North Uist, when the Crofters Act was becoming law, was Sir John Orde, but either immediately before, or at the date of passing of the Act, he transferred to his son, Mr Arthur J. Campbell Orde, such portions of the estate as were in large farms, viz., Scolpeg, Balelone, Griminish, and Vallay. These were all lands which would have been available for enlargement of holdings but for the fact of this transfer from the one proprietor to the other: also the farm of Balranald at that date was under lease, and therefore also prohibitory, and the farm of Newton also was under lease. On every ground enlargement of holdings was practically an impossibility in North Uist.

41,777. Were these large tacks transferred immediately after the passing of the Crofters Act, or was it after a movement had been made by the crofters to obtain enlargements from them?—I cannot give you the date, but I believe the transference took place before the Bill became an Act of Parliament.

41,778. And that effectually prevents the enlargement?—Effectually.

41,779. In this case the transference is made from the proprietor to his son?—That is so.

41,780. I suppose the people of these islands are a peculiarly law-abiding people?—They are very law-abiding; you scarcely ever hear of a crime in their midst in the present day.

41,781. And do you think that natives of this island, who have gone to the south and prospered, would like to come here and build houses if it were possible for them to obtain sites?—I have no doubt they would.

41,782. And are there instances of their being refused?—Yes, I have known instances of their being refused; and not only those from the south, but I myself have been refused, and the Procurator-Fiscal has been refused a site. We are both without a house at the present day, compelled to trust to the generosity of friends for lodgings. We have been so situated for years, and can scarcely carry on our public duties for the want of a house.

41,783. Don't you think that is a serious disadvantage, that people cannot get sites for their houses on reasonable terms?—I think it is very serious. I think it strikes at the foundation of all justice. If justice is to be administered in this island impartially, I think it only right that the Procurator-Fiscal, who is the Crown public prosecutor for the Inverness-shire portion of the Outer Hebrides with a population of 20,000, and every other public official, should have an independent home.

41,784. And is it the case that the proprietor of this island refuses to give sites for houses in every case, except where he is compelled by some Act of Parliament to do so?—I believe that he did give a site for a mission-house, and I cannot say that he is compelled by Act of Parliament; but I know that, so far as individuals are concerned, there is no instance where a feu or lease has been granted for a dwelling-house, and if the report of what he said before the Committee of the House of Commons in London a few days ago be correct, he declines to grant feus to individuals. I myself applied for a feu and did not get one; the Procurator-Fiscal applied for a feu and did not get one. I produce copy of a correspondence which took place between Sir

John Orde and his agents, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson, W.S., Edinburgh, on the one hand, and the Procurator-Fiscal and myself on the other, and which I place before the Commission, because I think it is a very important matter. At a public meeting of the people of North Uist, held in Paible not a year ago, and largely attended, they desired me to place before this Commission the fact that they did not consider that justice could be properly administered in this island until public officials were placed in a position independent of the proprietor. I therefore produce this copy correspondence, as an essential part of my evidence.*

41,785. Mr Munro.—I think you told us that you have had an experience of 12 years in this island?—That is so.

41,786. During that time you have no doubt had frequent intercourse with the crofters in the island?—Yes, I have been through their homes in every district; I have travelled on foot through almost every inch of the Long Island time after time. I have been in crofters' houses, and cottars' houses, and houses of every description, and have been constantly among the people, and I should say that I know them as well as any man at the present day.

41,787. Could you tell us what opinion you have formed as to the character of the crofters?—I have a very high opinion of the people of those islands; I say they are a very law-abiding and a very moral people, and I think that with due encouragement they would greatly improve. They are certainly not the very finest men you could get, in the sense of education and industry; but with the advantages which are coming towards them now in the shape of steamers and telegraphs, and post-offices and railways, these men will improve until they will be just as good men as you will find in the whole of the British Isles. I have a very high opinion of the people of the western islands.

41,788. I have no doubt you have heard it suggested from various quarters that the crofters are a lazy and non-industrious class. Is there any foundation for that suggestion?—There is some foundation, among some of them: there is no flock without its black sheep; there are very many crofters who are very industrious, but I cannot deny that, to a certain extent, the remark is well deserved, because some of them are very lazy.

41,789. Supposing that some of these men, who have obtained a character for laziness, were placed on crofts of reasonable size and under better conditions, would that not incite them to greater exertions?—It might help them a little. But there are some men in this island who, if they were placed in the midst of gold, would be none the better for it. But, speaking of the great mass of the people, I say, of the cottars especially, that if they were placed in comfortable holdings it would improve their position very materially. Many of them are very energetic and willing to work.

41,790. Wherever we have gone in this island we have been surrounded by the signs of poverty and want. What, in your opinion, is mainly the cause of that?—I think there is no doubt about it, the cause of the poverty in those islands is the want of land. If you go through different districts you will find that the poorer the people the worse is the land; the better off the people appear in every way, the better the land. Go into their houses and if you find a comfortable house you find it has attached a suitable sized croft; if you go into a poverty-stricken district you find miserable beings squatted where no human beings should be placed. In my opinion the want of land very largely causes the poverty, though not wholly. It is also a striking thing that on the pauper rolls, which are very heavy, the great majority of our island paupers come from the cottar and farm servant class and not from the crofter class,—from the landless, not from those who have land.

41,791. Then do you think that if the people were transferred to better land the poverty would largely disappear?—I believe it would, and pauperism too.

41,792. A statement has been made here by more than one witness that Sir John Orde's management of his estates here hinders the prosperity of the island. Is that your opinion?—That is my opinion.

41,793. What in your judgment is the reason for Sir John having such an aversion to the settlement of crofters here?—He is different from almost any man I have ever met in my life. He is one of those peculiar men whom no man understands: what his reasons are I cannot tell you, and I don't suppose anybody else could. I think he scarcely knows himself.

41,794. Are the people generally civil towards him?—Yes, I think they are; I think they would be civil to any man.

41,795. Do you know whether they pay their rents regularly to Sir John or not?—My belief is that they pay their rents regularly, but I don't have access to the estate books, and my knowledge of that cannot be taken as accurate. I think they are willing to pay their rents so far as in their power.

41,796. Now about the fishing at Lochmaddy,—have you ever, as a legal gentleman, inquired what power the fishermen possess to erect buildings of a temporary character to enable them to pursue the calling of fishermen?—Yes, I have had occasion to inquire into that matter. I know the Act of Parliament to which you refer, which gives to fishermen the right to prosecute their calling along the coast here, by the erection of temporary huts, stages and erections of that sort, within a distance of not more than 100 yards from high water-mark, upon waste ground.

41,797. And they can do so independently of the proprietor, and without paying any feu-duty?—That is so,—independently of the proprietor and without paying anything; and, indeed, if they are interfered with, they are entitled to take action for damages against the person who interferes with them.

41,798. Is the landlord subject to any penalty if he interferes?—Speaking from memory I think the penalty is £100.

41,799. Do you think now that if proper facilities were afforded by Sir John for the erection of buildings for fishermen's houses in or near Lochmaddy, the fishing industry would thrive here?—I think it would. Three fishing boats from the east coast fished here all last winter, and did fairly well.

41,800. And the people would readily take to the fishing?—I think the people would take to fishing, but they require to be trained to it. You cannot make a fisherman simply by putting him into a boat.

41,801. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—With regard to the transference of portions of North Uist to Mr Orde, do you say that the transference has helped very materially to frustrate the enlargement clauses of the Crofters Act? [Mr Gordon.—I cannot allow that question. We have nothing to do with the Crofters Commission at all.]

41,802. Do you know a crofting township that meant to enlarge its area by taking advantage of the law as it stands, i.e., the Crofters Act, and which meant to apply to the Crofters Commission for enlarging the crofter area of the township, but in which the people did not apply, because they were led to understand that there was a transfer of the adjoining farm, which was represented as belonging to another proprietor?—I do.

41,803. Can you give the name of that crofting township?—Malaclett.

41,804. They would have applied to your knowledge?—They would have applied; I was asked to lodge an application for them, and told them it was useless, because the lands belonged to another proprietor.

41,805. Were you agent for the crofters in the Land Court at that time?—I was.

41,806. Did you state before the Crofters Commission?——

Mr Gordon.—Now, so far as your questions tend to show that the crofting township of Malaclett is in want of enlargement, they are proper and perfectly allowable; but so far as they make any reflections upon any alleged shortcomings of the Crofters Commission I cannot allow them.

nas on.

Mr Donald Macrae.—I was not going to make any reflections upon the conduct of the Crofters Commission.

Mr Gordon.—You can ask the witness if this was an indication that the crofting township of Malaclett was overcrowded, and required an annexation of boundaries.

Mr Macrae.—Might I state the purpose of my question? The purpose of my question is to show that, however inadequate the law is as it stands, something might be made of it in the matter of extending the area of crofting townships.

Mr Gordon.—I question whether we are justified in going into legal matters. We are here for a specific purpose; we are here to inquire what land there is suitable for new holdings in North Uist.

Mr Macrae.—This is a subject that has been debated at every hearing of the Royal Commission, and the evidence of Mr Wilson I consider evidence of supreme importance. For one thing, it is a statement of fact, and not a statement of opinion.

Mr Gordon.—What is your question, if you please?

41,807. Examination continued.—My question is this: does Mr Wilson know, from his position as agent for the crofters, that Malaclett would have applied for an enlargement of holdings if this transference had not been entered into? [Witness].— Yes, they would.

41,808. Did you, as agent for the crofters before the Crofters Commission, state on your responsibility as agent, that the transference was bogus and fictitious?—I did.

41,809. And do you still believe that it was?—I believe it still.

41,810. Did the Crofters Commission ordain Sir John Orde to produce the deeds?—The Crofters Commission did ordain that.

41,811. Did he produce them?—He never produced them.

41,812. Not to this day?—Not to this day. He produced the draft of a deed, but he has never produced the deed itself.

41,813. Now, speaking about the fishing industry in connection with crofts; has Sir John been exacting dues of the general public for landing on the foreshores of Lochmaddy?—He charges twopence upon every man who lands from any vessel upon the foreshores embraced in the harbour area of Lochmaddy.

41,814. How much does the harbour area embrace,—the foreshore of Lochmaddy?—It embraces the space of ground from the pier at Lochmaddy running eastwards about 100 yards to the point of the rocks; it then goes southwards another 100 yards out, then westwards in an imaginary line along the water, until it touches a point there, from which again it runs northwards another 100 yards till it joins the pier. Roughly speaking, that is the area.

41,815. What length of foreshore does it embrace, roughly speaking?—I don't quite follow the question.

41,816. Suppose the foreshore is followed, what length would it be?—Roughly speaking, 100 yards of foreshore to the east of the pier, and the effect of the imaginary line crossing on the right-hand side is to embrace a large area above it; how large, I cannot tell you, but possibly a mile of foreshore.

41,817. Did you see that charge you speak of levied?—Yes, the twopence.

41,818. On whom?—I saw it levied upon Alexander Mackenzie, Editor of the Scottish Highlander (The Clach) for landing on the rocks; and on many others.

41,819. Do you believe that it would be a matter of very considerable importance to this island if fish-curers could be induced to take up residence here during a portion of the year?—I think it would; it would bring money into the island.

41,820. Fishing-boats would follow as a matter of course?—As a matter of course.

41,821. And a local trade would be developed?—Quite so.

41,822. And Lochmaddy would grow into an important place, in your opinion?—I think so. Lochmaddy, North Uist.

41,823. Could you give the name of any fish-curer who applied for a stance, say, for a curing-station, or for a residence?—I can give the names of two: Davidson of Peterhead (I think), and Maccormack of Wick. Thomas Wilson.

41,824. What was the reply to Mr Davidson?—He was asked by Sir John to pay, I think, £10 for the stance. He refused to pay it, and asked me what he should do. I pointed out to him a stance upon the foreshore which he could take for nothing, and he took it. Maccormack was asked to pay £10, or some such sum, and he paid it, I believe.

41,825. What did Mr Davidson say?—He said he would not come back again if he had to pay.

41,826. But he had not to pay?—He did not pay.

41,827. Would he be allowed to erect the necessary buildings?—He put them up.

41,828. Had he to remove them?—I cannot remember whether he removed them or not; I think he must have.

41,829. Now, with regard to the position of the cottars; in the event of a large area of land, suitable and available, being scheduled, and in the event of Parliament legislating with regard to that land, in your opinion would a large number of the cottars of these islands take advantage of the facilities for taking up land?—I am quite certain a very large number would: 99 per cent. would, in my opinion.

41,830. And do you believe that there is sufficient enterprise and public spirit and industry among them to enter into possession of these lands, and to erect the necessary buildings in many cases without Government assistance at all?—Well, a goodly number of them could take a croft and stock it, and build a house without help; but there are a good number also who would require to get assistance to build their houses. The district Committees of the County Council are now insisting that healthy dwelling-houses be erected, with the cattle kept separate from the human beings; and I don't know but that a number of the cottars would require assistance to enable them to build such houses.

41,831. Are you personally acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case of the widow, about whom we have heard something to-day, who began to erect a byre?—I know the case,—I acted as agent for the widow.

Mr Gordon.—What is the object of this line of examination?

Mr Macrae.—I wish to bring out that legislation is necessary to deal with the island of North Uist, and with Sir John Orde.

Mr Gordon.—We have it as a matter of fact from the other witnessess that Sir John Orde gives a general order against buildings. In this case he objected to the good lady building an addition to her steading, and she obtained, under a warrant from the Sheriff, as I understand, authority to build the house. That has been brought out already.

Mr Macrae.—Could I ask Mr Wilson his opinion with regard to any bill that might be presented to Parliament dealing with the existing crofting townships, and with land that may be scheduled?

Mr Gordon.—I think not.

Mr Macrae.—The opinion of a man like Mr Wilson on this matter is of supreme importance. Sheriff Brand followed Mr Myles Macinnes of Portree for, I believe, a whole hour upon that question of future legislation and so forth; his opinion was taken and is down upon the evidence. But if the evidence of a man like Mr Wilson, Lochmaddy, is to be objected to, I will not pursue the matter.

Mr Gordon.—I have not the slightest objection to Mr Wilson's evidence, but as I have explained to you, we are here for a specific purpose; we are not here to discuss or criticise future legislation, nor are we here to suggest what Government should do in regard to framing the bill. I have no doubt a bill will follow our action. But if you have any question to put that will throw light upon the matter of our inquiry, I have no objection.

Lochmaddy. North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

Mr Macrae.—Every single one of them has that in view; that is my object, and nothing else.

Mr Gordon.—Well, we will hear you.

41,832. Examination resumed.—Supposing now that lands were scheduled and that cottars were to enter, what machinery would you propose for dealing with cottar applicants on the one hand, and land scheduled on the other?

Mr Munro.—Excuse me stopping you, Mr Macrae for an explanation; what do you mean by the scheduling of lands?

Mr Macrae.—The Royal Commissioners have been inspecting lands,—deer forest, grazing farms, grouse moors, and so on, and, as I understand it, the Royal Commission are to submit to Parliament a report of evidence, recommendation very likely, and maps showing lands that in the opinion of the Royal Commission, are suitable. I call those lands scheduled for the purpose of extending the crofter area, either in the matter of adding to crofter townships that exist, or in the matter of new holdings, small holdings.

Mr Munro.—You assume that we are scheduling lands for certain purposes?

Mr Macrae.—Exactly so,—for that double purpose, I hope you are scheduling the land.

41,833. Examination resumed.—What machinery would you suggest should be employed for the purpose I refer to,—is it the estate machinery, or machinery provided by Government?—I think you would require to use the present Crofters Commission in the form of a Land Court, but on a much larger scale.

41,834. A larger scale as regards the number of the Commissioners?—Yes, in order that they may be able to overtake the work, because there would be a very great deal of work to do, and it would take a long time to do it.

41,835. And further powers?—Further powers.

41,836. You have made a study of the Crofters Act and of its defective points?—Yes, I have done so.

41,837. Then the first point I would ask you upon is as to a clause that very likely could have been put in to force in the case of that widow, i.e., the bankruptcy clause?—Yes.

41,838. After being engaged in litigation with the landlord for a considerable time in the Sheriff Court, no doubt at considerable expense, that widow might not be able to meet obligations. Would you make any change on that clause dealing with bankruptcy?—That was a possibility; but I could take a stronger case than that,—say, where a crofter obtains decree against another for £10 of damages on account perhaps of some dispute with his neighbour. If decree is granted and a charge of payment given, and if the days of charge expire without payment, that crofter is notour bankrupt, under section 1, sub-section 6, and he is liable to have his holding forfeited. I think that clause of the Act should be so amended that it would not be simply upon notour bankruptcy but upon a decree for rent, that the croft should be forfeited. The present clause is much too sweeping, in my opinion.

41,839. What is your most serious objection to the enlargement of holdings clause of the Crofters Act, section 11, I think?—The number of crofters who can apply for enlargement of holdings is limited to five,—there must be five to each application. Now, I think, there should be no such limitation, but that a single crofter should be entitled to apply for enlargement of holding if he thinks proper.

41,840. And what is your view with regard to the crofters whose holdings are too small applying for additional lands on the estate of a neighbouring proprietor?—Well, I have very great difficulty there: I am not inclined to say that a crofter upon one proprietor's land should be entitled to apply for enlargement of his holding from another proprietor's lands. The difficulty to my mind is this: the first proprietor, A, might obtain a decree against his crofter, and might forfeit his tenancy: proprietor B, might not wish to do so, and the man might be living on proprietor B's land. That would, in my opinion, be a hardship.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

41,841. How would you meet the case of a proprietor who has a large number of crofters in very poor circumstances on his estate, and whose neighbour, the adjoining proprietor, may have practically no crofters on his land, the crofters having been evicted by his forefathers?—I think the remedy there is one which is not supplied by the present Act of Parliament, and it is this:—that power should be given to cut out or to make entirely new holdings for such men, and that there should be no debarment to a crofter from one landlord being transferred to the neighbouring landlord.

41,842. Now, with regard to the clause which deals with succession, have you in your experience met with cases of real hardship resulting from the restricted character of that clause?—Yes: I think the clause at the end of the 16th section ought to be expanded, and the power which a crofter at present has, extended so as to include sons-in-law. I think it is objectionable that a woman should be tenant if a man can be got. Therefore I think the Act should be enlarged so as to give power to the crofter to bequeath his holding to a son-in-law.

41,843. Would you give the crofter power to dispose of his holding inter vivos?—No, I am not prepared to go as far as that yet; unless you bring in the right to sell.

41,844. Do you think the nationalisation of the land would be an advantage,—land purchase?—I think it would be a great improvement if crofters were allowed to become their own proprietors, under some such scheme as the Irish Land Acts.

41,845. Do you know the large farms of North Uist?—I do.

41,846. Will you name them?—Newton, Trumisgarry, Granetote, Sollas, Vallay and Griminish, Scolpeg, Balelone, Balranald, and Lee and Eaval.

41,847. Within your knowledge is there a considerable area of those farms once cultivated but now out of cultivation for a long period of years?—Yes: any man going along over these farms can see for himself that the land which was formerly under cultivation is now going back into moorland; the heather is overcoming the grass.

41,848. Is that the effect of land lying waste that was once under cultivation,—that after a considerable number of years it becomes practically useless?—It goes back to heather.

41,849. What is the only thing to improve that land?—Turn it back to cultivation.

41,850. Speaking generally, do you concur with the evidence led here to-day that the lands occupied by crofters in this island, and in the whole of the Long Island up to North Uist, are of the poorest character, while the lands taken up by the big tacks are of far superior quality?—I am not prepared to say that in every instance that is so, because I think there are lands among some of the crofts quite as good as in the large farms.

41,851. But, generally speaking, is it so?—Generally speaking, it is so, but you must bear in mind that the superior cultivation in the case of the tacksman may account for the land being better than the crofters' land. Still, generally it is the case that the crofters have the worst portions of the land.

41,852. And are the cottars on Sir John's estate in a much worse position to-day than they were before the 'fair rent' were fixed?—Decidedly; they are in a miserable condition.

41,853. Worse than ever?—Worse than ever, by a long way.

41,854. What has caused that?—The fact that under the Crofters Act the crofter is not entitled to sublet any portion of his land to any other person, except under pain of forfeiting his holding. That is certainly a very serious matter for the cottars, who formerly got land from the crofters to plant potatoes in, but now are debarred from it.

41,855. And did Sir John, to your knowledge, issue circulars, printed letters, to all his crofters, warning them that if they gave any land to the cottars to cultivate, he would take advantage of that for evicting them out of the holding?—I read copy of a circular, which was to the effect that if any crofter gave land without his permission, he was liable to forfeit his tenancy. [Mr Gordon.—That was a simple repetition of the Act of Parliament.]

41,856. And in view of that statement coming from Sir John Orde, the crofters in their own self-defence, unwillingly in your opinion, have in recent years been refusing to allow the cottars the advantages which they gave them before the passing of the Act?—In many instances unwillingly; but in some instances they are not at all averse to turn the cottars off.

41,857. Mr Gordon.—We had the case of one man, a cottar, who had more animals than any crofter in the township, and paid no rent?—A very hard case.

41,858. But that man's condition could not be said to be worse than it was before the passing of the Act.

41,859. Mr Macrae.—Generally speaking, if the cottar population were removed by some means or other from the crofting townships, would the conditions of the crofters in North Uist, who have full crofts, be tolerable?—Yes, where they have fairly large holdings, but the very small holdings in North Uist will always be in a bad condition.

41,860. But the development of a fishing industry, from Lochmaddy as a centre, would be a benefit to everybody?—It would help the whole island.

41,860*a*. Mr Maccallum.—I take it that it is your opinion that what is chiefly wanted by the people is land, and that no diminution of the rent would ever make the people comfortable on their present holdings?—It is not merely a diminution of rent that will cure the evil; there must be land given if the evil is to be remedied.

41,861. And the Crofters Act you think has failed principally because it has not been effective in getting them the lands?—That is where the Crofters Act has failed. Fair rent, fixity of tenure, and compensation for improvements were all very good, and certainly gave a great stimulus to the people, but the want of enlargement of holdings and new holdings has been the dead letter part of it, because men who are eager to improve their position cannot do it for the want of land.

41,862. Do you think the proprietor has tried to act up to the spirit of the Crofters Act, with regard to extensions generally?—I don't think so; I think he has put every obstacle he possibly could in the way of it.

41,862*a*. Now, in this particular island, and with reference to the transactions of which we have heard to-day, and which Mr Orde refuses to clear up, has this transference been made by the proprietor to the heir-at-law?—To the heir-at-law.

41,863. Who would succeed in any case to the lands that were transferred?—Quite so.

41,864. Can you imagine any reason for this transference, except to frustrate the enlargement clauses of the Act?—I cannot think of any other reason. What makes that reason plausible is, that the very lands which were transferred were those in the vicinity of crofting townships, while those distant from crofting townships were not transferred. The non-contiguity clause of the Crofters Act amply protects the far off lands already.

41,865. Have you heard of any other proprietor who has acted in that way?—No.

41,866. Have you heard of it in the Island of Skye?—I never heard of it; it may have occurred, but not to my knowledge.

41,867. Mr Munro.—Have you any reason to suppose that Sir John Orde would refuse more land to the cottars, if they combined and asked him for it,—if they all went in a body, and asked him to break up one of his farms, would he grant it?—No, he would not. Time after time they have asked it, and always got the same answer: 'I will not give you the land.'

41,868. Your only hope in that direction is through some change in the present law?—It is the only hope the people have; and more than that,—I do not say it as a threat, but I say it from my knowledge of the people, that unless it is granted the people will seize the land. Lochmaddy, North Uist. Thomas Wilson.

41,869. But you think Sir John will do nothing until he is compelled by law to do it?—No, I am quite certain of that.

COPY CORRESPONDENCE, &c., BETWEEN ARCHIBALD A. CHISHOLM, ESQ., PROCURATOR-FISCAL, LOCHMADDY, AND SIR JOHN W. P. CAMPBELL ORDE, BARONET, PROPRIETOR OF NORTH UIST, AND THEIR AGENTS, REGARDING A RESIDENCE FOR THE FORMER AT LOCHMADDY.*

NOTICE TO REMOVE, for Archibald Alexander Chisholm, Esquire.

At Inverness, the sixth day of October, eighteen hundred and ninety years.

You are required to remove from all and whole the house and offices at Rhuiar, Lochmaddy, in the parish of North Uist and County of Inverness, as lately occupied by the deceased Theophilus James Bulkeley, Esquire, including the lands formerly known as the croft of James Macdonald, mason, as presently occupied by you, at the term of Martinmas eighteen hundred and ninety-one, in terms of minute of lease thereof, between Sir John William Powlett Campbell Orde, of Kilmory and North Uist, Baronet, the proprietor and Lessor, of said subjects, on the one part, and you, Archibald Alexander Chisholm, Esquire, Procurator-Fiscal, Lochmaddy, Inverness-shire, of the other part, dated the tenth day of April and thirtieth day of May, both in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and also in terms of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, eighteen hundred and eighty-three.

A. MACDONALD,
Messenger-at-Arms and Sheriff-Officer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

I.—Letter, 28th September 1889, from Archibald A. Chisholm, Esq., Procurator-Fiscal of the Long Island District of Inverness shire, at Lochmaddy, to Sir John W. Powlett Campbell Orde, Baronet, proprietor of the Island of North Uist.

Rhuiar, Lochmaddy, 28th Sept. 1889.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to enclose cheque for £15, 0s. 6d., being half-year's rent of cottage and croft occupied by me here for half year from Martinmas 1888 to Whitsunday 1889, with 6d. for charge on cheque.

I called for you at the hotel here, but you had left for Newton, and I may not have the pleasure of seeing you about the matter, as I had hoped, before you would leave the island, and I may again say that I am not to pay what you claim as rent for the cottage lately occupied by Mr Wilson, until you satisfy me of the cost of the building as agreed. Mr Wilson says he has overpaid, and declines to pay me the last year's rent. I believe I have overpaid on account of it already. If yet you desire to try the question in Court, I shall be glad to accept service of any summons you may raise,—Yours faithfully, (Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

dwelling-house lease unless I pay the claim you make as for 'old arrears' for cottages built at Lochmaddy for my clerks. Before you leave Uist, I desire to state that I am anxious, as I was all along, to have that claim (which I repudiated long ago), settled upon its own merits in some way; and I am still ready (1) to refer it to arbitration; or (2) to accept service of a summons to Court, if you raise an action to test the matter, and in the event of your non-success not to ask expenses against you, which consideration I do not ask of you in return.

Expecting the favour of a reply hereto before you leave Uist on this occasion,—I am, yours faithfully,

ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

III.—Letter, 9th November 1891, Sir John Orde to Mr Chisholm.

Post and Telegraph,
Kilmory, Lochgilphead, N.B., 9/11/91.

SIR,—As your tenancy of Rhuiar house and land will be at an end at this term day Martinmas, I have instructed your acct. for rent for same, and also that now some time in arrear for cottage by Ct. House, to be sent you. With reference to the latter, I have failed to find any memorandum that will show the cost of the concrete work supplied to contractor, and I have no reason to think that the rent charged and paid by you up to the last year was erroneously calculated by my late factor. I do not either consider that it was competent for you to take objection to it at so late a date.

I have therefore to say that it will only be on payment of the account for Rhuiar and for the cottage as sent you that I shall be prepared to state the terms on which I shall accept you as a tenant for the former for any further period at Rhuiar, or other place.

Mr MacLean is authorised to sign receipt for rent.—I am, yours,

J. W. P. CAMPBELL ORDE.

IV.—Letter, 14th November 1891, Mr Chisholm to Sir John Orde.

Procurator-Fiscal's Office,
Lochmaddy, 14th Nov. 1891.

SIR,—Your letter of the 9th, bearing only the Lochmaddy post mark of the 11th, reached me on the evening of the 12th.

The half-year's rent of Rhuiar Cottage, &c., due to you at this term, I went with to-day to Mr McLean and paid. Had you or he called for it even earlier it would have been paid.

Regarding the question of what you call arrear of rent for clerk's cottages, I thought I made a very fair offer, when I wrote to you on the 24th of January last, inviting you to have it determined free of cost to yourself. Instead of my being indebted to you on that transaction, you are due me roughly £30. As you have not accepted my offer of 24th January last, I now withdraw it. That question, as you before stated, has nothing to do with the cottage occupied by me as a dwelling, though now you make a lever of it. I have only to refer you to former correspondence, to show that the 'objection' was not taken at a late date, as you now set forth.

You are aware it is necessary for me to have a residence at Lochmaddy, the seat of the Sheriff Court for the Long Island District of Inverness-shire, in order to enable my duties as Procurator-Fiscal of Court for the public interest to be attended to at that Court.

In order to procure such an abode, and to maintain amicable relations with you, I have borne with different demands already made by you.

When, in 1881, I took a ten years' lease of my cottage and land called Rhuiar (the original purchase price of which to your predecessor was about £15, and on which I have yet to learn you or he expended any money on improving), the rent as per Valuation Roll of 1880 paid by my predecessor in Rhuiar was £10 per annum. You demanded an immediate rise of rent to £30 per annum, and insisted on some conditions in my lease which I felt inequitable; and, over and above, you also demanded a certain £150, all which I had to agree to. The cottage was small, old, and rickety, without a single room wind and water tight or of reasonably large size; but I had, tho' I protested, to accept it as in 'good tenantable order and repair,' and to sign a lease to that effect, while, afterwards, I had to make it habitable entirely at my own expense, with the exception of a few bags of cement supplied by you. I was likewise obliged to say, I accepted fences, roads, drains, and sandbanks, as in like tenantable order. But the 'lands,' being simply about a dozen acres peat bog having a skin of grass on, and no sandbanks at all, nor any fences, roads, or drains worth speaking about, I was under the necessity, in order to obtain some little benefit from the so-called lands, of making more than double the extent of roads and drains, and put up new fencing. I made various improvements and repairs, among others being nine new windows, including frames and glass, and I put a glass into a door. I also built four brick and concrete water tanks. I may remind you of the payment made by me to Mr MacTavish for repairs, the receipt for which your late factor obtained from me on his promise to reimburse me, but which was not paid for or returned to me. I may also remind you that, though I paid you fire insurance premium, I have had to go without repayment of damage by fire, which I repaired.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.
Thomas Wilson.

Altogether, I have expended several hundred pounds in these ways, while you did nothing but draw your rent.

These things I suffered from patiently; but now I find that, instead of appreciating my forbearance, you take advantage of your position as sole landlord of the place, to attempt to intimidate me into paying what I consider an unjust demand (which though invited by me for years to sue for, you failed to test at law), and into foregoing my claim to the money due to me by you.

Instead of availing yourself of the offers I made, which were more than reasonable, or of the ordinary process of law, you intimate that unless I pay an undue demand on account of a totally distinct matter, I can have no place of abode on your property of North Uist. I already yielded to demands beyond reason, and to me it seems you imagine you can exact whatever you like under pain of eviction. I so yielded because I considered it due to myself that I should so far as possible, and even at some sacrifice, be on agreeable terms with you on personal matters. You are aware that, to evict me now from the only available dwelling-house forces me to break up my home, and displenish my furniture, stock, &c., and thus I will be put to serious inconvenience and loss. Yet, notwithstanding, unless I submit to an undue exaction on a different matter you evict me, and inform me I can have no other place from you.

Even were I to submit to that exaction, I fear it would be merely the prelude to further exactions—you not having put in writing the terms you would offer, and the removal term being now at hand, my servants then leaving, and my sale being arranged cause further complications.

I regret exceedingly that I must at last take a stand and say I will pay only what is legally due. I am greatly vexed and injured by having to obey your formal notice to remove, and that I cannot get another house here. A local gentleman has, however, extended hospitality to me, which enables me to stay at Lochmaddy for the present.

I shall be glad to know whether you will purchase my grates and such fixtures as belong to me, and I may wish to sell to you.

I shall also be obliged by your now kindly furnishing me, at your earliest convenience, with a note of the cost of the clerk's cottages, and kindly sending me your cheque for the balance due thereon, and for the £150.

Lochmaddy, North Uist. — Thomas Wilson.

In view of these circumstances, which make me feel the disadvantage of holding under you, and in view of the fact that, in the public interest, the security of my personal independence from the power of any one to hurt or favour me is demanded, I consider I must incur the expenditure of building a suitable residence for myself, and to that end I beg respectfully to ask that you will be pleased to let to me as early as possible, a convenient and suitable site for a dwelling-house, on fair terms, and under feu.—I am, yours faithfully,

(Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

V.—Letter, 17th November 1891, Mr Chisholm to Sir John Orde.

Lochmaddy, 17th Nov. 1891.

SIR,—In my letter of the 14th inst. to you, I notice now that I made a clerical error in referring to my letter of the '24th' January. It should be the '22nd,' instead of '24th.'—I am, yours faithfully,

(Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

VI.—Letter, 23rd November 1891, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson, W.S., Edinburgh, Agents for Sir John Orde, to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
23rd November 1891.

DEAR SIR,—Sir John Orde has handed to us your letter to him of the 14th.

The letter is full of inaccuracies, and if you really wish Sir John to give you a lease or feu, it is certainly an odd way of making such a request by prefacing it with four long pages of an attack upon Sir John which the facts do not warrant.

To Sir John, the letter reads very much as though you rather wished him to refuse your request in order to use his refusal for other purposes, otherwise he can scarcely conceive why, as a preface to your letter, you should indulge in a series of offensive remarks and reflections on his management of his estate, which are not justifiable.

We do not know what was the previous rent of Rhuiar, and cannot admit your figures.

As regards the rents of the clerks' cottages the sum was adjusted with Sir John's late factor, and has been paid continuously year by year until the last year of your occupation, when you for the first time withheld payment for one of the cottages which still remained in your occupation.

We have not the missives which passed between you and the late factor. If you have them we shall be glad to receive a copy. But as the rent was fixed and has been continuously paid till the last year, it seems to us there is no room for any question.

You cannot keep the tenancy of the clerks' cottages distinct from that of Rhuiar.

It is surely unreasonable to expect a proprietor to give a new lease of one property to a tenant who is in arrear with his rent for another. Sir John instructs us to say that it is not the fact that you were asked to accept as good and tenantable buildings which were not so, and it is certainly somewhat odd for you now to disclaim a statement which you admitted to be true when you signed the lease, and to excuse yourself by stating that you were forced to put your name to that statement although you considered it contrary to the fact at the time. When the subjects were let, they were, Sir John believes, in good tenantable order and repair, and they had been occupied by the late Mr Bulkeley and his family up to your entry, and Sir John has no recollection of any complaint having been made by you about the time.

Sir John has no knowledge of the improvements which you state you have made during your tenancy except generally as to some repairs which were made after a fire which took place. These are the repairs, we understand, which you paid for to Mr MacTavish. Sir John has never received the money from the Insurance Company; but if you have Mr MacTavish's detailed voucher, and send it on to us, we shall submit it to Sir John, who will pay the amount.

Lochmaddy, North Uist. — Thomas Wilson.

Sir John has given you no cause for exercising forbearance. He never had, nor has the least wish that you should abate one jot of what are your just rights and claims, or that you should hold otherwise than a perfectly independent position in North Uist. Indeed it is his wish that you should, while in North Uist, occupy an entirely impartial and independent position.

Sir John gave you notice to quit Rhuiar, but he was perfectly prepared to receive an offer for a new lease. Although the notice was given on the 6th October 1890, that is, more than a year ago, you have not even so much as asked for a new lease, and have allowed the whole year's warning to expire without making any offer, which certainly one would have expected if you had desired a new lease.

Sir John did intimate that if you took a new lease he would expect you to pay the arrears for the clerk's cottage, which amount to £14, and a few shillings of insurance money, and this indicated that he was quite willing to treat with you for a new lease, and indeed he has made no attempt to let Rhuiar in order that if you desire it you might make an offer to him for it.

Assuming you do not take a new lease, Sir John is willing to take your grates and has telegraphed to-day to that effect.

We do not know what the £150 is of which you claim repayment. If you will be good enough to send us details of this sum and copies of any missives under which it is payable by Sir John, they will at once have his consideration.

Sir John has no desire to alienate Rhuiar or any other portion of North Uist, and therefore declines your request for a feu.—We are, yours truly,

(Signed) TODS, MURRAY & JAMIESON.

VII.—Letter, 1st December 1891, Mr Chisholm to Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

Lochmaddy, 1st Dec. 1891.

Feu for Dwelling-House at Lochmaddy.

DEAR SIRS,—Your letter of the 23rd reached me on the evening before the sale of my household effects—the 25th. Being engaged with sale matters prevented my replying earlier. I will be obliged if you will kindly revert to my correct name and designation used by you and your client in addressing me heretofore.

My letter to Sir John Orde was perfectly accurate, and I will only be glad if you point to any inaccuracy in it.

I am judge of how I should write to Sir John. I made no attack on him, and no remarks or reflections on the management of his estate. Remarks by me were necessary and pertinent to my own case, and if they were unpleasant reading for Sir John, and if he managed to extract offence from them, I am not to blame. To pretend to have read my letter in an offensive sense, and to insinuate that it was written with any object save what it bears, is, in view of what I have suffered, mere subterfuge. I had no wish to offend, nor have I. But I desire fair dealing and personal and official independence of the exercise as here of landlord power.

It is needless, although the late factor is dead, to attempt to saddle him with the matter of the cottages for which I dealt, as I will continue to deal with Sir John principally, and he is due money to me on adjusting the matter instead of my being, as you erroneously allege, in 'arrear of rent' for them. If, as you say, it really seems to you 'there is no reason for any question' on that matter, which is entirely distinct from Rhuair, why did not Sir John avail himself of my most reasonable offers to have it determined on its own merits, or why does he not now resort to the ordinary process of law, instead of attempting, by the use of his power, as sole landlord, to extort an unwilling payment from me.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

Your letter contradicts former letters of Sir John as well as of your own.

Sir John and his late factor saw some, if not all, of the improvements he now denies knowledge of. Promises by him to make others remained unfulfilled. You ask me for a voucher which he in conversation gave me to understand he had found among his late factor's papers.

You are evidently afraid to say plainly what you mean to convey at the part underlined in your letter. But if any insinuation against my official actings is intended it is best to take it up at once, and for answer to refer your client to the instances where I could not see my way to do what he might wish, and where, on his appealing to Crown counsel, the correctness of my actings was found. Yor insinuation leads me to wonder whether my 'impartial' position can have anything to do with this infliction of personal inconvenience on me. And the sincerity of his wish for my 'entire independence' is confuted by his refusal of an independent dwelling-place. I must protest against his being judge and ruler of my position, past or future. His refusal of a feu or other dwelling-place I take unmistakably to show his real desire is to hold me in a position subject to his favour or fear.

Your attempt, by a letter reaching me at the time of my sale, to make it appear that Sir John was all along, or even at that time, prepared to treat fairly with me for Rhuiar is, in view of notice to quit, and following correspondence and actings, flagrantly incorrect. That Rhuiar is not re-let is doubtless due to the fact that no one else would put up with the same terms as I held on, and not to any consideration for me. If what is attempted now to be shown for the first time had any foundation in fact, why did he bar my offer from me which he knew I was of necessity anxious to make, by his adhering (as he still adheres) to his intimation that he would make no terms for Rhuiar until I would yield to his exaction in name of rent for the cottages, which exaction was for a totally distinct matter, as his own letter shows, and regarding which I made the favourable offers for its determination on its own merits, referred to already? Why did he not even reply to my letter of 22nd January. And why, on the 5th ultimo, when I met him on the public road here, and approached him with the intention of speaking to him, did he, in presence of the Sheriff-Substitute, turn his back on me.

The offer made for the grates was so small that I had to refuse it and to expose them at the sale, where they fetched double.

The £150 is, as Sir John no doubt well knows, due for buildings, and I again ask payment of that and the balance due to me on the matter of the cottages.

I did not ask to feu Rhuiar, tho' I am ready to do so on fair terms. I simply ask, under fair conditions, any suitable house site on feu. Sir John's acceding, and that only, will prove his wish for the independence of Crown officials at Lochmaddy, and I respectfully ask that, upon consideration, Sir John will be pleased to accede to my request.—I am, yours truly,

ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

VIII.—Letter, 5th January 1892, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
5th Jan. 1892.

DEAR SIR,—On the 7th ulto., we received your letter of the 1st, but owing to Sir John Orde's engagements and his recent illness, we were unable until last night to confer with him, and obtain his instructions for our reply.

We may mention that, when writing to you on the 23rd Nov., we were not aware that we were designing you otherwise than we had previously done, and the words we underlined were not intended to convey any insinuation, but merely to emphasise Sir John's acquiescence in your desire for an impartial and independent position in the island.

We do not propose to continue at present the correspondence in regard to the arrears for the cottages and your claim for buildings, or the various statements in your letter which could only lead to further controversy, and prevent a right understanding, at which it is most desirable to arrive.

Sir John now authorises us to state that he cannot assent to give you a feu; but that, in recognition of your official position, he is willing to renew your lease of Rhuair, at the same rent and for the whole period during which you may hold your present office, subject of course to the regular payment of the rent.

We shall be glad to know at your convenience if this offer is accepted.

The question of the arrears for the cottages, and your claim for buildings, we propose to reserve to be dealt with separately, and in this matter we are meeting your own desire in regard to the arrears.—We are, yours truly, (Signed) TODS, MURRAY & JAMIESON.

IX.—Letter, 25th January 1892, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
25th Jan. 1892.

Rhuiar.

DEAR SIR,—We wrote to you on the 5th, stating that although Sir John Orde could not grant you a feu, he is quite willing, in consideration of your official position, to continue your lease of this house and ground for the whole period of your office, subject, of course, to due payment of rent.

We have not, however, received any reply from you.

Sir John has several applicants for the place, and one of them is pressing for an answer. Moreover, Sir John is ordered to take a voyage for his health, and desires to have this matter settled before he leaves.

We shall, therefore, be glad to hear from you in course if you desire to accept Sir John's offer, contained in our letter to you of the 5th, or not.—Yours truly,

X.—Letter, 13th February 1892, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
13th Feb. 1892.

Rhuiar.

DEAR SIR,—We wrote to you on the 5th, and again on the 25th ulto., on behalf of Sir John Orde, offering you a lease, during your tenure of the office of Procurator-Fiscal, but have not had a reply to either of these letters. Sir John has left for the West Indies, but left us instructions to close with another offerer, if you do not wish to renew your lease.

We shall, therefore, feel obliged by your letting us have your reply in the course of next week.—Yours truly, (Signed) TODS, MURRAY & JAMIESON.

XI.—Letter, 18th February 1892, Mr Chisholm to Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

Lochmaddy, 18th Feb. 1892.

Feu for dwelling-house at Lochmaddy.

DEAR SIRS,—Your three letters of the 5th and 25th January and 13th instant respectively I have.

hmaddy, th Uist.

Speciously enough, your letter of the 5th January professes a desire to arrive at a right understanding. The way you propose such to be reached is anything but right to my understanding. Things ripest for settlement you propose to leave over, so that, I presume, you can raise after trouble about them, and to thus begin at the wrong end. First for settlement stand the monies due to me before and at my eviction if there is any genuine desire for a right understanding. It is a great pity that such a desire was no way manifest before the 5th of January last. Faith in its real existence will obtain only when your actions prove it. I regret that I cannot discover anything beyond its wordy profession. Sir John still declines to grant me a house site as I asked and still want; he, without so much as alleging a right or excuse, withholds settlement of the £150, and other monies of mine; and you make no reply to parts of my previous correspondence. Another revelation of the 'desire' is I believe the delay in paying me for things taken at my eviction from me. By your offering 'to renew' or 'to continue' my lease, I failed to see what you intended. When you so wrote you well knew no lease was then held by me, and the only lease I had at one time has been brought to an end by Sir John Orde's eviction of me, while the subject became tenanted by himself. I also fail to see why, before suggesting in any way such a thing, you do not pay over the £150, &c., due to me long ago on account of that subject. Tenure such as is suggested by your letter, may end at any time from one of several contingencies, and a lease on anything like the terms of the lease I once held would, I fear, merely mean spoliation of me, if during such a tenure my duty might chance to disagree with the aims of whoever might be proprietor. I have no reason to feel sure I would not be harassed and put to needless loss personally, either during such tenure or at its termination, by some of the devices of professional landlordism which are so difficult to guard against, and of which a feu would render me independent. You say Sir John Orde at 5th January last authorised you in recognition of my position to make the sort of offer you made. My position was as easy of recognition before I was evicted and ever since 1881 when I took the lease of Rhuair Cottage and land, under which I was evicted last year, and have suffered so much. He recognised my position in 1881 by trebling the rent of my predecessor, by getting also the £150 (which he is now so loath to disgorge), and by insisting on a lease on his own terms. Promises by him as to certain things were disregarded. The ostensible reason given by Sir John and you for insisting on my eviction and which you before attempted to justify, and said was inseparable from a tenancy of Rhuair, you now propose, without even apology, to treat as unworthy of discussion meantime. Your own proposal is a fine satire upon your client's conduct. All the trouble and loss that could be inflicted on me was inflicted. Up till 5th January last I was barred from making any proposal regarding Rhuiar, and informed I would have no place on Sir John Orde's property, and I was evicted although Sir John could well calculate the loss, anxiety, inconvenience, and indignity put upon me. My effects had to be sacrificed at public auction, and now after all my dear-bought experience, the replenishing of a house, &c., in an outlandish place like this, is a matter not to be lightly thought of unless the house be a good one, and be held under fair secure tenure. Now, you unexpectedly abandon your high-handed style, and suddenly you make me a bald offer and try to hurry me into an acceptance of it, the acceptance of which would be as stupid as the offer itself.

I may say that had I not been barred before my eviction last year from making overtures regarding my continuing to reside at Rhuair Cottage, I would require the £150, and the non-exaction of a like sum on any pretext, also that water should be supplied, and certain apartments and the kitchen enlarged, and that ridiculously irritating conditions should not again obtain. So little worth in Sir John's eyes is the cottage that, after my eviction from it, it was for days left open to all comers, and since the eviction it has been left notwithstanding the trying climate and exceptionally severe winter, absolutely unoccupied, unaired, and unfired. I do not suppose you mean to say you have really any bona fide offer for Rhuiar on the terms imposed upon me. A feu as asked would enable me to erect a house with suitable apartments and conveniences, in which I, and probably my successors, would live in comfort and in independence of any landlord's control. I cannot see why, in order to my living here in comfort and health, and carrying out my duties, I should (after all my past forbearance, under my trying experiences), be forced by circumstances (which can surely be controlled by Government), to retake under name of a house, a cottage with ridiculously small apartments, and destitute of a regular water supply, and to retake, under name of lands, a tract of peat under whatever conditions a landlord chooses to lay down. The question is, I think, of National importance.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

I hereby intimate that I reserve right to take such proceedings as I may be advised in respect of the insinuation I before complained of. The illness of a legal gentleman has prevented my doing anything as yet. It is specially hurtful that it is made through the medium of, and, I presume, on the advice of, your firm. You had already had opportunity to withdraw and tender satisfaction, or else, if you possibly could explain it fairly away, and you have attempted to pass it off by an explanation obviously false. This was to some extent a cause of delay in writing, and I do so now only as you press for a reply.—Yours truly,

(Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

XII.—Letter, 5th March 1892, Messrs Tods, Murray and Jamieson, to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
5th March 1892.

DEAR SIR,—We received, on the 23rd ulto., your letter of the 18th ulto.

We regret that you should still continue a tone of correspondence which is not calculated to promote good feeling, and should still make remarks which are quite uncalled for and unjustifiable.

The position, we understand, to be as follows:—

As Procurator-Fiscal you desire a residence at Lochmiddy. In your letter of the 14th Nov. last to Sir John, you stated that the house occupied by you from him was the only available dwelling-house, and you complained of being removed from it without having any other house to go to. Sir John has offered to let that house to you again, and we referred to the old lease that you had from Sir John for the terms upon which it was proposed to be let.

If the house is not in a tenantable condition, Sir John will put it into proper tenantable condition for your occupation.

It is now two months since we made this offer on Sir John's behalf, and after a delay of six weeks, your reply seems to indicate that the house is not suitable, and that you do not wish it.

We shall be glad to know if we correctly interpret your letter, as, if you do not take the house, Sir John must, of course, let it to some other offerer.

It seems to us that a lease to last during your tenure of office as Procurator-Fiscal gives you as completely an independent and impartial position as a feu would, with this further advantage, that when your tenure of office expires the house would be available for your successor in office, should he desire it. Sir John has no desire to feu, and if he did give you a feu he would not be able to offer it to your successor in office.

As regards your claim for £150, we have no information before us to enable us to judge whether that claim is well founded or not. We asked for details and vouchers of your claim in our letter of the 23rd November last, but have not yet received these from you. If you will supply us with this information the claim will have our attention, and also Sir John's, when he returns from the West Indies.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

We had no desire to ignore this claim, but, as we understand, your great desire was to have a house, and that you objected to mix up your request for a house with the question of Sir John Orde's claims against you, we thought we would only be meeting your own wishes by dealing with the question of a house for you separately, and leaving over these other matters, which must necessarily take some time for adjustment.

Regarding the concluding paragraph of your letter, we have simply to repeat that no such insinuation as you suggest was made or intended by us, or Sir John.—Yours truly, (Signed) TODS, MURRAY & JAMIESON.

XIII.—Letter, 22nd March 1892, Mr Chisholm to Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

Procurator-Fiscal's Office,
Lochmaddy, 22nd March 1892.

DEAR SIRS,—I have your letter of the 5th inst.

Facts necessitated the tone of my last letter, and I will thank you if you will kindly confine your remarks to business. Good feeling there was far too much of on my part, but most things have bounds, and good feeling will be promoted best by good dealing. You will please allow me to express my regret that owing to your attempts upon me I must continue the correspondence without change of tone, however distasteful to you it must be.

I have asked a house site in feu in consequence of the treatment which I suffered and of which I dreaded recurrence.

You diverted the correspondence into trying to get me to re-take the place I was evicted from. After the refusal by Sir John Orde to treat before eviction and the eviction, I never dreamt of putting myself again in his power to be treated as his aims may best be suited.

The position is not what you try to build up.

The position was as I already wrote. I had in 1881 to take such a house at such terms as Sir John Orde insisted on. The terms were the same as were then imposed on his poor crofters, until, fortunately for them, more favourable modifications were since enacted by Parliament for them, and these old ridiculous terms you, notwithstanding my former letters, would still hint at my subjecting myself to again. The alleged offer is inapplicable and senseless, and whatever object you had in so making it, unasked, and in pressing it on me, it was so made as to be practically impossible to be accepted. You would ask me again to pay £150? On what grounds? You already know what I suffered during my former lease and since my eviction. The monies paid by me for repairs, the £150, &c., and the other monies due to me at last November, and before then, are delayed settlement of by you, though you do not even allege a right to them.

I was debarred for nearly a year before my eviction, by Sir John Orde, from making any approach to him unless I submitted to what I knew was pure extortion. Ostensibly because I would not pay a sum of money not due to him, and forego my right to a sum due to me by him, both in a matter very distinctly apart from my tenancy of the place from which I was evicted, and despite my most reasonable offers for settlement of those sums, he insisted on evicting me and putting me to all attendant troubles, as you can see by reference to my letter to him of 22nd January 1891, and his letter to me of 9th November 1891. That ostensible reason you, on 5th January last, dropped, after all possible power had been exhausted in hurting me on it, and then you also began to try and lure me back to have me again at Sir John's mercy. In your letter of 23rd November last you justified and upheld Sir John's conduct, and raised frivolous pretexts (not yet departed from) for delaying to settle sums long past due to me now, and you then denied I made certain necessary improvements and repairs, though since some have been admitted by Sir John's local agent. You have coolly proposed that I should not have matters connected with the old holding paid up to me, but that I should retake it and so become the sport of further proceedings or delays. I know your client far too well to put myself in any position where he can harass or exercise control over me. He has delayed to pay monies due to me at outgoing, and having outrageously insulted me by eviction, he, in the same breath says, through you, that he desires I should have an 'impartial' and independent position, and then he declines my request for a feu, and tries to get me to retake, on terms altogether one-sided, the very place he evicted me from. I do not want to be forced to experience any more maltreatment. My letter of 14th November was not at all written by way of complaint, as you say, but merely to point out reasons for wanting a feu, rather than to be disadvantaged on every hand as a tenant. As to monies due to me at outgoing, they were so clearly and inseparably mixed up with the tenancy that they cannot for any good purpose be desired to be separated from it. You well know they are not the monies I objected to being mixed up with my tenancy of Rhuiar. The want of settlement inconveniences me. It is distinctly not at my request any of the matters are left over so long. The delay in settling is entirely due to yourselves or your client, for some ulterior object. Had you authority to settle as to my retaking Rhuiar you must have had authority also to settle matters bearing on a tenancy of it, and of which payments of these monies are some. And I still think, as I before said, that if your professions of desire for any proper understanding were genuine, you would at once have offered to settle these old matters connected with the place from which I had been evicted before you would presume to ask me to retake it on any terms. That, and as I already more fully explained, was the position.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

The position now is that I am houseless, and Sir John is sole proprietor. He turned me out on a pretext so flimsy that it has been dropped by yourselves. I was compelled to sell off my effects at a heavy loss. Every ingenuity has been used to harass me, by withholding monies not questioned to be due to me, and by now making for articles I was induced not to sell (as they were beneficial to the holding), on the day of my sale upon the agreement that I would get paid for them—ridiculously low offers, in consequence of which I have had to place the latter in the hands of an agent. The only safe footing for me is, I clearly see, a house site in feu, as I asked. The position after eviction is entirely different to what it was before. Since you have suddenly turned round on your base, and try to urge me to walk back on unintelligible terms, and without first having payment of monies past due, into your client's power, and that, too, at a rack rent, into subjects which are unique, and, as I said, unsuitable, on ridiculous conditions, and without any suggestion of compensation or apology for the proceedings by your client I dread a repetition at another outgoing of the treatment meted out to me now. I cannot be buffeted about like this for Sir John Orde's profit or caprice. I ask a house site in feu, that is the position.

There is no need to discuss what you say seems to you best for me. In view of the past I can hold only one opinion.

It is absurd to say you have no information as to the £150, and to ask instruction regarding it from me. Your instruction will come best from your own client who will tell you on what grounds he demanded and took the £150 from me. Did your 'offer' mean that I should forego the £150 and again pay you another £150?

I hope this correspondence will now end by my getting my simple requests of settlement of my monies and a house site in feu granted without more delay.—Yours truly, (Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

XIV.—Letter, 1st April 1892, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson, to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
1st April 1892.

Rhuiar.

DEAR SIR,—We have received your letter of the 22nd ulto.

We are not aware of having wandered beyond what was strictly pertinent to the business in any of our letters to you; nor shall we follow you in your lengthy remarks regarding Sir John Orde and his actings, beyond stating that they are quite inaccurate. The position which you put forward is that you are homeless, and that Sir John Orde is sole proprietor.

We have referred to your lease. It is exceedingly short and contains eight clauses. The 1st fixed the endurance; the 2nd fixed the rent, £18 for the house and offices, and £12 for the land, making together £30; the 3rd gave you right to take peats; the 4th was the cropping clause; the 5th relates to fences; the 6th bound the tenant to maintain the buildings in tenantable order and repair; the 7th reserved to Sheriff Webster right of passage through the subjects let; and the 8th is the ordinary clause of removing at the termination of the lease. Which of these provisions you can call unintelligible or ridiculous we do not know, and we ask you to explain.

We have already offered you, and we repeat the offer, a lease to endure so long as you are Procurator-Fiscal at Lochmaddy, at the old rent of £30 upon the eight conditions above stated, subject to any modification which the circumstances may require.

You speak of the rent as being excessive. Our information is different, but if you specify the rent you are prepared to give, your offer will be considered.

As to the £150 we have no information. Sir John could not inform us how your claim was made up, and although we have repeatedly asked you, you have given us no information.

If you will give us particulars and vouchers of your claim, and will let us have any documents you may have substantiating it, or copies of them, we shall give it our prompt consideration.

We must now ask you to let us have an early reply to our repeated requests, whether you wish to retake the house and land on the footing we have stated, viz.: that it shall be yours during the whole time you occupy your official position at Lochmaddy. We cannot allow the house to remain longer unlet and unoccupied, and we now formally intimate to you that this offer is made to you, on the terms we have stated, until the 1st of May, and that if not accepted by you by that date simpliciter, or with such alterations, if any, as you may propose and as Sir John can agree to, we shall hold on Sir John's behalf that it is declined by you, and shall thereafter proceed to let or otherwise dispose of the house.

Sir John declines, as we have already told you, to give you a feu, but the present renewed offer has the advantage, as we have repeatedly explained, that it secures the house we offer you as a residence for yourself and your successors as Procurators-Fiscal of the district, which, of course, a feu could not secure.—We are, yours truly, (Signed) TODS, MURRAY & JAMIESON.

XV.—Letter, 1st March 1893, Mr Chisholm, to Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

Lochmaddy, 1st March 1893.

Residence for Procurator-Fiscal, &c.

DEAR SIRS,—I would desire to call your attention to the fact that payment of the sum of £150, due by Sir John Orde to me, has not yet been made. In your letter of 1st April last to me you made reference thereto, and asked me to supply you with further information about that sum, but you could not expect me seriously to believe that Sir John Orde was ignorant of what he asked and received payment of the £150 from me for, and I have some hopes now that he has had time calmly to consider the true position of matters, you will advise him candidly to inform you of the facts regarding it, and to pay me that and the other sums justly due to me. I have, you must admit, waited long enough for a settlement of that and other claims, and I must now ask you to say 'yes' or 'no' whether your client is to pay. Evasion will not do any longer.

The other matters referred to in your letter I had considered it advisable should lie over, so that your client might calmly consider the true position of matters. It is time an end should be put to the position into which the Public Prosecutor for the district has been driven, and of being without a dwelling-house of his own to reside in, and indebted for hospitality to a local gentleman—not even being permitted to live in the only hotel in the place, the property of Sir John. I have already fully gone into that, and need not do so again in this letter, but you will permit me to say that my experiences (and what I have seen in the way of other public officials similarly harassed) satisfy me that a public officer cannot, save at great sacrifices to himself, personally carry out his duties, without fear or favour here, so long as he is in any position save that of a proprietor of a comfortable and sanitary residence, held independently under feu, and absolutely free from the power, control, or influence of any landlord. A lease does not afford that position. It is scarce necessary for me to enter on further argument with you on the details of my old lease, save that I must correct your way of quoting it. The eight clauses you do refer to are incorrectly quoted, and you entirely omit mention of thirty-two additional clauses referred to in the lease, and forming part of it—they being estate regulations. Read them. We need not discuss them farther, as they speak for themselves. These and the treatment inflicted on me will surely satisfy the public mind that a residence, as asked by me, is necessary in the circumstances. And I now finally ask if your client is to grant my simple requests. And I ask them not as favours, or anything else, but as matters of simple right and equity.—I am, yours truly,

(Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

XVI.—Letter, 17th March 1893, Messrs Tods, Murray and Jamieson, to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
17th March 1893.

DEAR SIR,—We received your letter of the 1st, which we communicated to our client.

As to the claim for £150, we have already asked you for particulars. Sir John is not aware of any undertaking or agreement under which you can claim that sum from him, but if you will be good enough to give us a statement of the grounds of your claim it will have his consideration.

As regards your renewed application for a feu, we have no other answer to make than that which was made to your letters in the spring of last year.

As to the propriety of the Government supplying official houses for public officers, that is a matter beyond our sphere. We think it formed the subject of a question in the House of Commons with reference to your very case in March last, and you are, no doubt, aware of the answer which was then made.—Yours truly,

Procurator-Fiscal's Office,
Lochmaddy, 17th April 1893.

Feu for Residence for Procurator-Fiscal.

Dear Sirs,—I duly received your letter of the 17th ultimo.

Sir John Orde must be, as I already said, perfectly aware of the nature and grounds of the claim for £150, &c. It may, however, be that he has not a copy of the receipt granted for the money paid by me, and I annex a copy of it for him, but he must surely have had all along entries in his own books relative thereto. I expect an early remittance of that amount, and also settlement for the articles taken over at Rhuiar at my ejection, not yet paid for, and of the balance due to me on the cottages (sometime Mr Wilson's, &c.), which was made a handle of for my ejection, when money was really due, and is still due, to me, by Sir J. Orde instead of my being due to him.

My attention was drawn to a question in March 1892, in the House of Commons, and answer thereto. So far as I am concerned, the question is not such as I would have put had I framed it, but as to the answer I had little doubt it was inspired from you while you were agents for Sir J. Orde, through the medium of your Mr Jamieson, then Crown Agent, and conveyed to the House of Commons by the then Lord Advocate, about that time employed by you as private counsel for Sir J. Orde. You are as well aware as I am how much value need be placed upon it. I was not consulted as to its correctness.—I am, yours truly,

XVIII.—Letter, 25th April 1893, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson, to Mr Chisholm.

66 Queen Street, Edinburgh,
25th April 1893.

Dear Sir,—We received your letter of the 17th inst., sending us a copy of the receipt you hold from Mr Macdonad p. £150, signed 23rd February 1882. That money did not go to the estate, but to the widow of the late Mr Bulkeley, who had agreed to bear half of the expense of the new buildings, and we understand that it was a condition of your getting a lease that you should pay the £150 to Mr Bulkeley's representatives.

It was never intended that you should receive this sum at the end of your lease. If there had been any such understanding it would have been expressed in your lease, but we find nothing in it to warrant the claim.

We may further mention, that though you were bound by your lease to keep up and maintain the buildings and fences, &c., in good tenantable order and repair, that obligation was not properly implemented, and Sir John has had to be at considerable expense in putting them in sufficient repair.

As regards the articles taken over at Rhuiar, we understand that you were tendered the value put upon them by a valuator, when you referred the factor to Mr Wilson, who has made no communication to him (the factor).

As you, however, object to the value, we understand Sir John proposes to have the articles taken down and removed, but we shall write to you again on this subject when we hear further from Sir John.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

We think we have already sufficiently discussed the question of the cottage rents.

The insinuation in the concluding paragraph of your letter regarding the Lord Advocate's reply to the question put in the House of Commons, in March 1892, is without any foundation, and we consider it deserves no notice from us, although we may remark that Mr Jamieson was abroad at the time when the question was put and answered.—We are, yours truly,

(Signed) Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

XIX.—Letter, 21st November 1893, Mr Chisholm to Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

Procurator-Fiscal's Office,
Lochmaddy, 21st Nov. 1893.

Feu for Residence for the Procurator-Fiscal at Lochmaddy, &c.

Dear Sirs,—I have been waiting expecting to hear further from you, as you promised in your letter of 25th April last, without having heard from you.

It was not a condition of my getting a lease that I should pay £150 to the late Mr Bulkeley's representatives. You yourselves, in narrating in your letter of 1st April 1892, the conditions upon which I had held do not specify this as one of the conditions: nor would you ever reply to my repeated queries about this when you tried to hurriedly entrap me into saying I would re-take the place I was evicted from on terms which I said were indefinite and unsatisfactory, but your letter of 25th April last makes it clear you intended to mulct me afresh of another £150. Can you yet appreciate the difference between such a short lease and a feu, or that I should decline your overture to enter into your 'impartial' position! I paid the £150, as Sir John is well aware, on his instructions to his late factor, on the distinct undertaking they would be repaid at outgoing. They were paid to Sir John, and I had nothing to do with their application afterwards. I ask repayment without further ado, and if it is not at once made Sir John will not have to blame me for the consequences.

I distinctly contradict your statement that I was in any way responsible for the state of repair of the old cottage when Sir John came to repair it. He left it uninhabited and uncared for for nearly two years after he evicted me, notwithstanding that Sir John wrote to me on a previous occasion — "Unless a house is 'inhabited in these damp climates they deteriorate very 'much,' and now, long after my eviction, you make this bogus statement, while nothing of the sort was hinted at that time.

As to the articles taken over at Rhuiar, and unpaid for, I declined all along to accept as sole valuator the man Sir John wanted—a jobbing contractor in his own employ. Sir John may do with the articles, which are his, what he pleases, but he must pay me for them.

The money due to me on the question of the cottages I daresay you have, in your opinion, sufficiently discussed. It was made by Sir John Orde the pretext for my eviction, and by his requesting me to pay a sum I was not due for them, and he declared he evicted me on account of that question. After my eviction you asked me to leave over that question for after adjustment. Now you would like to drop it altogether. I cannot afford to allow it to drop, and must ask finally for payment of the money due to me on that head.

I made no insinuation regarding the late Lord Advocate's reply to the question in the House of Commons, in March 1892. I leave insinuation to you. I made a plain statement. The high-toned explanation your firm presumes to adopt, that your Mr Jamieson was, at the time the question was answered, temporarily absent from both his offices, does not virtually alter my view.

I ought in fairness to you to candidly say that the dual position of your Mr Jamieson, as Crown Agent for Scotland (through whose office my official correspondence had for years passed) and as private agent for Sir John Orde, has to my mind been, in these proceedings, an unsatisfactory factor, both in regard to that answer, and also in regard to the insinuation, contained in your letter to me on 23rd November 1891, that I should, as Sir John Orde wished, 'in North Uist occupy an entirely impartial and independent position,' and of which the explanations you tendered were such as I could not, in common sense, accept as satisfactory.

I still want a house site, and payment of the several sums due to me.

As I previously said, this matter is of national importance, and I do not propose to continue any further a discussion with you which seems, notwithstanding my forbearance, to be so fruitless of good result, but I must now submit the matter elsewhere, and with that view I am having the correspondence printed. For two years I have striven, at great personal sacrifices, to obtain recognition of my just requests, and to avoid publicity, but I am sorry to see my efforts have failed, and that now you leave me no alternative but to publicly vindicate my position.—I am, yours truly,

(Signed) ARCHD. A. CHISHOLM.

XX.—Letter, 25th January 1894, Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson to Mr Chisholm.

Edinburgh, 25th January 1894.

DEAR SIR,—We received your letter of the 21st November, and would have replied to it at the time, but Sir John Campbell Orde was then unwell, and we were unable to confer with him.

He has been able to discover no writing, and you have not produced any, showing that the £150 was to be repaid to you, and he has no recollection of any promise of repayment being made or authorised by him. If there had been such a promise it would have been a condition in your lease, and as your lease contains no such condition, and as Sir John has no recollection of any such promise being made or authorised, it is clear that you have no good claim for this sum against him.

Moreover we have again to remind you that by your lease you were bound to maintain the buildings, and to leave them in good order and repair. You failed to do this, with the result that Sir John had to expend over £120 upon them.

With reference to the articles taken over at Rhuiar and our promise to write to you again on the subject we communicated with Sir John, who informed us that Mr Maclean would take up that matter with you, and we were in consequence under the impression that this matter had been arranged between you and Mr Maclean. It now appears that is not the case, and we have therefore to inform you that the articles belonging to you are still at Rhuiar, and are at your disposal. Sir John had them valued and made you an offer. As you considered the offer inadequate and Sir John is not disposed to increase his offer you had better have them removed.

We do not consider that the other matters referred to in your letter require any further answer or notice on our part.—We are, yours truly,

(Signed) TODS, MURRAY & JAMIESON.

XXI.—Letter, 2nd February 1894, Mr Wilson to Messrs Tods, Murray & Jamieson.

Lochmaddy, 2nd February 1894.

DEAR SIRS,—Mr Chisholm, Crown Prosecutor for the Long Island Division of Inverness-shire, sometime ago handed me the correspondence which had passed between him and Sir John Orde and your firm, relative to Sir John Orde's treatment of him and refusal to grant him a site to erect a dwelling-house in North Uist, and he has now handed me your letter of the 25th ulto.

I regret your letter did not reach me before that correspondence was sent for publication, or I would have had it and this reply published also; but you must blame yourselves, as I see from the Northern Chronicle your client, Sir John Orde, was on 5th ulto. at the Central Hotel, Glasgow, and was then offering to travel to Inverness (if someone else would pay his expenses), so that your excuse for him of ill-health comes to me very much like the echo of the reason given for his failure to proceed beyond Varna, when his country's battles had to be fought in the Crimea.

Upon perusal of that correspondence I was so struck with—(1) The conduct of your client, Sir John Orde, in systematically blackmailing and outrageously evicting Her Majesty's Public Prosecutor in these islands, and refusing to allow him a place of abode anywhere 'in North Uist,' ostensibly over a trifling matter of a few pounds, but, as is now clear, really because he did his public duty justly and fearlessly over the whole area of his jurisdiction; and would not make any exception 'in North Uist' (the fractional part thereof belonging to Sir John Orde), and because he refused at all costs to himself (and truly they have been heavy) to be coerced into, or to entertain any covert understanding for, the administration of the criminal law 'in North Uist' differently from the rest of Scotland. (2) The conduct of your firm (your Mr Jamieson being at the time Crown Agent for Scotland), acting as Sir John Orde's paid private agents, aiding and abetting Sir John Orde in his abominable scheme, and by making the grave insinuation or overture (whichever way it may read) in your letter of 23rd November, 1891, to the Public Prosecutor, an insinuation which you must have been perfectly aware was untrue, and which your explanation in your letter to him of 5th January, 1892, only aggravated; and then in attempting to cover your client's scheme by dragging into the correspondence and founding upon an apologetic and partial statement made in the House of Commons in March, 1892, by Lord Advocate Pearson (then employed by you as Sir John Orde's paid private counsel) from information which you do not deny was supplied through you. On these and other grounds I considered it advisable to have the whole correspondence published, with the view of having determined—(a) Whether her Majesty's Public Prosecutor in the Long Island is to obtain a proper dwelling-place at the seat of Court to enable him to carry out freely, and without even colour of persecution, his official duties; or whether he is to be under the control and at the mercy of Sir John Orde, the sole proprietor of that part of the district in which the Court is situated, and the administration of justice be thus reduced to worse than a farce; (b) Whether the Crown Agent for Scotland was justified, for the sake of private gain, in acting on behalf of Sir John Orde—the sole landlord—in his attempt upon a subordinate Crown official, and in supplying only ex parte information to the Lord Advocate without any inquiry for full information of the facts from that official.

The Crown Prosecutor is correct when he says in his letter to you of 18th February 1892 that the matter is one of national importance. It raises two questions of far greater importance than the pecuniary ones involved. It will now require to be determined by the nation whether the right use of landed property is not a higher right than that of technical proprietorship, and whether the Crown is not bound in the public interest to insist upon Sir John Orde, the technical proprietor of North Uist, granting the Crown—the true proprietor—a piece of land for the site of a dwelling-place for the Crown Prosecutor; also whether the Crown Agent for Scotland is to be allowed to have the advantage of such a public position for the furtherance of the illegitimate aims of his private clients for pay.

It is too monstrous for expression to find (as the correspondence clearly shows, has been Mr Chisholm's experience at Sir John Orde's hands) that in the 19th century the Crown Public Prosecutor should not dare impartially to perform the public duties he is sworn to perform without having the wrath and systematic vengeance of the man who happens to be sole proprietor of North Uist Island levelled at him—evicted from his home through your agency on a trumped up pretext which I observe you afterwards not only abandoned, but desired even to drop discussion of; his household effects compelled to be sacrificed by sale at public auction; thereafter a pretence of willingness to relet, which, when examined, was seen to be a petti-fogging dodge; next, the only hotel in the place (also belonging to Sir John Orde) debarred him; every harrassment studiously used against him, and he himself forced to trust to the generosity of the only leaseholder in the district for a roof over the heads of himself and his family, and it is deplorably humiliating to find that in that course of outrageous conduct Sir John Orde has been aided by the Crown Agent for Scotland for pay. I propose presenting a petition to Her Majesty the Queen in Council in regard to this matter.

Lochmaddy, North Uist.

Thomas Wilson.

Your letter of the 25th ulto. I briefly dismiss. It is but a continuation of that evasion and quibbling of which your letters are unfortunately too full. I observe that time after time Mr Chisholm questions you on material points which you, with undoubted discourtesy, ignore replying to, and I find it impossible to conclude that you had any other object in so doing than to make it impossible for him, even if he wished, to accept the pretended offer of a relet of the place he had been evicted from, therefore he declines further correspondence with you and I have advised him not to entrust you with any documents bearing on his claims against Sir John Orde. The alleged want of recollection of Sir John Orde on the £150, etc., claims, I will take an opportunity of refreshing, and asking him to disgorge. The rapacity of the man who, taking advantage of his position of sole landlord of an island suddenly raises a rent from £12, 10s. to £30 per annum; makes the tenant pay £150 for buildings; evicts him without cause; refuses to settle or disgorge anything; and then proposes to the evicted and insulted tenant to retake the place on the same terms, is unparalleled.

Mr Chisholm has already repudiated liability for the repairs you allege to have been executed at Rhuiar Cottage, which you first bring to his notice two years after his eviction therefrom, and as to the articles at Rhuiar it is absurd to offer them back to Mr Chisholm, after taking over, keeping, and using them for over two years.

Sir John will have to pay for them.

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) THOMAS WILSON.

P.S.—I will endeavour to do justice by having your last letter and this published.

HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

Norman Macleod.

NORMAN MACLEOD, Crofter, Borsham, South Harris (75). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter).

41,870. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter in Borsham?—Yes.

41,871. How many crofters are there in Borsham?—Four.

41,872. And how many cottars?—Only one cottar. Allan and Angus Macdonald have the same croft, No. 4, Borsham.

41,873. Then there are four crofts and five crofters?—Four crofts and two on each croft.

41,874. What size of a croft have you?—Only very small.

41,875. What stock have you?—Two cows, with calves, and three heifers.

41,876. Any horses?—No.

41,877. What rent do you pay?—£2, 15s.

41,878. Are you a crofter under the Act?—Yes.

41,879. What was your old rent?—£4, 17s. 6d.

41,880. Is your township crowded?—Crowded enough: eight families to-day.

41,881. I thought you said there were only six families,—five crofters and one cottar?—There are two families on every croft, making eight on the four crofts.

41,882. How long have the eight families been on the four crofts?—A long time.

41,883. Is there any land in your neighbourhood that could be got for the extension of your township?—There is land near us.

41,884. Where?—There is vacant ground southward of us.

41,885. On what farm is the vacant ground?—It is in the tack of Rodel and Strond: it belongs to Mrs Macdonald: it is on both sides of the township of Rodel, east and west of it.

41,886. Then it is part of the farm of Rodel?—Yes.

41,887. Is there arable land on that farm that would be available for new townships?—Yes, there were people there before.

41,888. Is there any other land in that part of the island which you think would be suitable for new holdings for crofters?—I don't know any except what is to the west of Harris.

41,889. On what farm is the land that you speak of?—It is vacant without any people: there are nine vacant townships between Nisishee and Nisabost.

41,890. Can you tell us the names of these nine townships beginning with Nisishee?—Drimaphuind, Ceann-Tuilbheig, Caolas-Liadiar. [Mr Macrae.—He is going south instead of north]. I cannot say much about the rest.

41,891. You have named only four townships out of the nine?—Craco is the first township, Vatten next, then Seilebost, Nisabost, Torgabost, Borvebeg, Borvemeanach or Mid-Borve, Borvemore, Scarastavore, and Scarastaveg.

41,892. Is there old arable land upon all the townships that you have mentioned?—Yes.

41,893. Suitable for crofting townships?—Yes, I was born there myself.

41,894. Were there crofter townships on that ground before?—Yes.

41,895. When was the ground cleared of the crofters?—When the army came to remove them; when I was a youngster a company of soldiers came to remove them.

41,896. Did the people leave of their own accord?—No, they would never do that: they were very loth to go.

41,897. Were they put out of that by force?—Yes, against their will.

41,898. Is there a desire in your township for larger holdings?—I cannot say anything about that.

41,899. Are you content with the size of holdings which you now have?—I am too old to go into that now, but if I would get additional land where I am I would prefer it.

41,900. Is there a general desire among the crofters in the island to get back to the townships which you have mentioned?—Yes: I would ask myself, if I was young enough. It was very well worth asking for, compared with what we have now; and there are men here who will speak for themselves. I would rather a foot there than a yard or even two yards where I am.

41,901. Is the land better along the west coast of the island than on the east side where the townships are?—It is well known that it is. Where I cut my peats this year I must put my crops next year; that is on the east side.

41,902. What was the object they had in view in shifting the crofters from the west side to the east side of the island?—They did not care where they went if they would get that ground cleared for Mr Stewart.

41,903. What was Mr Stewart going to do with that ground?—To stock it for himself.

41,904. Which ground is that?—Borve and those other townships.

41,905. Who was Mr Stewart?—Old Donald Stewart, who was a while factor to Lord Dunmore.

41,906. Mr Maccallum.—You mentioned a large number of townships, and we would like to localise them better. The first farm that you mentioned, I think, is Rodel; can you give us the old townships that were on the present farm of Rodel?—Some of them, at least.

41,907. Give us their names as well as you can?—Lingarabay, another place called Uamh, then the Black Park, South Strond. I don't know any more.

41,908. Now, do you know how many tenants occupied these places? How many were in Lingarabay?—I don't know whether it was four of my size of lots, or only three.

41,909. Then in Uamh?—Scarcely a croft at all, only a lot of rocks.

41,910. By how many was it occupied before?—They were forced to live in places that were not fit to live in.

41,911. And in South Strond?—There were four at least of that class of crofts.

41,912. When did they cease to be there?—It is 20 years since they were removed.

41,913. Are you quite sure about that period of years?—I think I am.

41,914. Had these four townships the whole of Rodel Farm between them?—These townships that I mentioned were only wings on the farm of Rodel.

41,915. And these were removed 20 years ago?—Much more.

41,916. But these particular wings that you talk of?—It is 30 years since they were removed from Lingarabay and these places.

41,917. What was the cause of their removal at that time?—To make room for bigger people in the world; to add it to tacks.

41,918. Are these places that you mentioned the places on Rodel Farm that you consider suitable for occupation by crofters?—The Strond end is very good; and Lingarabay would suit two or three.

41,919. Was there any part of the farm of Rodel occupied by crofters except these four wings of it?—All Rodel was occupied by crofters at one time.

41,920. When was that?—Long since.

41,921. Can you give us any idea of the time of removal?—No, I don't know if I was born at the time, I don't mind the removal at Rodel, but I remember when they were removed from South Strond.

41,922. It was before your time, but did you hear what number of crofters were there?—I cannot say, but I remember Macleod being proprietor and Donald Stewart his factor. Stewart took up Rodel as a farm so far as I know. Mr Shaw was factor in Harris for a while, then Mr Stewart got the factorship, and then he took Rodel himself.

41,923. Have you any idea then how many small tenants were in Rodel before Mr Stewart got it?—I remember Mr Macdonald being the farmer of Rodel, and then there were people on Lingarabay: he came there as a tacksman and then he got to be factor, and was factor for North and South Harris.

41,924. Did Macdonald come after Stewart?—Yes, after Stewart.

41,925. I want to find out from you, as far as you can tell us, the old condition of things in Rodel. Can you give us any idea of the number of people that were in Rodel before it was cleared for Stewart, and can you tell us what the condition of the people was?—I cannot tell you the number, but I have heard that they were well off.

41,926. Do you think that it is suitable for being re-occupied by crofters?—Why not?

41,927. Tell us about it and why you think it is suitable?—The land is very good for people, but I don't know how it would suit them to-day, owing to there being so many big houses. We have no right to think about these good lands.

41,928. Do you think the people have no right to ask for it because there are white houses there built by the proprietor?—The people would be very glad of places not so good as Rodel: they would like to leave Rodel to the proprietor himself.

41,929. Does the proprietor reside there?—Not at present.

41,930. Does he usually live there?—Sometimes.

41,931. Is the farm of Rodel in his own occupation?—It is rented.

41,932. Does the tenant reside on it?—No.

41,933. Has the tenant of Rodel another farm?—She has a farm on the machair besides.

41,934. Is it a large holding?—Not very big.

41,935. Is it good land?—It is like all the rest.

41,936. All the rest on the west coast or the east coast?—On the west coast.

41,937. That is on the good side of the island?—Yes.

41,938. What is the name of the other place that the tenant holds?—Borvemore.

41,939. Were there small tenants there before?—I saw tenants there, but they were not very long.

41,940. Now, with regard to Rodel, how many comfortable, self-sustaining crofts do you think might be formed there?—I cannot say.

41,941. You have come here to give evidence with regard to the lands which you consider suitable, and if you do not give your opinion in regard to that I fail to see how we are to be informed by you?—I came here because I was called for: I am not going to say what I do not know.

41,942. Was your name not put here as a delegate to give evidence?—Yes, and am I not doing it as far as I know?

41,943. You represent others, do you not?—Yes.

41,944. You know the present crofts you have, and you say they are very small and unsuitable: you mentioned yourself the farm of Rodel as a place that contains much better land than the land of the crofters: now, would you give us some opinion as to the number of crofts that might be formed on that farm? There is no proposal on your part to interfere in the slightest way with the occupation of Rodel, but give us your opinion how many could be formed there?—I cannot go into that.

41,945. Have you any idea of the acreage of the arable that is in it?—No.

41,946. Tell me then is the land in it very much superior to the land held by the crofters?—Oh, yes; there are none in the Bays of Harris where I am that have land so good.

41,947. Can you tell us any land occupied by crofters in Harris that is equal to the land in Rodel?—Perhaps places could be found on the west coast as good as Rodel.

41,948. But these are not occupied by crofters?—No, there are farmers there.

41,949. Can you tell us of any land occupied by crofters that is equal to the land in Rodel?—It is, at least, as good as any land occupied by crofters in Harris.

41,950. Is it better?—I cannot say that it is.

41,951. Where are the crofts that you think equally good with Rodel?—The small crofters are now in the peat mosses.

41,952. Are the crofters in Harris placed in the peat mosses?—All the people on the east coast are situated there.

41,953. So that, in your opinion, the crofters have land much inferior to the land in the farm of Rodel: that must necessarily follow?—Yes.

41,954. If crofters were placed in Rodel would they be able to make a better living than they are doing in their present crofts?—Yes.

Tarbert, Harris.

Norman Macleod.

41,955. Could a large number of crofts be formed there?—You can see for yourself: I cannot say.

41,956. If you are not willing to give evidence, we have no desire to force you to do so against your will or what you think against your interest?—I will do my best.

41,957. Do you know Rodel?—Yes.

41,958. Is it an extensive farm?—It is not very big; it is narrow; there is no great deal of land in it; it is but a small glen, only there are big houses along the shore built for shooting lodges and for sportsmen.

41,959. But you have already told us that the land is very much superior to that held by the crofters: now can you tell us the number, in your opinion, that might be comfortably settled on that farm?—I cannot take anything to do with that: I cannot say how many could be put there.

41,960. Can you tell us whether the people were put out of Rodel for their benefit? Was that the purpose of removing them?—I was not born when they were removed, so I cannot say: I remember seeing in my own place, very near where I lived, two tenants paying £9, and there are ten there to-day.

41,961. And what do the ten pay among them?—Only what the two were paying.

41,962. What is the name of the place?—Ardvey.

41,963. How did it come about that that was divided among ten?—I will tell you that. Some ran into arrears and debt; the half of the people went to Australia, and the other half were settled here and there because they were in debt.

41,964. Some of the tenantry that left Quidnish were sent to Ardvey?—Yes.

41,965. What was done with those who had Ardvey at that time: did they also leave?—Those that were there at that time died, and their sons went to Australia.

41,966. Were the two who were in Ardvey put out to make room for people in Quidnish, or was their own place divided, and small parts of the old place given them?—Yes, they were removed. One of the two tenants in Ardvey was removed to the west side of Harris and took good crofts there: they ran into debt and had to leave.

41,967. Now, with regard to Quidnish, was that a better place than the place to which they were sent in Ardvey?—Much better.

41,968. Had they larger holdings in Quidnish than they got in Ardvey?—Yes.

41,969. Were the people in Quidnish in more comfortable circumstances than they were after going to Ardvey?—Of course they were.

41,970. Can you give us any information as to the reason why they were put out of Rodel?—No, I cannot say.

41,971. But you are quite clear that the land there is much superior to anything now held by the crofters?—It is much better than the land where we are.

41,972. Now, can you tell us about Kyles? Were there crofters there in olden times?—I don't remember seeing any in Kyles but one house. I cannot speak except of what I have seen myself there.

41,973. Then we may take it that it was not in your time that this land was cleared, if it ever was cleared: but can you tell us whether there are any indications to show that there were tenants there, and whether there is a general belief among the crofters that there were tenants in Kyles?—I believe there were, but I did not see them.

41,974. Are there ruins visible?—I am not going there: it is far from me.

41,975. How is Kyles occupied just now?—The farmer resides on Kyles.

41,976. Has he another farm besides Kyles?—I don't know of any other.

41,977. Is Northtown in it?—Yes.

41,978. Were these two farms ever separate?—I don't remember.

41,979. During all the time you can remember, were these two large farms held as one holding?—They were in the occupation of one so far as I remember.

41,980. Had the tenant of Kyles always the farm of Northtown?—Since I remember they were the same farm.

Tarbert, Harris.

Norman Macleod.

41,981. How do they happen to have two names, Northtown and Kyles, if they were always one farm?—I cannot tell.

41,982. Was there ever a farm-house on Northtown?—I never saw a farmer there or a tenant: it is only a shepherd that I have seen there.

41,983. Is this farm of Kyles and Northtown a large holding?—Yes, a pretty good farm.

41,984. Is there land there of much superior quality to that held by the crofters on the east side?—Yes.

41,985. Do you think that there were tenants there at some time or other?—I never saw them.

41,986. Did you hear that there were crofters there?—Yes, I believe there were.

41,987. Did you ever hear of the clearances from these places?—I never heard. I heard of some being removed from Ceann-Tuilbheig near Kyles.

41,988. But did you ever hear that there were people removed from Kyles and Northtown?—I cannot say.

41,989. You can say whether you heard it or not?—If I heard it I do not remember.

41,990. You do not remember that you ever heard of people being removed from these places?—I do not remember of hearing of any people being removed, but I saw the people removed from Ceann-Tuilbheig.

41,991. Now, do you consider that if some of the crofters and cottars on the east side were removed, and got fairly sized crofts there, they could make a comfortable living?—Very likely they would be better.

41,992. Is that your decided opinion, that it is suitable for occupation by crofters?—Oh, why not?

41,993. Is there a considerable proportion of good arable land, and also of pasture?—Yes.

41,994. Then as to Scarastaveg, can you tell us whether there were crofters there in olden times?—No, I don't know, but there are other people here who can tell.

41,995. You say you never saw crofters in that place: but did you hear of there being crofters there?—Yes, and in Scarastavore, but I did not see them; they were removed from there before I was born.

41,996. Did you hear anything as to the number of crofters that were in Scarastaveg?—No, I cannot say as to that.

41,997. Did you hear anything as to the reason for their removal?—What I remember about Scarastaveg is that Mr Stewart had it first, then came Dr Clark in his place.

41,998. Did you ever hear how it was occupied before Stewart got it?—No, I did not hear.

41,999. Don't the people speak about these lands now?—There are none living that saw people there.

42,000. But did you hear them speaking about these lands and how they were occupied in the times of their forefathers?—I heard many things, but I do not recollect them all.

42,001. You seem somewhat unwilling to tell us what you heard about these things?—I heard and I know that people were removed from there by Mr Stewart and sent to the Bays; I saw Scarastaveg with Mr Stewart first, to my own knowledge; then Dr Clark came, and he built a house there.

42,002. Now, with regard to Scarastaveg, give us your opinion as to whether it is suitable for occupation by small crofters?—Undoubtedly it is.

42,003. How is it occupied just now?—A tacksman has got it.

42,004. Is there anything else held by that tacksman in connection with Scarastaveg?—Yes.

42,005. What other place has he got?—Taransay.

42,006. That is an island that he has in connection with his farm?—Yes.

42,007. Is that a suitable place for occupation by crofters?—They were there before, at all events; I never went through it much.

42,008. Were there many there?—Yes.

42,009. Can you tell us about what time they were removed from Taransay?—I have a faint recollection of seeing crofters in Taransay.

42,010. Where did they go after they lost Taransay?—Some of them were sent down to Ceann-Tuilbheig, and some went to Lewis—to Arivruach.

42,011. Can you tell us what you think the reason of the removal was?—I don't know.

42,012. What was done with the land after they lost it?—John Macdonald got it.

42,012A. Who was he?—A brother of Malcolm Macdonald, Obe.

42,013. Had he anything to do with the estate management?—No.

42,014. Do you think Taransay is a place suitable for occupation by crofters?—I believe it is.

42,015. Is it the opinion of those whom you represent that Taransay is suitable for occupation by crofters?—I believe it is suitable for crofters, and other people can say so as well.

42,016. Would they have opportunities of fishing if they were placed on Taransay?—Yes.

42,017. Would the condition of the cottars and crofters be greatly improved by their being settled on Taransay?—I believe they would be improved: nature says that they would be better with something than with what they have.

42,018. What fishing would they have access to if they were placed on Taransay?—The long-line and lobster fishing and the hand-lines.

42,019. Do they fish for lobsters in the neighbourhood of Taransay?—Yes, those who are there.

42,020. Are the cottars and crofters of Harris greatly dependent on the fishing?—They are obliged to be, but the sea does not pay so well nowadays.

42,021. Would they be quite as well situated for fishing on Taransay as they are in their present holdings?—Scarcely as well for herring as where they are; but the land is better in Taransay.

42,022. What fishing do they find most profitable—lobster fishing or herring fishing—hereabouts?—They complain of both nowadays.

42,023. From which of those fishings do they get the better return?—Both would pay very well if they got them, but the fish get very scarce nowadays.

42,024. The fishing has not been successful for some years?—No.

42,025. When had they a good herring fishing?—It is some time since a good fishing was done in Harris, and therefore we are poor.

42,026. Is the herring fishing much more uncertain than the lobster fishing?—They are always sure of lobsters, but not so sure of herring; sometimes you won't get any herring at all.

42,027. I think you were able to give more definite information about Scarastavore. You have heard about the removals there; can you tell us about what time the removal of the people took place?—I cannot say, but I have heard about crofters being there.

42,028. Did you hear that there was a large number of crofters there?—Yes, but I did not see them.

42,029. Did you hear why they were removed?—Yes.

42,030. Did you hear what was done with the land that they had?—I heard that they were removed from Scarastavore and from Scarastaveg by Stewart.

42,031. And the tenants were sent to the east?—Yes, into the peat hags.

42,032. So your evidence comes to this, that those two places, Scarastaveg and Scarastavore, were cleared in order to make a large tack for Mr Stewart?—I am sure of it.

42,033. How is Borve held now?—Borvebeg and Mid-Borve are in the possession of Duncan Macrae.

42,034. Does he reside on the farm of Borve?—Yes.

42,035. Has he any other place in connection with the farm of Borve?—No.

42,036. Has he not an island?—Unless he has a small island in the Sound of Harris.

42,037. Do you know the island of Sursay?—Yes; I don't know whether he has it now or not.

42,038. Can you tell us anything about it?—It is a small island; I have been there myself.

42,039. Do you know how it was held formerly,—whether crofters ever held it in connection with their holdings?—I don't know: but there is arable land on it; I don't believe anybody resided there.

42,040. Is Borve also a suitable place for occupation by small tenants?—Why not?

42,041. Do you mean that, in your opinion, it is suitable?—I believe it is, if they got it.

42,042. Is there a deer forest in Harris?—Yes: did I not tell you about the townships in the deer forests along these places?

42,043. Perhaps you can give us now distinctly the names of the old townships in the deer forest: kindly give them in their order?—Craco is the first, at the north end, then Seilebost, Gearraidh-fada, Nisabost, and Torgabost: we are at the fence now.*

42,044. Five townships are now included in the forest?—Yes.

42,045. Now, could you give us any idea of the number of families that occupied each township?—No; these people were removed from there before I was born. My father lived there before he was married.

42,046. What township was he in?—Torgabost.

42,047. Were you born there?—No.

42,048. Where were you born?—In Borve.

42,049. Had your father a holding in Torgabost?—Yes, and my grandfather.

42,050. Have you any idea of the number who were there along with your father?—No, I cannot say.

42,051. Can you tell us why your father was removed?—I cannot tell that.

42,052. Did your father never speak to you about his removal from Torgabost?—I might easily have known, but I did not hear: possibly others present might know.

42,053. But did your father ever speak to you about his removal from Torgabost?—I do not remember.

42,054. Do you distinctly tell me that you cannot remember ever having a conversation with your father about the removal from Torgabost?—I do not remember hearing anything.

42,055. Had you no curiosity yourself about it?—I did not ever think of asking.

42,056. Can you tell us who got it after your father left?—All that I remember about Torgabost and Nisabost is that it was stocked by Stewart, and was full of cattle since I remember.

42,057. That is your early recollection?—That is what I recollect about it.

42,058. Then it is a place suited for rearing good Highland cattle?—Yes, it was then better than to-day.

42,059. Would the land occupied by crofters rear such Highland cattle as could be reared in places like Torgabost in the deer forest?—No, nor half so good.

42,060. It is quite impossible for the crofters to rear cattle of as good quality as were raised on Torgabost?—We only feed our cattle to-day.

42,061. And you cannot rear heavy cattle there?—No, the place is so boggy.

42,062. And the land which was capable of raising such good Highland cattle is now occupied as a deer forest, is it?—Yes.

42,063. Do you think that the crofters would be much benefited by the cottars getting land out of the large farms and deer forest if they were settled there?—Yes, undoubtedly.

42,064. Could a large number of crofts be formed all along the west side of the island?—Very likely.

42,065. Is there a large number of crofters in Harris?—Yes.

42,066. And are they all placed on the most barren parts of the island?—There is not a bit in Harris worse than the east of Harris.

42,067. Can you tell us the number of crofters in South-Harris?—No.

42,068. Are there as many cottars as there are

* A delegate who accompanied the Commissioners at the inspection enumerated the old townships on the west side of South Harris as follows:—Craco, Gearraidh-fada, Seilebost, Torgabost, Nisabost, Borbh-Bheag, Borbh-Mheadhonach, Borbh-Mhor, Scarasta-Mhor, Scarasta-Bheag, Nishishee, An Taobh-Tuath, An Taobh-Deas (of Northtown), Uidhe, Druim-a'-Phuinnd, Caolas, and Ceann-Tuilbheig. These are all absorbed in the forest or in farms.

Tarbert, Harris.

Norman Macleod.

crofters?—I don't think there are quite so many, but there is a large number.

42,069. You were sent here to represent the views and opinions of the people, and can you say what they look to as a remedy for their present poverty?—If they got a piece of the land.

42,070. Do they look for land as their chief remedy?—That is what I hear them saying.

42,071. Do you agree with them?—Yes, undoubtedly. I never wanted land myself, and I know I would do anything to maintain my footing on the land.

42,072. You think it is a great benefit to yourself to have land?—Yes.

42,073. Are you prepared to speak of any other land in South Harris?—I cannot say much more than what I have said.

42,074. Mr Thomas Wilson, Solicitor, Lochmaddy, representing the estate.—Are Borvemore and Scarastavore the same place?—The same place.

42,075. You have spoken of a great number of evictions: did those take place before the present Dunmore family obtained the estate?—I believe they took place in Scarastavore before Lord Dunmore got it.

42,076. But you have spoken of a great many evictions. Do you know of any which have taken place since the Dunmore family acquired the estate?—I remember when we had three proprietors in Harris, and the Scarastavore people were removed before then.

42,077. Do you recollect any evictions by the present proprietors, the Dunmores?—No.

42,078. Was old Donald Stewart ever a factor to the Dunmore family?—I believe he was.

42,079. That is not the case: he was never a factor for Lord Dunmore.

Mr Gordon.—How long is it since the Dunmore family got the estate? (Mr Wilson).—I have not the exact date.

Can you tell us roughly the date, because the witness stated that there were some people cleared out of the farm of Rodel twenty or thirty years ago? (Mr Wilson).—I am told it was fifty-seven years ago.

Then the evictions from Rodel, twenty or thirty years ago, must have taken place when Lord Dunmore was proprietor. (Mr Wilson).—I want the witness to state if they were done by the Dunmore family.

You must put the two facts together yourself. Lord Dunmore's family have been in the possession of the estate of South Harris for fifty-seven years: and the witness stated that he remembers crofters being cleared out of the farm of Rodel within the last twenty or thirty years. (Mr Wilson).—Very good.

42,080–84. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Do you remember when the portion of the farm of Rodel, which is called the Strond-side, was occupied by crofters,—the south side?—Yes.

42,085. How many crofters were cleared out of that part?—Not more than four or five.

42,086. Tell us as near as you can how many years it is since those crofters were turned out of the place and the land added to the farm of Strond?—Over twenty years.

42,087. Were the lands they occupied added to the farm of Rodel immediately after they were put out?—Yes.

42,088. Were some of those crofters paying as high as £9 or £10 of rent each?—I believe so.

42,089. Did you know one of them called John Mackenzie, whose son Donald is to-day living at Strond?—Yes, I knew him.

42,090. Had he a big croft?—He was near Glen-Borosdale.

42,091. Is it a fact that he had 15 head of cattle and 180 head of sheep when he was evicted out of that place?—I will not say anything about that.

42,092. Was he not in good comfortable circumstances when he was evicted?—Yes. I am not going to say what he had.

42,093. Was he, to your knowledge, in very comfortable circumstances when he was sent out of that place?—He was like any other good crofter.

Tarbert, Harris.

Norman Macleod.

42,094. Can you see any good reason why a crofter to-day could not, if placed there, be as comfortable as that man was?—I think he should be.

42,095. Did those who elected you to come here to-day to represent them ask you to make a statement before the Royal Commission about some lands being too good for cottars to think about?—I would not go by what other people might say, but by what I know myself.

42,096. Did they say in your hearing that there were certain lands which they considered too good for them to apply for?—No, they did not.

42,097. Did you ever hear any of the cottars whom you represent say that it would be out of place to think about lands on which there were slated houses, occupied by sportsmen or by landlords?—I believe they never expect such lands, whether they get them or not.

42,098. (Question repeated in Gaelic by Mr Macrae).—He dare not ask such land as Rodel, because it is under the proprietors, and is a big shooting place. [Mr Macrae.—I am afraid the interpreter (Mr Macaskill) is at fault: witness said the very opposite. He said the people would dare to ask any land because they need it, wherever it is, if the law would give it to them.]

42,099. Did those whom you represent here state, or did they authorise you to state, that it would be improper or impertinent of them to aspire to lands on which there are big slated houses, or lands which are occupied by sportsmen?—I did not hear anything about that. Let them do what they like, but I have no expectation of getting a white house, or of troubling those who have white houses.

42,100. But in all that you said in that regard, you did not represent the people?—I was saying that I did not think they wished to get the Rodel house, but that they would take the lands about Rodel.

42,101. Was the Donald Stewart you spoke about the same Donald Stewart who cleared Park in Lewis?—I believe so, but I am not sure.

42,102. Was he the father of the present laird of Ensay?—Yes.

42,103. Do you know the island of Ensay?—Yes.

42,104. Do you believe that there were small tenants in that island at one time?—I believe there were, but I have not seen them.

42,105. Is there another island in the neighbourhood near Ensay of which Mr Stewart is proprietor also?—Mr Stewart is proprietor of Pabbay and Ensay.

42,106. Do you believe there were tenants in Pabbay also?—Yes, I remember tenants in Pabbay.

42,107. Now, if those whom you represent had their choice, which would they prefer,—being in the Bays of Harris or having holdings in Ensay or Pabbay?—I believe they would prefer to be in these islands: the land there is much better.

42,108. You think the islands are more suitable for crofter tenants than the places where the crofters are in Harris?—I think the crofters would be better there than where they are. I also think that if I were young myself I would leave where I am and go there.

42,109. On the farm of Rodel is there a great deal of land that was at one time cultivated, but that has for a number of years now been allowed to go to waste?—There are strips on each side of Rodel proper, but the east side of Rodel has land of the same class as we crofters occupy.

42,110. But, with regard to Rodel proper, leaving out those wings, is there much land that was once arable but has been waste for a long time?—There is a considerable extent of such land; but as there are large buildings on Rodel, and as sportsmen come there, I do not think the tenants would care to trouble them about the place. So long as there are other places in Harris, the tenants would not like to trouble them about Rodel.

42,111. Did you hear any cottar of those whom you represent saying that he would not care about getting those lands on the farm of Rodel?—No, I did not hear a word from them on that point, but that is my own opinion. My opinion is that if I could get another place I would sooner take it than interfere with that farm.

42,112. In the event of new crofter holdings being created, would you think it improper for a crofter to have a slated house with an upstairs as well as downstairs?—I think a crofter would take a poorer house than that if he only got land.

42,113. Do you approve of slated houses for crofters?—It is not the custom with them in this country.

42,114. Are you one of the men against whom action was recently taken for keeping the cattle inside your own dwelling-house?—I am the very man.

42,115. Have you any reason to believe that any crofters who would settle down on the west side of the island would have any objection to a slated house for himself?—If they got them they would be very glad to have them, or if they could build them. Who would not be glad to have them?

42,116. What land now waste was cleared with the help of the military?—I remember that I was a young lad at the time, and ran out of the township before them. That was from Little Borve. My father and many others went away to the moss with all their stock at that time.

42,117. Who was the factor at that time?—Mr Duncan Shaw.—[The Secretary—Mr Duncan Shaw, who was factor for Lord Dunmore at the time, gave an account of the Borve clearance before a Select Committee of the House of Commons on 19th March 1841. According to Mr Shaw, the tenant of the large farms surrounding Borve refused to renew his lease if Borve were not included in it. Accordingly, the crofters were warned to remove at Whitsunday 1839. They refused to go, and a company of soldiers was sent to Borve. Some of the leaders were arrested and the others yielded. They were allowed to remain in possession till Whitsunday 1840.]

42,118. Who got the land when the people were evicted?—Mr Donald Stewart. He got the land my father was in.

42,119. You never heard any crofter or cottar in the Highlands propose to get the military to put Mr Stewart out to-day?—No.

42,120. And you never heard a crofter or a cottar wanting land for nothing?—No, I did not hear that either. I don't think they would ask it for nothing.

42,121. Mr T. Wilson.—You said crofters were evicted from Ensay. Could you tell us when that happened?—No, I do not know.

42,122. Was it in your lifetime?—I do not know whether it was done in my time, but I don't remember it. [The Secretary.—According to a return made by the parish minister in 1764, and published in Dr Walker's Economical History of the Hebrides, there was at that time a population of 60 in the island of Ensay, 186 in the island of Pabbay, 48 in Killegray, and 28 in Taransay. Again, in Robert Heron's General View of the Hebudæ or Hebrides, published in 1794, Pabbay is referred to as having once been the granary of Harris. "Its population in 1765, estimated at 120 souls, appears to have since increased." The population of Ensay is not given, but that of Killegray is stated at 30 souls, and Taransay "about 140 souls."]

Donald Maclennan.

DONALD MACLENNAN, Cottar, Scarasta, Harris (52). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

42,123. Mr Gordon.—Are you a cottar?—Yes.

42,124. Is Scarasta a farm?—Yes, it is on the glebe.

42,125. Do you work for the minister?—Yes.

42,126. Are you his servant and horseman?—No.

42,127. What is your occupation?—I am a roadman.

42,128. Are there many cottars near you?—Yes.

42,129. How many?—Between ten and twelve.

42,130. Were you appointed by them as a delegate to come here and speak for them?—Yes.

42,131. Did they desire you to say that they would like to get land?—Yes.

42,132. Is there any land near you that you think would be suitable for holdings?—Plenty.

42,133. Where?—All the west of Harris.

Tarbert, Harris.

42,134. Did you hear the evidence given by the last witness as to that part of the island?—Yes.

Donald Maclennan.

42,135. Do you agree with what he stated?—With some of it.

42,136. What part of it do you disagree with?—I cannot put it consecutively.

42,137. Is there any other place on the west coast of Harris which you think specially well suited for new crofter holdings?—I know it is all suited for crofters.

42,138. Could you tell us a few places which you think suitable?—Every one of them.

42,139. Do you mean every one of the places spoken to by the last witness?—Yes.

42,140. Then you agree with him as to these?—Yes.

42,141. What is it that you differ from him about?—That part is as good as any in the Long Island.

42,142. (Question repeated).—(A.) We will come to that by-and-by; I cannot give it all at once.

42,143. Was it about the crofters on Rodel?—I see every place that is there good for crofters.

42,144. Could you give us some idea of the kind of croft you would like?—Yes; a croft that would rent at £5 or £6 at least.

42,145. Would such tenants hold their croft as part of their living, and find work elsewhere to make up a livelihood?—I would require £12 worth of land before I could make a living off it.

42,146. Is the general desire of the cottars in your neighbourhood to have crofts fairly rented at about £5 or £6, or would they like larger crofts?—Some of them would like crofts of that size.

42,147. And would some of them prefer larger crofts?—Yes.

42,148. Is there any labouring or fishing to be had in your quarter?—Plenty fishing, but not much work.

42,149. Is it a good place for fishing?—Yes.

42,150. What kind of fishing?—Every kind.

42,151. Is there any harbour where good boats could land safely?—They were not required: there are anchorages and harbours.

42,152. Is there any place for a harbour near where you reside?—No, there is none near me.

42,153. Is it lobster fishing that is mainly prosecuted on that side?—Yes.

42,154. Are there any men who devote their time mainly to fishing in that part of the island?—Yes; they have nothing else to do.

42,155. Where do they reside?—About Obe, Taransay, and Ceann-Tuilbheig.

42,156. But that is not near where you live?—No.

42,157. Can you tell us how the cottars in your neighbourhood occupy their time?—They have nothing except the work they may get from the tacksman.

42,158. They maintain themselves mainly by labouring on the land?—They get bits of land besides, from the tacksman.

42,159. Do you think that any land in your neighbourhood could be formed profitably into small holdings for fishermen?—Yes, I think so.

42,160. Where?—All along the machair coast.

42,161. Is there any harbour near that?—No.

42,162. How then could you locate fishermen without a harbour near?—There is plenty of fishing if there was a harbour.

42,163. Then the crofts they would require would of necessity be of a size sufficient to keep them and their families without fishing?—That is the best way they could be.

42,164. Do you know the farm of Rodel at all?—Yes.

42,165. Are there any harbours on that farm?—Yes.

42,166. Is there any land on that farm near a harbour that could be made into small holdings for fishermen?—Alongside there is.

42,167. Would you consider that a better place for fishermen than the west side of the island?—It is safer for the men.

42,168. Mr Munro.—You told us that the cottars of Harris mainly obtain a livelihood by outside labour. Now, what kind of living do they get?—Some make living by having bits of land from the tacksmen, and by fishing, and others have to go outside for work.

Tarbert, Harris.

Donald Maclennan.

42,169. Is it not the case that the main contribution to the living of the cottars in Harris is in tweed-making?—Yes, to a large extent.

42,170. Almost every cottar, I suppose, makes tweed more or less?—Yes.

42,171. Where do they get the wool?—From the merchants.

42,172. Is the cottar in every case obliged to buy from the merchant?—Yes.

42,173. If the cottar were to get a fair quantity of land, could he not raise sufficient wool for himself to make the tweed from?—Any amount.

42,174. Then, of course, it follows that he would be able to make a better profit from the tweed industry?—Double.

42,175. And his position would be so much more comfortable?—Much more so.

42,176. How long have you lived in this island?—All my life, only going outside for work.

42,177. I suppose I may assume that the cottars are very anxious to obtain possession of suitable pieces of land?—They are very well since I remember.

42,178. Do you remember the evictions that took place?—I was born the year after the evictions.

42,179. So that you cannot speak of them except from hearsay?—I remember every word I heard about them.

42,180. Do you know who is the present tenant of Taransay?—Mr Macdonald.

42,181. What is he?—A farmer.

42,182. Does he reside on his farm?—One of them is there, and another is in Edinburgh.

42,183. What does he do in Edinburgh?—He has a clothier's shop there.

42,184. He does not reside on the farm?—No. [Mr Wilson.—The farm is held by the late Mr Macdonald's representatives, one of whom lives on it.]

42,185. Mr Maccallum.—On what farm are you living?—On the glebe.

42,186. Are the twelve cottars you represent also on the glebe?—No.

42,187. Where are they located?—Between the two Borves and Scarastavore.

42,188. Are they farm labourers?—Yes, and some go out to work.

42,189. Are there many cottars on the large farms?—Some of the farms have cottars on them.

42,190. Can you give us any idea of the number of cottars on the large farms in South Harris?—The tacksman of Borvebeg has five, and there are six in Scarastavore.

42,191. In Kyles and Northtown how many are there?—About seven or eight.

42,192. How are they employed?—Almost entirely by the sea.

42,193. Where is the great body of the cottars situated?—Among the tacksmen.

42,194. But, speaking of the cottars of Harris as a whole, where do the great body of them reside?—All along, in among the tacksmen and crofters.

42,195. The great body of cottars are situated on the crofts?—Yes.

42,196. Can you tell us how many cottars there are in South Harris?—I cannot say.

42,197. Are there as many cottars as there are crofters, do you think?—I think there are.

42,198. You heard of the people being removed from the west side: do you know what the reason of the removal was?—To make room for sheep.

42,199. Do you think it was in any way in order to benefit the crofters?—In order to destroy them.

42,200. Do you think there was any idea of making fishermen of them?—I believe they did not care what became of them.

42,201. Do you know if the fishing was successful on the east side at the time they were removed?—Middling.

42,202. Now, with regard to Rodel, was there a farm-house built there?—Yes.

42,203. Is there a good farm-house and steading there?—Yes.

Tarbert, Harris.

Donald Maclennan.

42,204. Does the tenant occupy the house and steading?—No.

42,205. How is the farm-house occupied now?—By a sportsman.

42,206. But it was originally built for a farm-house?—The factor used to live there, so far as I know.

42,207. And it is now occupied as a shooting-lodge?—Yes.

42,208. What is your opinion with regard to the suitableness of the land in Rodel Farm for occupation by crofters and cottars?—It is as good as is to be seen in the country.

42,209. Do you think the cottars and crofters of Harris derive any great benefit from the large farms?—They have never got any benefit from them.

42,210. Would there be any loss in any way to the people of Harris if these farms were occupied by crofters and cottars?—It would do a great deal of good.

42,211. And no loss whatever to the people?—Of great use.

42,212. Do you think the large farms and deer forests ought to be reserved as such if there happens to be a good house built on them?—I never looked at the thing in that light.

42,213. It is not your opinion that it would be for the good of the people of this island that such places should be reserved?—It is a great loss to the people that they are as they are.

42,214. You think that on the west side there should be formed self-sustaining holdings?—Yes.

42,215. But would it be possible for a man to have a small croft there and prosecute the fishing?—Yes.

42,216. How would he be able to follow the fishing?—It could be done as before.

42,217. How could they prosecute the herring fishing, for example?—If they could not do it on the west, they could do it on the east coast.

42,218. They are not so far away from the ground but what they could easily come to the fishing?—They could easily come across to the east.

42,219. And you think that the cottars would be better fitted for prosecuting the fishing if they had crofts on the west side than they are at present?—They would be better.

42,220. Mr Munro.—I think I understood you to say, in answer to Mr Maccallum, that the crofters and cottars derived no benefit from the large farms?—They do not get any benefit from them.

42,221. Do they get no employment from the big farmers?—They get a little land.

42,222. Do they get any work from them?—Some go to work for a while.

42,223. Is not that a benefit to some extent?—Yes, but if they had the land for themselves they would be much better.

42,224. You told us that the cottars were obliged to buy their wool wholly from the merchants. Does that answer apply also to the crofters?—Yes.

42,225. Have they to buy the whole or only part of the wool?—Not the whole: they have some sheep of their own.

42,226. And if they got more land would they be able to dispense with purchasing any portion of the wool from merchants?—Yes.

42,227. Mr Maccallum.—You stated that the farmers give work to the cottars. Can you tell us at all the extent to which they are employed?—I cannot say.

42,228. Are there many of the cottars employed for any length of time on the large farms?—They do not get any work from the farmers except what they do in return for the bits of land they get from the tacksmen.

42,229. They get no money payment but just a bit of the land to cultivate, and work for it?—Yes.

42,230. If the land were re-occupied by crofters, would there not be much more work going on in the island than there is at present?—Yes, there would.

42,231. So that, as far as work is concerned, they would be benefited by the doing away with the large farms?—Yes.

42,232. Mr Thomas Wilson, Solicitor, Lochmaddy, representing the Estate of South Harris.—If you had a fishing township on the west side of this island, where would the boats be kept?—They could fish on the east.

42,232A. Is it a place that would do well for good sized crofts rather than small crofts?—Yes.

42,233. What would you do with the buildings which are on the farm at present?—I don't care what becomes of them.

42,234. Are they valuable?—I don't care what their value is.

42,235. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—If a cottar had a family, and nothing to give that family to eat, would it not be a benefit to the cottar to get a brown copper penny?—Yes.

42,236. And would not a cottar without an inch of land, and with a hungry family, be greatly benefited by getting anything, down to a brown penny or a yard of land, to put potatoes in?—Yes.

42,237. Would it not be an infinitely greater benefit if the cottar was made a tenant by an Act of Parliament, and allowed to cultivate his own holding on fair terms?—It is long since I hoped for that.

42,238. Would not he work a great many more days in the year than he is able to work to-day?—Yes, if he had work to do.

42,239. The big farmers never pay for labour except by a bit of land?—Only to their own servants.

42,240. Did you hear that the big farmers have this year declined to have the services of the cottars for clipping their sheep?—Yes.

42,241. Were the cottars in the habit in former years of getting from the tacksman a few days' labour at this time at clipping?—Yes.

42,242. And they were in the habit of getting bits of land for potatoes in lieu of that labour?—Yes.

42,243. Why were they boycotted this year?—Owing to this Commission.

42,244. Are you aware that Harris mutton was famous all over the British Isles?—I heard that when I was away in the Reserve.

42,245. And are the lands on which that mutton was raised now turned into a deer forest?—Yes.

42,246. Is that a benefit to the country?—No.

42,247. And does it mean ruination to the native population?—Yes.

42,248. Are you aware that the deer forest in our immediate neighbourhood here used to export between 1500 and 1800 prime wedders every year, which went towards the food supply of this country?—I heard that often as to Lady Scott's forest in North Harris.

42,249. There is nothing of that now?—No.

42,250. And the native population have no mutton to eat?—They have nothing of it.

42,251. Is it your idea that the new holdings, if made, should have from the sea up to the mountain-top—Srath is monadh?—It is my wish.

JOHN MACKAY, Cottar, Scarasta (72).

42,252. Mr Gordon.—Are you a cottar in Scarasta?—Yes.

42,253. Is that a crofting township, or is it a farm?—A farm.

42,254. Are there more cottars besides yourself on that farm?—Yes.

42,255. How many?—Other five.

42,256. Have you any land at all?—None, unless I get it from the tacksman.

42,257. Have you any stock?—I have one cow.

42,258. Do you get grazing for the cow from the farmer?—Yes.

42,259. What do you pay for the grazing?—I pay it in work.

42,260. Do you get any potato land from the farmer?—Yes.

42,261. And do you pay for it also by work?—Yes.

42,262. Does he charge you a large price for the grazing and the potato land?—I don't think he does.

42,263. Did you hear the evidence given by the previous witnesses?—I did.

42,264. Do you agree generally with what they said?—I agree with some of it.

42,265. What part of it do you not agree with?—I will tell you that. There were people on the north and south sides of Northtown about whom he forgot to tell the Commission.

42,266. There were formerly crofters on the north and south sides of the farm of Northtown which is now part of Kyles farm?—Yes.

42,267. Do you remember seeing crofters there?—I don't remember seeing them myself, but the remains of the houses are still to be seen on the farm.

42,268. Is there a desire by you, and the other cottars near you, to get land?—Yes, indeed there is.

42,269. And would you be willing to move to the farm of Northtown, provided land was found to be available there for crofts?—Yes, indeed I would.

42,270. Would you be able to build a house and stock a croft?—We would try 42,271. Do you think you would be able to do it without outside assistance?—I would find it hard to do it, but I would expect help: I have sons.

42,272. What are your sons doing?—They are all away in the south.

42,273. Do they send you any money?—Yes.

42,274. Mr Maccallum.—Have you any idea when the crofters were removed from Northtown?—They were removed in the time of Macgillivray.

42,275. Who was Macgillivray?—A bad man.

42,276. What was he?—He was a farmer, and he was not a good one.

42,277. Was it he who occupied it immediately after the crofters were removed?—He removed them.

42,278. Was he factor as well as farmer?—No, he was not factor.

42,279. Who was factor at the time?—Donald Stewart.

42,280. Was it by the authority of Stewart that the tenants were put out to make room for Macgillivray?—Yes.

42,281. Where did these crofters go?—They went away to different places; some to Scarasta, and others left the country.

42,282. Do you agree with the other witnesses that the whole west side of the island is suited for occupation by crofters?—It is.

42,283. Before the people were removed to the east side, where was the bulk of the population of South Harris situated?—All along the machair.

42,284. The great bulk of the population was on the west side of the island?—There were very few on the east till the removals began.

42,285. So that the great bulk of the population was on the west side?—Yes.

42,286. Where is the bulk of the population now?—Are they not on the east side, where beasts could not live?

42,287. Where was the parish church situated?—In Scarasta.

42,288. That is on the west side?—Yes.

42,289. Where was the main road through the island?—Where it is to-day.

42,290. The principal highway is on the west?—Yes, on the west.

42,291. Is there a good road on the east?—No, there is no road at all on the east.

42,292. Would the people be in every respect better on the west side?—Of course they would.

42,293. Was there much cultivation on the east before the people were removed from the west?—Part was cultivated and part was not.

42,294. Was there as much cultivation as there is to-day?—No.

42,295. Do you think there is sufficient land in the island to accommodate all the cottars and the crofters whose holdings are too small?—I think the island would do a great deal for them.

Tarbert, Harris.

John Mackay.

42,296. Would it put the people in comfortable circumstances if they got the land on fair conditions?—It would; they were comfortable before.

42,297. And is that the chief remedy to which the people look?—Yes, if they could get it.

42,298. Were there farm-houses put up for the farmers when the crofters were removed?—There were.

42,299. These houses were put up, I suppose, by the proprietor?—Yes.

42,300. Were the houses of the crofters put up by the proprietor in the same way?—Of course they were not.

42,301. Has there been much expenditure on the part of the estate on the land of Harris?—I don't know if anything at all was spent.

42,302. On the farm-houses was there much spent in the way of putting up buildings and improving the land occupied by the farmers?—I believe something was spent.

42,303. Whatever expenditure was made by the estate, was it for the farmers?—It is known that it was.

42,304. Were the crofters paying road money?—They were.

42,305. On what was that money spent?—The ground officer was collecting it, and he kept it for himself.

42,306. Was it spent on roads for crofters?—They never spent anything on roads for crofters.

42,307. What road money was collected was spent, I suppose, on the road going through the large farms?—Very little was spent on that road.

42,308. Is there a good road through the farms?—Pretty fair.

42,309. How was it maintained?—They were keeping it up.

42,310. Who had charge of the up-keep of it?—The workmen were paid by the estate.

42,311. Were they not collecting money for keeping up the road in the usual way?—It was the estate that kept up the road.

42,312. But did you not tell me that the crofters were paying road money?—If they were, it was not spent on the roads.

42,313. Was the estate keeping up the road going through the crofting townships?—Yes, the only road that there is; I don't know any other road.

42,314. Was there any considerable expense on the part of the estate for keeping up the road going through the crofting townships?—I don't know whether they spent that money on it.

42,315. There is a sort of path is there not, through the crofting townships?—I am living on the west, and I don't know how the footpaths on the east are kept up.

42,316. Mr Munro.—Why did your sons leave you and go south?—Because there was no place for them to stop here.

42,317. So that, if the land were more freely opened up to the people of the island, they would not have gone south?—Of course not.

42,318. They would have remained in the island?—They would have stayed in Harris.

42,319. Mr Maccallum.—You say that you pay for your potato ground and for your cow's grazing by work: what work is charged for that?—I am having a look over the farm.

42,320. How many days' work do you give?—Always when there is work to be done.

42,321. Is there no definite understanding as to the number of days you have to give?—No; as long as the hay is to be cut, I am cutting and working when there are odd things to do.

42,322. You are liable to be called on at any time to give work?—Yes, at once.

42,323. Mr Munro.—Does the farmer give you a fair equivalent in land for your labour?—No, nor half.

42,324. Supposing that you refused to work any longer, what would be the result?—If anything took place he would not blame me; supposing I did not go he would not blame me much.

42,325. Did you ever submit to the farmer that you were not getting half the value in land for the labour you were giving him?—No.

Tarbert, Harris.

John Mackay.

42,326. Why did you not do that?—I would be afraid that he would get angry, and then I would have no place at all to live on.

42,327. So that he actually gives you sixpence in value in land for every shilling's work of labour?—Perhaps it is.

42,328. Mr Thomas Wilson, Solicitor, Lochmaddy, agent for the proprietors.—How many crofters do you represent?—I do not represent anybody but myself.

42,329. Did you ever pay road rates in your life?—No.

42,330. Have you had the privilege of walking upon the road yourself?—Yes, and I would walk otherwise as well.

42,331. Did you make any complaint, on your own behalf, that you had no road?—No, I have no road to my own dwelling; when I go there is a dyke on each side which I have to cross, and if I fall I am in danger. My wife fell there while crossing the dyke and injured herself.

42,332. How far is your house from the public road?—About 200 yards.

42,333. Whom do you expect to make a road from the highway to your door? Do you expect the crofters to make it?—I thought I should get a gate on the dyke to get to my dwelling-house.

42,334. Who is to make the 200 yards of road,—yourself, or the crofters, or the estate?—I do not expect anybody would make a road for me; they would remove me out of there altogether if they could.

42,335. What is your complaint, then, about the public roads?—I do not complain.

42,336. Are you aware that the roads have been under the charge of Road Trustees for over thirty-five years, and that during that time the estate has had no control over them at all?—I knew that.

42,337. Are you aware that the estate has had to pay its share of the road money as well as the crofters?—I knew that.

42,338. Are you aware that crofters have the use of the public road from Tarbert to Uamh, a distance of five miles; and also from Obe to Rodel?—Yes, I know they have the use of that road.

42,339. Do you know whether the people who were upon Northtown on the south side were cottars or crofters?—I think they were crofters.

42,340. Have you any knowledge of the matter yourself?—No doubt they were crofters until they were removed by Macgillivray.

42,341. Are you certain of it?—As certain as I am seeing you.

42,342. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Would you name the places in Northtown farm to which you referred, from which crofters were evicted?—We used to call them the South-Side (An Taobh-Deas) and the North-Side (An Taobh-Tuath).

42,343. Do you know a place called Ceann-Tuilbheig on that farm?—Yes, very well.

42,344. Were there crofters there before?—Yes.

42,345. Is that at the north end or the south end of the farm?—It is at Obe.

42,346. Is it a part of that big farm of Kyles and Northtown?—Yes.

42,347. Are there many families there to-day?—Yes.

42,348. How many?—Five.

42,349. Are they all cottars in the same position as yourself?—Yes.

42,350. Does the farmer allow them to cultivate bits of land?—Yes.

42,351. And have they to pay for it by labour?—I believe they work to him for the land.

42,352. Have they to turn out whenever he asks them?—He is not so strict as that altogether.

42,353. But does he ever give them money?—I don't know: I cannot say.

42,354. You never get money yourself for your labour?—I never got much of it.

42,355. Now, with regard to these roads, do I understand that you never complained of the want of roads on your own behalf?—No.

42,356. Is it a fact that, while the crofters on the east side of Harris pay road money, they have no road at all?—I don't know whether they pay or not.

42,357. Is it the case that the only money expended on roads in the island is spent on the road along the west coast?—Yes.

42,358. Name the crofting townships on the east side of Harris?—I can name some of them. In South Harris, Lingarabay, Borsham, Finsbay, Quidnish and Cnoc-Eisken, Floddibay, Manish, Geocrab and Ardslave.

42,359. Have the crofters in these townships for the last thirty-five years been paying a regular road rate?—I have no doubt they were; it is a burden on the land.

42,360. During those years were those townships without a public road?—Yes.

42,361. And is that the statement that you made already before this Royal Commission?—Yes.

42,362. You did not complain personally of the want of a road?—No, I do not complain; we have a road on the east side. [Mr Wilson.—But Obe and Strond have a road. The public road from Tarbert to Obe runs through crofting lands, but the houses are away down at the seaside far from the road. All the townships Mr Macrae mentions are without a road, and never had one.]

42,363. Have footpaths been made in these townships within the last year?—Yes.

42,364. By means of a special grant from Government?—Yes.

42,365. With the view of supplying the people with labour, in order that they might get a day's pay and be able to buy seed for their crofts?—I don't say it was.

42,366. Do you remember any eviction in South Harris?—Yes; I know that Stewart removed a lot of them: it was he who removed every crofter in Harris.

42,367. Name a crofting township which you yourself remember being cleared?—Borve.

42,368. Who was proprietor of Harris at that time?—Lord Dunmore.

42,369. How many years since?—I think it is about fifty-six years since they were removed by the military.

42,370. In what circumstances were the people who were evicted?—They were in very good circumstances.

42,371. Was there any provision made for them by the estate when they were evicted?—No, except that the proprietor would give them £100 if they would only go to America.

42,372. Did that offer of £100 induce them to leave willingly? Was it sufficient to induce the people to leave of their own accord?—No, it was not; supposing they got another £500 along with it they would not go.

42,373. So that, literally, the military had to be employed to put them out of their houses?—And they took them and removed them.

42,374. Who got that place as soon as they were cleared?—Stewart got it immediately.

42,375. When the crofters were at Borve had they the machair land and the hill right up to the top?—Yes, except the piece he took off it.

42,376. What piece was that?—The piece that is under the dyke to-day.

42,377. But, before the evictions began, had they the low land, the arable land, and the hill grazing up to the mountain top?—They had the machair land and the hill also.

42,378. If new holdings were made there to-day, would it be necessary, in order to make the new tenants comfortable, to give them the whole hill along with the machair lands?—Of course it would; they would require that.

42,379. Did those crofters get any compensation for their houses?—No, they did not.

42,380. And they were able to build houses without any assistance?—If they get a place to build them.

42,381. When the crofters were put to the east side, did the estate make any piers, or landing-stages, or boat slips, to assist them to prosecute the fishing?—Nothing whatever.

42,382. Mr Maccallum.—Before they were removed entirely, is it the case that some of the machair land was taken from them by Mr Stewart?—Yes, that is so. Tarbert, Harris.

42,383. How many years before the removal was that done?—It was a long time; over twenty years. John Mackay.

42,384. And what was done with that piece of land?—He had it for calves for himself.

42,385. Was that a valuable piece of land?—Yes, it was.

42,386. What would be the extent of land that was taken from them?—I cannot tell, but it was a good piece of land.

42,387. What hill grazing had they?—They had good hill pasture.

42,388. Were they allowed to graze on the hill that now forms Lady Scott's deer forest?—They were not.

42,389. Was Lady Scott's forest a common grazing for the tenantry of Harris?—Yes, for the crofters of the islands.

42,390. For the whole of Harris?—Yes, it was open as a common to North and South Harris.

42,391. And do you think that having that as a common grazing was of great advantage to them?—It was.

NORMAN MACDONALD, Cottar, Rodel, Harris (54)—examined. Norman Macdonald.

42,393. On Rodel Farm?—Yes.

42,394. How many cottars are there on Rodel Farm besides yourself?—Other three.

42,395. Are there any crofters near your house?—Yes.

42,396. What township do they live in?—Strond.

42,397. How do you make a living?—I have done nothing the last year.

42,398. You cannot live on nothing?—Perhaps for a year I can manage.

42,399. What is your usual occupation?—I was a shepherd on the farm before that.

42,400. And now you are living in a house on the farm but are not employed?—That is so.

42,401. Would you like to get a croft?—I would.

42,402. Were you appointed as a delegate at a public meeting?—Yes.

42,403. To represent the cottars on the farm of Rodel?—Yes.

42,404. Did your neighbours, the other cottars, desire you to represent to the Commission that they were all desirous of having land?—Yes.

42,405. Can you tell us where land can be got suitable for crofts?—Oh, quite easy.

42,406. Did you hear what the other witnesses said here to-day?—Yes.

42,407. Do you agree that the places they mentioned are suitable?—No, in some things.

42,408. What things do you not agree about? Is there land in your neighbourhood that could be got?—Plenty.

42,409. Is there plenty land in Rodel?—Yes, plenty good land.

42,410. Suitable for crofts?—Very suitable for crofts.

42,411. Did they omit to mention any place which you know of?—The country side was cultivated all over.

42,412. I think the witnesses who have been already examined told us of places all over the country?—I believe you could not have walked a mile without coming on cultivated land from Huishnish to Rodel, which is about 16 miles along the west side of the island.

42,413. What size of a croft would you like?—A croft to keep four cows and forty sheep and a horse.

42,414. Would you, if you got such a croft, be able to stock it?—Yes.

42,415. From your own money?—Yes, and to build a house too.

42,416. Would the other crofters in your township be able to do the same?—I believe most of them would.

Tarbert, Harris.

Norman Macdonald

42,417. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Have you ever had a holding?—No.

42,418. Had your father a holding?—Yes.

42,419. In what township?—In Strond.

42,420. Is your father alive?—No.

42,421. Had he a holding till his death?—He was a shepherd till his death.

42,422. Did he give up the holding in Strond of his own free will?—Yes, because the rest of the family had gone to America, and he was left alone.

42,423. How many tenants were in Strond when your father was a tenant there?—I believe the number was about twenty-four.

42,424. There were twenty-four crofter tenants?—Yes.

42,425. Were these all put out?—No, there are nineteen of them in it yet; but seven were put out.

42,426. What was done with the land?—It was added to Rodel sheep farm.

42,427. Do you know what the circumstances of those seven were? Were they in good circumstances?—Yes, they had a good stock and a good strong family, each of them.

42,428. What rents were they paying?—I believe from £4 to £9.

42,429. How much stock would those have who paid £9?—I cannot remember exactly how much, but they could easily keep five milking cows, with forty sheep and a horse.

42,430. Do you mean forty ewes or forty head?—Forty ewes.

42,431. How many head would that represent?—About one hundred head.

42,432. Do you know any crofter to-day who has got such a stock as that,—any crofter in all Harris?—Yes, and more; the first man examined here to-day had more.

42,433. Do you mean Mr Norman Macleod, crofter, Borsham?—Yes.

42,434. He had more than that?—Yes.

42,435. Where?—At Borsham.

42,436. What rent does he pay at Borsham?—About £4, or less.

42,437. When had he a stock as big as that,—five cows and about one hundred sheep?—I believe he has had that stock for many a year.

42,438. Is he entitled to keep that stock?—I believe not.

42,439. Does he keep more than double his souming?—I believe he is keeping that, at any rate.

42,440. Is there a tenant living beside him, the ground officer?—Yes.

42,441. Is he overstocking the township?—I believe he has that number at any rate; I don't know about his cattle, but he has a good stock of sheep,—I cannot exactly say how many.

42,442. What would be the average stock of the others?—I believe some of them about one cow and perhaps two, three, or four sheep.

42,443. What is the name of the ground officer?—Alexander Morrison.

42,444. Do you know that he has been keeping far more than he ought to keep in the township?—He has more than the rest at any rate.

42,445. How many sheep was he in the habit of having?—I don't know how many he had at this time, but his father always had a good stock of sheep.

42,446. Do you know the islands occupied by Mr Stewart?—Yes.

42,447. Do you know the ground personally?—Yes.

42,448. Do you know Pabbay?—I have been there.

42,449. Where were you a shepherd?—On the farm of Rodel.

42,450. For how long?—I have been a shepherd since I commenced to work.

42,451. What stock of sheep did Rodel carry in your earliest recollection?—I saw 500 Cheviot ewes on it, besides cattle and horses.

42,452. Would it, to-day, carry so much as that?—No.

42,453. What would it carry to-day?—About 400.

42,454. What stock of cattle used to be on it in your earliest recollection?—Fourteen milking cows besides followers, and two pair of horses. Tarbert, Harris.

42,455. What stock of cattle is on it to-day?—The farmer has not much on, but about a dozen cattle of all kinds, including one-year olds and two-year olds. Norman Macdonald.

42,456. Is there half the stock of cattle to-day that used to be on it in your recollection?—No.

42,457. And is the stock of sheep far less to-day than it used to be in your early days?—It has about 200 sheep on it now.

42,458. Is that owing to the soil deteriorating?—Yes, the soil is going back, because the grass is not growing for want of manure and cultivation.

42,459. Do you believe that the best use that could be made of that land now would be to break it up into small holdings?—It would improve the soil, and it would improve the country.

42,460. It would improve the land itself?—Yes.

42,461. And it would improve the people?—Yes.

42,462. Do you know Ensay island?—Yes.

42,463. Is that suitable for small tenants?—First-class.

42,464. Would you like to see that island broken up into small holdings?—Yes, indeed.

42,465. Do you believe it would be good for the country at large?—Yes.

42,466. Do you know Pabbay?—Yes.

42,467. What kind of an island is that?—A good island: there is not a better island between this and Australia.

42,468. Mr Thomas Wilson, Solicitor, Lochmaddy, agent for the proprietors.—What stock of every description is upon Rodel at the present moment belonging to any person,—not merely to the tenant, but grazing on Rodel, whether let to others or not?—That is more than I can tell, unless I count them.

42,469. Mr Gordon.—Have you any reason to suppose that there is not a full stock upon the ground?—There is not a full stock on the ground.

42,470. Neither belonging to the tenant nor to any other person?—Well, I cannot say much about that, because the place is open, without fence or dyke.

42,471. Do you know Glen Strondeval?—Yes.

42,472. Is that the part of Rodel to which you referred as being suitable for holdings?—Yes.

42,473. The remainder of the farm is pretty steep, is it not?—No, it is not very steep.

ALEXANDER MACLEOD, Cottar, Obe, Harris (54). Alexander Macleod.

42,474. Mr Gordon.—Were you appointed a delegate to speak for the township of Obe?—I was.

42,475. How many cottars do you speak for?—Seventeen.

42,476. Are there seventeen cottars in the crofting township of Obe?—Yes.

42,477. Have you any stock?—No.

42,478. Have the cottars in the township stock, as a rule?—No.

42,479. How do you make your living?—By the sea.

42,480. You are a fisherman?—Yes.

42,481. Do the other cottars fish?—Every one of them.

42,482. Is there a general desire among the cottars to get crofts?—Yes.

42,483. You have heard the evidence given by the other witnesses to-day?—Yes.

42,484. Do you agree with what they have said?—I believe there are some places that would be suitable, and fishermen would occupy fishermen's crofts; some would take large crofts and others small ones.

42,485. Would the cottars be able to stock the crofts if they got them?—A good many of them would; perhaps there are some who could not.

42,486. You have heard about the land on the farm of Rodel, and the other farms along the west coast?—Yes.

42,487. Would the crofts which your neighbours prefer be crofts where the tenant could prosecute fishing, or crofts on which they would like to have employment for themselves and their families throughout the year?—If they got big crofts there would be no occasion for fishing, and those that would turn out fishermen would be content in a small croft.

42,488. Are you acquainted with the crofts round Harris?—Yes, but not at this end.

42,489. Do you know the west coast of Harris?—Pretty well.

42,490. Are there any harbours there that would suit fishermen?—There are no safe harbours on the west coast until you go into Obe.

42,491. The best harbours are at Obe, and upon the east side of the island?—Rodel and Obe are two good places, and Strond also.

42,492. So that, if any fishermen's crofts are formed, it would be advisable to have them in the neighbourhood of these two good harbours?—There are some among us who would take big crofts, and others who would take smaller ones.

42,493. But it would be advisable to have the smaller crofts near a good harbour?—Yes.

42,494. Now, speaking for yourself, what size of a croft would suit you, provided that you carry on your occupation of fisherman?—I know some that carry on crofting and fishing, who had four cows and some sheep, and these men are pretty well off.

42,495. But, suppose the available land was rather limited, would it not be of advantage to you as a fisherman to have a croft that would give you potatoes, and keep a couple of cows and a few sheep?—That would answer me very well.

42,496. And would that answer any of the other fishermen?—No, those who have big strong families, with a lot of boys, would not be pleased with a croft that would content me.

DONALD MACKENZIE, Cottar, Strond (56).

42,497. Mr Gordon.—Are you a cottar at Strond?—Yes.

42,498. Did you hear the evidence given by the other witnesses?—Yes.

42,499. Do you agree generally with what they stated?—With part of it.

42,500. Can you tell us what they said that you do not agree with?—I will tell you that. I object to the first witness who spoke, in that he only maintained deer forests all the time he was speaking.

42,501. Do you think the whole of the farms in this island should be broken up into small holdings for crofters?—Where they are convenient to the sea to be broken up, I would like to see them broken up.

42,502. Are you a fisherman yourself?—Yes.

42,503. Have you any land at all?—Not an inch.

42,504. Have you any stock?—Nothing.

42,505. Would you like a croft yourself?—That is what brought me here.

42,506. Are the other cottars in your township desirous to get land?—Eleven of them are here to-day for that purpose.

42,507. Is there any land in the neighbourhood of Strond that could be got for fishermen's crofts?—Yes, where my father and myself were removed from.

42,508. Where was that?—Borosdale, South Strond,—between Strond and Rodel.

42,509. Is there any old arable land on Borosdale?—Yes, there were seven crofts.

42,510. And is the land suitable, in your opinion, for making into crofts again?—As good as ever, if not better.

42,511. Would that be convenient land for any of the harbours on that side of the island?—Very convenient to the best anchorage in South Harris.

42,512. What size of a croft would you like?—Between 2 and 3 acres, and some sheep.

42,513. And that would give you milk and potatoes, and perhaps a little oats, and enable you to carry on your fishing at the same time?—Yes.

42,514. Is that the sort of croft you would like as a fisherman?—Yes, if I could get it there.

42,515. Do you know the island of Killegray?—Yes.

42,516. Is there any land in that island suitable for crofters?—I do not know a better place.

42,517. Are there any harbours in Killegray?—Yes.

42,518. Is there any safe anchorage in or about the island?—Yes, as safe as necessary.

42,519. Do you know the island of Pabbay?—Yes.

42,520. What sort of an island is it?—A good island.

42,521. Are there any harbours that would suit for a fishing station on Pabbay?—No.

42,522. Do you know Eusay?—Yes.

42,523. Are there any harbours on it?—You could get a good anchorage at Ensay any day.

42,524. Is the island under cultivation generally?—No, it is in the hands of the proprietor.

42,525. Does he labour the land?—Yes, he farms it.

42,526. Mr Maccallum.—Is there a good deal of arable land on Ensay that is at present grazed?—Yes, outside the parks.

42,527. And is the greater part of the arable land under pasture, or is it cultivated?—It is the smaller part of Ensay that is cultivated, and the rest is grazed.

42,528. Is it the case that there is a good deal of arable land there that is pastured which might be profitably cultivated by crofters?—Yes, it was always cultivated before.

42,529. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Seeing that there are so many cottars in the neighbourhood of Rodel, I should like to know if they ever applied to the estate for small holdings?—I don't know if they ever did.

42,530. Did they feel the want of land very much?—Yes.

42,531. Can you tell us the reason why they did not apply for land?—I will tell you that; it is because the proprietor was near hand, and living there.

42,532. Who lives there now?—No one lives there now; it is tenanted by Mrs Macdonald.

42,533. When did Lord Dunmore live there?—A long time ago.

42,534. How many years?—About twelve years.

42,535. Have not the cottars had plenty time to think about applying to the estate for a small holding?—There was no proprietor after that,—the estate was under trustees, and if they had asked for land they would not have got it.

42,536. How do you know the trustees would not have given it?—How would they give us land when they would not even give us a place for a house if our house was to fall on our heads?

42,537. Is it a fact that the estate authorities were refusing stances?—The last witness was refused a stance for a house after making several applications.

42,538. Were others refused house stances?—Every one that asked for one was refused.

42,539. Is it a belief among the cottars that there would be no use applying for land or even for a house stance?—Yes, because they were asking it and could not get it.

42,540. Asking what?—Asking land and could not get it.

42,541. Off whom were they asking land?—Off the trustees.

42,542. Is it the cottars who were asking the trustees?—Yes.

42,543. Where are the cottars living who were asking the land?—Where I am living, in Strond.

42,544. How long is it since they made this application?—About a year or eighteen months ago.

42,545. Was it by letter?—Yes.

42,546. Have you a copy of the letter?—No.

42,547. To whom was the letter addressed?—I don't know.

Tarbert, Harris.

Donald Mackenzie.

42,548. Who wrote it?—I don't know that either.

42,549. Do you know who signed the letter?—No. I was from home myself, but I heard among the people that there were letters written.

42,550. Is there any one here present, from whom you heard that application was made by cottars in Strond to the trustees for land or for house stances?—I don't think there are any of them here. [Mr Thomas Wilson.—I may say that I never received such a letter, or heard of it.]

Kenneth Maclennan.

KENNETH MACLENNAN, Crofter, Finsbay (51)—examined.

42,551. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter at Finsbay?—Yes.

42,552. How many crofts are there in your township?—Four crofts and six crofters.

42,553. Are they small crofts?—Yes, small crofts.

42,554. Are you a fisherman?—Yes.

42,555. And you hold the land in connection with your occupation as fisherman?—Yes.

42,556. I suppose the land in your township is like what we see on the shore here, very hard and poor ground?—It is mostly all the same.

42,557. Is there a desire among the people in your township to get bigger and better crofts?—Yes.

42,558. Is it fishermen's crofts that you would like, or crofts of a larger size which would keep you working for the year?—Some would like to get larger crofts to occupy their whole time.

42,559. Are there any of the men living in your township who would prefer to go to such a croft even if he could not fish?—Yes, I believe there are.

42,560. You have heard the evidence given to-day, with reference to the suitability of the land on the west side of the island for that class of croft?—Yes.

42,561. Do you agree with what was stated?—I agree with all that was stated.

42,562. Would you yourself be inclined to leave the sea if you got a pretty large croft that would occupy all your time?—I would.

42,563. Would you be able to build a house upon it and to stock it?—I think I could, with a little assistance.

42,564. Is your family strong?—No, they are pretty young yet.

42,565. Supposing you required help, from what source would you expect to get it?—From the Government.

42,566. You would expect to get some money in the form of a loan?—Yes.

42,567. Which you propose to pay back by instalments in the form of rent?—Quite so.

42,568. Can you give me any idea of the size of the croft that you have in your mind?—About £8 or £10 worth.

42,569. Do you think a holding of that size would occupy you most of the year?—I think it would.

42,570. I presume there is no industry carried on beside you except fishing and some cloth-making?—The women make the cloth, and the men generally go to the fishing.

42,571. Mr Maccallum.—Do you think there is sufficient land in the island to accommodate the crofters and cottars?—I think there is, if all the arable land were broken down.

42,572. Do you think that, if the land held in large farms were made available for occupation by crofters, it would be taken up by the people of the island?—Oh, I think it would.

42,573. You think they would be benefited by getting a loan, but, without a loan, do you think they would be able to take up the land, and to occupy it to profit?—Not every one, in the case of those big crofts.

42,574. Would the whole of the land, do you think, be taken up if it were offered as crofts?—I think between north and south they would occupy it all.

42,575. And do you think they would profitably occupy it without getting a loan from Government?—Not those big crofts.

Tarbert, Harris.

Kenneth Maclennan.

42,576. In the case of big crofts you think help would be needed?—Yes, by most of them; that is my impression.

42,577. Why do you think so? Have not a number of the crofters got stock already?—Yes, but not enough; and they would have to build houses.

42,578. But, if they got to the better land, would not their stock improve and increase?—Oh, very likely.

42,579. Don't you see that when these people came to the land on the east coast they got no help, and still they were able to provide for themselves in some way?—Yes, but they were paying very small rents.

42,580. Were the rents small, do you think, that were charged?—Small compared with £10, but rack rents for all that.

42,581. You think they were paying more than the land was worth?—Yes.

42,582. But, if they got the better land, would they not be able to get on much more comfortably than on the east?—Much better.

42,583. Have you any idea when this township of Finsbay was formed?—No.

42,584. Was your father in the place before you?—Yes.

42,585. Have you any idea where he came from?—From Taransay.

42,586. Had he land in Taransay?—No.

42,587. Had he any land before he came to Finsbay?—No; it was there he settled first.

42,588. Was he put on a vacant croft there?—Yes; when the township was divided into six crofts he got half a share.

42,589. It was re-divided at the time he came?—Yes.

42,590. So the holdings were decreased when your father was placed there?—Yes, they were.

42,591. Mr Munro.—Supposing that the Government declined to advance money to enable you to take additional land, would that operate as any hindrance to your taking it?—I know it would to some.

42,592. Would it in your own case?—No.

42,593. I think you hinted that you would require some Government assistance to enable you to take a croft?—Yes, a big croft.

42,594. Don't you think it would be wiser for you, and for other crofters, to look forward to taking additional land depending upon your own resources entirely?—Yes, but it is not easy to get a big croft after having a small one.

42,595. But, when the people of this island had big crofts before, they got no assistance from anybody?—But there were too heavy rents then.

42,596. If the rents are lower to-day you surely ought to be able to take a croft much more easily?—Oh yes.

42,597. Now, supposing money were advanced to you, how could you repay it?—We would repay it out of the stock.

42,598. You think you could do that, and spread the repayment over a number of years?—Yes, I think we could.

42,599. Mr Donald Macrae, Balallan Cottage, Plockton.—What township is on the south side of Finsbay?—Borsham.

42,600. And what township is on the north side of it?—Ardvey.

42,601. What land forms your boundary on the hill?—Borvebeg and part of Borvemore.

42,602. Were there small tenants in Borvebeg and Borvemore at one time?—Yes.

42,603. Had they the whole grazing to the boundary you have to-day?—Yes.

42,604. There were no deer forests then?—No.

42,605. And the crofters who had the old townships had the full benefit of the hill, from the top of Feadach down to the sea?—Yes.

42,606. Had they as good a bargain of the land then as you have to-day in Finsbay?—I daresay they had.

42,607. They had good land, any way?—Yes.

rbert, rris.

nneth clennan.

42,608. They had something for their money?—Yes, they had the hill pasture.

42,609. Does the deer forest trouble your township in any way?—Not our township, but it troubles Manish, Flodabay, and Geocrab.

42,610. Are there delegates from these townships here to-day?—I believe so.

42,611. What trouble does the deer forest give them?—There is a deer fence between them and the forests.

42,612. And does that fence allow the deer to come down on the crofters' land?—No, there are only three deer outside the fence, so that they do not trouble them.

42,613. Is there a fence on the march between the deer forest and the townships?—Yes.

42,614. Do the deer come in across the fence?—No.

42,615. Where does the trouble come in?—When this new fence was erected all these townships were mostly grazing their sheep upon the other side, and they lost the grazing they had.

42,616. The sheep had enough sense to know a good bite of grass when they found it?—Yes.

42,617. And they were going where they could get a good bite?—Yes.

42,618. Have these townships any hill grazing?—They complain of not having it.

42,619. And this expensive fence is put up between them and the deer forest?—Yes.

42,620. When was it put up?—Three years ago.

42,621. Even supposing the townships you mentioned were to get more hill grazing, is it possible for them to add to the arable land?—Yes, it is.

42,622. Is there any land that they could reclaim and add to the arable land?—If they would shove their old dykes out to the hills again, it could be done with great labour.

42,623. But it could be done?—It could be done.

42,624. What would they prefer,—to get more hill grazing where they are, and shove their dyke further out, and with great labour add a little more to their arable land; or shift over to the west side of Harris?—I think they would rather shift over.

42,625. They look to that for a relief?—They do.

42,626. Is it possible for the people on the east side of Harris to live in decency and comfort?—No, it is impossible.

42,627. Have they enough to eat in a good year?—Enough to eat, and more than enough.

42,628. Now, supposing that for one year or two years running the fishing were to prove a failure, and the potato crop were to fail, could the people face that?—No, if it was not for the help they get from the merchants they could not.

42,629. Is the land on the east, where the crofters are, worse for potato disease than the machair lands on the west?—Some parts of it are far worse.

42,630. Is the machair land on the west better in every sense?—In every sense.

42,631. Mr Gordon.—Is there more mist or mildew on the east side than on the west?—I don't know, but it is worse for the potato disease at any rate.

42,632. Is the fog more general on the east?—The country is only a narrow strip, and generally when there is a fog it is the same on each side.

lexander ampbell.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL, Crofter, Scadabay (45)—examined.

42,633. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter at Scadabay?—Yes.

42,634. How many crofters are there in your township?—Six crofts.

42,635. Are any of them divided?—Yes, some of them are divided.

42,636. How many families are on the six crofts?—Nineteen families.

42,637. What is the average size of the crofts?—The souming is four cows and twenty sheep.

42,638. And, I suppose, most of them have their full stock?—Not this year; there was a great failure this year, owing to the inclemency of the weather.

42,639. Are the crofts rather poor?—Yes, some are very poor. Tarbert, Harris.

42,640. The land is hard and rocky?—Yes.

42,641. Was your father born there?—Yes, and my grandfather. Alexander Campbell.

42,642. It has been a crofting township for many years?—Yes, for two or three generations.

42,643. Is it a good fishing station?—It used to be pretty good when the fishing was carried on with success, but it is a failure nowadays.

42,644. What kind of fish do you generally get?—Herring and lobsters.

42,645. You do not go to the white fishing?—No.

42,646. Is there any fisherman in the island who has a big enough boat to go to Canna or the other places for white fishing?—Oh, yes.

42,647. Where are they, in the south end?—And in the north end.

42,648. And do they prosecute the white fishing with success?—I understand you mean the salmon fishing.

42,649. No, but the cod and ling fishing?—There is any number of boats capable of going to the east coast, but there are not many in the township where I live that could go so far as Canna.

42,650. There are not many in your township who fish there?—No.

42,651. Is that for want of boats?—They had boats, but they gave them over; there was no use continuing it, for it was ruining them, labouring and spending money on nets for no return.

42,652. I referred rather to line fishing?—They are not accustomed to line fishing.

42,653. There are not many who fish for cod or ling?—No.

42,654. You have heard the evidence given by the previous witnesses?—Yes.

42,655. Do you agree generally with what they said?—I agree with every word of it.

42,656. Would you, speaking for yourself, be inclined to move to another part of the country if you got a better croft?—I would be very glad to move to any part where I could get a horse to carry the burden instead of me.

42,657. You have no horses in the east?—No, the cultivation is mostly all done by spade. [Mr Wilson.—There are no horses between Diraclett and Finsbay. They use the cas-chrom to some extent, but it is mostly a system of common spade husbandry, with lazy beds and the creel.]

42,658. Is there in your district a general desire to get crofts?—Yes, if they could work them with any other agricultural implement besides the spade.

42,659. But do you think yourself it would be for their advantage to move away from the fishing-ground?—I know it would; the fishing is no help to them nowadays. I have seen it fetch as low as 2s. 6d. per cran.

42,660. For herring?—Yes.

42,661. But, at the present moment, the price of herring is twenty times as much as that; it is 50s. for the last month?—Yes, but with fifteen or a score of crans on an average it would go down to that figure. That is what we generally saw.

42,662. No doubt the fishing in recent years has not been very remunerative; but fishing is still carried on successfully in many parts of Scotland?—It has been very unsuccessful here, this year.

42,663. The herring fishing, you mean?—Yes.

42,664. And, consequently, you would prefer to get a croft where you could be occupied the whole or the greater part of your time on the land?—Yes, that is the desire of the people.

42,665. Mr Thomas Wilson, Solicitor, Lochmaddy, agent for the proprietors.—Do you know that Quidnish, which had been under crofters in olden times, and was afterwards made into a tack, was in 1884 or 1885 brought back into crofts?—I know it was.

42,666. And there were sixteen cottars placed on crofts there?—Yes.

Tarbert, Harris.

Alexander Campbell.

42,667. Also ten on Diraclett, and four on Ceann-Dibeig?—Yes.

42,668. That was done about the same time?—I don't remember.

42,669. Just before the Crofters Act was passed?—Yes, I know that.

42,670. And Hermetra and Tahay island were added to Bernera at the same time?—Yes.

42,671. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—With regard to these new tenants put into Quidnish, do you believe that they paid their rents regularly since they got these lands?—I cannot say, I am sure. [Mr Wilson.—I will put in a statement showing exactly how all the 'fair rents' stand down to this date. (Mr Macrae).—Are the payments satisfactory on the whole? (Mr Wilson).—I think the payments are pretty satisfactory all over Harris.]

42,672. Mr Maccallum.—There was a township formed in Quidnish?—Yes.

42,673. Were houses built for the people by the proprietor?—No, they built the houses themselves.

42,674. And they took up the land very readily without any houses being provided for them?—Oh yes.

42,675. Was there much of a reduction in the rent charged to them from the rent formerly charged to the farmer?—Mr Wilson knows better about that than I do.

Norman Cunningham.

NORMAN CUNNINGHAM, Crofter, Scalpay, Harris (58). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

42,676. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter at Scalpay island?—Yes.

42,677. How many crofters are there in your township?—About forty crofters, and between fifty and fifty-two cottars.

42,678. Were you appointed a delegate at a public meeting to speak on behalf of the cottars?—Yes.

42,679. Is your township greatly overcrowded?—It would be overcrowded by the third of the number in it. There are about 500 people on an island scarcely two miles long.

42,680. Are the crofters mostly engaged in fishing?—Every one that is there follows the fishing.

42,681. Do the crofters complain of the cottars keeping stock on their land?—Yes.

42,682. How many stock have the crofters got?—Not much.

42,683. Have you a souming for the township?—No, I cannot tell.

42,684. Do all the cottars keep stock?—No.

42,685. Do any of them keep stock?—A few.

42,686. Have you any idea how many cattle are on the island?—No, I cannot tell.

42,687. Is the pasture of the island very bare?—Yes, very.

42,688. Are there any horses on it?—No, they would be of no use there.

42,689. Are there any sheep on the island?—Very few.

42,690. What sort of land is it; is it rocky?—Peat banks and bogs.

42,691. Is Scalpay an old crofting township?—Not very old; fifty-one years.

42,692. Were you born on the island?—No.

42,693. Where did your father come from?—My grandfather came from the west of Harris.

42,694. Do you know what part he came from?—From Tolmachan.

42,695. How is the land there occupied now?—There is nobody there now; it is deer forest.

42,696. Do you know yourself what kind of land it is? Have you ever been on the ground?—I have walked over the ground.

42,697. Was there an old township where your grandfather was?—Yes.

42,698. Do you know how many crofts there were there?—Three or four.

42,699. Were there crofts along the whole south coast of North Harris at one time?—Yes, there were.

Tarbert, Harris.

Norman Cunningham.

42,700. Do you know when North Harris was cleared of crofters?—About seventy-nine years ago.

42,701. Who was proprietor of North Harris at the time?—Macleod's Trustees. [The Secretary.—Scalpay was an old tack, and in 1764 the whole population of the island was twenty-four. According to Heron, whose work on the Hebrides was published in 1794, Scalpay was then inhabited by two or three families—from fifteen to twenty souls.]

42,702. And you say that the population of the island is now upwards of 500?—Yes.

42,703. Are you at times subject to a scarcity of food in the island?—Yes.

42,704. For how many people would the island be sufficient to grow bread and potatoes?—Scarcely fifteen.

42,705. Then, if anything were to be done to relieve the island of its present overcrowded condition, a large number of the crofters, as well as the cottars, would have to be removed to some other place, in order that the remainder could live comfortably?—Yes.

42,706. Is there any other land in North Harris to which you think they could be moved?—I do not know, except along the coast of North Harris.

42,707. Tell us any place in North Harris where the surplus population of Scalpay could be put?—Teilinish, Tolmachan, Meavaig, Brandarsaig, Claismol, and Husinish, all on West Loch Tarbert.

42,708. Could a good many crofters be accommodated in that part of the coast, do you think?—I cannot tell how many could be put comfortably there.

42,709. But these are old townships?—Yes.

42,710. Mr R. F. Matheson, Factor for North Harris.—You said there were three or four crofters at Tolmachan: I would like to know whether these were really crofters, or merely cottars paying rent to a tacksman?—They paid to the proprietor.

42,711. You say you would place crofters along the coast from Teilinish to Husinish. Are you satisfied that the ground there is quite suitable for cultivation?—I believe it is, and that the people who were there lived very comfortably.

42,712. Is the land suited for cultivation and of sufficient depth?—I am sure of it.

42,713. Do you know if there is any spare land at Bunveneadar for new crofts?—Yes, on this side of the river.

42,714. How many crofters would it take?—If I was seeing it I would soon tell that.

42,715. Would you be better off with a holding than as a fisherman?—I was a fisherman for forty years, and I have nothing to show for it to-day.

42,716. Is it not simply because you are partly a crofter and partly a fisherman that neither the fishing nor the crofting has been successful with you?—I don't know. The fishing is very uncertain; it is just a lottery.

42,717. Mr Maccallum.—Do you find that it is the people who have no land who succeed best at fishing?—No, they never will do so well without land.

42,718. You have had a good experience of the matter, and that is your decided opinion?—Yes.

42,719. So that, in order to the successful prosecution of the fishing, you think that the people must have land?—Yes, and I would not be right without some land.

42,720. If they were situated in the places you mentioned, in North Harris, would they be within the reach of good fishing ground?—Yes, I have fished on that ground myself.

42,721. If they get these holdings I suppose they would like also to have the grazing on the hill above?—Yes.

42,722. Is that a good grazing?—Yes.

42,723. Was it grazed before?—Yes.

42,724. What sort of stock was on it?—Only sheep and deer.

42,725. Were the sheep that were on it good?—Yes.

42,726. Is the pasture better or worse than the pasture you have in Scalpay?—There is no pasture in Scalpay.

42,727. So you have no doubt that it would be a great benefit to be removed from Scalpay to Tolmachan and the other places you mentioned?—I am sure it would. Tarbert, Harris.

42,728. All these places are now included in the deer forest?—Yes.

JOHN MACLEOD, Cottar, Ardhasig, Harris (75) —examined. John Macleod.

42,729. Mr Gordon.—Are there many crofters in your township?—Not many; I think nine altogether.

42,730. Do you mean nine crofts or nine crofters?—Nine crofters in, I think, four crofts.

42,731. Were you appointed a delegate at any public meeting?—Yes.

42,732. And you appear here for the township of Ardhasig?—Yes.

42,733. Can you tell us whether your township is greatly overcrowded?—The crofters are always complaining of the cottars being a burden to them.

42,734. How many cottars are there?—There are only four cottars and two widows.

42,735. Have you got a souming?—No.

42,736. What is the average stock kept by the crofters in the township?—We agree among ourselves whatever we keep.

42,737. But what is the number on an average?—I think those who pay full rent keep four cows.

42,738. Have you any horses?—No.

42,739. Any sheep?—Yes, from 30 to 40.

42,740. That is a fair sized croft?—That is a full croft.

42,741. How are the crofters employed when not working on their crofts?—They must be idle when they have nothing to do on them.

42,742. Are they fishermen?—Yes, every one is a fisherman.

42,743. Do they go to the herring fishing?—Yes.

42,744. Have you got boats suitable for the herring fishing?—Yes, now; they are getting larger boats now.

42,745. And are the crofters in fairly comfortable circumstances?—Yes, I do believe they are.

42,746. They are pretty well off?—Yes.

42,747. Have the four cottars any stock?—No, very few sheep.

42,748. The crofters cannot have much cause to complain of them if they have no stock. Is there any land in your neighbourhood that would be suitable for an extension of your crofts?—Not in our neighbourhood, except what was mentioned already in the deer forest.

42,749. Would it be an improvement if you got some additional grazing ground?—Certainly.

42,750. Could that be got convenient to your township in a part of the forest?—The nearest part of the forest would be convenient.

42,751. Did your township ever have that grazing?—Some of it, but the factor took it from them.

42,752. Was any of your former grazing taken from the township and added to the forest?—Yes.

42,753. When did that take place?—A good many years since.

42,754. Have you any idea of the extent that was cut off your pasture?—Yes, a good many acres.

42,755. Three hundred or four hundred acres?—I daresay more than that. This bit of ground was promised to them before the Crofters Commission if they would pay the arrears; so the people asked me to speak for them to-day for this piece of ground.

42,756. Did they pay the arrears?—I think they did.

42,757. Did they apply to the Crofters Commission for an extension of their holdings?—Yes, at that time.

42,758. And did the Crofters Commission grant it?—Yes, conditionally on their paying the arrears.

42,759. The Secretary suggests that, possibly, you may be mistaken about that; he is not quite sure that there was a formal application made, though possibly something was said about it. You think this part of the ground, for which you intended to make application, would be a great convenience, and of use to your township as an extension of your grazings?—Oh yes.

42,760. Is there any arable land in your neighbourhood?—One bit; they call it Totavore.

42,761. Is that at the mouth of the bay?—The end of the bay.

42,762. You think some land suitable for new holdings could be got there?—Yes, a little.

42,763. You heard what the last witness said about the former townships to the west of it?—Yes.

42,764. Do you agree with what he stated, in regard to the land?—Yes, but he did not mention it all.

42,765. But you agree with what he did mention?—I do.

42,766. You think new holdings could be got there?—Yes.

42,767. Suitable for crofts?—Yes, splendid. The people who were there before lived very comfortably.

42,768. You do not remember their being there, do you?—No, I was not born at that time.

42,769. Mr Maccallum.—Is there a crofting township on Bunveneadar?—Yes, there are three crofters there, also a gamekeeper and a cottar.

42,770. Could they be benefited by an extension of grazing from the forest land?—They are crowded very much with the fence, these poor people.

42,771. Do you think it would be an advantage for the township to get a part of the forest for grazing?—Certainly.

42,772. Is the grazing above the township there as good as the hill grazing you have?—Yes, fully better.

42,773. Is that a new township?—Yes.

42,774. When was it formed?—Eight or nine years ago.

42,775. But I suppose there was an old township there some time ago?—Yes.

42,776. Do you know how many were in that township in former times?—Four.

42,777. Had they more land than the present crofters have?—No.

42,778. Had they not more grazing?—Yes.

42,779. Had they the liberty of sending their sheep to the hill above?—To the top of the hills.

42,780. Those that are there now have not that privilege?—No, they have a couple of hundred yards above the corn.

42,781. And there is a deer fence there?—Yes.

42,782. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Is the whole of that coast, from the head of the bay on the west side right on to the Harris boundary, marked out with the remains of old crofting townships?—All along the coast of Harris, east and west.

42,783. Take the west first. What is the character of the grazing, say, from the coast line right up to the mountain tops, along the whole of the west coast?—You will get some of the best grazing on the top of the hills, fully as good as that on the shore.

42,784. Is it very excellent grazing all over?—All over.

42,785. Is it much better than the grazing about the base and the west of Harris?—Three times better.

42,786. There is no comparison at all between them?—No.

42,787. If tenants were placed there, is it on arable land they would mainly depend, or on the hill grazing?—If they were able to stock it they would be more comfortable by the hills.

42,788. Is it mostly on the grazing that they would depend?—Yes.

42,789. Was it on the rearing of cattle and sheep that the old tenants principally depended?—Yes.

42,790. And very little on crops?—Very little.

42,791. Do you know any better grazing in the Highlands than the grazing in the deer forest?—No.

42,792. Do you remember when the land was used for grazing before it was made into a deer forest?—No, I do not, because it is nearly eighty years since the sheep were cleared.

42,793. Do you remember a stock of sheep being on those mountains where the deer are to-day?—I remember perfectly well when Mr Macrae, tacksman of Husinish, sent to the market about 1400 wedders from that place every year, besides cattle and other classes of sheep.

Tarbert, Harris.

John Macleod.

42,794. Does not that show to you that if small tenants were placed along the coast there the hill would be able to supply them with a sufficient stock to keep them very comfortable?—Certainly; I have no doubt at all about that.

42,795. The estate authorities put a few crofters there into some of the townships already?—Yes.

42,796. Name one of them?—I could mention them all. There is Bunveneadar.

42,797. How many did they put there?—Three.

42,798. When?—About eight years ago. Then again there is Loch Leosavay.

42,799. How many did they put there?—Two.

42,800. And there were never tenants there?—No. In Govick they put three tenants.

42,801. How many years ago?—Eight.

42,802. Were there any tenants there before?—Yes.

42,803. How many?—The same number,—three.

42,804. What is the next place you can name?—Beadarsaig near Husinish.

42,805. Did the estate put two there eight years ago?—Yes. Then in Dirascal, on Loch Resort, there were three put, and in Luachair two; and they are there still.

42,806. Give us now the names of places where there were tenants before, and where there are no tenants now?—Bunveneadar, the half of it is unoccupied; Teilinish, Tolmachan, Meavaig, Brandarsaig, Cliasmol, Leosavay, Tusinish, Cravadale, and Amhuinn suidhe, where my grandfather once lived.

42,807. Were the places into which the estate put crofters eight years ago, better than the places you mentioned last?—Three times better.

42,808. Are the places where there are no crofters as good as those where there are?—Every one of them better than the places where they put the crofters; that is to say, if they get the grazing of the hills.

42,809. Now, look at the places into which they put crofters. Did they give the crofters the run of the hill up to the top, as the old tenants had?—No.

42,810. They bounded them in with a wire fence?—Yes.

42,811. And then they spread two or three crofters over a long stretch of the coast, where there might have been seven or eight?—Just so.

42,812. And if any cottar wants a holding in that place they will say that it is already occupied?—Yes.

42,813. They spread them along the coast instead of putting them near one another, and giving them the hill to the top?—That should be the case.

42,814. Can you name me any one of the places to which they put crofters, where they put only two or three instead of six or seven?—No, I don't know, because they would put all there that it would hold.

42,815. But would not some of these places hold many more if they were to get the hill also?—Assuredly.

42,816. Are you perfectly satisfied that the whole stretch of coast on the west could be occupied from the one end to the other, if the people were to get the hill right to the top?—To be sure; there is no doubt about that.

42,817. Take now the Loch-Seaforth side. Did they put crofters there?—Yes.

42,818. Eight years ago?—Yes.

42,819. Will you name the places?—Yes, at Marnig, Scaladale, and Bowglass, at the boundary.

42,820. Did all these new crofters build their own houses and steadings without any help?—I believe some of them got some help, but others had to put up their houses themselves. I do believe that Lady Scott helped them with cattle.

42,821. I have no doubt Lady Scott has been doing well by them?—No doubt about that.

42,822. And I have no doubt they will handsomely acknowledge that; but were they cottars before that?—Every one of them.

42,823. Now, did these experiments turn out a great blessing to the people?—A great blessing.

Tarbert, Harris.

John Macleod.

42,824. Have they improved in their condition very much?—I am sure if they would get as much again to-day they would take it.

42,825. They are able now to take more land?—Yes, if they could get it.

42,826. Large self-supporting crofts?—Yes.

42,827. And to stock them?—To be sure.

42,828. Is the principal complaint they have just now that they are confined too much to the shore with deer forest fences?—Yes, that is the only reason they have to complain.

42,829. Deer forest fences are a great curse when they keep the people down on the shore and cut them away from the hill?—They make the poor sheep run down to the shore when they ought to be on the hill.

42,830. There is a time when sheep cannot thrive on the shore, and when the natural place for them is the hill?—They are starving there on the shore in the winter time.

42,831. Mr R. F. Matheson, Factor for Lady Scott.—You say that the crofters or the cottars, placed along the boundaries of the deer forest, are much better off to-day than they were before they were placed there?—Yes.

42,832. Are you certain of that?—To be sure.

42,833. Were you here at the sitting of the Crofters Commission last year?—Yes, I was.

42,834. Did you hear one man, who was a cottar in Scarp, and who got a holding down at Dirascal, say that when he got that holding he was only £5 in debt, and that his debt had increased to £30. He said that on oath to the Commissioners, and told them that his condition was not at all better than when he was a cottar in Scarp. Did you hear that?—Whatever I may hear, I may say this; there is not a cottar here that got land eight years ago who would not give thanks to any one for it. I am quite sure of that.

42,835. You were asked if you thought the crofters at Bunveneadar would be the better of an extension of their grazing?—To be sure.

42,836. You know that, three years ago, about 500 acres of hill ground was added to their holdings, besides what they got when settled there?—Certainly, that is right enough; but that is a place that tenants should have themselves.

42,837. I understood you to say that all the new crofters were fenced in from the forest?—So they said themselves.

42,838. But you said so yourself?—To be sure, I know it.

42,839. Name the new crofters who are fenced in from the forest?—Maruig, Ardvourlie, and Scarpa. By Ardvourlie I mean Bowglass.

42,840. Bowglass is not fenced in. Is Dirascal fenced in?—Yes, there is a fence round it.

42,841. Round the arable land, but not round the hill grazing. Luachair is not fenced, is it?—Yes.

42,842. Mr Gordon.—Do you know the townships you are speaking about?—Yes.

42,843. Is there a river on the south march that acts as a fence as far as to keep in the stock at Luachair? Is not the Ulladale river the boundary of the township?—I don't know. I don't think they come out so far as that river. [Mr Matheson.—The river is not large enough to act as a fence.]

42,844. Mr Maccallum.—Is it, or is it not, the case that these people are confined to the shore, and that they have not the grazing up to the top of the hills?—Yes, in Bunveneadar at all events.

42,845. You know yourself to a certainty that that place is confined to the shore?—Yes.

42,846. And is there, to your knowledge, a fence there?—Yes.

42,847. Is it your decided opinion that the other new crofts also are confined in the same way,—that they have not the right to the hill tops?—Maruig, at all events, on Loch-Seaforth is so confined. None of them have a right to the hill tops, whether fenced or not.

42,848. Now, do you know whether these townships suffer in any way from the deer?—That was the reason, I believe; the people of Dirascal could not keep their crops from the deer, and I understand Lady Scott was at the expense of putting up a fence to keep the deer in.

42,849. Do you know whether she put up that at her own expense entirely, or whether there is any interest charged to the crofters?—At her own expense, I believe.

DUNCAN MACLEOD, Crofter, Ardhasig (76).

42,850. Mr Gordon.—We understand from the previous witness that you can tell us about an application that was made to Lady Scott for an extension of grazing?—We applied for the hill pasture that was taken from us long ago.

42,851. Did you make an application in writing for the extension of grazings?—We did apply for that which belonged to our township originally.

42,852. Did you apply in writing?—Yes, in writing, to her ladyship. She wrote back saying that we could not get it.

DONALD MORRISON, Crofter, Mol-na-Herradh, Harris (62).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

42,853. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter?—Yes, at Bowglass.

42,854. Is Bowglass a new township?—Yes.

42,855. How many crofters are in it?—Two.

42,856. When did you go there?—Nine years ago, last spring.

42,857. Have you got good crofts there?—No.

42,858. Is there better land for crofts in other parts of North-Harris?—Yes.

42,859. Where?—Supposing the other places are more rocky and boggy, the land there is better than we have in our crofts.

42,860. Are these existing crofter townships?—Yes.

42,861. Did you hear the evidence given by Norman Cunningham?—Yes.

42,862. Do you agree with him as to the suitability of the lands that he spoke of?—Yes.

42,863. Did you hear the evidence given by John Macleod, cottar, Ardhasig?—Yes.

42,864. And do you agree with what he said?—Yes.

42,865. Have you anything to add further than what he stated?—Only that there would be nothing more useful to us than the land if we could get it.

42,866. You approve of getting new holdings?—Yes, I can prove that it would be to the benefit of the crofter to get more lands. I went to Bowglass with only five sheep and one cow; I have to-day got twenty-one sheep with lambs, and four cows.

42,867. What rent do you pay?—Previously I was paying £2, but 10s. was recently added to it.

42,868. Are you satisfied with your present rent?—Yes, if it had been left as Lady Scott made it originally.

42,869. What do you complain of?—When I got the croft Mr Brydon was factor, and I asked him to point out the boundaries of the croft. The ground-officer came and pointed them out.

42,870. When was your rent raised?—Last Whitsunday.

42,871. Was it Lady Scott that raised your rent, or the Crofters Commission?—I cannot tell.

42,872. Did you apply to the Crofters Commission to have your rent fixed?—Lady Scott summoned us to the Commission.

42,873. And the Commission raised your rent by 10s.?—Very likely they did: and, moreover, when Mr Taylor came from Skye, and went over the croft, he took from me fully half of what I got originally from Lady Scott. That was not arable land but pasture. We were then told by Mr Matheson, at Ardvourlie Lodge, that if we would take the island of Seaforth for our sheep, we would get some cows and fence it in, but we would not take that island. We refused to take it, only I for one would take what I got from the ground officer. Tarbert, Harris.

42,874. Mr Maccallum.—You stated that your croft has been diminished since you went there by the taking away of half your pasture?—Yes; we were not aware of this till a few days ago, when it was marked out for fencing us in. Donald Morrison.

42,875. Were your boundaries pointed out to you when you went there, or soon after?—The boundaries were pointed out, and we knew them then, but we did not know them at first.

42,876. You are now given to understand that the extent of hill grazing is much less than was pointed out to you at first?—We are sure, if the fence goes round us, as pointed out just now, that we won't have half the pasture we had originally.

42,877. Who is it that has now pointed out to you the line of fencing?—Mr Matheson and his two head keepers, and Lady Matheson's factor as well.

42,878. And do you consider that the land within the old boundaries pointed out to you was suitable for grazing?—Yes, much better than what is left us.

42,879. Why is the fence being put up just now?—I had only five sheep when I went there first, but they have now increased to twenty-one, and I believe that is the cause of my being fenced in.

42,880. At present is there any fence at all between you and the deer forest?—Nothing just now.

42,881. But it is now proposed to put up a fence, which you think will deprive you of half your pasture?—Yes.

42,882. Is that fence to be put up at the expense of the proprietrix?—Very likely it will be mutual between the two.

42,883. Is it to be a deer fence?—Only a sheep fence; deer can go in and out as they like, but it will confine the sheep.

42,884. How do you account for the taking away of part of your pasture?—Because my stock got too numerous.

42,885. Would it be a shorter fence than would be required by taking more of your grazing away?—We believe that is the cause of it,—that it will cost less money to bring the fence round this way: it will only cost half of what it would if made round the original pasture.

42,886. Mr Gordon.—Is this fence being erected on Lady Scott's property, or is it on the march between Lady Scott and Lady Matheson?—Part is on the boundary, and then it bends down to the sea and forms a boundary between me and Lady Scott, and locks me in between the two ladies.

42,887. Is the part of the pasture, which you complain of losing now, on Lady Matheson's side of the fence?—No, it was not on Lady Matheson's, not a blade of it.

42,888. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Would you describe the boundary of the land given to yourself and to your neighbour, as stated to you in presence of Mr. Brydon by the ground officer when you got the land?—Not then, but to-day I can point it out.

42,889. Tell us the boundaries as given to you by the ground officer in Mr Brydon's presence?—I asked where the original march between myself and Lady Matheson was, and Mr Brydon answered that I myself knew the ground better than he did. Then the ground officer said that there is not a foot on the ground but I could tell and point out and walk over, and I said that is quite right. The river Mol-na-Herradh to Clach-an-topain, from there to the turf marks at the top of Luachair; then I asked where was the march between myself and Lady Scott, and it was Arie Vigndale. [Mr Gordon.—I must point out that he has gone nearly a mile into Lady Matheson's estate with the march which he first described. The hill of Luachair is half a mile within Lady Matheson's estate, measuring from the nearest part of the boundary.]

42,890. You got this croft nine years ago?—Yes.

42,891. Were you a cottar before then?—I was, for twenty-one years.

Tarbert, Harris. Donald Morrison.

42,892. Did the getting of the crofts very materially improve your condition?—Yes, made it three times better.

42,893. And did you, during these years, pay the rent that was fixed upon you by the estate authorities?—I never had a penny of arrears.

42,894. Did you build the house yourself?—Yes, four of them.

42,895. Do you believe if cottars, situated as you were for these twenty-one years, were to get the same opportunity of taking up land in North Harris they would thrive as well as you did?—Yes, provided they were industrious and energetic. If they were hard-working they would be worth twenty times what they are now.

Robert Finlayson Matheson.

ROBERT FINLAYSON MATHESON, Tarbert, Harris (37), Factor for Lady Scott.—examined.

42,896. Mr Gordon.—Do you wish to give us any evidence on behalf of the estate, Mr Matheson?—Yes, I have a report prepared by Mr Taylor, Land Surveyor, Ebost, and signed by both him and myself.

42,897. Kindly read the report?—

Report upon the Deer Forest and Farm of Husinish on the estate of North Harris, the property of Lady Scott.

The forest extends to 34,753 acres, and is bounded 'on the north and north-east by the Lewis and Crofting 'Townships, on the north-west by Husinish Farm, on 'the south-west south and east by Crofting Townships 'and 4 miles of sea coast.

'The forest is composed principally of rough 'mountainous land, better suited for the purpose for 'which it is now used than any other, being mostly high 'hills varying in height, as follows:—1486 feet, 1807 'feet, 2153 feet, 2165 feet, 2229 feet, 2392 feet, 2439 'feet, and 2622 feet above sea level. Until about 'seventy years ago the land now afforested was used by 'the tenants of the west side of South Harris, islands of 'Bernera, Pabbay and Taransay, the property of the 'trustees of Lord Dunmore, for summer grazing for 'horses, and about this time was formed into two sheep 'farms, on which deer were also kept along with the 'sheep. Over forty years ago the present deer forest 'was formed. The hills now under deer had at no 'time been in possession of crofters, but, while used as 'sheep grazings, there were about eight cottars, two or 'three of which were situated at or near the site of 'the present Castle, three or four at Loch Meavaig, and 'two at Bunaveneader.

'Some years ago Lady Scott removed twenty-five 'families from the most congested parts of the estate, 'viz., island of Scalpay, island of Scarp, and Tarbert, 'and settled them on the most suitable land in the 'forest, and along the sea shore; in our opinion very 'much to the detriment of the forest.

'These lands were given to the present tenants as a 'home, and to relieve the congested parts mentioned, 'but it is evident, on looking at the nature of the soil in 'the different townships, that profitable cultivation need 'not be looked for, as indeed is the case all over the 'estate, small patches between the rocks being all that 'can be cultivated, and that in the most primitive 'fashion. Maruig, adjoining the east boundary of the 'forest, was, until 1885, let as a sheep farm, but on that 'year possession was resumed by Lady Scott, and the 'land given to six tenants, five of whom were taken from 'the Island of Scalpay, along with another four families 'from the same island, who were settled on new crofts 'at Ardvourlie in the forest.

'Of the six tenants who got the farm of Maruig, 'one was a shepherd on the ground with stock, one 'was a crofter from Scalpay who also had stock, and 'the other four were cottars from Scalpay, whom Lady 'Scott supplied with a cow each, or money to purchase 'one. Malcolm Macdonald got £10 to assist in build-'ing a house.

'Thirteen families were also taken from the Island 'of Scarp and settled on new crofts in the forest as 'follows:— Tarbert, Harris.

'Luachair, on shore of Loch Resort, two cottars from 'Scarp. Robert Finlayson

'Dearscal, on shore of Loch Resort, three cottars from 'Scarp. Matheson.

'Lady Scott fenced those five crofts off the forest at her own expense.

'Betersaig, on sea-shore, west side of Forest, two 'cottars from Scarp.

'Govic, on sea-shore, three cottars from Scarp. 'Fence erected at Lady Scott's expense.

'Losebay, on sea-shore, two cottars from Scarp.

'Buniveneadar, on sea-shore, one crofter from Soay 'island, and two cottars from Tarbert. Crofts and hill-'grazing fenced off forest by Lady Scott.

'The twenty-five tenants at present on the forest 'have all been placed there by Lady Scott, as already 'mentioned, for the purpose of relieving the most 'congested portions of the estate, and have in their 'possession nearly all the low-lying grazing, formerly 'forming part of the forest. There are very little 'signs of former cultivation in the forest not now in 'possession of crofter tenants, probably not more than '20 acres, and most, if not all, this was cultivated by 'the eight cottars, while the land was occupied as two 'sheep farms. After a minute and careful inspection 'of the forest, accompanied by Mr Matheson, factor, 'we are unable to point to any part that could be 'profitably brought under cultivation by crofters, and 'we are further of opinion that the portions already 'given by Lady Scott, although the most suitable in the 'forest, cannot be cultivated to a profit, and are more 'grazing than agricultural holdings, and appear to be 'used as such.

'There are from 800 to 1000 deer on the ground, of 'which about 60 stags and 30 hinds are shot annually.

'Husinish Farm.—This small farm, which is in Lady 'Scott's possession, extends to 1067 acres, of which 'about 10 acres are arable, and part of which her lady-'ship gives to the cottars of Scarp rent free for the 'purpose of planting potatoes, the other portion being 'kept under cultivation by the shepherd.

'There is at present a stock of about 240 sheep kept 'on the farm, and which are used for the purpose of 'supplying table mutton while Lady Scott and friends 'are in the island; a less number would not be sufficient 'for this purpose.

'According to the crofter idea, as brought out in 'evidence before the Commission, of the quantity of 'stock necessary to keep a family and pay a "sober" 'rent, this piece of grazing would scarcely be sufficient 'for two crofter tenants, and the arable portion not 'more than one tenant. We do not consider it likely, 'however, that the Commission would recommend hold-'ings of this size to be broken up, as the value of it, as 'at present occupied, is about the amount for which the 'Crofters Act allows fair rents to be fixed.

(Signed) R. F. MATHESON,
Factor for Lady Scott.
(„) JOHN TAYLOR,
Land Surveyor.

EBOST, SKYE, 6*th May* 1893.

42,898. You are of opinion that the new holdings, on which twenty-five families were placed, take up the greater part of the low ground which is suitable for cultivation by crofters?—I am.

42,899. You heard what the witnesses, Norman Cunningham and John Macleod, cottar, said with regard to some other old townships on the north shore of West Loch-Tarbert. They pointed out that there were some five or six old townships, which they considered suitable for re-peopling, and that in all of these the ruins of the former houses are still visible. Do you know whether that is the fact or not?—Well, the ruins are not visible to me: I did not see any ruins of old houses there, though there may be signs of cultivation there.

42,900. Do you think it would be possible to settle some crofters on that part of the forest?—I, for one, do not think that the soil is really suitable for cultivation; there is no depth of soil there.

42,901. You have heard it stated, and I can perfectly believe with truth, that there is a great congestion in the island of Scalpay?—Yes.

42,902. Do you admit that that is the case?—Yes.

42,903. What would you suggest as a remedy for that congestion?—You would have either to migrate or emigrate them.

42,904. Is there any land in North-Harris to which you think they might be migrated?—No.

42,905. You do not think there is any land there?—No.

42,906. Is the land in the neighbourhood of these old townships that the witnesses referred to rocky ground, or is it better pasture than the east side of the island?—Just much about the same as the east side; it is not machair land, but just what you see about Tarbert.

42,907. More or less rocky?—Rock and moss.

42,908. There is not much dry green land?—Very little green sward.

42,909. Do you find that in the new townships recently created the men are fairly comfortable?—Some of them.

42,910. The place to which the last witness referred, who spoke of having his stock increased from five sheep and one cow to twenty-one sheep and four cows?—Bowglass.

42,911. He appears, according to his own statement, to have very considerably improved his condition during the last nine years?—He and his neighbours have.

42,912. Have they been specially industrious?—They have.

42,913. More so than some of the others?—Yes.

42,914. They have not been so prosperous as he is?—No.

42,915. What sort of fishing is there on West Loch-Tarbert; is it a good fishing station?—West Loch-Tarbert itself is not; the best fishing is out in the Atlantic.

42,916. There are some sheltered bays there?—Yes.

42,917. Is the anchorage pretty good?—Amhuinn-suidhe is the best.

42,918. Is Soay Sound a good anchorage?—Between Soay and the mainland the anchorage is good.

42,919. How is the island of Soay occupied?—There are two crofters on it.

42,920. Who, I suppose, occupy the island pretty fully? They require all the land for themselves, no doubt?—Yes.

42,921. Mr Maccallum.—You say that the extent of the deer forest is 34,753 acres. Now, can you tell me how much was given to the twenty-five crofters who were settled along the borders of the forest?—Over 6000 acres.

42,922. And there still remains the acreage you have mentioned as deer forest?—Yes.

42,923. Do you consider that this experiment has been successful?—In some cases it has, but not in all.

42,924. Do you think any one of the twenty-five settlers regrets the change?—There was one, if not two, before the Crofters Commission here last year, who would gladly become cottars again instead of being crofters as they are now. They would go back to Scarp again rather than remain there.

42,925. Is that what you say with regard to them?—No, that is what they said.

42,926. Apart from these two, do you think that the remainder of the twenty-five have, upon the whole, improved their condition by this removal?—I did not know them before they were settled there, but, so far as I can see, I would say that the majority have improved very much.

42,927. It was an interesting experiment, and no doubt made with a view to improving them, and it is satisfactory to hear that it has been upon the whole successful. Now, do you think there is any more land in the forest similar to the land that has been utilised by those twenty-five?—There is very little. In the report have read we have mentioned what we think would be suitable for cultivation,—a little over 20 acres, even if it could be all put together and taken from the different townships along the coast, the south shore.

42,928. Let us take the places mentioned. There is Tolmachan?—Well, Loch-Meavaig was mentioned in the statement.

42,929. You consider that that is as good as the land that has been already allotted?—No, it is not at all so good as the Maruig township.

42,930. But, taking it as a whole, it is very much of the same character as the land which has been allotted?—Well, yes, down that way, on that side.

42,931. We had one intelligent witness to-day who said that these old townships mentioned on the coast which are still in the deer forest, were, in fact, superior to the land that you have given over to crofters?—I do not consider that the case.

42,932. But you heard that witness?—Yes; I think that was John Macleod.

42,933. And you hear the desire of the people to be settled on these places?—Well, I heard it to-day.

42,934. Now, I suppose, you think that if you could settle some other twenty-five crofters in the forest, and improve their condition, that would be a much better use of the land than to keep it as a deer forest?—I don't know; the deer forest brings in a lot of money to the estate, and a number of people are employed about it who earn a good wage.

42,935. But you did not destroy the forest entirely by the crofts you took out of it?—It has hurt the letting value of the forest, without doubt.

42,936. But don't you think the interests of twenty-five families must be put before the interest of the proprietrix to a certain extent,—of one person?—I think the interests of the proprietrix should be looked to as well as those of others.

42,937. I know that, and that she made this experiment of her own accord. But don't you think the interest of twenty-five crofters is a very important matter, and that if it were possible to settle other twenty-five on the forest that would put the forest to a better use than it is put to at present?—If it were possible without hurting the forest; but you could not settle other twenty-five families on what remains of the forest on what one could say is suitable for cultivation.

42,938. But, no doubt, they would depend greatly on the pasture?—Yes, but you would require to give them good sized holdings all the same, to make them comfortable.

42,939. Let us condescend upon some number; what number do you think might be favourably settled from Bunaveneader till you come to the next crofting township?—I could hardly find room for two at Meavaig.

42,940. How many would you say at Tolmachan?—It is not there, but at Maruig; I would hardly find room for two good holdings.

42,941. Could you not get two holdings there of the same character that you have in the other place?—Not so large.

42,942. What is the next place?—Brandarsaig; I could put one there.

42,943. And the next place?—Cliasmol, where there is room for one.

42,944. And the next place?—That is all.

42,945. You could find four holdings in all without interfering at all with Amhuinn-suidhe where the lodge is?—That would bring them pretty near the lodge.

42,946. But still it would retain the place where the lodge is?—It would have to be fenced off.

42,947. Could not these four be placed there without interfering with its value as a deer forest?—No.

42,948. Did you not hear the evidence to-day to the effect that a much more considerable number than that used to occupy these places?—Yes, I think I heard that there were eight, or some such number; but they included a place called Teilinish, which is now in the occupation of the Bunveneadar crofters.

42,949. Then, with regard to this new township of Bunveneadar, are the people not very much confined?—No, I think not. I think they have 600 acres of hill grazing. It was extended three years ago, when they complained of the deer getting into their ground, and the estate complained of their sheep trespassing into the forest. There was a fence put round them, and a large extent of hill grazing was then added. We did not keep the fence to the actual boundary between the township and the forest, but kept a long way outside it, and added 400 or 500 acres to the grazing.

42,950. What did you say the acreage of Bunaveneader was?—Five hundred or six hundred acres.

42,951. I see it is given in the blue book as 402 acres?—But there may be over 100 acres of outrun. [The Secretary.—The whole extent is 572 acres between arable and outrun.]

42,952. Can you give any reason why the people of Ardhasig should not be benefited by getting an extension of grazing from the forest?—We left that entirely with the Crofters Commission.

42,953. We are not talking about the Crofters Commission now; I am only asking your opinion. Don't you think they would be benefited?—They have a good extent of hill grazing for the number of crofters there are and for the stock they can keep.

42,954. Would you just give me a definite answer, please; I do not want to press you in any way, but do you think they would be benefited by an extension of their grazing from the deer forest?—No doubt they would.

42,955. Is the pasture ground that is not included in the forest above Ardhasig as good as the common pasture which they have at present?—It is much about the same.

42,956. Is it steeper?—No, it is not so steep, but as a grazing it is much about the same.

42,957. Would not you go the length of saying that it is somewhat superior to what is in the township?—I would not say that the nature of the grass is superior. I would say that the grazing of the township is far superior to that inside the fence: I mean the hill grass is inferior to what the crofters hold. I don't believe there is finer mutton raised between the Butt of Lewis and Barra Head than what comes off Ardhasig hill.

42,958. And the forest is quite contiguous?—Yes.

42,959. Is it not very natural to conclude from that that the forest would also be good for sheep?—No, I think the grazing on the Ardhasig ground is better than the grazing on this part of the forest that you are talking about.

42,960. But the two places are quite contiguous?—Yes, but still there might be a great difference in the pasture all the same.

42,961. But do you say that there is that distinction, and that the distinction is just where the march is; that on one side of the fence there is excellent sheep ground, and on the deer forest side very poor ground for sheep?—I would not even go to the march of the forest, not past the main road, and there is a good bit of grazing between the fence and the main road. [Mr Gordon.—The best of the pasture of Ardhasig is to the south of the main road?—Yes, there is very fine grass between these boulders, whereas, on the other side of the road, it is a sort of bent.]

42,962. But the land they hold is, to all appearance, steep and black and rocky?—Steep and rocky.

42,963. And yet it raises excellent sheep?—Yes.

42,964. And you heard a statement made to-day that, when the forest was under sheep, excellent wedders were sent from it, and in great numbers every year,—I think between 1400 and 1800?—Yes, I heard that.

42,965. What is your comment upon that?—I have no comment to make; that was many many years ago, and I cannot say anything about it now.

42,966. Don't you think now that these hundreds of wedders were of far greater value than the sixty stags the forest now produces?—I don't know; that is a matter of opinion.

42,967. What do you think the more valuable, the sixty stags or the 1400 to 1800 wedders?—I believe stags sell higher than wedders.

42,968. Are they more valuable?—They must be when they fetch a higher price.

42,969. Is that your only reason? Am I to conclude from the answer that you are giving that you consider the sixty stags are better?—Yes, taking the estate as at present.

42,970. The sixty stags are better?—As at present.

42,971. The sixty stags are more valuable to the country as a whole?—Yes; I believe they are in this way: that they are the means of circulating a great deal of money in the country, and I don't believe that should you plant four or five crofters along these townships they would circulate so much money as the letting of the forest does.

42,972. The forest creates a circulation of money?—Yes.

42,973. But the place itself is wasted and rendered unproductive, is not that so?—You cannot say that it is wasted when it is the means of circulating money.

42,974. But circulation does not mean production. I said that it was at present unproductive: it is utterly unproductive now?—As a deer forest, or in what sense do you mean?

42,975. Unproductive; what is produced by it?—It is unproductive, looking at it from an agricultural point of view.

42,976. Or from a pastoral point of view?—When I say agricultural I mean that to include pastoral.

42,977. It is waste then and unproductive, whereas, formerly, there was a large number of wedders and a large number of Highland cattle produced, there are no such products now?—Not there, except what the new crofters have.

42,978. And the land is well fitted for sheep,—it must be?—Oh, I suppose it is.

42,979. Now, that being so, would you not like to see people settled along the coast having whatever arable land there is, and the grazing up to the hill tops?—I should like very much to see the people thriving in the best possible way.

42,980. And is there not a great scarcity of land?—There is a great scarcity of land down there.

42,981. I mean among the crofters,—so far as the crofters are concerned?—Well, yes, the land is scarce enough for them.

42,982. On the island of Scalpay, for instance?—That is over-crowded.

42,983. There is this great extent of land perfectly well-fitted for sheep-raising and for cattle-raising, and still you hold that the land is put to the best purpose when it raises sixty stags?—It would be a very expensive matter to carry on sheep-raising and cattle-raising without agricultural land attached for the maintenance of the cattle.

42,984. No doubt, it is evident to anybody that there is not very much of arable ground,—that has not been asserted by anybody; but they held that it was good grazing, that there were patches there that they would readily take up, and that these are very much superior to the land which they occupy. Do you differ from them there? Taking the forest generally, are not the patches you find there superior to the patches they have in Scalpay?—No, I will not admit that.

42,985. Do you know Scalpay well?—Yes, I do.

42,986. What soil is there in Scalpay?—There is clay soil in Scalpay. Of course there is mossy soil too, and gravelly soil.

42,987. You have heard a great complaint from these people that they have, for the most part, merely peat hags and bogs. Do you agree with that?—It is moss.

42,988. You have come here to-day, of course, in order to help the Commission to find out whether there is any land that could be profitably occupied by crofters, and you say that, in your opinion, there is nothing of that character in North-Harris?—I mentioned the places already where you could put any crofters.

42,989. And this report has been prepared by Mr Taylor?—Yes.

42,990. Of course it is prepared in the interest of one party, is it not?—Well, it was prepared as information for the Royal Commission.

42,991. But in the interest of one party, and with the view of protecting the rights of one party?—With the view of protecting the rights of the estate.

42,992. It is altogether that that led to the preparation of this report?—But it is a true report, all the same.

Tarbert, Harris. — Robert Finlayson Matheson.

42,993. I am not questioning that, but only how it came to be made. It was made with the view of protecting the estate rights?—It is made in the interests of the proprietor.

42,994. And not in the least with the view of benefiting the crofters?—We mentioned all that we thought would be beneficial to the crofters; what land is arable, and where we thought crofters could be planted; and if we had seen more such land, I expect we would have mentioned it.

42,995. I don't doubt it, but still this paper was prepared, more with the view of defending the present position of matters than with the view of finding out whether there was land available or not?—I won't say that it was prepared with the view of justifying the present position of matters, but in a manner to assist the Royal Commission.

42,996. Did you go with a view really to find out land for crofters?—We went with a view to give my own opinion as to what would be suitable for crofters, and if there was anything suitable for crofters, to state so, and whether any part of the forest could be profitably used for cultivation.

42,997. And you went the length of engaging a paid expert, along with yourself?—Yes.

42,998. To give the estate view of the matter, and not at all the crofter view?—To give our own view of it: the crofters were quite able to give their view.

42,999. You thought it was necessary to get in a trained and paid expert to show that there was no suitable land in North-Harris?—I should think so; especially in order to give the areas correctly.

43,000. But it was not necessary to get an expert to give you areas. Don't you think now that there is a great deal of land occupied by the crofters just now, and profitably occupied by them, that is not so good as the land which is included in this forest?—It is just a case of six and half-a-dozen: the land is much the same all over North-Harris, except Maruig. [Mr Gordon.—Is not the forest higher ground?—It is higher, but, so far as agricultural land goes, the land is just the same all over North-Harris.]

43,001. Then, do you say that crofters never had the benefit of the good grazing in North-Harris?—No, I do not say that.

43,002. They had the benefit of it in former times, and they have been deprived of it?—I mentioned in the statement the townships that had the benefit of the grazings of the North-Harris deer forest,—the islands of Bernera, Pabbay, and Taransay.

43,003. These were crofter lands?—These were crofter lands, and had the use of the forest in summer for grazing purposes.

43,004. And we have also had it that the coast in several places was occupied by the resident tenants; we have had that from every witness to-day, and I suppose you are not in a position to contradict it?—I will not contradict what older men than myself say.

43,005. Mr Munro.—How long have you been in the island of Harris?—For seven years.

43,006. Where were you before coming here?—In North Uist.

43,007. You are a Highlander yourself, I suppose?—I am a Lowlander by birth.

43,008. During the seven years that you have resided in Harris I presume you have had frequent opportunities of forming a sound opinion as to the character of the people of the island?—Oh yes.

43,009. Tell me this, if, generally speaking, you find them to be a sober, hardworking, honest, law-abiding class of people?—Yes, most law-abiding and most peaceful.

43,010. You could commend them as men of good character in every respect?—Yes, I would have no hesitation in doing so.

43,011. You are aware that there is a good deal of discontent in the island?—In some parts of it.

43,012. But there is a general anxiety on the part of the people to become possessors of the land?—Yes, there is a general desire.

43,013. And their failure to obtain access to the land produces discontent among them?—Yes.

43,014. There is also a good deal of poverty amongst the people, is there not?—Yes, in Scalpay especially.

43,015. And I think you suggested, as a remedy for this discontent and poverty, emigration?—Yes.

43,016. Would you not consider it a great misfortune to the country to be deprived of the services of the class of people whom you have now described?—Possibly the country might feel it, but I think it would benefit those who would go away. In 1888 we assisted some families to go from here to Pelican Lake, and these would never desire to come back to Harris again: they are well off to-day.

43,017. Do you think there is any general desire among the people themselves to emigrate?—No, I don't think there is.

43,018. How comes it that whenever there is any discontent among the crofters, the remedy generally suggested not only here but elsewhere is that of emigration?—Speaking of North-Harris alone, we cannot see that we could relieve the congested parts to such an extent as would benefit any of them, or at least more than a dozen people altogether.

43,019. I suppose you are aware that there has been a great deal of discontent for many years back amongst large farmers as well as amongst crofters?—Yes.

43,020. Did you ever hear it suggested, as a remedy for the discontent amongst large farmers, that they should emigrate?—Yes, I have heard it remarked.

43,021. Would you consider it a good thing for the country that large farmers or industrious crofters should be made to emigrate as long as there is land here for them to cultivate?—If they could get good land, and the markets were good here, it would be just as well for them to stay at home, possibly, some of them. But they have better opportunities of benefiting themselves abroad than at home. I, myself, for one, if I could, would sooner go abroad than stay in the Highlands.

43,022. You never heard it suggested, I am sure, that factors should emigrate?—Oh yes, I have.

43,023. Did they ever act on the advice?—I don't know; I think some of them have.

43,024. You have told us that there are over 34,000 acres in the deer forest?—Yes.

43,025. That land was formerly occupied as sheep farms?—I believe it was.

43,026. How many sheep were upon these farms?—Really, I cannot say.

43,027. Roughly speaking, give us an idea?—I cannot say indeed; but I should say 10,000 sheep.

43,028. And the place is now exclusively given over to, I think you said, sixty stags?—That is the average number shot annually.

43,029. Now, is it not a great loss to the country to have these stags substituted for the 10,000 sheep that were reared there before?—It may be, but I don't think one would make much of a fortune to-day for sheep, as prices go.

43,030. But did not the sheep contribute something to the national wealth?—Possibly they did.

43,031. Can you point out a single item that a deer forest contributes in any way to the national wealth?—There is a good deal in the way of licences to be paid in connection with a deer forest.

43,032. That is simply a distribution of wealth, not a creation of it. You are intelligent enough to make some distinction between the distribution of wealth and the creation of wealth?—Perhaps I did not catch the drift of your question exactly; I was thinking rather of the Treasury at the time, and how the question affects it.

43,033. Now, apart from the landlord of the deer forest, is there any person at all that benefits by it?—Those employed about the forest.

43,034. But would it not be better for this island if that land were given over for small sheep farms, for pasture?—Well, it might be.

43,035. Reference has been made here to-day to the tweed industry of the island. I suppose the crofters and cottars pursue that industry all over generally?—Yes, it is their mainstay.

Tarbert, Harris.

Robert Finlayson Matheson.

43,036. One of the cottars stated here to-day that they were obliged to buy their wool from the merchants. Would it not, in your opinion, be of distinct advantage to the cottars if they got sufficient land to rear sheep upon to enable them to produce their own wool?—Even as it is, I don't think, should they get more land to stock with sheep, there would be a sufficient quantity of wool in the whole parish to keep up the industry, because there is a large quantity of wool imported from Leith and Glasgow every year, notwithstanding the number of large farms on the island.

43,037. Does that not arise from the fact mainly that sheep have been displaced to make room for deer?—Possibly that may have to do with it to a certain extent.

43,038. If you restored 10,000 to 20,000 sheep to the island, would not that enable the people to have sufficient wool raised on the land to make the tweed from?—Yes, I admit that.

43,039. How does the average of land in sheep farms compare in quality with the average of land under crofts?—In Harris the arable land in the farm is far superior to the arable land of the crofting townships.

43,040. So that, in that case, it would be a distinct advantage to the crofters to have the sheep farms broken up and restored to them?—If they had a sufficiently large holding to support them entirely without prosecuting the fishing, yes.

43,041. But, if he can manage to exist at all upon his present inadequate holding and poor land, surely he might live comfortably if he had a fair holding of good land?—I say yes, if he did not prosecute the fishing and carry on the croft at the same time,—if he were not a crofter fisherman. If he had a holding, which would keep him going all the year round, to maintain his family off that holding, then it would no doubt benefit the crofter and cottar.

43,042. You say then that a crofter cannot successfully cultivate a croft and be a fisherman at the same time? The two things are incompatible?—Yes, he neglects the one to attend to the other.

43,043. What, in your opinion, is the reason why Lady Scott is averse to breaking up these farms and giving them back to crofters?—There are no farms on Lady Scott's estate.

43,044. Supposing you could not let the deer forest as a deer forest, to what purpose would you devote it?—I cannot say.

43,045. You would let it again as a sheep farm, I suppose?—We might.

43,046. Would you let it to crofters?—I believe myself that Lady Scott would do so if she was in possession: if it was given up as a deer forest I believe Lady Scott would let it to crofters.

43,047. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—In that report dealing with admitted congestion in certain parts, I noticed that you put migration before emigration as a solution of the difficulty?—I think I said so, not in the report, but in answer to a question put. I said migration or emigration.

43,047*a*. When you used the word 'migration,' had you in view Lady Scott's estate, or did you take a wider view?—I took a wider view; in fact I went over to Skye.

43,048. But, without going so far away, say that we had only half a day,—had you Lord Dunmore's estate in view?—No, I really was thinking of Skye at the time.

43,049. Well, I thought of Lord Dunmore's estate at the time, and I should like to ask you a question in regard to it. I have no doubt you know the west side of Lord Dunmore's estate?—I have been down the west side, but not very often.

43,050. But you have a very good idea of the general character of the place?—A fair idea.

43,051. In your opinion is that land, along the whole length of it, practically such land as crofters or small tenants could be placed upon with a reasonable hope that they would thrive?—You could make very good large holdings of them.

43,052. You think then that that is a subject where you have a big stretch of machair land for cultivation and a good extent of hill beyond?—You think that that land is suitable?—Most of it is really suitable for cultivation.

Tarbert, Harris.

Robert Finlayson Matheson.

43,053. Now, with regard to the experiments you alluded to, Lady Scott tried those experiments with a genuine desire to benefit the people?—Yes.

43,054. And is her ladyship satisfied that, in the main, the condition of those twenty-five people has been improved?—I believe she is.

43,055. And the people themselves, on the other hand, have stated that their condition has been materially improved,—you have heard them say so?—The majority have been improved, I think.

43,056. I am hopeful that you can state that Lady Scott found them grateful for what has been done voluntarily by her?—Oh yes.

43,057. And also that they have paid their way,—that is, in all the cases where they have succeeded?—I believe they have paid their way to the best of their ability.

43,058. I noticed that in your statement you used the word 'cultivation' very much. Did you consider that in the remit to the Royal Commission, while there is a reference to cultivation, there is also the phrase 'or otherwise advantageously occupied by small 'tenants'?—I don't remember it; I have no doubt it is there, but I don't remember it.

43,059. So that, in your report, you had specially in view the possibility of cultivation by small tenants?—Cultivation.

43,060. But let us for a moment take the other alternative to which our attention is directed by the Remit: 'otherwise advantageously occupied.' That, you will admit, refers to using the land for pastoral purposes?—I would understand by that that it was land used for sheep-runs.

43,061. Or sheep and cattle?—Yes.

43,062. And you have no reason to doubt the statement that the deer forest on this estate exported annually about 1400 wedders when it was a sheep farm?—I don't doubt it; I just take the facts as they are given to me.

43,063. And, of course, the stock was a famous and excellent stock?—I believe it was.

43,064. Did you consider what is known as the club-farm system of managing hill stock?—I have nothing to do with the like of that, so I cannot speak of it.

43,065. Supposing that we had a perfectly free hand to deal with the deer forest, without being hampered by tenants or by considerations of proprietors, do you think, from the geographical character of the country, it would not be possible to establish small tenants in small groups, with hill grazing to a considerable extent, and a common stock under one management? Would that not be a feasible and practical way of using the deer forest area?—I daresay it might be done.

43,066. The pasture is good?—It is fair pasture; it is not a milk-giving pasture, I must say.

43,067. But it is a stock-producing pasture?—It is good for sheep. [Mr Gordon.—Is it better for wedder ground than for ewes?—Yes, it is.]

43,068. Now, would it not be possible to extend the hill grazing of the crofting townships that you have settled without any serious damage to the deer forest, and very much to the benefit of those crofters?—The question would be, who is to go to the expense of erecting the boundary between the grazing on the one hand and the deer forest on the other.

43,069. But, putting that difficulty aside, it would be an advantage?—But you could not put that difficulty aside, you must be protected. Should you or I be a crofter there we should have to protect ourselves, and the proprietor would also have to protect himself.

43,070. But you have already stated that the most of these crofting townships are not protected at all by a fence?—There are some of them not protected by a fence.

43,071. And still they thrive?—Oh, they thrive, but it affects the deer forest all the same. It would very much reduce the letting value of the forest.

43,072. You have in view, I understand, to put up fences about these townships?—Only in the case of the tenants at Bowglass; that is the only one in view.

43,073. And another on this side of it?—No, that is the only one we have in view to erect in the meantime. Lady Matheson is putting up half of it.

43,074. In your opinion, would it not be an advantage to the other crofting townships if they were allowed more extended boundaries, so that they could carry a larger stock of sheep?—I think they have a very good stock of sheep for the rent they pay.

43,075. That may be, but would it not be an advantage for them to have more extended boundaries and the right to keep a large stock?—I don't know. They have a very good stock, and a very good area of grazing for the rent they pay. If they were to get more it is possible they might be more dissatisfied. I think they would be more content as they are.

43,076. Without boundaries?—No, but without more extension.

43,077. Have they more sheep stock than they are entitled to have?—Just about what they should have.

43,078. What average is it?—I think thirty sheep and followers go to a full croft.

43,079. How many full crofts are there that are entitled to have that stock of sheep?—Those new crofts are all looked upon as full crofts.

43,080. Are these all entitled to have thirty sheep and followers?—Yes.

43,081. How many cows?—I forget the exact number at the present moment, but I have an impression that it is four.

43,082. What lands in Skye had you in view when you used the word emigration?—A great many: I did not fix my eye on any particular estate. Tarbert, Harris.

43,083. But you know that there are big stretches there of very suitable and available land?—Yes. I should like to add, in reference to the Bowglass tenants, that the march has never been altered since I came to Harris. The fence, if erected along the line of march now fixed upon by Lady Matheson's chamberlain and myself, will add on the Bowglass side about 20 acres of hill grazing, and take from the Lewis side about 5 to 8 acres. Robert Finlayson Matheson.

43,084. Mr Gordon.—I could quite well understand that the witness who spoke of it had made a mistake as to the boundaries, although perfectly honest and perfectly desirous of telling the truth?—Yes. The North Harris estate will thus have to pay a rent to Lady Matheson for the bit of additional grazing within the fence.

43,085. That is to say, that Lady Matheson, in order to maintain her rights, demands a rent?—Yes.

Note.—In 1884–5 the Proprietors of South Harris Estate, with the view of relieving congestion, cut up the Tacks of Deiriclate, Cean-Dibeag, and Quidinish, and formed new holdings upon which cottars were given crofts. There was thus created 28 holdings, viz.—

Deiriclate,	10 Holdings.
Ceann-Dibeig,	4 „
Quidinish,	14 „

At the same time, with the view of enlarging the holdings of the crofters of Bernera, there was added the islands of

Hermitray,	124 acres.

for which no additional rent was charged.

FIFTIETH SITTING.

INVERIE, KNOYDART, July 5, 1894.

Present :—

GEORGE GORDON, Esq. (acting as Chairman).
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

GILLIES MACKISSOCK, Inverie (54)—examined.

43,087. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter here?—No, I have not a bit of land at all.

43,088. You are a labourer?—Yes.

43,089. Are you a fisherman?—Sometimes.

43,090. Were you appointed a delegate at any meeting, or do you appear for yourself alone?—I was appointed a delegate.

43,091. At a public meeting?—Yes, at a meeting amongst ourselves at Inverie.

43,092. There is no crofting township at Inverie, is there?—No; Inverie has been under sheep, the hills above the village, until lately.

43,093. Where is the nearest crofting township?—Rhidarroch.

43,094. Is that upon this estate?—Yes.

43,095. Are there crofters there just now?—No, not one.

43,096. Was it an old crofting township?—Yes.

43,097. Do you know how many crofters were there?—I think seven or eight.

43,098. Can you tell us of any other crofting township on the property?—Yes; Dune was another crofting township.

43,099. How many crofters were there?—Fourteen or fifteen.

43,100. When was that latter place cleared?—About 41 years ago.

43,101. And when were they removed from Rhidarroch?—The same year.

43,102. Where were they removed to?—To America.

43,103. They were cleared off the estate?—Yes, they were summoned off the land.

43,104. Did they get any assistance to emigrate?—Yes, they got their passage paid.

43,105. Did they leave this country of their own accord, or were they evicted?—They were evicted.

43,106. Are there not descendants of these people still on the estate?—A few of them; I am one of them myself.

43,107. Was your father evicted at that time?—Yes.

43,108. Did he go to America?—No.

43,109. Is he still alive?—No.

43,110. Is there a general desire among the people in this neighbourhood to get crofting land?—I think so.

43,111. What is the usual occupation of the men here?—As a rule they work for the proprietor.

43,112. At ordinary estate work?—Yes, now and again when they get it.

43,113. And how do they manage to make a living otherwise?—They plant a few barrels of potatoes.

43,114. And do they maintain themselves partly by fishing?—It is very little fishing they do.

43,115. Do they go to the east country for the herring fishing, or to Stornoway?—Not in these years; they used to go there. I used to go to Stornoway myself.

43,116. But you have not been going recently?—No.

43,117. Is there any part of the population who devote their time mainly to fishing?—No.

43,118. You have nothing in this part of the country of the nature of regular fishing?—No, not regular, but within a month's time some will be going to the herring fishing.

43,119. But there is no white fishing carried on here?—No.

43,120. Can you tell us of any other available land besides the two places you have named?—The next township is called Airor; it is occupied by crofters at present. The next township is Samadalan.

43,121. Are there any crofters there now?—Not one, only a shepherd.

43,122. How is the land occupied?—It is under sheep and deer.

43,123. To whom do they belong?—To the proprietor.

43,124. How many crofters were there formerly?—Thirteen or fourteen, I fancy.

43,125. When was it cleared?—At the same time,—about 41 years ago.

43,126. Did the former residents in that township go to America also?—They were evicted, 332 persons.

43,127. Do you think there is land there suitable for crofter holdings?—It is as suitable now as it was then, at any rate, when the people were living on it.

43,128. Do you know anything about the circumstances in which the people were who occupied these crofting townships?—They were crofters and fishermen combined.

43,129. Did they do more at the fishing in those days, do you think, than the people do now?—I do believe they did.

43,130. Can you give any reason why the fishing should be abandoned to some extent?—The price has fallen so much within the last few years.

43,131. But the means of selling the fish are better now?—They could sell them at what they would fetch.

43,132. How did they dispose of them in former times?—They used to dispose of them in a different way: vessels from the south used to come and buy the fish fresh from the fishermen, but they do not do that now.

43,133. Mr Maccallum.—The last place you mentioned was Samadalan?—Yes. There is another crofting township after that called Niogart.

43,134. Is that between Samadalan and Inverguseran?—Yes.

43,135. Do you know how many families were there?—I could not give the number of families, but it would not be less than twelve, at any rate.

43,136. Then, what is the next place in which there were crofters?—I do not remember crofters being in any other township except what I have mentioned.

43,137. Do you know Croulick?—Yes, there is a shepherd there, but he has no sheep; I think the stock has been cleared off the land.

43,138. Is he a gamekeeper?—I could not say with certainty what he is now.

43,139. Would that be a suitable place for crofts, do you think?—It would.

43,140. Do you know Lee?—Yes: there is one crofter there, I understand.

43,141. Then, did you mention Sandaig?—No, I did not mention it.

43,142. Sandaig is on the Sound of Sleat, is not it?—Yes, or rather on Loch-Nevis side.

43,143. Just at the entrance to Loch-Nevis?—Yes.

43,144. Is that a good place?—It is suitable enough for crofters.

43,145. How many crofters were there, do you know?—One man used to have it till it was annexed to Scotas Farm to make it larger.

43,146. When was it added to Scotas Farm?—About 40 years ago.

43,147. Have you any idea of the number of crofts that might be formed at Sandaig?—It would make four or five.

43,148. Was there a large population down there before?—In 1853, 332 persons went to America, and that was, I may say, nearly the whole population of the crofting townships.

43,149. These were evicted?—Yes.

43,150. About Sandaig,—was it principally there

Inverie, Knoydart.

Gillies Mackissock.

that the people were located?—When I remember first, one man had Sandaig.

43,151. But before the evictions?—Before the time of that man, I could not say how many had it, nor how many were in the place.

43,152. Is it there that the Catholic Chapel is?—Yes.

43,153. Would not that show that there must have been a population there?—Yes, the people used to go from here and from Inverguseran to Sandaig.

43,154. Are there people there now that would fill the chapel?—Not, nor a quarter of it.

43,155. You did not tell us anything about Kilchoan?—Kilchoan has been a sheep farm since I remember.

43,156. And is there land on Kilchoan that would be suitable?—Yes, very suitable for crofts.

43,157. Where is that part of it that would be suitable for crofts on Kilchoan Farm?—Adjoining the sea and adjoining the Kilchoan River.

43,158. Do you think the whole of it would be suitable for crofter occupation?—Yes, the whole of it.

43,159. Do you know Caolas?—Yes.

43,160. Were there crofters there in former times?—I remember the time when there were five or six inhabitants there.

43,161. Had they crofts?—Well, they had the land somehow between them; they were relations.

43,162. Paying rent?—Yes, certainly.

43,163. Are there any crofters there now?—There is only a shepherd and fisherman, or a fisherman and crofter there; his small piece has, I believe, a couple of cows this year.

43,164. And what of the hill,—how is it occupied?—The hill is rugged and very rough, but it is good enough for sheep for all that.

43,165. Is it under sheep at present?—There are a few hundred sheep on it at present.

43,166. In what tack is it?—It has been annexed to what they call Carnoch tack for a good many years back.

43,167. Then what about Carnoch itself,—is it a farm?—It used to be a sheep farm; it is a deer forest now.

43,168. Were there crofts there?—I do not remember crofts being there; it was always under sheep since I remember till lately.

43,169. When was it made a deer forest?—Sheep and deer used to be mixed on it since I remember.

43,170. But the sheep have been cleared off altogether?—Yes.

43,171. And it is now a deer forest entirely?—Yes.

43,172. Then, give us your idea about what time it was made a deer forest and the sheep cleared? [Mr William Mackay.—In 1890–91.]

43,173. Has there been other land afforested in Knoydart lately?—Yes, Barrisdale.

43,174. Was that a sheep farm?—Yes, it used to be a sheep farm, ten or twelve years ago.

43,175. Was that a place where there were people?—One man used to have it, and a few other inhabitants in the place.

43,176. Barrisdale was an estate by itself?—Yes, a farm by itself.

43,177. And do you know anything of the number of followers that the man had who had that farm? Do you remember old Macdonald of Barrisdale?—I remember when the Macdonalds were there, but I could not say how many inhabitants he had on the place,—six or seven shepherds, I fancy, and four or five other houses on the place.

43,178. But Macdonald of Barrisdale was an important man, was he not? He sided with Prince Charlie and fought under his standard?—I understand one of the family was in favour of the Prince and another of them against him.

43,179. At all events they were men of importance who had followers?—Yes, exactly.

43,180. Are there men now who would fight on either side? Are there people who would be of any consideration in that respect now?—I believe there are.

43,181. Is there a population there now where you could raise a number of soldiers?—Not one now.

43,182. So that a great change must have come over this place?—Yes. There is not a man, I fancy, fit for the army in that tack altogether, except perhaps one or two.

Inverie, Knoydart.

Gillies Mackissock.

43,183. Has there been any other land afforested in the place recently?—Yes.

43,184. What land do you refer to?—There is such land alongside the river here called Glen-Meadail and Glen-Dulochan.

43,185. What tack was Glen-Meadail in?—It was annexed to Kilchoan.

43,186. Do you remember its ever having been a separate farm by itself?—No, I only remember a shepherd being there.

43,187. Would it be a place suitable for a small farm by itself?—Yes, some people would have a fancy for it.

43,188. You think it is suitable for occupation by small holders?—Yes.

43,189. And what about Glen-Dulochan?—There is not so much land for cultivation in it.

43,190. Glen-Dulochan has been afforested also?—Yes.

43,191. That was once part of Scotas Farm, was not it?—Yes.

43,192. How is Scotas proper occupied, the low part of the farm?—The low part of it, since I remember, had always sheep on it.

43,193. Has it sheep on it now?—Yes.

43,194. Is there a full stock of sheep on the lower part?—I don't think so.

43,195. Then, do you think that they are making way for the deer on the lower part of Scotas also?—Well, I believe they are, on the whole estate.

43,196. Then, there is another large farm, Inverguseran, is there not?—Yes.

43,197. Is the whole of it under sheep now, or has some of it been afforested?—Some of it has been afforested; some shepherds that were there have left the estate altogether.

43,198. Where were these shepherds?—One of them was in a place called Folach.

43,199. Is he away from there now?—Yes.

43,200. Do you know of any other shepherd that has left?—Yes, the shepherd in Glen-Meadail left, and two shepherds in Glen-Dulochan left.

43,201. But any other on the Inverguseran tack besides Folach?—Croulick belongs to Inverguseran.

43,202. There was a shepherd there?—Yes: the man is there yet, but he has no stock.

43,203. Was there a shepherd at Samadalan?—Yes, he is just now in Kyles, Loch Nevis.

43,204. Is there a shepherd at Samadalan just now at all?—I cannot say whether there is one living in that house or not, but it was at this time that the man who was living there went to Kyles, and I don't know whether another one has taken his place or not.

43,205. Can you tell us the number of cottars there are at Inverie?—There are twelve or fourteen of them, I fancy, between Sandaig and Inverie; they are a little scattered here and there.

43,206. How many of these have cows?—Only two of them, I think, and they only got these cows about this term.

43,207. Where are they grazed?—They are grazed on the hill side and about the roads.

43,208. How do the remainder get milk for their families?—Sometimes they get none at all; they are often without it.

43,209. How do you account for their not having cows? Is it because they don't care to have them?—No, they would not get the land. I myself was speaking to Mr Baird and to Mr Bowlby for a small piece of land,—half an acre or a quarter of an acre,—but I could not get an inch.

43,210. Do you know if any of the other cottars have been asking for land, or for grazing for cattle?—No; a good many years back they gave up the hope of getting any at all, and, therefore, they do not think of going to ask it.

43,211. And their only hope is that they may get it by some new legislation, is that so?—That is so; that is the idea they have.

43,212. You think there is plenty suitable land all along the coast?—It is suitable for crofting from Barrisdale to Loch-Nevis side, and from Kyles to Barrisdale all along the coast.

43,213. That is just the whole coast of Knoydart?—The whole coast of Knoydart.

43,214. But would you say that about Sandaig the land is particularly suitable?—Yes, and Kyles more so. Rhidarroch is a suitable place for crofters too.

43,215. And all along the coast?—Yes, all around the coast.

43,216. I suppose the lochs on both sides of Knoydart are famous for herring?—Yes, there is good fishing in Loch-Hourn as a rule.

43,217. And you are in expectation of having a railway to Mallaig?—Yes, people, as a rule, are.

43,218. Would that be a great help to the fishermen here, if there were fishermen's crofts formed?—Yes, undoubtedly it would.

43,219. Do you think what the effect on the fishing would be, supposing the railway came there, and fishing crofts were formed all along the coast?—I believe they would take to the fishing far better than they are doing, because the herring often lie on their hands unsold, or they get almost no price at all.

43,220. And do you think an important fishing industry would arise on Loch-Nevis?—Some years it would be very good; a good many people could do well at it.

43,221. Then besides the herring fishing, is there good white fishing?—Ling is pretty good some years, but it is not certain.

43,222. I suppose the great drawback to the prosecution of the fishing was that they could not be sent readily to market?—Yes, that is so.

43,223. Do you know whether many people have got employment by the afforestment of this land? You tell us that a number of shepherds have been put out of occupation; can you tell us the number of new gamekeepers who have got occupation?—There is one gamekeeper in place of four shepherds perhaps.

43,224. Are you aware whether the number of gamekeepers has been added to considerably since the sheep farms have been afforested?—Very few; two or three at the most. In fact, they are not gamekeepers; some of them are what they call stoppers.

43,225. What distinction do you make? Do they get work all the year round?—They are employed part of the year to keep men from going on the hill, or to keep men from fishing for salmon.

43,226. Are they paid for that by the year, or are they only paid for the time their services are required?—While their services are required.

43,227. You tell us there was once a very large population in this district and that they were evicted?—Yes.

43,228. Did any of them remain in this place itself after they were put out of their holdings?—Yes, they stopped on the estate in spite of them. I am a member of one of the families that stopped on the estate in spite of the proprietor or the proprietrix.

43,229. How was that done?—They managed it for four months, I may say, sleeping out under the shelter of walls and gardens and one place or another; because if they put up any sort of a house, no matter how small or of what shape, it would be broken down in three or four days' time. So from the middle of July of that year until about the middle of November they were living in that state. Then they got a sort of relief in the shape of tents, which they used for three years.

43,230. Who provided these tents for them?—The people of Glasgow and Edinburgh, I fancy, sent them home; and then again they would not be allowed to put them up in any place on the estate, but only on a small bit of ground that was attached to the Catholic Chapel at Sandaig.

43,231. Did some of them put up a sort of shelter for themselves below high water-mark?—Yes, they always kept near the places where they had had the crofts and houses, taking shelter about the walls of the houses they had in the best way they could.

43,232. So that the evictions were attended by a great deal of cruelty and suffering?—Yes. It was so hard that some days they could not get up a spark of fire to cook a bit of meat of any sort, and they had to do without anything to eat that day.

43,233. And do you know the occasion of their removal? Why was it that they were removed?—For the rich farmer who wanted to get the land.

43,234. Then, it was to make way for the sheep farmer that they were removed?—That was the reason, so far as I know.

43,235. Have you anything further to add?—That is all I have to say.

43,236. Mr Munro.—I think you mentioned that you made application to the proprietor for some land, and were refused?—Yes, I was refused by the two proprietors, one after the other, Mr Baird and Mr Bowlby.

43,237. About what time did you apply to Mr Baird for land?—I should say about three years ago.

43,238. Did you apply in writing, or verbally?—I spoke to him on the road; I spoke twice to him.

43,239. And he point blank refused you?—Yes.

43,240. Did Mr Bowlby give you a similar answer when you spoke to him?—Mr Bowlby said he would have no more to say to me.

43,241. When you asked for land?—Yes, just so.

43,242. Mr William Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Mr Bowlby.—Do you remember the time you are speaking about when these evictions took place?—Yes.

43,243. Who was the proprietor then?—Mrs Macdonald of Glengarry.

43,244. It was before the Glengarrys sold the estate?—Yes, they sold it soon after.

43,245. The estate was sold, I daresay you remember, in 1857?—I cannot say that I remember the date.

43,246. To Mr James Baird, and the Bairds held it ever since, until last year, when Mr Bowlby bought it?—Yes.

43,247. At the time of the evictions you would be about 12 years of age?—About that.

43,248. You said a part of Samadlan was under deer?—Sheep and deer were mixed, because, as a rule, the deer come down among the sheep.

43,249. But it is a sheep farm connected with the farm of Inverguseran?—Yes.

43,250. It is used for the wintering of Inverguseran very much, is it not?—I fancy the stock is there during summer the same as during winter.

43,251. Yes, but it is kept there principally during winter and on Knoydart?—It may be, but I know that the stock is there summer and winter.

43,252. Oh yes, it is not kept off it?—That is so.

43,253. You have no idea yourself how many people lived on Sandaig?—No, I could not say the number of people who lived in each township separately.

43,254. But the Roman Catholic Church being there does not prove that there were many people on the holdings of Sandaig, does it?—Well, I remember being in the church myself, and I remember seeing it full of people, and some even outside who could not get room in it.

43,255. But these people came from other districts as well,—from Inverie and from Kyles and up Loch-Nevis side and from all round Loch-Hourn?—From Inverguseran to Inverie.

43,256. And up Loch-Hourn side also?—Very few used to come from there, because the distance was so great.

43,257. But that was the only chapel in the whole property?—Yes.

43,258. And it was placed there for the convenience of the people on the whole estate?—Yes.

43,259. Not for those at Sandaig alone?—No.

43,260. Then, as to Macdonald of Barrisdale,—you don't know that he was not a proprietor himself?—No, I know they were paying rent to Glengarry.

43,261. But you don't know whether there were any people living upon his farm at the time of Culloden except his own servants?—Anyone that would be living on their estate would be doing something, but they were not working permanently.

43,262. The mere fact that he was out with Prince Charlie does not prove that he had a number of followers on his own place. Do you know that he was Colonel of the whole regiment raised from a larger extent of land than the estate of Knoydart?—Yes.

43,263. So that he would naturally be followed not by his own people merely but by all the Macdonalds also from the estate of Glengarry?—That is quite likely, but I could not say with certainty.

43,264. You say there is not a full stock of sheep on Scotas Farm just now?—I do not believe there is.

43,265. Do you know they have to send a great many to winter every year?—I know they are sending some away, but I know the land would keep nearly double what they have on it.

43,266. But don't you think Mr Cumming here, who is a good sheep farmer, would put more on if he could keep them?—I cannot say whether he is a good farmer or not.

43,267. You have got no authority for saying that they are preparing to clear Scotas of sheep?—No, it is only people's ideas.

43,268. That is your own idea?—Yes.

43,269. But you have no authority for saying that that is the case?—No, I have not.

43,270. And you may be wrong, as I think you are?—I don't think that I am.

43,271. You seem to have a very strong opinion on the subject?—Yes, I have.

43,272. There are about 12 or 14 cottars?—Yes, between Sandaig and Inverie.

43,273. You know that some of them got some land this last Whitsunday?—Yes.

43,274. Five of them?—Five, I believe.

43,275. And they are all entitled to a cow and a follower?—No, they are not; there are only two or three of them that have a follower.

43,276. They may not all have them yet, but don't you know that they are entitled to them?—They have not the land to keep them, unless they are allowed to run them out among the sheep.

43,277. Don't you know that it is among the sheep that these five cottars have their grazing on the farm of Scotas?—Yes, I believe that is so, but they could not think of keeping both the cow and the follower, because when the winter came, they would have nothing to support the cow.

43,278. Don't you know that I give them some ground for hay,—what they themselves consider sufficient?—They have not got it yet.

43,279. Oh, they have; let me tell you that I gave it to them some three or four weeks ago?—Will they cut wintering for their cows on it?

43,280. Most certainly.—I heard some of them saying to-day that they could not support the cows.

43,281. Well, but, of course, you know they were very pleased when I was there?—That might be.

43,282. Can you let me have any idea of the number of shepherds who were removed?—Yes, I believe I could count every one of them, and give you their names.

43,283. Just give me the number?—There was John Macinnes from Folach, Malcolm Cameron from Glen-Dulochan, another who left Glen-Meadail—I don't know his name, as I was not acquainted with the man, and others. I should say five or six were removed.

43,284. Since when?—Since three years ago. There were 20 shepherds removed altogether.

43,285. Do you know how many keepers and watchers there are now?—Seven, I fancy.

43,286. Seven keepers?—Seven keepers.

43,287. And how many watchers, do you know?—Two watchers.

43,288. All the year round?—I don't know whether they will be kept all the year round.

43,289. Well, they are kept all the year round; and do you know that during the shooting-season a good many people are employed as gillies and assistants otherwise?—Last year there were none so employed here.

Inverie, Knoydart. Gillies Mackissock.

43,290. There was no shooting last year: but take the year before last?—I could not say.

43,291. Would you believe that there were six gillies during the whole shooting-season, as well as grooms and other servants?—Yes, I quite believe that.

43,292. You have no house on this estate at all?—No.

43,293. You live at Morar?—Sometimes I do.

43,294. You have got your family there?—I have no family at all; I have only a wife.

43,295. And she has got a house there?—No, she has not, but a brother of hers has.

43,296. And you are as much in Morar as here?—Not altogether.

43,297. When you come here you just go and squat down with your sister?—Yes. I used to pay the rent of her place.

43,298. But you know that she does not pay any rent now?—No, she did not pay it this year.

43,299. She has not been asked to; she sits rent free, don't you know that?—Yes.

43,300. Mr Maccallum.—You know the farm of Scotas?—Yes.

43,301. I notice that the late proprietor, Mr Baird, in his examination before Lord Napier's Commission, states that there are the remains of a number of small cottages on the farm of Scotas. Do you agree with that?—Yes.

43,302. Then, you were asked by Mr Mackay some questions regarding Macdonald of Barrisdale, and whether he had a considerable number of followers. Now, on that point, Mr Baird, before the Napier Commission says, 'Undoubtedly he had a very considerable 'number of followers.' Mr Mackay may think himself a higher authority, but Mr Baird, who owned the property, stated that Macdonald of Barrisdale undoubtedly had a very considerable number of followers. Do you agree with Mr Baird?—I know that the men belonging to Glengarry, who were living on this estate, were under Macdonald of Barrisdale at that time.

43,303. You have every reason to believe that at one time there was a very considerable population on Barrisdale?—Oh, no, because Barrisdale is not a very large place for a large number of people to live on the farm itself.

43,304. But there were more than you would find now?—Yes, six or seven times as many.

43,305. Then, you say it is the belief in the place that Scotas is in the way of being cleared for deer?—I believe it is.

43,306. The afforesting has been going on bit by bit, is not that so?—Yes, getting larger and larger every year.

43,307. And you have no reason to think that they are going to stop now?—I have not.

43,308. And you think that the stock is being diminished in order to make way for deer?—I believe so. The stock has been reduced from 30,000 to less than 4000 sheep.

William Macinnes.

WILLIAM MACINNES, Crofter, Airor (64).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

43,309. Mr Gordon.—You have been elected as a delegate for Airor?—Yes.

43,310. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

43,311. How many crofts are there in your township?—Five in each end of Airor. There were ten crofts at one time in Airor, but the number is now reckoned at eight.

43,312. Are any of the crofts sub-divided?—No.

43,313. What size of crofts are they?—Some of them have two acres, others one and a half acres.

43,314. What rent do you pay?—I pay £4, 14s.

43,315. What stock do you keep?—I am entitled to have four cows.

43,316. Have you any sheep?—I have ten sheep.

43,317. Is there a common hill ground?—Yes.

43,318. On which the sheep and cattle are kept?—Yes.

Inverie, Knoydart. William Macinnes.

43,319. Do you live mainly by your croft?—No.

43,320. What is your ordinary occupation?—So long as Mr Baird was here I carried the mails from Knoydart to Isleornsay. I believe that is now discontinued, and they get their letters from Mallaig.

43,321. Do the rest of the people in the township live on their crofts, or are they fishermen?—They fish, and go about for labour everywhere; they are yachtsmen and sailors.

43,322. Your crofts are too small to maintain a man and his family without other work?—The crofts are so small, they would not maintain one man for a year.

43,323. Is there a general desire among the crofters of your township for larger holdings?—Yes.

43,324. And is there land in your neighbourhood which could be applied for the purpose of increasing the size of your crofts?—Yes.

43,325. Did you hear the evidence given by the last witness?—Yes, I heard a part of it.

43,326. Did you hear what he said about the townships that he named?—Yes.

43,327. Do you agree with what he stated?—I did not understand properly what he said, as he spoke in English.

43,328. Do you know the lands that were formerly occupied by crofters?—Yes.

43,329. Did you hear the townships which the last witness mentioned?—Yes.

43,330. Do you remember seeing these townships occupied by crofters?—Yes.

43,331. Do you remember the evictions?—I do.

43,332. Do you consider that these townships could be again re-peopled by a crofting population?—Yes, I think they could.

43,333. You think the land is suitable for crofters?—It is bad soil, but it would be good if tenants got it.

43,334. If the railway came to Mallaig, would this bay be a good place for crofting fishermen?—Yes, during the fishing season.

43,335. That railway would assist them in procuring a livelihood?—It would help every man who was following the fishing.

43,336. Mr Maccallum.—You consider the crofts you have too small?—Yes.

43,337. Have you made application to the proprietor for an extension?—Yes, and the landlord spoke to us on the subject also.

43,338. You mean that you spoke to the late proprietor, Mr Baird?—Yes, we applied to Mr Baird for more land, and he gave us a reduction of rent.

43,339. And did he give you more land?—No.

43,340. Did he give any reason for refusing to give the land?—He gave no reason, he said he would consider the matter.

43,341. Did he hold forth any hope that he would do it?—He was very desirous to please us in anything we put before him.

43,342. But, with regard to this particular application, did he lead you to believe that before he disposed of the estate he would grant you an extension?—Yes.

43,343. And that expectation was not fulfilled?—No.

43,344. Then, since the new proprietor came, have you made any application to him?—Yes.

43,345. And what reply did you get?—He called on us when he left the shooting in Lochalsh last year, and he went to inspect the land we had been asking for. He said we would get it, and he asked when we would require it. We said at that minute if it could be given us. He replied that his factor, who was attending a sale in the south at the time, would come to give us the land as soon as he came home. The factor came home, and was about a fortnight at home, but he did not go to see us. We then sent word to Mr Bowlby that the factor had not come to Airor. When the factor returned from the next sale, he came to see us, and he asked us what rent we would give for the land we applied for. We asked him to state his rent and we would state ours. He said that we could not get the land in any case at that time; we could not get it till Whitsunday. Whitsunday came, but we did not get the land. The factor went over the ground himself at that time, when he was speaking to us, but we did not agree; we could not give the rent they asked for the place. They cut up lots off the land we had applied for, and we asked the adjoining land of Neigart. If they had given us that along with the low lands we would have given the rent they asked.

Inverie, Knoydart. William Macinnes.

43,346. What was the extent of land you did ask, and the rent the proprietor proposed to ask for it?—Mr Mackay said that there were about 10 acres of arable land in what we applied for, and about 800 acres of pasture which was in pieces. It was £18 of rent for the whole thing.

43,347. How many crofters were applying?—Six. We had to remain in the poor ground we had, and we would not get any reduction.

43,348. You consider the rents of your present crofts too high?—Yes.

43,349. Have you applied to the Crofters Commission yet? [The Secretary.—There is an application from this township to fix Fair Rents, but it has not yet been dealt with.]

43,350. What rent did you offer to the proprietor for the lands you wanted?—£12.

43,351. Then, are these negociations at an end now?—Yes; we could not agree.

43,352. You failed to get an addition to your holdings from both proprietors?—Yes.

43,353. And have you taken steps to apply to the Crofters Commission for an extension of holdings as well as for a fair rent?—Yes.

43,354. Who is acting for you in the matter?—Mr Macgillivray in Arnisdale was lodging the application for us; and we wrote to one in Edinburgh once or twice about it.

43,355. In your opinion the land that you have applied for is suitable for an addition?—It is beside us; it bounds with us.

43,356. In what farm is it situated?—It now belongs to Inverguseran.

43,357. Is it part of Samadalan?—It is Samadalan itself that we applied for.

43,358. Now, you stated that the land in the townships mentioned by Mr Mackissock was not very good?—We know to our cost that it is not good.

43,359. How does that come about?—The soil in our own township is not good, and we know that when the other townships were in cultivation they were not good, though some of them were better than others.

43,360. In your opinion then are the other townships quite as good as your township of Airor?—Yes, and better.

43,361. And you consider it a great advantage to you to have a croft even in Airor, which is, by no means, the best place in Knoydart?—It was useful to me hitherto, but it will not be of much use now.

43,362. You mean that it alone will not support you, I suppose?—Yes.

43,363. But if you prosecute the fishing, for instance, in the neighbourhood, would it not be an advantage to you to have a croft?—Yes.

43,364. Mr William Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Mr Bowlby.—Do you know what is the extent of your own arable land?—No, but I think it is about two acres.

43,365. I have got a survey made on 18th April 1887, and your name is down as having three acres of arable land. Do you think that is correct?—I don't think the whole croft is three acres in extent.

43,366. But it may be?—It may be.

43,367. You think that the townships to which you have referred could be re-peopled by crofters?—I think so.

43,368. Do you remember how many crofters were on Samadlan?—No.

43,369. Have you any idea?—I think there were about twelve.

43,370. Do you want them to come back again to the same holdings?—Those who were there would not come home, supposing I sent for them; they are now in a home where they have no need of a croft.

Inverie, Knoydart. — William Macinnes.

43,371. Would you like to give it to their descendants?—I would be willing to give it to any one to whom it would do good and who wanted it.

43,372. You mentioned that you did not find the croft useful now. You do not get prices for your cattle?—No.

43,373. Or for your sheep?—No.

43,374. And the death-rate is very high upon Airor?—No.

43,375. Is it not very high upon the whole of Knoydart?—It cannot be great now, for they have cleared off the worst of the sheep.

43,376. But there are a great many sheep on Knoydart yet; is not the death-rate very high?—It is not so high as it used to be, for there is not a sheep stock there.

43,377. The rate may be the same, although the number of the flock is less?—There is no place with a sheep stock that has not a death-rate.

43,378. You do a little at the fishing, do you not?—Yes.

43,379. Do you remember that Mr Baird gave you herring nets?—He never gave me a net.

43,380. Well, to some crofters?—I believe he did.

43,381. Don't you remember that?—I remember hearing that some people got nets.

43,382. The crofters on Airor are very well off, are they not?—Yes, but how? They go far and near, and even abroad, to earn money for the families they leave at home. It is not the crofts at Airor that maintain the people.

43,383. Don't you think it is better for them to do so than to remain at home even upon larger crofts?—I think they could not stop at home yet, even if they had bigger crofts: it would not do.

43,384. Some of them have built slated houses?—Yes, but if so, it was not by means of the produce of the crofts.

43,385. Mr Maccallum.—What sort of holding would you like for yourself? Would you be willing to remove from the small croft you have and take a small farm, if such a thing were available in Knoydart?—Yes, if I could live on it.

43,386. Do you mean by that, if it were of a size that you could live on and at a fair rent?—Yes.

43,387. Do you think now that some such farms could be formed in Knoydart here?—Yes.

43,388. Several of these, you think, could be formed, and also smaller crofts for fishermen; is that your opinion?—Yes, that is my opinion.

43,389. Then with regard to the houses that have been built, the slated houses at Airor,—have they been built since the passing of the Crofters Act?—Yes.

43,390. How many new houses have been put up at Airor?—Two.

43,391. And have these been put up by the earnings of the crofters' families in the south?—Yes.

43,392. Mr Gordon.—If you had got the extension to your crofts which you applied for, would you have been content?—Yes. We thought we were to get it, as Mr Bowlby promised it to us; but now we have not got it, there is nothing for us but look for another place which we can get.

43,393. But if you had got it at the rent of £12, which you proposed yourselves, would you have been content with it as an addition to your crofts?—Yes.

43,394. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to the reafforesting, is it the opinion of the people that all the sheep farms in Knoydart are in process of being converted into deer forests?—It is very likely; judging from the way in which the work has been begun, the probability is that that is the way it will end.

43,395. Is Scotas Farm stocked to its full capacity, do you think?—I cannot be sure.

43,396. Have you any opinion with regard to the matter?—Parts of what used to be the Scotas Farm have been cleared of sheep, and that is not stocked.

43,397. But as to the lower part of it which is still under sheep, do you think it is fully stocked?—I think there is nearly as much as it will carry on the low ground.

43,398. Mr William Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness.—Do you know how many acres of pasture you eight crofters have between you?—I don't know. — Inverie, Knoydart. — William Macinnes.

43,399. Would you agree with me that there are 1000 acres?—I don't know anything about it.

43,400. Until 1887 your rent was £6, 5s.?—Yes.

43,401. How long were you and those who were before you paying that rent?—Since 59 years.

43,402. In 1887 it was reduced to £4, 14s.?—Yes.

43,403. And that is your rent still?—Yes.

43,404. Your people were not originally from Knoydart?—No.

43,405. Your father came, I think, from Skye?—Yes.

43,406. And all the crofters in Airor with one exception came from Skye about the same time?—Yes, the parents of the present crofters.

43,407. And they all settled there about the time of the evictions?—They came there before the tenants were removed from Knoydart.

43,408. They were strangers at the time of the evictions?—Yes.

43,409. And they were not removed?—No.

43,410. Your father got land which was before then in the possession of natives of Knoydart?—Yes.

43,411. Mr Maccallum.—But do you know whether the old natives of Knoydart were removed in order to make way for the colony that came from Sleat?—No.

43,412. Mr Gordon.—I would like to make this point quite clear. According to the previous witnesses, the evictions took place 41 years ago: according to you, your father came from Skye 59 years ago: in other words the people of Skye were in Knoydart 18 years previous to the date of the evictions?—One or two families left before the general clearances; these left of their own accord. It was the land occupied by one of those who voluntarily left the place, that my father got, but the other colonists from Skye were in Airor before the general clearance. It was one Angus Macdonald who emigrated to America, who had the land my father got.

Neil Macinnes, Airor (71). — Neil Macinnes.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

43,413. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter?—I have a croft in Airor.

43,414. Did you hear the evidence given by the last witness?—Yes.

43,415. Do you agree with what he stated?—Yes.

43,416. Have you anything further to add to the statement he made?—No, but I wish we could get what we applied for. I built a slated house at my own expense, myself and my sons, and my croft is the smallest in the township. It is my sons who are maintaining me, and I am not owing one penny to the landlord or factor, neither did my father before me.

43,417. Is there a general desire for larger holdings?—If we got what we applied for we would be happy.

43,418. You would have been content if you had got the addition you asked for at a fair rent?—Yes.

Jonathan Macinnes, Crofter, Airor (31). — Jonathan Macinnes.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

43,419. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter in Airor?—Yes.

43,420. Did you hear the evidence given by Mr William Macinnes?—Yes.

43,421. Do you concur in what he stated?—Yes.

43,422. Have you anything to add to his evidence?—No.

43,423. Mr Maccallum.—What occupation do you follow?—I cannot follow any occupation: I must stop at home working the little croft.

43,424. Are you a fisherman?—Yes, I fish.

43,425. Do the crofters or their sons get employment in the forest?—No.

43,426. Mr Munro.—Where does the shooting

tenant get his gillies from if the crofters' sons are not so employed?—Any place he chooses to get them from. I don't think they would give the chance of employment to any from the district if they could avoid it.

43,427. Mr Wm. Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Mr Bowlby.—Were you not a gillie yourself for a time?—I was for one year.

43,428. When was that?—Two years ago.

43,429. There was no shooting last year?—No.

43,429A. And you don't know but you may get employment this year?—I am quite sure I will not, if they can get it elsewhere.

43,430. Who told you that?—No one told it to me, but it is my own opinion of the people who are in the management.

43,431. Is it not the same management now that it was two years ago? The local factor is the same, is not he?—If so, he would not give me a chance.

43,432. Don't you know any of the other Airor people who ever get employment on the estate as gillies or as servants?—No: they might be there for a month on day's pay, that is all.

43,433. Do you know Angus Macinnes?—Yes, he is there generally.

43,434. He was out with me one day to the head of Loch-Nevis, and he told me he was in the service. Is not he from Airor?—Yes.

43,435. Is he a brother of yours?—No, a cousin.

43,436. Then, why did you say there was not one?—I did not think of him at that time, but I am quite sure that there is no other one from Airor.

43,437. Perhaps if you thought a little longer you could remember more?—I am quite sure I would not. They would be very sorry to give us any chance of employment.

43,438. Do you know a man called Donald Macdonald who was a shepherd at Scotas?—Yes.

43,439. Is he a native of Airor?—It was from Airor he was.

43,440. So that there is no difference made so far as the people of Airor are concerned between them and the people of the other townships?—Yes, there was. Ever since we applied to the Crofters Commission they have turned against us as much as they could.

43,441. Do you know that Mr Bowlby was not aware until I was here three weeks ago that you had gone to the Commission? Or even Mr Cumming?—I am quite satisfied that Mr Bowlby would do rightly, but the man who is acting under him would not allow him to do so. I produce two letters from Mr Bowlby as follows:—

'Gilston Park, Harlow.
11*th November* 1893.

'The Airor Crofters,—

'I have your letter of the 7th inst., and have 'written to Mr Cumming to see you and arrange terms 'for you to rent the land from Martinmas, if possible.

'(Signed) E. S. Bowlby.'

'Gilston Park, Harlow,
7*th December* 1893.

'To the Airor Crofters,—

'In answer to yours of the 5th inst., I have 'put the matter of letting you the land entirely in Mr 'Cumming's hands, and have told him to arrange it with you as soon as possible. He has been away with 'sheep and has been ill since he came back, which may 'account for the delay. If you cannot come to an 'arrangement with him, the matter must wait until my 'return to Inverie after the winter. I can do nothing 'more at present.

'(Signed) E. S. Bowlby.'

43,442. Mr Gordon.—Would you have been content if you had got the land therein referred to as an extension to your present croft?—Yes.

43,443. Was it before or after the receipt of that letter that you applied to the Commission?—It was after that. [Mr Mackay.—No, it was before. It was in Mr Baird's time.]

Hugh Macmaster, Crofter, Airor (40). Inverie, Knoydart.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Hugh Macmaster.

43,444. Mr Gordon.—Are you a crofter in Airor?—Yes.

43,445. Did you hear the evidence given by the previous witnesses?—Yes.

43,446. In particular, did you hear the evidence given by Mr William Macinnes?—Yes.

43,447. Do you concur in the evidence he gave?—Yes.

43,448. Have you anything further to add?—No.

43,449. Mr Mackay.—Do you want more land?—I applied along with the rest.

43,450. You had a larger croft at one time than you have now?—Yes.

43,451. Did you give up the half of it of your own accord?—It was my mother and my brother who occupied it at that time, and they gave up the one-half. My brother could not keep it.

43,452. That was in the year 1889?—I believe it was.

43,453. And that land is now in the hands of Donald Macdonald and Donald Campbell?—Yes.

William Mackay, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Mr Bowlby of Knoydart (46)—examined.

William Mackay.

43,454. Mr Gordon.—Have you any statement to submit?—Yes. 'The present estate of Knoydart forms 'the most western portion of the old property of the 'Macdonalds of Glengarry. It was purchased by the 'late Mr James Baird in 1857. He was, on his death 'in 1876, succeeded by Mr John Baird, who possessed 'it till 1893, when it was purchased by Mr E. S. 'Bowlby, the present proprietor.

'The property is included in what was known in 'ancient times as "Garbh Chriochan"—"the Rough '"Bounds." It is exceedingly mountainous, 21 eleva- 'tions being over 2000 feet. Of these four exceed '3000 feet. The mountains are very steep, and the 'glens, as a rule, very narrow.

'The estate extends to about 67,000 acres, approxi- 'mately made up as follows:—

	Acres
Deer forest,	47,500
Lochs and rivers,	620
Farms, including sheep and cattle grazings,	17,540
Crofters' holdings and cottars' potato and hay ground,	1,200
Plantations,	130
Policies, &c.,	10
	67,000

'In addition to the ground possessed by the cottars 'above referred to, each of them has the right to graze 'a cow and its followers on one or other of the farms, 'or in the deer forest. They also occupy slated 'houses and gardens belonging to the proprietor. 'They have all for many years past been employed on 'the estate.

'The crofters and their sons are employed as fishermen, 'sailors, yachtsmen, shepherds, gillies, or labourers. 'There are rich herring fishing grounds in Loch Hourn 'and the Sound of Sleat; and with the view of helping 'the crofters in connection with the fishing industry, 'Mr John Baird, in 1885, supplied several of them 'with nets, at a cost of £83, 13s. 10d., exclusive of 'carriage from Glasgow.

'Ever since Mr James Baird acquired the estate in '1857, the proprietor's expenditure upon it has been 'very heavy. Between 1882 and 1893 alone, the ex- 'penditure on permanent improvements amounted to '£24,330, exclusive of the wages of shepherds, farm 'servants, keepers, and other servants, and the ordinary 'maintenance outlays. The great bulk of this ex- 'penditure went to people resident on the estate. Mr

Inverie, Knoydart. — William Mackay.

'Bowlby has, since he entered into possession, continued the expenditure, his outlays in days' wages 'between 1st August 1893 and 30th June 1894 'amounting to £1052, exclusive of the wages of 'keepers, shepherds, and other servants.

'There is in the forest no arable land, with the 'exception of a few patches which are cultivated by 'keepers and cottars. The arable lands on the farms 'are not sufficient to produce winter fodder for the 'proprietor's horses and cattle, and they have always 'been under the necessity of buying in large quantities 'of hay, corn, and other feeding stuffs.

'WILLIAM MACKAY.

'Knoydart, 5th July 1894.'

In addition to this statement, I should like just to refer to one or two things which have come up to-day. In the first place, as to the accusation made against Mr Cumming here to the effect that he has changed in his conduct towards the Airor crofters since it became known that they had applied to the Crofters Commission, there is no foundation whatever for such a charge. As a matter of fact, for some time now the affairs have been in my hands principally, and it was I who met the Airor crofters, with whom I found it impossible to come to an agreement. Neither Mr Bowlby nor Mr Cumming, nor indeed I myself, was aware that they had applied to the Crofters Commission until the last day of my visit to Knoydart, about three weeks ago, when, on going over some papers handed to me, including the particulars of the estate, just as I was waiting for the steamer, I found a notice which had been served upon Mr Baird before he sold the estate, informing him of the application by the crofters. I showed it to Mr Bowlby and Mr Cumming, and explained what it meant. That happened after my interview with the Airor crofters. Even now I have not the slightest objection to their application; it has not altered my feelings towards them, or Mr Cumming's or Mr Bowlby's. The next matter I should like to refer to is what I may call the suspicion to which the first witness Mackissock gave expression, as to the prospects of afforesting. Mr Bowlby has at present no intention of extending the forest. He did extend it to some extent last year, and he then went to considerable expense in enclosing it. If it was his intention to clear more ground, he would certainly have done it then, when he was fencing, and he would not go to the expense of the double fencing which would be necessitated by a further extension of the forest. I may mention that Samadalan, part of which we thought of giving to the Airor people, was never in the possession of the Airor crofters. There was an old crofting township upon it, apparently very many years ago, to judge from the remains of houses; but for many years it has been attached to the farm of Inverguseran. Both itself and Niogart, another place mentioned by the crofters, really form the principal part of the low ground of Inverguseran Farm; and although Mr Bowlby agreed to let these crofters have a portion of Samadalan which he intended to enclose, at a fair rent, it was very reluctantly that he did so, for the reason that the working of the farm would thereby be very greatly interfered with.

43,455. Which farm do you now refer to?—Inverguseran Farm. Niogart and Samadalan form the principal wintering ground for the farm. The rest, as you will see for yourselves when you go over it, is, with the exception of Glenguseran, a very high country.

43,456. You know the township of Airor?—Yes, I do.

43,457. Do you think the crofts there are of a sufficient size at present?—Well, I think they are, in the circumstances, for this reason, that you cannot make crofts at Airor or anywhere on this estate sufficiently large to maintain a family.

43,458. Why not?—Because there is no ground. For example, on the whole of Samadalan there is only an area of about 10 acres of what is known as old arable land. The bulk of that is not really worth turning over

Inverie, Knoydart. — William Mackay.

43,459. What sort of land is Inverguseran?—There are about 20 acres under crop there: but that is, of course, under cultivation.

43,460. And the arable land of Samadalan?—That is old arable land, except perhaps a field of, I daresay, about two acres, which is in the occupation of the shepherd.

43,461. Did you say Mr Bowlby unwillingly agreed to give that land to the crofters?—For the reason that it very much damaged the farm of Inverguseran.

43,462. But that is not quite in accordance with the letter which was read?—That may be, but I assure you it is the case. He says he is most anxious to please them, but he would very much prefer not to give this land.

43,463. I shall just read the first letter, which is addressed to the Airor crofters:—'I have written to 'Mr Cumming to see you and arrange terms for you to 'rent the lands from Martinmas first.' That is simpliciter, 'I am quite agreeable to give the land'?—No, I think not. It does not say whether he is agreeable or not: it simply says he is going to do it.

43,464. The second letter says:—'In answer to 'yours of the 5th inst., I have put the matter of letting 'you the land' (he does not say, 'which I am unwilling 'to give'). 'I have put the matter of letting you the 'land entirely in Mr Cumming's hands, and have told 'him to arrange it with you as soon as possible.' Therefore, according to this letter, it was left with Mr Cumming to give them the land and to arrange the terms?—That is quite the case, at that time.

43,465. Then follows an explanation of his absence, and the letter goes on to say 'If you cannot come to 'an arrangement with him [i.e. Mr Cumming], the 'matter must wait until my return to Inverie after the 'winter. I can do nothing more at present. E. S. 'Bowlby.' It is evident from these two letters, in Mr Bowlby's own handwriting, that he was quite of a mind to give the land?—But he made up his mind very unwillingly.

43,466. Upon what basis did you fix an £18 rent for this piece of hill ground?—Well, there are about 800 acres of hill pasture, I believe; that is worth 1s. an acre or £40. We got an offer of £29 for it two or three years ago.

43,467. It must be very good crofting ground surely?—That is my opinion. We got another offer at the same time from one of the Airor crofters of £24. [J. Macinnes.—No, sir, you did not.] Yes, we did.

43,468. It may be worth more to one man than to the township as a whole?—Well, if you will allow me, I shall continue my explanation of how I arrived at the figure £18.

43,469. You have quite satisfied my mind,—if it is worth £40, it must be worth £18?—Well, I thought it was worth 1s. an acre, but I said make it 6d. an acre, or £20 for the 800 acres, including about 10 acres of old arable land. There were six applicants for the extension, so to make it even money I said we would make it £3 each, or £18.

43,470. Then, if the crofters offered £12, the whole difference between you and them was £1 a-piece. Now, £1 might be a good deal to the crofters, but £6 would not have been very much to Mr Bowlby. Would it not have been better to let them have the ground?—Well, I advised him not to do so.

43,471. I have no reason to inquire why you did so: but looking at the whole circumstances and Mr Bowlby's writing that he would give the land, and giving directions to Mr Cumming to settle the matter, I cannot help expressing the opinion that it is a pity it was not arranged?—I may say that Mr Cumming's view was that the rent should be £24.

43,472. Possibly it should: I could quite understand that it would be worth £24 to one man, but it might not be worth more than £12 to the six. Now, do you agree with the evidence we have heard that a part of this estate is suitable for crofters' holdings?—No. I went over the whole estate; and, in my opinion,—of course, you can take my view for what it is worth, but

I cannot spot a single place where you can put down a crofting township with any degree of comfort at all.

43,473. Is there no place about Sandaig Bay where you think a small colony of fishermen crofters could be located?—I don't think they would be comfortable there.

43,474. In view of the new harbour at Mallaig, would it not be a very favourable position for crofting fishermen?—The people who are here already say that they do not get fishing. I don't see why they do not, because people come from all parts of the country to fish in this neighbourhood. But if you settle other people, and they simply do as the people at present do, they won't fish.

43,475. I must say it is a pity they don't. Is there no part of the land between this and Sandaig Bay which you think could be occupied with low ground?—Well, there is the farm of Scotas, which is not available, as it is under cultivation: it has about 12 acres of arable land.

43,476. Have you any reason to doubt the evidence given by the first witness as to the number of people who were at one time located on the estate as crofters?—I should very much doubt that there were 330 persons removed.

43,477. That would mean about 60 families?—Yes. You will find if you examine the lands that there are comparatively few remains of houses. Nor has there been any clearance of the remains, for the reason that the land has not been cultivated since the clearances.

43,478. Do you think the present condition of the land is less favourable to its occupation by a population of that number than it was when they were removed?—I think so, and for this reason, that crofters are not now satisfied with living in the same way in which their forefathers lived 40 or 50 years ago.

43,479. But is not the condition of matters improved by the greater frequency of transport to the south, first by steamers and afterwards probably by a railway?—So far as facilities for transport are concerned, no doubt that is the case; but they don't bring good prices.

43,480. They can more readily realize the wealth of the ocean now than they could 50 years ago?—But they don't go to the ocean.

43,481. But suppose they did?—Well, I should say if they went to the ocean they should stick to the ocean and have their houses simply as their homes, with enough ground for a cow, so that the family could have milk.

43,482. But they say they have not got the ground?—Yes, they have. They have ground for a cow.

43,483. The first question I put to you is whether it would not be a suitable location for fishermen with a cow's grass in the neighbourhood of Sandaig Bay?—Oh, there is no doubt they could be planted there, but they would not be comfortable. In fact, I very much doubt whether you could get people to go there when it really came to the touch.

43,484. Mr Maccallum.—You stated that there was no knowledge of the application to the Crofters Commission till three weeks ago, and, therefore, there could not have been any ill-feeling on the part of the estate management?—Yes, I stated that as a fact.

43,485. I don't doubt that at all; but would it not be also quite within the knowledge of Mr Cumming that the people were holding meetings with regard to the matter, and taking steps to apply to the Commission?—I think it is very likely that he may have heard that they were holding meetings, if meetings were held, but judging from my intercourse with Mr Cumming, he has got a very kindly feeling towards the people.

43,486. Yes, but he takes a peculiar way of showing it?—I don't know that.

43,487. For example, take the case of the valuation put on this ground. It was left in his hands to give them this land, but he would not agree, and because of a difference of £6 he let them off without granting it?—Don't you think it was his duty to act honestly to the proprietor as well as to the tenants?

43,488. But I say he takes a peculiar way of showing his good feeling towards them?—He takes the ordinary Christian way of acting honestly.

43,489. Would not the knowledge that the people were holding meetings in order to put their case before the Crofters Commission have just the same effect as a regular application?—I don't say that even an application would have any effect upon him in his dealings with the crofters.

43,490. But you give this want of knowledge as a proof that his good feeling was not at all affected?—I gave it as a fact.

43,491. You give it as a proof that he could not have been affected, because he never knew of the application; and it is a proof, if we take that particular application?—Yes.

43,492. But would not the knowledge of a movement among the people have just the same effect as a regular application?—I daresay it might.

43,493. And was it not quite well known that they were taking steps to get their case laid before the Commission?—I don't know that it was. Mr Cumming himself says 'No.'

43,494. They held public meetings: are you prepared to deny that?—I have never heard that they held public meetings. There was a meeting held here and addressed by Balallan, but that was not a meeting of the Airor crofters, but of those on the whole estate of Knoydart and on the estate of Morar as well.

43,495. Do you think the thing was kept perfectly private, so that it did not reach Mr Cumming's ears, that they were to make an application?—Well, he says he was not aware that they were to make an application.

43,496. Does he say he was not aware that they were making preparations to appear before the Commission? [Mr Cumming.—I was aware that they were making preparations, but it is not long since I knew even that; it is but a very short time ago.]

43,497. It was a matter of notoriety. Then there is a very large area under deer now? [Witness.]—Yes, 47,500 acres.

43,498. And you give an assurance that there is to be no more afforesting?—No, I don't. Do not misunderstand me, I give no assurance whatever. I say there is no intention at present of extending the forest area, but I give no undertaking or assurance. I don't know what may happen within the next ten years.

43,499. By far the greater portion of the estate is under deer?—Oh yes; 47,000 acres out of 67,000.

43,500. How long is it since the sheep were cleared to make way for deer?—The first land afforested was, I understand, Barrisdale, and the sheep were cleared about the year 1884 or 1885, when Mr Baird was the proprietor. Then the upper portions of Scotas were cleared about 1890 or 1891. Then again last year Mr Bowlby took a slice off Kilchoan and a slice off Inverguseran and enclosed the whole.

43,501. Can you give us any idea of the number of sheep maintained by the ground now afforested?—No, I cannot.

43,502. You do not know the number of sheep taken over by Mr Baird?—No, but I know he lost heavily thereby. [Mr Gordon.—Is it a deer fence that encloses the forest?—It is a sheep fence. So that the deer practically have the run of the place?—Yes.]

43,503. All this afforesting has gone on since the time of Lord Napier's Commission?—I don't know when it was begun.

43,504. I think you said 1885, and the Napier Commission was before that. Did not that Commission report that no land opposite the sea and under an altitude of 1000 feet should be afforested? Was not there a recommendation to that effect?—The report of the Napier Commission will speak for itself: if that is contained in it, of course it is their report.

43,505. But are you aware of it?—No, I don't know that.

43,506. They made a recommendation with regard to afforesting?—They did, but I do not remember the figures.

43,507. And this deer forest includes low land,—it includes land by the sea?—It does not include any arable land by the sea. It includes very steep land along the shore. I believe you know the mountainous nature of the land, which rises sheer up from the sea.

43,508. Is not Carnach arable?—Carnach is level, but it was never arable land. About two acres there were once cultivated, and they are now cultivated and in the possession of the keepers.

43,509. Do you say there was no large cultivation at all in the land that is now under deer?—No. There are a few patches, but these are in the hands of shepherds; and there are two places in the hands of crofters or cottars in the forest.

43,510. Is Glen-Meadail in the forest?—Yes.

43,511. And Glen-Dulochan?—Part of it is in the forest.

43,512. Don't you think there is old arable there?—It is cultivated.

43,513. All the old arable?—Yes. Of course, you will find old 'lazy-beds' on the hill sides, but I should say it is centuries since they were used.

43,514. The marks of cultivation still remain?—Yes, here and there.

43,515. Can you give us any idea of the effect that the re-afforesting has had on the valuation of the land? What was the rent of the old farms?—The valuation is now higher.

43,516. If you include the rent of the farm and the value of the shootings when it was under sheep, are you prepared distinctly to say that the valuation is now higher?—The Valuation Rolls will show that.

43,517. I thought you might perhaps be able to quote the figures?—No, I have not the figures at hand.

43,518. My own impression being that the valuation of the forest nowis lower?—The valuation of the lands is higher, I know,—considerably higher.

43,519. The sheep valuation was over £4000 at one time?—I really cannot give you the figures.

43,520. Then there was a high valuation on the shootings at the same time?—There is no grouse shooting.

43,521. But it was a deer place before?—No.

43,522. Are you aware that before it was afforested, there were gamekeepers there, and are you prepared to give us any evidence as to the number of stags that used to be shot every year upon the sheep farms?—Mr Baird, I understand, shot about twenty or twenty-five stags on the sheep farms. But I don't think that ever appeared in the Valuation Roll. There was no shooting rent in the Valuation Roll.

43,523. It was not let, but it was a valuable shooting?—Well; he used to go out on the farms and shoot.

43,524. And he had a great number of guests with him?—I suppose so.

43,525. There was a very important deer shooting here before it was ever afforested?—Twenty or twenty-five stags; that was his number, I am told.

43,526. In any case it afforded a great deal of sport, and would be considered a very valuable shooting?—You would not get it let,—that is my experience.

43,527. Even taking it at your own figure, which I suppose you give as a fair estimate, a deer forest on which you can shoot twenty to twenty-five stags a year must be worth something?—Well, I know that in a certain case I altogether failed to let a deer forest in which there were sheep. Sportsmen will not look at a forest where there are sheep.

43,528. Why not?—Because the sheep disturb the deer.

43,529. They want to have them there tame, do they?—No, they want to have it clear of sheep.

43,530. So as to get an opportunity to shoot their game without any trouble?—No, but a sportsman may be getting a good stalk, and at a critical moment a sheep comes in the way and he loses his shot.

43,531. But is not that hazard an element in the sport?—No, I think not.

43,532. You think everything should be to the advantage of the sportsman; but would that be fair to the stag?—I think it would: I don't think the sheep should come in and help the stag.

43,533. Don't you think it is the general impression that when the land is completely cleared, the deer become so tame that, in fact, they afford no sport at all?—I do not think so. In the shooting season they are extremely wild.

Inverie, Knoydart. — William Mackay.

43,534. Although the ground is cleared?—Although the ground is cleared.

43,535. Do you think it is for the benefit of the country at large, and for the benefit of the crofters, that land which might be occupied as fishermen's crofts, for example, should be swallowed up in deer forests?—I gave my opinions on that point very fully in my evidence at the Kintail sitting, and it is perhaps unnecessary to go over the same ground again; but I believe it is the case with this estate just as with Kintail, that we could not do better for the people than we are doing. Many of the cottars get employment on the estate, and I think that is better for them than if they had crofts, from which they would find it difficult to extract a livelihood.

43,536. Have the cottars on this estate now got cows, the bulk of them?—Some of them have.

43,537. What proportion of them?—There are five that have got cows since last Whitsunday, when I came up here.

43,538. But before that time?—They had not before that, except two, I think, in the forest, who have got two cows each.

43,539. That is quite a recent thing?—Quite recent.

43,540. Now, do you know of any place better suited for crofters than the coast from here to Airor, and then from Airor up to Inverguseran?—The farm of Scotas is suitable, if you are going to give arable land to the crofters.

43,541. Do you speak of cultivated land on Scotas?—Yes.

43,542. But is there not very little of it cultivated?—Ten or twelve acres,—I think twelve acres.

43,543. Any person in the bay can see that there is a very large extent of arable land above that?—If it is arable land, it is arable land, you may take my word for it, which they would not cultivate now.

43,544. Why not? There is depth of soil. Is any of the land occupied by the crofters on Airor like it?—I think so.

43,545. Would you allow them to go over to Scotas?—No, I would not.

43,546. Is it not really your opinion, if you have seen the lands, that the land of Scotas is very much better than the crofters' land at Airor,—in fact, that there is no comparison between the two?—I think it possibly is better; but the Airor people happen to be at Airor. But if they were away from it they would never return to it.

43,547. Would you give them the chance?—I would give them the chance to go away to-morrow.

43,548. But to go to Scotas?—No.

43,549. It is perfectly evident, is it not, that the land at Scotas is very much superior to the land held by the Airor crofters?—I don't know that it is; but even if it were, that does not prove it to be good land.

43,550. That means then that the Airor land is not good?—Oh, I say it is not good.

43,551. Now, considering the quality of the land and the situation generally, do you know of any place better suited for crofters than the places I have mentioned—Scotas, Rhidarroch, Sandaig, and Dun?—I say portions from here to Scotas are quite suitable, but these portions are already under cultivation and are not available.

43,552. Do you know of any place occupied by crofters better than that?—Yes, there are places where crofters now are, which are more suitable.

43,553. Where?—All over the Highlands.

43,554. There may be, but where is it?—For example, Glen Urquhart, for which I have already given evidence, is much more suitable for crofters.

43,555. Will the crofters there have the advantage of fishing, which can be had here?—No, but they have the advantage of good land and proximity to markets.

43,556. I have no doubt the land in Glen-Urquhart is more fertile; but keeping to the west coast, do you know of any other crofting land that is better than this?—Well, I have not gone into the matter; I should like to have the pleasure of going round the west coast with you in the 'Marmion' and seeing the various bays, before making up my mind on that point.

43,557. But besides that the land is superior to that held by the Airor people and that held by the vast majority of the crofters on the west coast, are they not particularly well situated with regard to the fishing in such a place as that?—Would not people, if they were settled on such lands, be particularly well situated for fishing?—There is no doubt they would, but the crofters who are there now do not fish,—they make no use of the facilities which are at their disposal already.

43,558. But if they had greater facilities of disposing of the fish when caught, such as they look to,—e.g., if the Mallaig railway were finished, don't you think they would fish?—I don't think they would, and I don't think they ever did.

43,559. What is the use of having the Mallaig railway at all, then?—I don't think there is much use in it, so far as the fishing is concerned, except what you get in from the Outer Hebrides, and that fishing is mostly worked by strangers.

43,560. I suppose the principal object of the promoters of the Mallaig line is to encourage and develop the fishing?—Yes, I believe that is one of the objects.

43,561. And this is just at the harbour proposed to be made at the railway terminus?—Yes, but you will find that the great bulk of the fish that will go by the Mallaig line will come from the outer seas, and will come from boats worked by east coast people and English people.

43,562. You think that the west coast people are quite unfit for fishing?—No, no, I don't think so; but I think they would be very much better fishermen if they had no crofts at all. If they were exclusively fishermen, they would make capital fishermen, but they are a blend between the crofter and the fisherman, and the result is that they do not work either of these occupations to advantage.

43,563. Your cure would be to take away the croft altogether?—If there were sufficient land for them to become small farmers, I would not object to that, but I object to their being hybrid. I do not refer to Knoydart specially, but to the whole of the west coast, including Skye and on to Sutherlandshire. I consider the combination of crofting and fishing to be the weakness of the system.

43,564. You think they cannot succeed because they have crofts,—not because they are not fit, but because they have land?—There is no doubt that is one cause of their failure.

43,565. Do you find that the people who have no crofts at all are better fishermen than those who have on the west coast?—Yes. I know cases in Kintail and Lochalsh and Lochcarron where people without any crofts are away the whole time, earning large sums of money, and they are never a penny in arrear with their rents.

43,566. Do you make this statement with regard to the west coast generally, that the landless cottars are better fishermen than the crofters?—They are better fishermen in this way, that they are able to be constantly at it.

43,567. Is that your idea?—That is my knowledge.

43,568. We have now had a great many crofter fishermen before us, all through Barra, North and South Uist, and Harris, who all say they would be the better of having crofts, and they give exactly the opposite version from you,—they say that the man who has a croft is always the most successful fisherman. Are you astonished to hear that?—I am, very much astonished.

43,569. And they tell us that the people who have no land are much more subject to poverty and destitution than those who have land?—Well, that is not my experience.

43,570. Where did you gather your experience?—In Lochcarron and elsewhere.

43,571. You find cottars there who are more successful fishermen, do you?—Yes, because they go to the east coast and elsewhere to fish.

43,572. And the crofters are unsuccessful, is that so?—I don't say they are unsuccessful; but the crofter only goes about his own place to fish, while the man who has not got a croft goes away all the year round, except a month or two, to get his livelihood. [Mr Watson, Surveyor.—There are very few cottars in Lochcarron, and none of them fishermen.]

43,573. Can you give us the number of cottars to whom you refer?—I cannot give you the number, but I know there are some. There are several about Kishorn.

43,574. I am at your mercy in this matter, because I do not know the particular place, and therefore, you should give us the particulars?—Take the east coast—

43,575. I do not take the east coast at all; I only want to know your own experience with regard to the cottars, whether they are in more comfortable circumstances because they have no land: that is the point I wish to find out. It is a matter that has come before this Commission so often, and the complaint made that the cottars are in a most miserable condition, and that they cannot follow the fishing to such advantage as those who have crofts?—It is ridiculous to say that they cannot follow it. They have got no croft to work; therefore they have got more time for fishing.

43,576. They have nothing to fall back upon in the event of a failure in the fishing?—They have got good earnings.

43,577. If the fishing fails they are obliged to get everything from a distance,—they have no milk and no potatoes at home?—All cottars have potatoes.

43,578. I am not aware of that?—At least I am talking of those that I know: all the cottars I know have potatoes.

43,579. They have not land of their own; some of them have stock, but the greater number of them have not; and the evidence constantly has been,—unanimously, in fact, by these people, that they would be better off with crofts?—Well, you know, there is a general desire for land, which it is difficult to account for.

43,580. Would not you say that the cottars on the whole are very much worse off than the crofters?—No, I don't think so at all.

43,581. And do you think it would be no advantage to these people to get land, the cottars throughout the western islands?—There is no doubt but it would be an advantage for them to have a little piece of land if they are all working on the estate, as the people here are, and if they have not any. In Knoydart, for instance, we have given them little plots.

43,582. But they have been landless till then?—They had gardens, you know; just gardens.

43,583. Then you are not prepared to say, are you, that what has led to the want of success on the west coast is that the fishermen have land? You are not prepared to hold that?—Yes, I am prepared to say that the crofter cannot be a good fisherman, for the reason that he has to stay at home very often working on his croft when he might be more profitably occupied in fishing. He cannot go far enough a-field.

43,584. Against that, might I just point out that we have a denial from the people themselves that it interferes with their work, and they state also that it is a great comfort to them, and that, in fact, they could not prosecute the fishing at all and have a home with any comfort unless they had land?—I quite believe they say that.

43,585. I want to place it most distinctly before you, so that you see bit by bit how it works out, that if you deprive them of the land, for instance, they have no milk for their families,—how are they to be supplied? Are there dairies?—They earn it.

43,586. But how could they buy it, supposing they did earn it?—There are shops all over the country.

43,587. Shops selling milk?—They can easily get milk to buy. Here, for instance, if you go along there in the morning you will meet half a dozen coming along with their milk.

43,588. Do you think the people of Knoydart would say that it is easy for them to get milk?—I cannot say what they would say.

43,589. You have no experience of that. Are there dairies throughout the Highlands where the cottars can get milk?—There are small farms where they can get milk.

Inverie, Knoydart.

William Mackay.

43,590. There are not many small farms in the Highlands?—Oh, but there are such farms.

43,591. Are not the farms, generally speaking, sheep farms?—With cattle on them. There is not a sheep farm but has a farmer, or manager, or shepherd, who has two or three cows and who would be delighted to sell milk.

43,592. Then, how was it that this first witness has been refused?—I never heard of that until now from himself: I don't know that. But he does not live on the estate, he has no house on it.

43,593. But his mother's house is on it, and is it not the case that when he was away he used to assist his mother and sister?—I cannot tell you, I never saw the man before.

43,594. But there is no doubt about his being a native?—You cannot ask me that, because I don't know him at all: I never saw him until this morning.

43,595. Then you say there has been an expenditure of something like £24,000 during the last few years on permanent improvements?—Yes, from 1882 up to the time when Mr Baird sold the estate in 1893, he spent £24,330 in permanent improvements.

43,596. Was that expended at all upon crofters' holdings?—I don't think there was much on crofters' holdings.

43,597. Any at all?—Yes, a considerable sum was spent in fencing.

43,598. A great deal was spent in fences for the land under deer?—A good deal.

43,599. In preparing for putting the land under deer?—I daresay the deer fences may have cost £2000 or £3000 perhaps.

43,600. A great deal has been spent on fences occasioned by the deer?—I cannot tell you the amount.

43,601. The farm of Inverguseran is in the hands of the proprietor, is it?—Yes, and has been for a great many years.

43,602. Is there land there such as would suit for small farms?—No doubt.

43,603. A club farm, for instance?—I don't know that there is. If you take in crofters, you destroy the whole. You cannot have a sheep farm without low ground, and the hills are so high they would not be of much use to crofters.

43,604. You know that crofters do have sheep?—Yes.

43,605. Could they not utilise the hill perfectly well?—Yes, if you make very large farms.

43,606. If it were to be worked as a club farm, you could have several on it utilising the hill?—Mr Gordon and I had an argument at Glen-Urquhart upon the subject of club farms. I then gave it as my opinion that club farms are a mistake, and I think so still.

43,607. But there is no reason why it should not do here?—I gave my reasons very fully then, and I refer you to my evidence at Glen-Urquhart, which was based upon experience of 20 years.

43,608. Is it your opinion that it is the best use to put the land of Knoydart to, under deer?—Yes, it is.

43,609. Now, Mr Baird, the proprietor, when giving evidence to the Napier Commission, said 'It is not 'my desire to raise the value of the property by what 'I consider to be an injury to it,' i.e., to put it under deer when it can support sheep. Do you agree with him, that it would be an injury to put it under deer when it could support sheep?—No, I do not.

43,610. Well, that was the opinion expressed by the proprietor?—But he himself did not act on that opinion.

43,611. That may be; but that is the opinion given in answer to a question. 'It is not my desire to raise 'the value of the property by what I consider to be an 'injury to it.'—Well, all I can say is, that if he expressed that opinion, he did not act up to it. He preached but did not practise.

43,612. And do you think it is perfectly right to place under deer, land that would support sheep?—Yes, under certain circumstances.

43,613. Even although there is such a large number of people in the Highlands crying out for land?—Yes.

43,614. And a great number of people who, in their own opinion at any rate, would be benefited by getting a share of it?—I don't believe they would benefited by getting a share of this deer forest.

Inverie, Knoydart.

William Mackay.

43,615. No doubt your deer forest did support sheep before, and you say it would be the best thing to put it under deer, and perfectly justifiable?—I know it did support sheep, and I know that for the last ten years there has been an enormous loss on the sheep farms.

43,616. In face of the great cry for land, and the great number of landless cottars in the Highlands, you hold that it is better under deer?—I hold that most distinctly, and I hold that from their own point of view it would be a great mistake to put cottars there.

43,617. They lived there before?—They did not.

43,618. They lived in Knoydart before?—No, not in the deer forest: I doubt if there were ten crofters living in the whole of what is deer forest now. They lived all round this coast, which is not under deer.

43,619. Even that is uncultivated. You made a statement that the land has not been cultivated since they left it?—What is worth cultivating now, is cultivated.

43,620. That is, what is worth cultivating to a large farmer?—Well, the proprietor would cultivate very much more than he does if there was the land for it. He is obliged to bring hay and corn from Glasgow.

43,621. But small cultivators would cultivate a great deal more?—Not to advantage.

43,622. But you know that they themselves believe they would?—I don't think they would now. They did in the olden times, when they had nothing else to do.

43,623. And they made a living off it?—They made a wretched living.

43,624. Is it your opinion that the people in the Highlands led a miserable life until deer foresting came in?—No, but they led a miserable life until the beginning of this century.

43,625. They led a miserable life, I daresay, at the time of the potato famine?—No doubt, and in most years.

43,626. That is not the traditionary account?—Tradition paints the past in beautiful colours; but look at the books we have containing the first records of travel in the Highlands: look at the documents we have, showing that the people were starving, and dying of hunger. There is no doubt about it, the people in the past lived most miserably.

43,627. When the people got into difficulties at the time of the potato famine, did proprietors do anything at all for them?—Do you mean here?

43,628. Yes. Was the only thing done to help them, to put them out?—I really cannot tell you: I know nothing about that.

43,629. Don't you think they were very hardly treated at a time of destitution, in being put away?—I cannot express any opinion about that, for I don't know the facts.

43,630. Was there not destitution in other parts of Scotland as well as the Highlands?—Not so much.

43,631. But there was destitution?—Not much. It was in the Highlands that the potato famine told most. [Mr Gordon.—I do not think there was much in the east country.]

43,632. When the potato famine came, I suppose the people were unable to pay their rents?—I don't know: I am taking the story from these people here to-day.

43,633. But you know that is what happened generally throughout the whole country?—But they were giving evidence just now as to the estate of Knoydart, and I don't know anything at all about how the famine affected it.

43,634. You don't know anything about the evictions?—No.

43,635. But you know that large sheep farms have become unlettable in the Highlands?—I know that.

43,636. Now, when they have become unlettable, I suppose there are two alternatives, to make them into small farms or to turn them into deer forests; is not that so?—Yes.

43,637. You cannot suggest any other alternative?—Or to keep them in the proprietor's own possession, as we are doing here.

43,638. You have made them deer forest, have not you?—Not the whole.

43,639. Now, would you not rather give a trial to the small farm system than go at once to the deer forest?—My firm have given a chance to the small farm system on the farm of Compass, in Foyers. We advertised that large sheep farm to be let in small holdings, and we did not get a single tenant to take one of the lots. It was advertised for months. [Mr Gordon.—What kind of stock is kept on the farm,—is it wedder or ewe?—The lower part is ewe stock, the higher part wedder; but it is principally wedder, I should think.]

43,640. It has been offered publicly?—Yes: that was about ten years ago.

43,641. Had the tenants to take over the stock at valuation?—Yes, they had to take the stock from the outgoing tenant at valuation.

43,642. You are aware that these valuations of stock frequently give rise to difficulty?—I know that; but that difficulty meets you all over the Highlands.

43,643. But not in the deer forest?—But you put it as an alternative. You would not expect the proprietor to take over a sheep stock at valuation, then to clear the sheep at a loss and then to let the ground for sheep.

43,644. I do not suggest that. I only say that there is a great deal of land under deer, where that difficulty as to the taking over of stock by valuation does not occur at all?—Of course, there is that difficulty in the case of sheep farms. Then there is the other great difficulty, the building of houses. In the case I refer to we made an offer of houses. We said we will build the houses if you will give us a fair rent; or we will allow you to build houses. But they would not build the houses themselves on any account.

43,645. Did you, in this offer that was made, value the farm and divide it into suitable portions?—We did.

43,646. And they had just to accept these portions at the valuation put upon them?—Oh, no. We made up our minds what would be a reasonable rent for each portion, including interest on money expended on buildings in the event of our erecting the buildings; and we called for offers. We did not get more than one offer, if I remember well, and it did not come near our figure. I fancy it would hardly pay the interest on the building expenditure.

43,647. Don't you think it would have been quite a different thing if a farm like that were offered under conditions like these:—that the rent would be fixed by an impartial arbitrator, and not left simply for the proprietor or his factor to fix?—Well, it would be, possibly, as far as the fixing of the rent is concerned.

43,648. Would it not encourage the people to come forward, if they knew that the rent would be so fixed?—But in addition to the rent, the people would have either to erect suitable buildings themselves, or to pay interest on the cost of buildings erected by the proprietor.

43,649. But would it not encourage the people to know that the rent would be fixed by impartial and skilful arbitrators?—It might, to some extent, but I don't think that would get over the difficulty of the expenditure on buildings.

43,650. Had they not a prejudice against rents fixed by the proprietors?—We don't fix the rents; we take in offers.

43,651. But you can refuse any offer that does not reach your limit?—We are not bound to accept a rent if we do not think it suitable.

43,652. And the people may think it useless to apply because you may have a reserve rent, and won't accept less?—My experience is that they won't think it useless to offer. They try to make the best bargain they can, and quite right too.

43,653. Now with regard to this misunderstanding about the granting of the extension to the Airor crofters; you failed to come to an agreement with them, I think?—I may mention that the ground was not to be an extension of their present holdings; it was to be let to them as a separate holding, part of the old holding of Samadalan.

43,654. You were not willing to give it under the Crofters Act?—These were our conditions. They would not be under the Crofters Act even if we were willing.

43,655. Could not the Crofters Commission grant them an extension?—Yes, they could, but that is not what we were doing. I valued it at what I thought was a very low figure: I offered it to them at £18. If I had offered it at £10, I am satisfied from their behaviour that they would have offered me exactly half that amount.

43,656. You think they are very unreasonable?—I think they were very unreasonable that day.

43,657. Then they must have changed?—You know they have changed very much within the last few years, because there is all this land agitation going on.

43,658. But I do not take it from you that this land agitation has done any harm to the people?—No, but they have got the idea that they ought to get the land for nothing.

43,659. They did not ask it for nothing?—Practically.

43,660. You disagree with the people and disappoint them for the sake of the small sum of £6?—I did not disappoint them.

43,661. They are disappointed?—Well, I did not disappoint them.

43,662. But I speak of the estate management, and they are disappointed undoubtedly, because they got a letter saying that the proprietor was willing to give them the land, and left it to the factor to give it. Is it not perfectly natural that they should feel disappointed at not getting the land?—Well, I am disappointed with them, for they could have had it at the moderate figure put upon it.

43,663. But that does not make their disappointment any the less?—At all events I did not disappoint them.

43,664. Had you anything to do with the settlement of this matter?—I had everything to do with the final fixing of the rent.

43,665. By not giving it to them at £12 you have disappointed them?—I offered it at £6 less than Mr Cumming's valuation, which was £24.

43,666. Don't you think now, that in regard to such matters as this, it is always an advantage to have an independent arbitrator?—I do not think so.

43,667. Do you think that these people would not have been better satisfied if they had had a perfectly independent arbitrator to judge between you and them?—Possibly they would have been satisfied, but I don't know that they would. They never suggested an arbiter.

43,668. Does it not occur to yourself that that would have been better?—No, it does not. I have been able to settle with, I daresay, 400 tenants and crofters within the last seven years without the intervention of a single arbiter; and they are all pleased, all delighted.

43,669. There is great contentment then?—There is very great contentment where we have come to an agreement, and I am satisfied that there would have been very great contentment at Airor too had they accepted my terms.

43,670. But, generally speaking, don't you find that proprietors in the Highlands do fail to come to an agreement with their crofters, is not that so?—I don't know that you can lay that down as a rule; there have been exceptions, of course, but I would not say that was the rule.

43,671. There was power under the Crofters Act for the crofters and the proprietor to come to an agreement without the case being brought before the Crofters Commission at all, but in the great majority of cases they were brought before the Commission?—Well, I think the majority went before the Commission.

43,672. So that the Crofters Commission has been a great pacifier?—Well, they fixed the rents. I was thinking more of the east coast just now; but possibly the crofters who are not under the Crofters Act are better off, because they get more outlay on their buildings and holdings by the proprietor.

43,673. And with regard to the extension of holdings and the formation of new holdings, seeing that the Commission has been such a success, don't you think that something of the same kind should be established for making small holdings available out of deer forests and large farms?—I cannot express any opinion on that.

Inverie, Knoydart. William Mackay.

43,674. The Crofters Commission have been very successful in their work, have they not?—No, not from my point of view.

43,675. They have brought peace and agreement between parties?—No, not in all cases.

43,676. Mr Munro.—Am I right in gathering from all the information you have given us to-day that Mr Bowlby really has no land which he could give to crofters for profitable cultivation?—There is the land of Inverie here on the farm of Scotas. Well, the best part of that was given to the cottars last Whitsunday. If you go along you come to Scotas itself, where there are about 12 acres of arable land cultivated by himself. This place of Sandaig to which reference has been made is also cultivated by himself, and part of Rhidarroch. Of course, he could give what he cultivates himself, but, as a matter of fact, he has not got nearly enough arable land at present for his requirements.

43,677. Could not crofters, in your opinion, be put upon the lands from which they have been previously evicted, with advantage to themselves?—That is Airor and Samadaan. I don't think they could, with advantage to themselves. As I have said, I believe if the Airor people were away from there once they would never return.

43,678. This is owing to the altered conditions of living?—Exactly; they are not satisfied with what their forefathers had 40 or 50 years ago, and quite rightly. They have got better houses and a higher standard of living, and would not now be satisfied with what their forefathers had. I don't blame them for it.

43,679. Do you think that crofters who have got moderately-sized farms, close upon £30 of rent, live a miserable existence?—Oh, no, not always. I think it was in my evidence at Glen-Urquhart that I expressed the opinion that a crofter who has got about £30 worth of land ought to live pretty fairly. He should have at least 20 acres of arable land.

43,680. So that if crofters of £30 rent could be successfully planted, you think Mr Bowlby would be quite willing that they should be?—I don't know that he would be at all; and you cannot get the land for them. It is not there.

43,681. How many acres were added to the deer forest?—About 3000.

43,682. Were any people removed from there?—None whatever.

43,683. I think you will allow that there is some reason for the people being apprehensive lest more land should be added to the deer forest, taking that fact into consideration and also the clearances made in previous years?—Well, the fact that Mr Bowlby has enclosed this, rather tends to show that he does not intend to make further additions. But I really cannot say what his intentions are regarding the future. I have never spoken to him on the subject.

43,684. You never heard Mr Bowlby himself suggest further additions?—He never said so. He told me of his addition to the forest and of his fencing it, and I concluded from the fact that he was putting an expensive fence between the forest and the sheep farms that he would not make any further addition.

43,685. About the Mallaig railway, you have made some remarks rather tending to show that you disapproved of it?—Oh, no, I do not say that. I said I was afraid there would not be much fish coming from the local lochs, but that the great bulk of what might go over the new line would come from strangers at a distance. Indeed, I may say that my firm acted in support of the Mallaig railway, to promote the scheme.

43,686. Did you ever hear of a rival railway scheme being suggested, to run along the north side of Loch Nevis and join the West Highland Railway at Banavie or Spean Bridge?—No, I never did. The only rival I ever heard of was the Kyleakin extension.

43,687. Do you think such a scheme would answer the purposes of the people better than the one on the other side of Loch Nevis?—What course do you think it would take? Inverie, Knoydart. William Mackay.

43,688. I cannot presume to say, because of the engineering difficulties to be overcome.—Then I am unable to express any opinion, because I never heard of it before. But it would be a very rough country to carry a railway across.

43,689. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to the number of people who find employment in the deer forest, can you tell me the number of additional gamekeepers that have been engaged since the afforestment?—No, I cannot. There are nine at present, but I cannot say how many there were before.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTY-FIRST SITTING.

APPLECROSS, ROSS-SHIRE, July 6, 1894. Applecross, Ross-shire.

Present:—

James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq. (acting as Chairman).
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Roderick Macbeath, Cottar, Torgarve, Applecross (40). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.) Roderick Macbeath.

43,690. Mr Forsyth.—Were you appointed at any public meeting to come before us as a delegate?—No; I simply volunteered to give evidence.

43,691. Have you any land at all?—No.

43,692. But you have a house?—Yes.

43,693. How do you make your living?—In the service of the proprietor; I get labour on his estate.

43,694. Do the people here find their crofts too small?—Some of them say their crofts are too small.

43,695. Do they consider that there is more land in this district out of which arable land could be got?—Yes.

43,696. Where is it?—In Torgarve and in Ceapachan, but that is in the proprietor's hands.

43,697. Is that the Home Farm you are speaking of?—It is in the proprietor's own hands, but he does not cultivate it; he has it out in pasture.

43,698. Have the crofters here much hill pasture?—They have pieces of pasture.

43,699. Could the crofters do with more hill land if they had the chance of getting it?—The crofters did not speak to me on the subject, and I don't know whether they would like to get it or not.

43,700–1. Are there many cottars about here without land?—There are two cottars besides myself in the township where I live. There are other cottars on the estate, but I don't know whether any of them want land.

43,702–3. Are they mostly labourers like yourself, or are they fishermen?—Most of them follow the fishing.

43,704. Is there any particular point that you would like to bring before us, beyond the wish for some land off the Home Farm?—I don't know anything except the lands I have referred to already; these lands were formerly in the occupation of crofters.

43,705. But you don't know that the crofters are desirous of getting that land back again?—Those that I spoke to would take the land if they could get it.

43,706. Mr Maccallum.—When were there crofters there?—So far as I can ascertain, the tenants were pplecross, oss-shire.

removed from Torgarve about 50 years ago. I cannot say how long it is since the tenants were cleared from Ceapachan, but the grandchildren of the men who had land there are of the same age as myself to-day.

43,707. Why were the people removed from Torgarve and Ceapachan?—I cannot say: I don't know why they were removed, but I understand the land was taken into the proprietor's hands at that time.

43,708. Do you know who was proprietor?—Mackenzie of Applecross was then proprietor.

43,709–10. And was the land put under sheep?—There were sheep on the estate at that time, and also cattle.

43,711. Has the land been cultivated since?—Part of it has, and another part has remained uncultivated since the tenants were removed.

43,712. Do you consider these lands well fitted for the formation of new crofts?—I think they are.

43,713. How many crofters do you think could be settled comfortably in these two places?—I cannot state the number; it would depend upon the extent of land that each crofter would want.

43,714. What size of croft would you like to get yourself?—I would like a croft that would keep three or four cows, and a few sheep.

43,715. Can you tell us anything about the deer forest, whether there is any land there that would suit?—Undoubtedly there is.

43,716–17. Whereabouts in the deer forest?—Up the Strath-Mhaol-Chaluim.

43,718. Were there crofters there before?—I cannot say; if so, it was very long ago.

43,719. Has there been any addition made to the forest recently?—I am not aware of any recent addition.

43,720. Is that the only part of the forest that you consider suitable for the formation of crofts?—Russel is another place that is suitable for crofter occupation. That is at the head of Loch-Kishorn.

43,721. Were there crofters in Rossal?—I do not remember: if there were crofters there, it must have been long ago. It was let to a tacksman in the time of the Mackenzies.

43,722. Do you know when it was put under deer?—I cannot tell the exact year.

43,723. Would that be a suitable place for fishermen's crofts?—Yes.

43,724–25. Is there good fishing in that neighbourhood?—Yes, undoubtedly; it is the best fishing loch in the north for white fish.

43,726. Is it a herring loch also?—Yes, white fish and herring.

42,727. Can you mention any other place in the deer forest that could be profitably occupied by crofters?—I cannot mention any other.

43,728–29. Do you know Borrodale?—Yes, very well.

43,730. Would that be a suitable place for a settlement?—Yes, it would. It is on the Home Farm.

43,731. Is there land there at present uncultivated which could be cultivated?—Borrodale is now in cultivation.

43,732. The whole of the land in Borrodale is under regular cultivation, is it?—Yes, it is in the landlord's own hands.

43,733. Do you know Langwell?—Yes.

43,734. Where is it?—Langwell is along with Torgarve. Langwell and Torgarve were two holdings at one time, but they are now consolidated into one farm.

43,735. Is there any arable land in Langwell left out of cultivation?—Parts of Langwell are cultivated; there is old arable land out of cultivation there.

43,736–37. And what about the grazing which was attached to Langwell before; how is it occupied?—It is under sheep and cattle, the proprietor's own stock.

43,738. Do you know Ach-a'-choirc?—Yes.

43,739. Where is it?—It is to the north-east, between Langwell and Keppach. It is on the road to Kishorn.

43,740. All these places that you mentioned could, you think, be profitably occupied by crofters?—Yes.

43,741. Is there much congestion in the district?—In my opinion there is congestion there; the people are overcrowded. Applecross Ross-shire.

43,742–43. Mr W. J. Duncan, Solicitor, Dingwall, agent for Lord Middleton.—Are you able to pay for the stock of a croft?—If I got the croft first, I would endeavour to stock it. Roderick Macbeath.

43,744. Do you get regular employment from Lord Middleton?—Yes, I get labour on the estate.

43,745–46. Have you ever heard of crofters on the estate who wish to give up their hill ground?—I heard that there were some on the other side of the country who did not agree with the other Commission.

43,747. Do you know whether all the farms you referred to—the lands of Borrodale and Langwell and others—were trenched and drained, and brought into a proper state of cultivation by the late Mr Mackenzie of Applecross?—Yes, I know that; and dykes were erected by him also. What he had under cultivation himself he reclaimed in the manner you describe.

DONALD BAIN, Manager at Applecross, for the Right Hon. Lord Middleton (60)—examined. Donald Bain.

43,748–49. Mr Forsyth.—Have you any general statement to make on behalf of the estate?—Yes; in the first place I should apologise for the absence of Mr Wright, Lord Middleton's factor, who would have been present to-day, but he was unable to make it fit in with his other engagements. My statement is as follows:—

Statement by DONALD BAIN, Manager at Applecross, for the Right Honourable Lord Middleton, with reference to the Estate of Applecross.

I am desired by Lord Middleton to afford the Commission every assistance in my power, in connection with the prosecution of their enquiries; and with that object, and in the unavoidable absence of Mr Wright, his lordship's factor, I beg to submit the following statement.

The estate of Applecross lies in the parish of Applecross and County of Ross and Cromarty. It forms a rocky promontory between Loch-Kishorn on the south and Loch Torridon on the north, and is mountainous and rugged in appearance. It is probably the most inaccessible estate in the county, the road by which it is approached ascending to a height of 2050 feet above the sea level, and being liable to be snow-blocked during several months of the year, when the only access is by sea. A former proprietor expended between £4000 and £5000 in 1825 and 1826 in making this road. The estate contains nearly 72,000 acres, or, deducting foreshores and tidal water, about 70,500 acres.

Roughly speaking, the land appears to be occupied as follows:—

Forest about	37,000 acres
Crofts and small holdings, about	27,500 „
Mansion house, gardens, policies, woods, Home Farm, Hartfield, and grazing in the occupation of the owner, about	6,000 „
	70,500 acres.

The crofters' rents were revised by the Crofters Commission in 1892. The fair rents fixed amount to £466, 4s. 0d., and the arrears cancelled were £1189, 19s. 3d. The fair rents are in arrear to the extent of 33 per cent.

The crofters are chiefly engaged in fishing.

The rents and areas of the lands let (including two small farms) may be thus stated:—

Since the late Lord Middleton purchased the estate of Applecross no lands let to crofters have been taken from them, with the exception of some of the high ground formerly attached to the township of Toscaig. This land was resumed in 1864 at the request of fifteen out of the nineteen tenants, who expressed a strong desire to give up keeping a sheep stock. The rent of the township was at the same time reduced by £16, 4s.

Considerable sums have been expended by the present and the late Lord Middleton in making roads and tracks, building schools and cottages, improving land, and erecting fences for the protection of the crofters' arable land from sheep and deer. Almost all the crofters' lands which are liable to be injured by deer have been protected in this way.

The deer forest is in Lord Middleton's own hands. None of the game is sold, and a great portion of the venison is given in gift to the tenants.

The Home Farm is in Lord Middleton's hands, and contains about 2400 acres, of which 164 acres are arable land under cultivation, and 70 acres are old arable land now in permanent pasture.

The Farm of Hartfield was, at the beginning of the century, occupied by Captain Donald Mackenzie, a member of the family of a former laird of Applecross. It was afterwards tenanted by his daughter, and subsequently passed into the occupation of the proprietor, in whose hands it has been ever since, with the exception of the short period between 1861 and 1863, when it was tenanted by Captain Chisholm, who had been the factor of the Duke of Leeds, a former proprietor. It contains about 53 acres of arable land, and some grazing ground. The arable land is now in permanent grass, and the farm is used as an outrun for the Highland cattle and ponies in connection with the Home Farm. The higher lands now form part of the deer forest.

The small sheep farm of Aridrissach contains about 2500 acres, with between 3 and 4 acres of arable land. A former tenant, who also occupied the farm of Tornapress in Kishorn, gave up the farm in 1861 or 1862, and his stock was taken over by the proprietor by valuation. The farm was then let to an Alexander Maclennan, Mull, at a rent of £35, but this arrangement soon came to an end, and the farm has since been occupied by Lord Middleton and his father as a sheep farm, the sheep being fed for the use of his Lordship's establishments in Applecross and in England. It carries at present a stock of about 300 wedders.

The lower grounds of Russel are used for grazing Highland cattle; the high ground has formed part of the deer forest for a number of years, having been so occupied when the late Lord Middleton purchased the property.

The stock of Highland and other cattle, horses and ponies, on the farms in Lord Middleton's lands, is as follows:—

Breeding cows,	44
Young cattle, including calves,	65
Horses and ponies,	23

The farms cannot winter this stock with their own produce. A considerable quantity of hay and other feeding stuffs has to be purchased annually for this purpose.

The remainder of the estate forms the deer forest of Applecross, the purpose for which it is best suited. It is of a very rugged and mountainous character, the height of the hills ranging from Ben-Clachan on the north coast 2048 feet, to Ben-Bhan near the east boundary 2936 feet, and Meal-Gorm 2325 feet, and Scour Conobhar 1621 feet towards the south, above Aridrissach. There is no arable land in the forest. The rain fall, according to the rain-guage near the gardener's house at Applecross, was 66·44 inches in 1890; 57·46 inches in 1891; 56·63 inches in 1892; and 57·40 inches in 1893. The situation of this gauge is sheltered. On the bare hillsides and in the glens the fall must have been at least 4 inches more. During the winter the deer have to seek food and refuge from storms, to a great extent, on the farms occupied by Lord Middleton.

The estate of Applecross was purchased by the late Lord Middleton, the father of the present proprietor, in 1861; the price paid for it was £78,000. Since then the following large expenditure has been made upon the estate:—

Estate improvements and up-keep for twenty-two years from 31st October 1871,	£24,850	6	5
Farm wages and labour for do.,	8,800	0	0
Foresters' wages for do.,	7,700	0	0
Labour and payments in garden for do.,	6,600	0	0
Contribution to doctor's salary for do.,	1,760	0	0
Parish and county rates for do.,	10,388	3	4
Minister's stipend for do.,	990	0	0

Applecross, Ross-shire. — Donald Bain.

Brought forward,	£61,088	9	9
New cottages built, and sums expended on Toscaig road and Camus-nan-Eilean track, .	2,887	3	2
Cost of Applecross School less sum repaid by School Board, .	1,000	0	0
Cost of Arinachrinach School, less sum repaid by School Board, .	500	0	0
The accounts containing the expenditure for the ten years preceding 31st October 1871, are not at the moment available, but the expenditure is certainly estimated within the mark when put at an average of the last twenty-two years' expenditure of £61,088, 9s. 9d., or in round figures, .	27,730	0	0
	£93,255	12	11

This expenditure is exclusive of Lord Middleton's household and personal expenses in Applecross.

During the said period of twenty-two years, from 31st October 1871, the rents received from the tenants amounted to £13,200 0 0

During the previous 10 years, say . . . 6,000 0 0

The local rates are heavy, the poor, school, and county rates paid by Lord Middleton during the last three years having been as follows:—

Year.	Poor and School Rates.	County Rates.	Total
1891	£321 0 7	£89 7 6	£410 8 1
1893	377 11 2	79 7 5	456 18 7

In every case, where it has been possible to do so, full advantage has been taken of local labour in carrying out estate improvements and works.

The following servants and workmen are employed on the estate:—

Seven foresters and gamekeepers, in addition to gillies and watchers employed from time to time.

One farm manager, one foreman, three ploughmen, four shepherds and herds, and from five to six labourers on the farms, besides female outworkers employed in squad work.

One head gardener, one foreman gardener, and from four to five labourers in the gardens.

From twelve to eighteen labourers more or less constantly employed on general estate work.

Upwards of £1600 are annually expended on the estate in wages alone.

DOND. BAIN.

APPLECROSS,
6*th July* 1894.

43,750–51. You say in your statement that the crofters' ground is generally fenced off from the deer forest?—All that was troubled with deer.

43,752. Is that by means of high deer fences?—Mostly by means of stone fences with iron on the top, but some by means of iron fences altogether.

43,753. Sufficiently high to keep out deer?—Yes, specially for that purpose.

43,754. You mentioned the total amount of the poor rates. Can you tell us what is the rate per £1 for poor and school rates?—The school rate is 8d. per £1, and the parochial rate 3s. 3d.

43,755–56. That is the whole amount divisible between proprietor and tenant?—Yes, for the present year.

43,757. Has the poor rate been increasing of late years?—Not for the last three years.

43,758–59. Has it been going down?—Yes, a good deal.

43,760. We have noticed that the amount of arable land held by the crofters is very small; it appears to be on an average something about 2 acres each only?—Yes.

43,761. Will that be about the average size of the arable land in a croft here?—From 2 to 2½ acres, I should say.

43,762. Is that because there is not much arable land in the place?—Just so, in each township.

43,763. Is there more land among their holdings which they could take in and make arable?—Yes, in some of the townships.

43,764. Do you think they could improve their circumstances by reclaiming some of their outrun? Would it pay them to do so?—I would say so, in certain places, not upon the whole.

43,765. The outrun is mostly hard black ground, is it not?—Yes, except the low ground.

43,766. Mr Munro.—How long have you resided in Applecross, Mr Bain?—For 25 years.

43,767–68. Then you know the people here thoroughly, I suppose?—Thoroughly.

43,769. Do you remember a time when there were more crofters here than there are now?—No.

43,770. Not during your time?—No.

43,771. There have been no evictions during your recollection then?—No, except that a few crofters at Crowlin Islands were brought to the mainland, and their places given to one man. That is the only place I know.

43,772. From your experience, is it your opinion that the estate of Applecross is being devoted to the best use it could be put to at present?—Yes, in many matters I know that for a certainty. It brings more money to the country.

43,773. But, if it brings so much money to the country how is it that the poor rates are so excessive?—They are lower than they have been; I have seen them up to 4s. per £1.

43,774. To what do you attribute the present decrease in the rates?—I am not prepared to say. The poor rate is not so very heavy.

43,775–76. Is it owing to more labour being provided for the people, or is it that the crofters and cottars are becoming more comfortable, or what is it?—They are quite as comfortable as they have been. I can hardly give any definite answer: the rate may creep up again as they fall on the parish; there are so many dying off and not so many coming up. But, as to the real cause of the decrease in the rate, I cannot speak with any certainty.

43,777. Mr Forsyth drew your attention to the fact that the portion of arable land to pasture held by the crofters is very small?—Yes.

43,778. Two to three acres only, you said?—Yes.

43,779. Let me ask you again, is there no land in Applecross that could be given them to increase their arable area?—None, except the land that is stocked by the proprietor.

43,780. But could that land be given to them?—Not without injury to the remainder.

43,781. Supposing they got it, could they cultivate it with advantage and profit to themselves?—Very few would crop it, or provide themselves with houses, I expect.

43,782. Is there any arable land in the vicinity of existing townships?—No unoccupied land.

43,783. Did the crofters complain to you at any time of a want of arable land?—No, I never heard of such: on the contrary, we have had bother with them wanting to be put off the land. They say, we would rather have half a lot than a whole one,—those who are attending to the fishing. There are two or three vacancies at present where they have given up their land.

43,784–85. Could not the land that had been previously occupied by crofters be given back to them?—Well, I think they have all that land, as far as is known to me.

43,786. But some evictions have taken place?—Not within the last sixty years.

43,787. But before that time evictions took place?—That was the time when the Home Farm was improved; it was during the time not of the last Mackenzie but of a former Mackenzie. It was young Thomas Mackenzie who improved the Home Farm.

Applecross, Ross-shire. Donald Bain.

43,788–89. Do the crofters here follow the fishing as well as cultivating their crofts?—They are more fishermen than crofters.

43,790. Is it your experience that they can cultivate a croft well, and also follow the fishing?—No, and it is their own experience; that is the reason why they don't want much land,—so as not to take up their time from the fishing.

43,791. Then you give it as your experience, and as a result of your communications with the crofters, that they don't want much land, that they could not do justice to more land and follow the fishing too?—No, they could not attend to both.

43,792. Take the case of the cottars, now, who have no land at all; is there no land that you could give them?—None, except off the Home Farm.

43,793–94. Do the cottars follow the fishing too?—There are some cottars who follow the fishing; but, as a rule, they are employed on the estate and on the Home Farm.

43,795. Lord Middleton gives constant work to the cottars?—Constant work, they are never a day without work.

43,796. And it is mainly upon his employment that they depend for their livelihood?—Quite so.

43,797–98. Supposing that Lord Middleton ceased to give them employment, what would happen to them?—Well, they would have to be provided with something else.

43,799. Don't you think it would be a distinct advantage for them to have a bit of land that they could fall back upon at all times for a living?—Oh, certainly, if they had not anything else to depend upon; but when they get regular employment I think they have more wages than they would make by having a bit croft.

43,800. But the regular employment may cease?—Well, it has gone on since the property was bought by the late Lord Middleton.

43,801. Are they generally successful in fishing here?—Just according to the season.

43,802. Could anything be done to improve the fishing here?—Yes.

43,803. What would you suggest?—Steam communication.

43,804. Mr Maccallum.—I was much struck with a statement of yours which runs counter altogether to what we hear from people elsewhere. You say that in this place you have bother with people giving up their land?—Yes.

43,805. And that you have several vacancies?—There are three at present.

43,806. Do you say that that is the general feeling of the people here,—that they have too much land?—The fishermen, they don't want very much land. The fishermen and the old widows find it too much for them to cultivate the land.

43,807. How many fishermen have come to you saying that they had too much land?—I am not sure, I think now and again,—there are two at any rate.

43,808. The reason I ask you that is, that we have never had a statement like it. Could you give us the names of these two who came saying they had too much land?—There is one John Gillies in this township, and one Widow John Macleay, and Norman Macdonald, Kenmore: they had too much land.

43,809. They had too much land, and they wished to be relieved of it?—To take the half off.

43,810. Is John Gillies a fisherman?—Yes.

43,811. Did he say that the reason he was giving up the half of the croft was that he could not follow the fishing profitably and have so much land?—Yes, that he could not attend to it properly.

43,812. And he therefore wanted to give it up?—He wanted to give it up.

43,813. Retaining the house and half the croft?—Yes.

43,814. When did this happen?—Last year.

43,815. Did you take over his land?—No, we do not want to break up the crofts; we consider them small enough.

43,816. Is he a successful fisherman?—Yes.

43,817. And his sole reason for giving up this land was that he might devote more of his time to fishing?—Yes, and that he found it difficult to cultivate the whole croft. He and his wife are alone, and he said it was too heavy to cultivate so much.

43,818. What extent of arable land has he?—It is just the run of the township here.

43,819. Two or three acres?—Yes.

43,820. And he wanted it to be reduced to a half?—Yes.

43,821. Would the other people in the township be ready to take over that land?—No, there are none of the crofters in the township that would take it. We could arrange the matter, if they would take it, without putting up another house: we don't want to put up another house.

43,822. Did you offer it to the township?—I am certain there is none of them would take it.

43,823. How can you be certain of that?—Because they are not able to cultivate these.

43,824. How do you know that they cannot cultivate them; is it not rather a strange statement to make, that they could not cultivate two acres?—Because there is only this John Gillies and the other man in the township; all the rest are women. John Gillies and the other man are fishermen, and they don't want to have too much to do with land.

43,825. That seems an altogether exceptional township, does not it?—Well, it may be.

43,826. That is not to be taken as the rule,—that the crofters consider two or three acres too much to cultivate?—Well, I have found the same in other cases. There is another township, called Toscaig, where a few years ago there was a vacancy, and we could not get any of the neighbours to take up the vacancy.

43,827. Are there many such?—Not now; I got one that came from Uags to take it.

43,828. Did you offer it to the township?—Yes, several times, and it was vacant for years before it was taken.

43,829. Are there many crofters in Toscaig?—Yes, there are nineteen of them.

43,830. An offer was made to them of a vacant croft, which they refused to take?—Yes.

43,831. How was this offer made to them?—Just that they should take it along with their own.

43,832. Did you call a meeting of the township?—No, I just spoke to them. There are what we call whole lots and half lots; I offered it to those who had half lots, to take this other half lot.

43,833. Did you offer it individually to every one of them?—Not to every one of them, but it was open to any one of them, and I offered it to a few who, I thought, might take it.

43,834. Did you offer it to those lying contiguous to the croft?—Oh, yes.

43,835. To each of those contiguous to it?—Yes.

43,836. Who are the crofters contiguous to the croft that was vacant?—I think they are William Kennedy and Roderick Macrae.

43,837. You offered it to each of these?—I offered it to William Kennedy, and I offered it to another man there also, whose name has escaped me at present,—it is a good many years since. I then gave it out in pieces for potato ground to the cottars.

43,838. Then do you distinctly give us to understand that there is on this estate a general desire to have their holdings diminished?—Not except in the case of those that I told you of.

43,839. These are exceptional cases, are not they?—It is they that spoke to me about it.

43,840. You are not prepared to say, are you, that among the fishermen here there is a desire that their crofts should be diminished?—Those that I told you.

43,841. But what of the others? Is it a statement which you make about the people in general?—Well, I don't hear them asking for more land.

Applecross, Ross-shire. Donald Bain.

plecross, s-shire. ald Bain.

43,842. But have you any reason to think that they consider their crofts too large?—I hear a good many of them complain of it in the time of cropping.

43,843. I want to have as clear and distinct an understanding about the thing as we can possibly arrive at. Do you think now, that it is the opinion of the fishermen here that their crofts are too large?—The whole of them have not complained to me.

43,844. How many have complained to you?—I gave you the names of those who complained to me last.

43,845. And these are all?—That I remember just now.

43,846. Do you think, then, that the general opinion of the people is that it is a disadvantage to have such crofts as they have here?—Well, they say so,—that it takes up too much of their time, and keeps them back too much from the fishing.

43,847. Two acres of arable land?—Yes.

43,848. You heard the witness, Mr Macbeath, speak of Russel?—Yes.

43,849. Do you consider that a suitable place for fishermen's holdings?—Well, it was never let to crofters; it was a farm formerly, and now it is in his lordship's hands for cattle-rearing, and, of course, being between the sea and the forest, the deer come down in the winter time.

43,850. It is virtually a part of the forest, is it not?—It is not fenced off from the forest.

43,851. Do you think that that place is quite as suitable as the places occupied by the crofters at present for fishermen's lots?—Oh, yes, it would be quite suitable in that respect.

43,852. The principal farm on the estate, I think, is called Hartfield?—Yes.

43,853. Does that farm embrace the best of the land on the estate?—It, and the Home Farm: what we call Borrodale.

43,854. Do you know what stock was on Hartfield when it was in the hands of a tenant?—No, that was before my time.

43,855. You cannot tell what stock was given over, and what stock of cattle was on it?—No.

43,856. But it was a large farm, was it not?—No, it was not so very large. Captain Chisholm was the factor for the Duke of Leeds, and he got this farm. [Mr Duncan.—The rent was £160].

43,857. You are unable to give us any idea of the stock it carried?—No, but I might find it out. There are some on the place yet who were at the delivery, and I could find out.

43,858. But it was notoriously a very good farm?—It was a good compact farm of its size.

43,859. Is there any part of that farm now in the deer forest?—Yes, the high land of it.

43,860. Was the sheep stock of Hartfield a very superior stock?—I cannot say.

43,861. Did you never hear that it had a name?—No.

43,862. Then there are about 6000 acres, I think, in the proprietor's hands, farmed?—Yes, counting the outrun.

43,863. And that includes all the best ground on the estate?—It is not all the best; of course, part of it is the best, but it takes in part of the hill as well.

43,864. Now, what is your opinion on this matter; if crofts or small holdings were formed out of Hartfield, giving them perhaps the old grazings, would such holdings be taken up, do you think?—I never heard any desire for it, except what I have heard to-day.

43,865. There are some crofts, I suppose, better than others?—There are some townships better than others: of course, the rents vary accordingly.

43,866. You think it is rather a disadvantage for the fisherman to have a large croft?—I think so.

43,867. And that the crofts here are, on the whole, too large for fishermen?—They complain more themselves. I don't think they are too large, but they consider them too much to cultivate.

43,868. Do you find then, that those who have the large crofts are the least successful fishermen?—No, I don't think so.

43,869. You think that those who have the large crofts are quite as successful as those who have the small?—Those able-bodied men who can manage both the croft and the fishing. Applecross, Ross-shire. Donald Bain.

43,870. That is just what we have been hearing everywhere. But you think it is a decided advantage for a fisherman on the west coast generally to have a croft?—Yes.

43,871. And that he would be under a great disadvantage if he had not one?—Yes, that is quite true.

43,872. In fact, that it is almost impossible for a fisherman to do without it?—Yes.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTY-SECOND SITTING.

STORNOWAY, LEWIS, July 9, 1894.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
James Noel Muller Forsyth, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Alexander Maclennan, 18 Maravaig, Lochs (56). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.) Alexander Maclennan.

43,873. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

43,874. In what township?—No. 18 Maravaig.

43,875. Your holding, I think, was dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

43,876. And apparently you have two acres arable and five acres of outrun?—Yes.

43,877. Your former rent was £1, 16s. and your fair rent became £1, 5s.?—Yes.

43,878. And you have besides an interest in common pasture extending to 863 acres common to 22 holdings in Maravaig, and you also have the Island of Torraidh in common with the township of Calbost?—Yes.

43,879. I suppose you have no written statement?—No.

43,880. But you are ready to give us some information with regard to the purposes of this Commission. If you have any statement to make we shall be glad to hear it?—It is about the position of the township and how we are situated that I wish to explain to the Commission. There are 23 lots in the township and 40 houses, but only 8 whole lots, the remainder being cut up.

43,881. Are there some lots with two or three families on the lot?—Yes, there are two or three families on some.

43,882. Are there any with as many as four families?—No, not so many in our township.

43,883. Have you a number of cottars attached to the township?—Those who occupy the houses over and above the 23 lots are cottars, but they get a share of the crofts to till them. They get a piece for potato land.

43,884. And many of these have stock of their own?—Yes, they have, more or less.

43,885. Are the occupants of that township much in need of additional land?—Yes, they are very needful of that.

43,886. Is there land available in the vicinity?—Park is the only available land in that district.

43,887. Do you mean the Park forest?—The Park forest.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Alexander Maclennan.

43,888. What kind of land is that?—Land that was formerly inhabited by living men who were comfortably situated when they were there.

43,889. Is it land capable of cultivation?—Yes, they could till it now as formerly.

43,890. How long is it since it was occupied in the way you have mentioned?—Forty-nine or fifty years.

43,891. Do you yourself remember when any part of the land there was occupied?—I recollect seeing the men coming from there with their furniture when they were flitting.

43,892. What was the name of the place they came from?—Eishken and Orasaigh and Leumrabhagh.

43,893. Were there any other evictions except at these places?—At many other places before I was born.

43,894. Can you give me the name of any?—Little Scealadail and Big Scealadail, Airidh-Dhomhnuill-Chaim, and Stromas.

43,895. Any others?—A small township, Caolas-an-Eilein.

43,896. What is the nature of the soil in the locality where these dwellings were?—The soil generally is similar to the ground we till ourselves.

43,897. And is the ground you till for the most part moss?—Part of it is moss.

43,898. And the rest?—Thinner soil and stones.

43,899. Is it a general characteristic of the land in Park forest and the surrounding country that it is moss land?—Yes, but near the sea the soil is thinner.

43,900. But back from the sea, is it for the most part deep moss?—Yes, as you ascend from the sea-shore the moss gets deeper.

43,901. And do you know what is to be found below the moss generally?—There is a great depth of moss in some places.

43,902. Do most of the crofters in your township and the neighbouring townships live partly by fishing?—They have nothing else.

43,903. But for the fishing they could not live there?—No; and the fishing has gone back very much.

43,904. Suppose you had the chance of getting a new croft, would you like to supplement what you get from the croft by means of fishing?—The mind of my township is that if they get a piece of land and fishing along with it they could fish at the same time.

43,905. Am I right in supposing that the view you represent is a desire for additional land with aid from fishing as a means of livelihood?—Yes, they would be quite satisfied with that in my township.

43,906. Now, you said there were 40 houses among the 23 lots. Can you tell me how many houses there were ten years ago?—I would require a little time in order to be accurate.

43,907. But as near an estimate as you can give?—There have been only a few houses added within the last ten years to the township. When I was born, I remember seeing the township with only six lots.

43,908. When you were born there were only six lots?—That is so.

43,909. How long have there been 23 lots?—When the township was lotted by Mr Cameron there were 22 lots formed, in Sir James's time, and one lot has been added since.

43,910. How long was that after Sir James came into the property?—I am not very sure, but Mr Orrock knows. [Mr Orrock, Chamberlain.—It would be about the year 1850.]

43,911. Have you a road to your township?—No, never a foot of a road in Park.

43,912. How far are you from a road?—We are nine miles from the nearest road.

43,913. Is there a bridle path?—No, no footpath. There was a small bit formed last year for the school children.

43,914. You have no horses in Lochs?—There are only two horses in the whole parish of Park.

43,915. Is the fishing in the neighbourhood of the townships good fishing as a rule?—Ours is a good fishing township.

43,916. Can you give me an idea of the number of children in your township?—I can tell the number on the whole place, in our own township and in Calbost.

43,917. How many?—Ninety-four.

43,918. Do you pay any rates?—Yes.

43,919. What taxes are levied on you?—Poor rates and road rate. I paid 3s. 7d. of poor rates this year, and 6d. for road money.

43,920. Is 3s. 7d. what you pay in a year for the poor rate?—Yes, 1s. 7d. for County Council.

43,921. Mr Maccallum.—Did you go over the Park forest and number the various townships that were there?—There is an old man in the township who was born and brought up at Park, and he told me. There were 34 places where people dwelt at one time, but in some of these there was only one family.

43,922. And do you know what the whole population was?—I cannot tell. In the largest townships there were six lots, but I cannot tell the number of people who lived at Park: that is too far back for my recollection.

43,923. Do you know what was the occasion of their being removed from Park?—In order to make it waste for sheep.

43,924. When was it put under sheep?—One part was made waste for sheep long before the other part, when the Stewarts came.

43,925. Were the Stewarts the first to get land there?—Yes, the Duntulm family.

43,926. When was that?—It is so far back that I cannot remember.

43,927. What was the part that was first cleared?—Valamus, Ceann-na-Carraig, Ceannmhuir, and Ceann-chreanaidh.

43,928. Was there a house erected for the Stewarts?—They had a white house at Valamus, which was the principal house in Park at that time. Eishken or Isginn is the principal house now.

43,929. Then, after that, when was the remainder cleared?—That was when the Leumrabhagh people and the Orasaigh people, were sent away, about 50 years ago.

43,930. How long was it occupied as a sheep farm?—It was subsequently to that under sheep with Mr Sellar and Mr Scobie until it was taken by the present tenant, Mr Platt, as a deer forest.

43,931. When did Mr Platt get it?—He had Park at one time, but left it and returned after two years' absence.

43,932. When were the sheep cleared away?—He had the shooting from Mr Sellar in the first place, and when he returned he occupied it under Lady Matheson, and then the sheep were cleared away seven years, I think, afterwards.

43,933. Do you know what was the rent of it as a sheep farm?—£800 is what Mr Sellar was charged for it, I think, but I am under correction if I am wrong.

43,934. Then, do you know what Mr Platt paid for the shooting he had from Mr Sellar?—Mr Platt spoke to me once at Portree, and told me that one year that Park was waste, the year it was left with Lady Matheson, her ladyship wanted £2000 of rent.

43,935. But what did Mr Platt pay to Mr Sellar before it was cleared of sheep?—Mr Sellar had the grazing of the sheep at Park for nothing; he received as much in sporting rent as he paid for the whole place.

43,936. That means that Mr Platt was paying £800 to him for the shooting?—Yes.

43,937. Do you know what stock he had on the farm?—9000 or 10,000 when it was fully stocked.

43,938. And do you think there were 9000 or 10,000 on it when Mr Platt was paying £800 for the shooting?—I know that when Mr Sellar parted with part of it, he put 9000 or 10,000 sheep upon it, when he parted with it to Lady Matheson.

43,939. When did he put that on?—Lady Matheson was obliged to take the stock, and that number was upon it when he parted with it.

43,940. And at that time Mr Platt had the shooting, I suppose?—Yes.

43,941. Were the old townships situated along the coast of Park?—Yes, there is only one township, Stromas, that was any distance from the sea.

43,942. Do you think that these townships that were occupied before are all suitable for re-occupation by crofters?—Yes, they would be suitable to-day, and the old men who lived in them say that they would go back.

43,943. This place was not cleared because the people were ill-off, but because it was thought to be suitable for sheep?—Not on account of the poverty of the people; they lived very well there. They were just ejected from there.

43,944. Where did the most of them go?—They were spread among the townships of the island, and a great many of them sent to Crossbost. My grandfather was the greatest part of his time in Park, and he had a good deal of stock there.

43,945. In what township did your grandfather live?—Ceann-creannag near Loch-Bhrollum.

43,946. Is that a suitable place, do you think?—Quite as well as it was, if not better, after all the length of time it was cultivated.

43,947. Where did he go after leaving that place?—He came to Maravaig.

43,948. Did he come to a vacant croft, or was he put in along with the other crofters?—He got a piece of a lot from a relative of his own.

43,949. And built a house for himself?—Yes.

43,950. You know the townships presently occupied by crofters in Lochs. Do you think these are in any way superior to the land in Park?—Not much better; there are some townships in Lochs where the arable land is better.

43,951. What township is that that you consider better?—Crossbost, where there is very good arable land, but they cannot keep stock there in comparison with the stock they had at Park.

43,952. You think the pasture in Park is superior, but there is more arable land in Crossbost?—The grazing is much better and more plentiful at Park.

43,953. Could you mention any other township that you think is better than Park?—Big Scealadail, in Park, is as good as any township in Lochs.

43,954. Then if Park were re-occupied by crofters, would they be suitably situated for fishing?—Yes, it is surrounded by fishermen's townships.

43,955. Would they be more conveniently situated than some of the present townships in Lochs?—Orasaigh and Stiomrabhagh would be better than any township in Lochs for fishing purposes.

43,956. You said that Park was the only land available?—Yes.

43,957. Is there not a large grazing farm anywhere in the parish there?—Not south of Loch-Erisort, except what Mr Roderick Martin has.

43,958. Is the land occupied by Mr Martin suitable for occupation, and would it be desirable that they should have that land?—Stiomrabhagh and Orasaigh are as good as any piece in Park.

43,959. And as good as any place occupied by crofters just now?—Fully as good; the people that were sent away from these places were very sorry to leave.

43,960. You did not refer to Crobeg and Eilean Chalum-Chille; what have you to say about these?—I would leave that with the man who has got it.

43,961. Who has got it?—Mr Roderick Martin.

43,962. Is there good land there?—Yes, good arable land.

43,963. Better than anything the crofters have got?—Yes.

43,964. Were there crofters in these places before?—Not in my day; only two in my day.

43,965. Is Eilean Chalum-Chille cultivated now?—No.

43,966. Are there indications that it was cultivated in former times?—There was a dwelling house, and a family living there.

43,967. Are there not signs of old cultivation almost all over the island?—Yes, the rigs are there, quite numerous through the island.

43,968. Did the crofters apply for Park after it was given up as a sheep farm?—There was a petition sent to Lady Matheson from our township asking her ladyship to give us Orasaigh and Stiomrabhagh. Stornoway, Lewis. — Alexander Maclennan.

43,969. From what townships did that application come?—From Calbost and Maravaig.

43,970. Did you get any reply?—I am not sure of the terms of the letter to-day, but she declined to give them. Her ladyship complained that this letter was not respectful enough. We were not aware of that; we thought it was quite respectful.

43,971. You meant to send a respectful application, I suppose, and to pay a fair rent for the land you applied for?—Yes, our petition was respectful, and we promised to pay a fair rent.

43,972. Was there any reason given for refusing the application except that its terms were not respectful enough?—Nothing else.

43,973. The Chairman.—There was an important report made by Mr Alexander Fraser and Mr Malcolm Macneill to Lord Lothian, as Secretary for Scotland, with regard to the cottar population of the Lews in 1888; and to these gentlemen a statement was submitted by Mr William Mackay, then Chamberlain of the Lews: and I think it is important that I should read a passage from that statement to which Mr Mackenzie our Secretary has called my attention. Mr William Mackay there says, 'I produce a history of the Peninsula of Park, as 'far as I have been able to gather it from the records of the 'estate,' and the history he refers to is the following:—

'The parish of Lochs appears to be the most recently 'inhabited parish in the Island of Lews. At the time 'of the first Earl of Seaforth, the whole of what is now 'known as Park was a deer forest, and the tenants or 'crofters of Uig used to graze their cattle in summer, 'or had their sheilings there. Where the Park deer 'raiders encamped for the night is named Airidh-Dhomh-'nuill-Chaim. It has been said that there were crofters 'here, but Donald Cam resided in Uig, and merely 'had a sheiling in Park. Early in the present century 'a company of four gentlemen from Skye took what 'was then known as the farm of Park; one of the 'company was Lachlan Mackinnon of Corry. The 'manager of the farm was a Donald Stewart from Perth-'shire, who subsequently became tenant, and after him 'his two brothers, Alexander and Archibald Stewart, 'who held the farm till 1842, when it was let to 'Walter Scott, Hawick, at a rent of £587. His lease 'terminated in 1857. Thereafter, the farm was let to 'Mitchell Scobie, when the crofters in Stiemervay, 'being in the centre of the farm, were removed to 'Liemervay, which was then part of Park Farm. Mr 'Mitchell Scobie made over his lease to Mr P. P. 'Sellar, whose occupancy terminated at Whitsunday '1883. The farm was then advertised but a tenant 'could not be got for it. It was then advertised as a deer 'forest and let as such to Mr Platt in 1886. Of the 'lands held by Mr Sellar, Seaforthhead and Shieldinish, 'an area of about 5000 acres has been let to six crofters 'at a rent of £51; and Stiemervay and Orinsay con-'taining about 3000 acres, with the Shiant Isles was let 'to Roderick Martin, tenant of Crobeg. Island Ewhart, 'in Loch Shell, was given to the crofters at Liemervay 'without any additional rent being charged.

'The whole area of the peninsula between Loch 'Erisort and Loch Seaforth is 68,000 acres, of which '42,000 acres forms the deer forest of Park, and the 'remainder is under crofters, with the exception of one 'tenant paying over £30 of rent. The farthest back 'rental of Park is that of 1828, though, no doubt, 'there were crofters along the coast in Park previous 'to that date. In 1828 there were eight crofters in 'Shieldinish, fifteen in Eishken. Orinsay was let to a 'Miss Maciver, who is supposed to have had sub-tenants. 'Liemervay and Stiemervay was let to a Roderick 'Nicolson, who was also supposed to have had sub-'tenants; and Park Farm proper was held by Alex-'ander and Archibald Stewart at a rent of £326. The 'Stewarts had this farm for many years previous to '1828. In 1831 there were seven crofters in Shield-'inish, sixteen in Eishken, seventeen in Orinsay, twenty 'in Liemervay, and eight in Stiemervay, and the Stewarts

Stornoway, Lewis. — Alexander Maclennan.

'held the farm of Park. The crofters in Eishken were 'removed in 1843, those in Orinsay and Shieldinish 'in 1838 and Liemervay in 1831,—in all sixty crofters 'that were removed: but this took place previous to 'Sir James Matheson purchasing the estate. It is thus 'impossible to give the destination of the crofters 'removed from Park, but a number of them emigrated. 'Others were sent to Crossbost, in Lochs; 27 were 'sent to Crossbost, which was previously a farm, and 'others were sent to Tong and Tolsta, in the parish of 'Stornoway' [pp. 39–40].

That seems to be a very full account of the number of removals, and of the number of crofters who lived in the townships you have mentioned in former days.

43,974. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—You are a Free Church elder?—Yes.

43,975. Do you know of the crofting townships in the congregational district of Crossbost?—Yes.

43,976. Do you know Cromore?—I know Cromore.

43,977. That is in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

43,978. Do you know how many whole lots are there?—I am not very sure.

43,979. Are most of the crofts sub-divided?—Yes, most of them are.

43,980. Are there more than two families on the most of them?—Yes, three on a great many of them.

43,981. Are there many of them that are undivided?—No, very few.

43,982. Is the number of cottars in Cromore, in your opinion, roughly speaking, as large as the number of crofters in the township?—Fully as large.

43,983. Is it your opinion that if this township and your own had the crofts undivided, and only one family on each croft, the townships could be fairly comfortable?—Yes, they would be in a good position then.

43,984. Supposing the stock of all the cottars in these townships were counted up, would it amount to about as much as the stock of the crofters themselves?—Fully, if not more.

43,985. Now, is there a desire in these townships, even amongst men who are crofters within the meaning of the Act, and who hold only bits of crofts, half crofts or third crofts, that the crofts should be made whole,—that some should go in order that the crofts should be restored to their original size?—Yes, they have that desire, and unless that is done some of them must go away.

43,986. Is it your opinion that they will all disappear unless something is done?—Yes, they are getting more like that every day and falling into poverty.

43,987. Supposing suitable and available lands were found in other parts of the parish, who would go to these lands?—I have in view three classes of men,—first, men who have whole crofts but who do not get the full benefit of their crofts, although they pay for them; next, men who are crofters but who hold only a portion of a croft; and the third class, cottars. In the first place the cottars would leave, and a few that have crofts are thinking that they would be better in Park, and they would gladly leave.

43,988. But is there a desire among those who have full crofts to go to Park?—Yes, and that applies to people who are acquainted with Park, and who are better there than they are at present.

43,989. Do the crofters consider it a hardship to have to pay the rent, however fair it may be, seeing that they do not get the full benefit of the crofts?—Yes, in consequence of the number who are upon the land along with them; but they are quite satisfied with the position in which the Crofters Commission left them.

43,990. Is the complaint, with regard to these, that men who don't pay any rent, either to the estate or to the crofters, have as large a stock as the men who pay rent?—Yes, and they have reason to complain.

43,991. Is sub-division then, in your opinion, a good thing or a bad thing?—Sub-division is not a good thing; but what could be done with poor people? They could not live. The father is obliged to keep his son along with him: 'such pity as a father hath unto his 'children dear.'

43,992. You referred to Crossbost as having the best arable land of all the crofting townships?—Yes.

43,993. Is it as congested as Cromore?—Yes, and more; they are very much crowded at Crossbost.

43,994. Is the congestion in Barnish as serious?—Barnish is in the same position, and it will soon be extinct, unless they will feel sorry for it.

43,995. Is it your opinion that there is enough land in Lochs for all the cottars who have no land at all, and for all the crofters who have only bits of crofts?—It would defy them to get sufficient land; the people who are south of Loch-Erisort would be relieved by the whole available lands in Lochs. [The Chairman.—I think what you mean to say is that there is not enough of suitable land for the townships requiring extension on the south side of Loch-Erisort?—It would satisfy those who are landless on the south of the Loch.]

43,996. But are there not on the north side of Loch Erisort, from Aridh-Bhruthaich to Barnish, as many people and as great a congestion as on the south side?—Yes, quite as many.

43,997. Now, do you know of lands in other parishes of the island that, in your opinion, would be suitable for those in Lochs who could not be relieved by the land in Lochs?—Is Aline attached to the parish of Lochs?

43,998. Yes, but is there land in any other parish?—According to the situation of the island, it is so densely populated that all the people of the parish who have no land would require all the available land in the parish.

43,999. Did you say, at a public meeting last Saturday week, that land was promised to you by the M.P. for the county, and that he broke his promise?—I did not say that he broke his promise; but I may say that every one is working to the best of his ability to give us land, and there is not an M.P. about, better than he is.

44,000. Did you attend a public meeting in Calbost a week last Saturday, with the Rev. Donald Maccallum, E.C. minister in the chair?—Yes.

44,001. Did you not there state, addressing the Chairman, that men were coming and promising the people land and breaking their promises, and did not the Chairman ask you to name any man who did it, and did you not name Mr Weir [Line of examination disallowed].

44,002. You mentioned one farm in the parish of Lochs that has not been brought under the notice of the Royal Commission. You referred to Aline, the farm or forest of Aline?—Yes.

44,003. Do you know that forest?—Yes.

44,004. From Bowglass at Mol-na-Herradh right on to Airidh-Bhruthaich?—Yes.

44,005. Is the quality of the land, in your opinion, equal to the quality of land in the crofting townships of Park?—There is not a bit in Park better than Aline.

44,006. And is it, in your opinion, suitable also in regard to the fishing industry?—It is not very convenient for fishing, except when the herring come up Loch-Seaforth.

44,007. Was there a good fishing in Loch-Seaforth three years ago?—Yes, a very good fishing.

44,008. In fact, it saved the island that season?—Yes, in a great measure.

44,009. Do you know, personally, the inland crofting township in Park deer forest called Stromas?—Yes.

44,010. What kind of crofts would you make there,—would it be fishing crofts, or crofts of a larger size?—Larger crofts. That is a good place, and I would make larger crofts there because it is not convenient to the sea.

44,011. Have you often travelled through the Park deer forest?—I did, when I had liberty, but we have not liberty now.

44,012. How does the grazing of Park deer forest compare with the grazing of the crofting townships on the south side of Loch-Erisort?—The Park grazing is better; the grazing on the south side of Loch-Erisort is eaten up.

44,013. But is the quality of the grazing in Park deer forest naturally superior to the quality of the grazing in ornoway, wis.

exander acIennan.

all the crofting townships on the south side of the loch?—It is naturally better.

44,014. Is the ground in Park deer forest naturally better for stock than the grazings you have?—The greater part of it is very dry. [The Chairman.—Do you mean too dry?—No, it is well watered.]

44,015. There are mountains in Park, and it is better drained?—Yes, there are some good places in Park.

oderick nlayson.

RODERICK FINLAYSON, Maravaig, Lochs, (67). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,016. The Chairman.—Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—It was.

44,017. You had 2 acres of arable land and 2 acres of outrun, with a share in 863 acres of common pasture; the old rent of £2, 1s. was reduced to £1, 6s. by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

44,018. May we take it that you agree with the statements made by MacIennan with regard to your township?—Yes.

44,019. Is there anything special of your own that you would like to tell us?—Nothing, but a little history about Park.

44,020. We have heard very fully about Park already?—That is so, but I resided in Park myself.

44,021. Whereabouts in Park did you reside?—At Bunish, Loch Sealg.

44,022. When did you live there?—I lived there for ten years; I went there as a young boy, when there were six crofters there.

44,023. What became of them?—Some went to America, and others came into the townships of the Lews.

44,024. Were they removed from Bunish?—Yes.

44,025. Who was the landlord at the time?—The Stewarts.

44,026. Do you remember how many years it is since you were removed?—I do not remember.

44,027. Your father would be alive at that time, I suppose?—He was.

44,028. Where did he go to when he left?—He came to Maravaig.

44,029. You had some arable land at Bunish, had you?—Yes, the arable land in that township was very good.

44,030. What rent did your father pay?—I don't know.

44,031. Is it the opinion of the crofters in your township that they would always require to have aid from fishing in order to live on their holdings?—Yes.

44,032. Suppose proposals were made for the removal of some of the crofters of Maravaig, could they leave without assistance?—They would be the better of assistance.

44,033. Mr Forsyth.—What size of croft would you require, if you got one in Park, to be self-supporting without assistance from fishing or labour?—Two or three acres.

44,034. Could you live upon that?—I cannot answer that question. I should like to get assistance from the seas.

44,035. I will put it in another way. How much stock would you need to keep in order to live without assistance from the sea or by labour?—I don't know.

44,036. Then is it a fact that a croft of that kind is not contemplated in Lewis at all, and that the people direct their minds to small crofts which are merely homes, they making their living by fishing or otherwise?—Yes, those who are fishermen are of that opinion.

44,037. Do you know of any crofts in Lewis that are large enough for the men to live on without help of any sort?—No.

44,038. Then the fishing is what you need as your assistance?—Yes.

44,039. Would not the greater part of Park forest be too far from the open sea for fishermen's holdings?—Park is surrounded by the sea, and there are anchorages opposite most of the townships.

44,040. But is there not a great deal of the forest far up the lochs, e.g., up Loch Seaforth and at the head of Loch-Sealg, where new townships would be too far away from the open sea for fishing?—No, they can fish all along Loch Sealg.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Roderick Finlayson.

44,041. Supposing you had a croft at the head of Loch-Seaforth, could you ply your avocation as a fisherman?—Not at the head of Loch-Seaforth.

44,042. Supposing your croft was even further up than the shooting-lodge of Aline, could you work from there to the sea?—I am not acquainted with that side of Park.

44,043. You wish to speak only about Loch-Shell or Loch-Sealg?—Yes, and up from Valamus.

44,044. Mr Maccallum.—Did you try to make any calculation as to the number of townships that formerly existed in the forest?—There were about 34, more or less.

44,045. Could you yourself point out these 34 townships to the Commissioners on the ground?—Yes, so far as I can go.

44,046. But do you know of 34 yourself?—Yes, with the exception of those that are on Loch-Seaforth side, where I am not so well acquainted.

44,047. Did you make any calculation as to the population of these old townships?—I did not make that up.

44,048. Could you give any idea as to the number of families that could be accommodated in the forest of Park as fishermen's crofts?—No, I would require to go over the townships before I could do that.

44,049. Could places be found there for all the cottars in the parish of Lochs?—It would make a very good clearance of all the cottars in the parish of Lochs.

44,050. What would you do with the inland part of the forest, the hill pasture of it?—When we were there we did not get much advantage from the hill-tops, but sheep and cattle could be put there in summer.

44,051. Do you think the whole pasture in Park forest could be advantageously occupied by the crofters who would be settled along the coast?—I am not sure, but they would take possession of it as far as they got orders.

44,052. But could they advantageously occupy the whole pasture?—Yes, all around.

44,053. Their stock could be pastured on the whole of the forest, is that so?—It was occupied in that way before.

44,054. After occupation in that way do you think the sporting value of Park would be destroyed, or would there still remain a sporting value?—I think it would not injure the sport altogether; I saw it in that way formerly.

44,055. When it was occupied as a sheep farm the sport was valuable, was it not?—Yes.

44,056. And do you think it would be quite as valuable under the crofters as it was under the sheep farmer?—I don't know.

44,057. You don't know of any reason why it should not be quite as valuable?—I cannot say.

MURDO MACKENZIE, Cottar, Grabhir, Lochs (43) —examined.

Murdo Mackenzie.

44,058. The Chairman.—I understand you are a cottar?—Yes.

44,059. On whose croft do you live?—On my father's croft.

44,060. Did you build a separate house there?—Yes.

44,061. Is it on the holding or on the common?—On the holding.

44,062. When did you build it?—A few years ago; it is a shoemaker's shop that I have.

44,063. But when did you build the house you occupy?—About six years ago.

44,064. Did you get married then?—I was married before.

44,065. Where were you living before?—I was married the second time; I was along with my good-father in No. 28 Grabhir.

44,066. And now you have a house in your father's holding, and you carry on business as a shoemaker?—Yes.

44,067. Have you a family?—Yes.

44,068. Does your father live on his croft?—Yes.

44,069. Are there any other dwelling-houses besides your father's and your own?—No.

44,070. Do you pay your father a rent?—No.

44,071. Was there not an agreement as to rent between you and him?—No.

44,072. What rent attaches to your father's holding?—He pays 25s. now.

44,073. Is that a rent that was fixed by Commissioner Hosack?—Yes.

44,074. What rent did he pay before?—I think it was 36s. or 40s.

44,075. What is your father's name?—John Mackenzie.

44,076. Have you any land?—No.

44,077. Have you none from your father?—Maybe I get a little, but I have not an inch of my own.

44,078. Are you anxious, if it could be arranged, to leave your father's holding and get a holding elsewhere?—I would be very glad.

44,079. Can you point us to a place where such a holding could be got?—I believe I would not go very far if I could get Oronsay. There are three townships, Crobeg, Oronsay, Stiomrabhagh, and the Shiant Isles, occupied by Roderick Martin.

44,080. What size of holdings would you wish to have?—About the usual going, not less.

44,081. How many acres arable?—I could not say.

44,082. But, if you went to a new holding, I suppose you would still wish to carry on your trade as shoemaker?—Yes, I would try to till the croft too.

44,083. Would you live partly by your trade and partly by your croft?—Yes.

44,084. Could you take such a holding without any assistance?—I would, I think. I know there are poor crofters, but I am as poor as any of them. I know there are some that would require assistance.

44,085. But you think you would not require assistance?—Well, I would chance it. The whole of Park, I think, is good for crofting purposes.

44,086. How many crofters are in Grabhir altogether?—I think there were about forty or forty-one, but the lots were made in 1852.

44,087. How many entire holdings are there in Grabhir at present?—I could not say as to joint-tenants, but there are 44 holdings and 33 cottars and squatters.

44,088. Forty-four people that are tilling land?—Yes, and 33 that have nothing to till.

44,089. But how many crofters' holdings are there?—holdings as originally lotted?—There were 41 originally.

44,090. Have these cottars a good deal of stock?—Not much.

44,091. Some of them have?—Some have a few.

44,092. And does that stock feed on the crofters' ground?—Yes.

44,093. Have they no ground of their own?—No.

44,094. Do these cottars, for the most part, pay a rent either to the crofters or to the estate, or do they pay no rent?—I think they don't pay any rent. [Mr Orrock, Chamberlain of Lewis.—Forty-one is the present number of holdings.]

44,095. These cottars, as I understand, have their houses upon the crofters' holdings?—Yes.

44,096. Then most of the holdings have two houses, I suppose?—Yes.

44,097. Have some of them got three houses?—Yes, I think some have three.

44,098. And, in most of these houses it is married people who are living with families?—Yes.

44,099. Can you give me any idea of the number of children in Grabhir, crofters' children and cottars' children altogether? [Mr Slater.—There is a population of 389 in the township, old and young; these are the figures for 1891.]

44,100. Is there a general desire among the cottars of Grabhir to get additional land?—I think in Stiomrabhagh and Oronsay they wish to get land; they have suffered in gaol for that end. Stornoway, Lewis. — Murdo Mackenzie.

44,101. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Did you ascertain what Mr Sellar got for the shootings when he had Park as a grazing farm?—No, I cannot say.

44,102. Do you know if the sporting tenant gets good grouse shooting on the moor of the crofting townships on the south side of Loch-Erisort?—It is very unlikely that he would.

44,103. Do you know whether the sporting tenant gets as good sport—that is for birds, on the common grazing of the crofters as he does on the deer forest?—I think so.

44,104. So that, in that case, supposing crofters were placed along the sea-coast of Park deer forest, the sport, so far as birds are concerned, would be improved?—Yes, undoubtedly; it would not spoil any kind of sport.

44,105. Do you believe that the rent for sport would be as good, putting it along with the fair rent paid by the people, as the rent presently obtained from the sporting tenant alone?—I think so.

KENNETH MACKAY, Cottar, Calbost, Lochs (58). Kenneth Mackay.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,106. The Chairman.—You are a cottar, I understand?—Yes.

44,107. Whose croft do you live upon?—My father's.

44,108. What is his name?—Malcolm Mackay, No. 7.

44,109. His holding has 2 acres arable, 2 acres outrun, and a share of a common pasture of 1735 acres, divided among the 14 holdings in Calbost. The Calbost crofters have also Eilean-Thorraidh along with the Maravaig people. The old rent of the holding was £2, 6s., reduced by the Crofters Commission to £1, 7s. Do you know how many crofters are in Calbost?—Fourteen.

44,110. How many cottars?—Eighteen.

44,111. Have the cottars stock as well as the crofters?—A little; they have no means of keeping more.

44,112. And they keep it on the crofters' land?—Yes, the few that we have.

44,113. Do the cottars pay any rent?—They are trying to give a little to the crofters, as they can.

44,114. Then, do you give a little to your father?—Yes, I do, as he is bedridden, and 100 years old.

44,115. How much do you give him?—Sometimes 10s., and sometimes £1, just as I can.

44,116. Are you anxious to leave your father's holding if you could get another?—I am.

44,117. Suppose you had the chance of another holding, would the holding you desire be a fisherman's holding, or a holding by which you could live?—A croft that I could fish from, as I have been acquainted with the fishing from my infancy, and I would prefer that now.

44,118. I suppose the same may be said of all the crofters round the Park Forest, that they have been fishermen from their infancy?—That is so.

44,119. Then, do you think it would be preferable that people who required and could get new holdings, should have fishermen's holdings rather than holdings far away from the sea?—In days gone by it was the fishing that kept us alive, and we would gladly take crofts near the sea at present.

44,120. All the crofters at present, I suppose, in that locality, gain part of their livelihood from fishing?—That is so.

44,121. That is the mode of livelihood to which they are accustomed?—Yes.

44,122. Do they depend for their livelihood, for the most part, more upon fishing than upon the crofts?—The fishing is more beneficial; it is the fishing that supports the cottars altogether.

44,123. Are a large number of the crofters and cottars in your district at present on the east coast?—They were all there.

44,124. Is everybody there that can go?—Yes, out of our parish.

44,125. That is the parish of Park?—Yes. [Mr Macrae.—The parish of Lochs is divided into three or four congregational districts, and witness probably alludes to the district of Park.]

44,126. Are a great many of the women away as gutters?—Every one that can go to the east coast.

44,127. Is that the usual course followed by the able-bodied men and women at this time of the year, to go to the east coast in a body?—That applies to both male and female.

RODERICK MACKENZIE, Cottar, Calbost, Lochs (45). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,128. The Chairman. — You are a cottar in Calbost?—Yes.

44,129. Whose croft do you live upon?—I live on No. 4 lot.

44,130. Who is the crofter there?—Norman Mackenzie, my father.

44,131. I see the acreage given in the blue-book is 1 acre, 3 roods, 8 poles arable; 2 roods, 27 poles outrun, share in the common pasture of 1735 acres, and in the island of Torraidh along with Maravaig. The old rent was £3, 11s., and the 'fair rent' is £1, 17s.?—Yes. [Mr Macrae.—I may perhaps mention, with a view to the proper understanding of the position of the township of Calbost, that the Crofters Commission visited a portion of the parish of Lochs in 1888, and all the sub-tenants, who lodged applications at that time, were entered as crofters, while the townships south of Erisort were visited subsequently to the case of Beattie v. Livingston, and, therefore, are not in that position. Therefore, although there are fewer crofters, the number with sub-tenants and cottars is just about the same.]

44,132. How many dwellings are on your father's holding?—Three families, besides my father's; one family and two houses attached.

44,133. How many married couples live on that holding?—Three.

44,134. Are you married?—Yes.

44,135. Then, besides your father and yourself, how many other married people are there?—My sister, who is a widow with children.

44,136. Any one else?—Another brother.

44,137. And is he married?—Yes.

44,138. Have you any children?—Yes.

44,139. Has your sister a family?—Yes.

44,140. And your brother?—Yes.

44,141. So that there are four separate fires in winter?—Yes, or rather three separate fires; my widowed sister lives along with my father.

44,142. How many are in your father's house in winter when they are all at home, including your sister?—Four.

44,143. How many in your home?—Five.

44,144. And how many in your brother's house?—Ten.

44,145. Then there are 19 people living in three dwelling-houses on 2½ acres of land; is that correct?—Yes; there were more than that, but they are gone away.

44,146. How do you all live? Is it mainly by fishing?—Yes.

44,147. And if you got a new holding would it be a fisherman's holding or a small farm you would like?—No matter to me but to get the land.

44,148. Have you in view a holding by which you would live, or a holding where you would depend on the sea mainly?—I would prefer a fisherman's croft, as I was always a fisherman.

44,149. Is your brother a fisherman?—Yes.

44,150. Is he on the east coast just now?—He is fishing in the island at present.

44,151. Is there anybody from the holding at the east coast?—No.

44,152. The rent is 37s., that is less than 2s. each overhead. Is there anything else you would like to tell us?—No. You know our position, and you heard the narrative of the other witnesses.

44,153. And that narrative very fully sets forth what you wish to say?—Yes. [Mr Slater.—I may say that the population of the township in 1891 was 197.]

KENNETH MACKENZIE, Habost—examined.

44,154. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

44,155. Is your father, Murdo Mackenzie?—Yes.

44,156. He is a crofter with 2 acres arable, and 8 acres outrun, and a share of 1933 acres common to 13 holdings, of which the Commission dealt with 12. His former rent was £3, 17s. and his present rent is £2, 5s. Are you a cottar?—No, I live with my father.

44,157. In the same home with him?—Yes.

44,158. Do you carry on any business of your own?—Yes, I am a merchant.

44,159. You have a shop or store?—Yes.

44,160. Is it a sort of grocery store?—Yes.

44,161. How many dwelling-houses are on your father's holding altogether?—Two.

44,162. Your father occupies one, and who occupies the other?—A widowed sister with five children. There are twelve on the holding altogether.

44,163. What is the main source of livelihood for the holding? How does your father live and your sister?—I support myself; my father is getting very old, and I and a brother of mine and a sister support him.

44,164. But, I suppose, the shop is the mainstay of the holding?—Yes.

44,165. How many holdings are there in Habost?—Thirteen.

44,166. And how many cottars are there?—There are 21 families altogether.

44,167. Do the eight cottars live upon the crofters' holdings?—Yes.

44,168. And have they stock of their own?—They have, more or less.

44,169. Their stock lives upon the crofters' common?—Yes.

44,170. And do they pay any rent?—Very little, if any at all.

44,171. The township of Habost is what is called a congested township, I suppose?—Yes.

44,172. And it would be an advantage if holdings elsewhere could be obtained for all these cottars?—Yes, very much.

44,173. But I suppose it is the case that even if the cottars were removed, the crofters would still have to rely upon the sea to some extent for their livelihood?—Some depend on the land and the stock.

44,174. Which of them do so?—There are some of them who do not go to sea at all.

44,175. Give me the name of a crofter in Habost who does not go to sea?—John Macdonald, Habost, but he is a tradesman.

44,176. Does he live in No. 4, Habost?—Yes.

44,177. What kind of trade does he carry on?—He is a weaver.

44,178. He makes tweeds, does he?—Yes.

44,179. Is there anyone else who lives on his holding?—John Macleod, another weaver.

44,180. Is he in No. 11?—Yes.

44,181. John and Murdo Macleod are weavers?—Yes.

44,182. Are there any other weavers in Habost?—My father is a weaver.

44,183. But, excepting those who have trades of their own, shops or weaving, do the crofters depend upon fishing for their livelihood?—Most of them.

44,184. Is there any other trade carried on except the weaving, and your shop, and the fishing?—Some of them make Harris tweed to support them.

44,185. Do you mean weaving?—No, spinning, that is women's work; that is the only other occupation I can mention.

44,186. Mr Forsyth.—Do they keep many boats at Habost?—Very few.

44,187. It is perhaps rather far from the mouth of the loch for fishing?—Yes.

44,188. Then, the kind of fishing that is done is mostly lobster-fishing, is it, or do they go out to sea much?—They do not follow the lobster-fishing, they cannot get lobsters.

44,189. Then is it mostly going to the east coast as hired hands?—Those that are able to go.

44,190. But they have one or two boats there, have they?—There is not one there just now.

44,191. Then you cannot call it a fishing village except in this way, that the men go out to the east coast as hired hands?—Yes.

44,192. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Do you remember Habost having at one time a fleet of fishing boats?—Yes, I do.

44,193. How many boats were there within your recollection?—Four large boats.

44,194. Are there other townships on Loch-Erisort that were once prosecuting the fishing in that way, but do not prosecute the fishing now?—Yes, a good many.

44,195. Name them?—Balallan, Lacsay, Keose, Seilebost, Cearshader and Gearraidh-a'-Bhaird.

44,196. These six townships prosecuted the fishing in your recollection, but had to give it up?—Yes.

44,197. Each of the townships had a fleet of large boats for the herring-fishing?—Yes, I remember them.

44,198. And there is no boat from these townships now?—None going to sea.

44,199. What is that owing to?—The fishing is such a failure.

44,200. And this year it has been a total failure, I suppose?—A total failure.

44,201. The Chairman.—How many years is it since there was a good fishing for these townships?—A good many years ago.

44,202. When was the last good herring fishing?—Two years ago there was good fishing in Stornoway here, but the boats were nearly done about that time.

44,203. They were no use?—No use.

44,204. Is it owing to the continued failure of the fishing that the boats have got into disrepair?—Yes, that is so.

44,205. I mean, of course, in those townships that you have specified?—Yes.

44,206. But, prior to the failure of the fishing, were they in the habit of going to the herring fishing from these townships in large boats?—Yes.

44,207. What keel do you mean by a large boat,—40 feet?—Yes, 40 to 50 feet keel.

44,208. They went away for days at a time?—Yes.

44,209. Or even for weeks?—Yes.

44,210. Mr Forsyth.—Is it not the case that there is a great difference now in the prices given by the curers for herring from the prices given in old times? They do not give so much per cran as they used to?—Not at all.

44,211. Has not that a good deal to do with the stoppage of the fishing from these boats, that they cannot make it pay?—I do not think so.

44,212. Is it then chiefly because the herring is not here?—That is my opinion.

44,213. And, if the herring were here, you think that people would keep boats though the prices were low?—I am certain they would.

44,214. Mr Maccallum.—In order to the successful prosecution of the fishing, do you think it is desirable that the fishermen should have crofts?—By all means, I think they should have crofts.

44,215. Do you think the working of the croft would seriously interfere with the prosecution of the fishing?—Not at all; those that are going to fish would go, and those who got the land would work the land.

44,216. Mr Munro.—Can a crofter who pursues the fishing do justice to both it and his croft?—Not in the case of a large croft, I think.

44,217. Who looks after the crofts when the men go to the east coast to fish?—There is always some one at home, women or girls, and boys, to look after the croft when the man is away.

44,218. In your opinion, then, a crofter cannot cultivate his croft as it ought to be done, and follow the fishing at the same time?—A reasonably-sized croft he could manage, but not a large croft.

Stornoway, Lewis. Kenneth Mackenzie.

44,219. And do you think that any of the crofts in your district are too large for a fisherman?—Not too large; they are all too small.

44,220. The Chairman.—Suppose a man lives partly by a holding and partly by the sea, is it your view that the holding should be of a size that would enable him to give almost his whole time to the sea, or would you have him divide his time, half for the holding and half for the fishing?—Well, if there were plenty of land to be got, I would prefer a pretty large croft, so that the man could work all the year round on his croft.

44,221. And not depend on the fishing?—And not depend on the fishing.

44,222. But suppose, on the other hand, that there is not land, or that the man preers fishing to crofting, would he, in your view, be better with a small holding sufficient for potatoes and so forth, and be in a position to devote all his time to the sea?—If he prefers to follow the sea I would think that a small or ordinary holding would suit him better.

44,223. Such a holding, for instance, as we have in these cases, 2 or 3 acres arable?—Yes, or a little larger to give them any support.

44,224. Mr P. P. Slater, Solicitor, Edinburgh, on behalf of Lady Matheson.—You mean that a fisherman should have a croft of not less than three acres?—Yes, three acres are too little, in my opinion.

44,225. What size of a croft would you give to every fisherman,—how many arable acres do you think a fisherman should have?—I cannot answer that question: I am not a land surveyor.

44,226. You think three acres too small?—In my opinion, it is.

44,227. The Chairman.—Suppose the case of a man who wished to live mainly by the sea, but was to have a croft besides, what size of a croft would you give him?—Two or three acres of a croft, and pasture along with it.

44,228. What stock do you think a fisherman should keep?—As much as he could.

44,229. If he has a croft of three acres, he will keep as much stock as he can winter on three acres?—Yes.

44,230. Mr Slater.—Are there no boats fishing from Loch-Erisort at all,—none from Lacsay, for instance?—None.

44,231. Were there none last year?—Two last year.

44,232. They gave it up this year?—There are none at all this year.

Murdo Macleod.

MURDO MACLEOD, Crofter, Habost (43).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,233. The Chairman.—Is your holding No. 11 Habost?—Yes.

44,234. The tenancy is a joint one, John and Murdo Macleod?—Yes.

44,235. You seem to have 2 acres, 2 roods arable, 16 acres outrun, and a share in 1933 acres common to 13 holdings: the rent was £3, 5s., and is now £2, 4s.?—Yes.

44,236. Are you and your brother weavers?—Yes.

44,237. Is it mainly by weaving that you earn your livelihood?—No.

44,238. How then?—By fishing as well.

44,239. Do you depend mainly upon fishing?—Yes. We put our hand to the three occupations, weaving, fishing, and crofting.

44,240. Having these three strings to your bow, are you able to carry on your undertaking to a profit?—We face the trade that pays us best.

44,241. Is the fishing the best of the three?—Yes, up till now.

44,242. But it is a failure at present?—Yes. I was for 14 years at Peterhead.

44,243. Suppose you had a new holding, a better one than you have, would you like one with which fishing was to be combined, or a holding where you would have to live entirely by the land?—Land that would keep me all the year round.

44,244. Could you point us to any tract of land that would be suitable for that purpose?—The land that my forefathers had in Park: they did very well with their stock there.

44,245. Whereabouts is that?—At Scealadail: I can show you my forefathers' dwellings there.

44,246. What loch is Scealadail on?—On Loch-Seaforth. My great grandfather was removed from there, and my grandfather also was there.

44,247. Mr Munro.—Among your other occupations you say you are a weaver?—Yes, I weave in winter when the weather is bad.

44,248. Where do you get the wool you weave?—From several places: I buy it occasionally.

44,249. If you got land, would you be enabled to raise the wool you require for weaving?—Yes.

44,250. And in that way you could prosecute the weaving to greater advantage?—With double profit.

DONALD MACKAY, Cearshader, Lochs (50) —examined.

44,251. The Chairman.—Whose croft do you live upon?—My stepmother's, No. 11.

44,252. That is Widow Isabella Mackay?—Yes.

44,253. Her holding is 2 acres arable, and 11 acres outrun, with a share of 1959 acres, common to 13 holdings: her old rent of £2 was reduced to £1, 8s.?—Yes.

44,254. Do you live in a separate dwelling from your mother?—Yes.

44,255. And, I suppose, you are a married man?—Married the second time.

44,256. What family have you altogether?—Three alive.

44,257. And how many persons live in your stepmother's house?—My married brother also lives there.

44,258. What family has he?—One child.

44,259. Are there eight persons then on the croft altogether?—Ten; there is another sister.

44,260. And how many dwelling-houses are on the holding?—Two.

44,261. How is the holding mainly sustained,—by fishing, or crofting, or by trade?—My brother lives mostly by fishing, but I gave up the fishing.

44,262. How do you live now?—I am the post-runner from Laxay to our own township, and I get a little for that.

44,263. How much do you get for that?—Three shillings a week, and so I gave up the fishing.

44,264. How many cottars are in Cearshader?—There were 12 lots in 1852 at the allotment time, and there was one added since. There are 20 dwelling-houses altogether.

44,265. There are 12 or 13 holdings, and 7 or 8 separate houses?—Yes. [Mr Slater.—There are 22 separate families, and 103 people altogether in the township.]

44,266. Are there 22 separate dwelling-houses in Cearshader, crofters and cottars?—Not to-day.

44,267. Tell us how many there are as nearly as you can?—Twenty.

44,268. Does any one else live on the holdings, except crofters and cottars?—Only one pauper.

44,269. The cottars have stock of their own, I suppose?—They have a little.

44,270. Their stock graze upon the crofters' land?—Yes.

44,271. Is there a desire in your township of Cearshader to get new holdings?—Yes, with some.

44,272. But is it a general desire, or is it confined to a few?—All the cottars want it, and are very needful of it.

44,273. Does your township subsist mainly by fishing?—No, we are so far inland.

44,274. Then, how is it that you mainly subsist?—There are some who make cloth to sell it, and the little produce that comes out of the croft.

44,275. In how many houses is cloth made?—Six or seven. Stornoway, Lewis.

44,276. Is the wool mainly got from your own sheep, or is it purchased?—They buy the most of it; they have no grazings for their sheep. Donald Mackay.

44,277. Where is the most usual market for the cloth that is made? Is it in the locality, or do you send it further away?—They sell it in Stornoway mostly, to one Donald Maciver, a merchant there.

44,278. Are these sales for cash or for supplies?—More for supplies than for money: sometimes they do not get more than what pays the weaver for it.

44,279. Would it not be better to sell for money and buy your own provisions?—Yes, if we could get that, and if it would pay those that bought the cloth from us.

44,280. Do you ever know how you stand with your sales to the purchaser?—We are always in debt to the merchants.

44,281. And is that a common system in the Lews, that those who make cloth or stuff for sale in Stornoway only dispose of it for supplies and not for cash?—I cannot be sure.

44,282. Mr Forsyth.—Do you say that it is too far from the open sea at Cearshader to keep boats?—There were four boats at one time, but since the failure of the fishing they were obliged to give them up. It is not easy to fish from there in winter, as it is so far inland. It is convenient at other times if we had boats to prosecute the fishing.

44,283. As far as I can make out it is four miles from the sea; I have been there, and I have found it pretty clean and clear. Is there any difficulty in getting a boat in or out?—It would be difficult with high winds ahead; but if we had boats to go, we could go.

44,284. Then, if the fishing became more profitable in future years, you might take to it again, perhaps?—It would be easier for us if we got property to enable us to prosecute the fishing, as the property that we had ran out.

44,285. Mr Munro.—Is the tweed-making a growing industry in the island?—No.

44,286. What is that owing to?—The want of sheep, and at times it is not easy for us to buy wool.

44,287. I suppose you first of all get in debt to the merchant when you obtain the wool from him, is that so?—Yes. This Maciver that I referred to supplies us at times with wool in the first place.

44,288. Then, if you got sufficient land to enable you to keep sheep, would you be independent of the merchant for your wool supplies?—Yes, we might be.

44,289. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Have you any idea what stock Mr Sellar kept on Park when he had it as a grazing?—Over 8000.

44,290. Was that the number of head of sheep of all kinds?—I am not sure of the exact figure, but it was beyond that.

44,291. And did he keep a stock of Highland cattle besides?—Yes, he kept a few Highland cattle as well.

44,292. Do you know what rent he was paying for the grazing?—I am not sure, but I heard his manager say one day that he was getting more for the shooting than he was paying for the grazing.

44,293. All that land which once carried 10,000 sheep and Highland cattle is now devoted exclusively to deer?—It is.

44,294. And there is no stock now?—Very little to-day.

44,295. Mr P. P. Slater, Solicitor, Edinburgh, on behalf of Lady Matheson.—You say that land is now all under deer?—Yes.

44,296. Were not Oronsay, Stiomrabhagh, Shiants, and Seaforth-head all part of Park?—Yes.

44,297. Do you know the extent of Seaforth-head?—No, I do not know the acreage.

44,298. Is it not over 4000 acres?—I cannot say.

44,299. Do you know that there are six crofters on it?—Yes, I know that well.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Donald Mackay.

44,300. They have the whole of Seaforth-head?—Yes, but it is only a small bit.

44,301. You spoke of all that Mr Sellar had as Park Farm, where he kept 10,000 sheep?—Yes.

44,302. But you know that that included Oronsay and Stiomrabhagh and Seaforth-head?—Yes.

44,303. And you know that that is not under deer now?—No, unless they come there without liberty.

44,304. Do you know what stock of sheep Mr Sellar could winter on Seaforth-head?—Not without a little time.

44,305. Do you know that he kept between 300 and 400 head to winter there, and 700 in summer?—Yes, he could winter 300 or 400 there.

44,306. Well, if the six crofters who are there kept the same stock as he had, would they not have plenty of wool for their weaving?—Yes.

44,307. But they are not able to keep that stock at present?—Some of them are able to keep their own share.

44,308. Can you tell us what stock the crofters have on Seaforth-head?—I cannot.

John Maclennan.

JOHN MACLENNAN, Cottar, Balallan, Lochs (37) —examined.

44,309. The Chairman.—I understand you are a cottar, residing at No. 5 Balallan?—Yes.

44,310. Who is the crofter on that holding?—Widow Isabella Mackay.

44,311. And are you her son-in-law?—Yes.

44,312. The area of her croft seems to be 2 acres, 8 poles arable, 6 acres, 1 rood, 12 poles outrun, and a share in a common of 9903 acres, divided between Balallan and Airidh-Bhruthaich in 83 full shares. The old rent of £3 was reduced to £1, 13s. Have you a separate house from your mother-in-law?—Yes.

44,313. How many houses are on the holding?—Two.

44,314. And how many persons?—I have five of a family, and there are four in the other house.

44,315. Do you carry on any trade?—Yes, I am a weaver.

44,316. How many crofters are in Balallan altogether?—About 64.

44,317. And how many cottars?—I think 28 or 30.

44,318. I suppose most of these have stock?—Yes.

44,319. And they all live on the crofters' holdings?—Yes.

44,320. Paying no rent?—Some of them pay rent.

44,321. Have most of the holdings in Balallan more than one dwelling-house?—Yes.

44,322. And some as many as three or four, perhaps?—Some have three, but I don't know any with four.

44,323. What is the population of Balallan? [Mr Slater.—The population is 521.]

44,324. Is there a desire among the crofters and cottars of Balallan to get new holdings?—Yes.

44,325. In your opinion, is there available land near?—Yes.

44,326. In the forest?—Yes.

44,327. Is it moss land, or what kind of land?—Both moss land and good arable land near the shore.

44,328. Is most of the good ground near the shore?—Yes; all along the shore it is good arable ground.

44,329. As you go further into the forest, you get into moss?—It is good grazing ground.

44,330. Yes, but is it capable of growing crops?—Not far into the forest, but along the shore it is.

44,331. Would the persons there be able to remove without assistance?—Yes, a good many.

44,332. Would you yourself?—Yes, I would.

44,333. How do the crofters and cottars of Balallan mostly earn a livelihood?—In different ways.

44,334. In how many houses is weaving carried out?—In five.

44,335. And is spinning carried on in some?—Yes, in some, the women spin the wool before it comes to the weaver.

44,336. Are there a good many who spin in Balallan?—Oh, yes. Stornoway, Lewis.

44,337. What other trades besides spinning and weaving are carried on?—There are tradesmen,—one baker and one blacksmith. John Maclennan.

44,338. Is there a shoemaker?—No.

44,339. Where do they go for their shoes?—To the shops.

44,340. Is there any boat-building?—There are two boat-builders.

44,341. Any other trade?—None that I remember.

44,342. Do they live mainly by fishing, or by their holdings?—Mostly by the holdings.

44,343. How many fishermen are in Balallan?—A few young men go to the east coast as hired men.

44,344. A number are away at the east coast just now?—Yes.

44,345. Are most of the able-bodied men at the east coast at present?—Yes, a good many, but I have seen twice as many, ten years ago.

44,346. Now, does the township depend to a material degree upon fishing, or does it depend mainly upon the stock?—They depend more upon the stock, most of them. Loch Seaforth is very near, and gives great help.

44,347. What help does it give them?—Winter herring.

44,348. It may be depended upon for winter herring?—Yes, but in some years the herrings do not come.

44,349. But they trust a good deal to winter herring fishing in the loch?—Yes.

44,350. If they got new holdings, would it be fishermen's holdings they would like, or small farms?—They would all depend upon the holdings, except when the winter herring come to Loch Seaforth.

44,351. Mr Munro.—Did you hear the evidence which some of the other witnesses gave regarding the weaving and spinning industry of the island?—Yes.

44,352. Is that industry on the increase or the decrease in Balallan?—On the decrease.

44,353. What is the cause of its going back?—They are getting more numerous now, and the merchants who bought the stuff are getting over supplied. They cannot continue after their own wool is done, as they cannot afford to buy other wool.

44,354. I understood you to say that the trade is on the decrease, and yet you say that the spinners are becoming more numerous. How is that?—Because there is more industry, and they will all require to be working at it although it is going back.

44,355. And, I suppose, they make more than they can sell in the market?—Yes, and the manufacturers are selling a good deal of it themselves.

44,356. If the people got more land to enable them to keep sheep, would that help them to increase the trade in tweed?—Yes, undoubtedly they would manufacture their own wool at anyrate.

44,357. And in that way would the tweed industry be a valuable supplementary industry to the crofters of the island?—Yes, much more profitable if they had the wool themselves.

44,358. At present, I suppose, you, like others, have to buy your wool?—That is so.

44,359. Mr Maccallum.—I think you said there were 64 crofters in Balallan?—Yes, about that number.

44,360. How many of them have got whole crofts? Or do you know how many crofters there were originally,—I suppose there has been some sub-division?—As I understand, there would be about 64 whole crofts.

44,361. Then, has there been any sub-division in the township?—There are some of them sub-divided which have two on each lot. It is not easy for me to tell the number of whole lots; I would require a little time to count them up.

44,362. The number of original lots before they were divided?—They have been sub-dividing them ever since I remember, and it has continued downwards until this day.

44,363. Has there been any recent sub-division of crofts?—I am not aware of any during the last few years.

44,364. Do you know whether any were settled there by the estate after the original lotting of the township?—I cannot say.

44,365. Has there been any land taken from the township and added to any other township?—I have heard that the march was altered between Balallan and Aline; I heard that said, and that a piece was thus taken from Balallan.

44,366. Do you know when that was?—I cannot tell, but I know the piece that was taken.

44,367. How is that piece now occupied?—There is nothing upon it now but moor fowl.

44,368. Would it be suitable as an addition to the grazings of Balallan?—It would: it is just at the march.

44,369. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Would you name the places in Park deer forest, on Loch-Seaforth, where people lived at one time, beginning at the head of the loch and going out?—The first place is Ceannamhuir (Big and Little), then Scealadail (Big and Little), and Keose, Stromas, Brunigil, Ceann-na-Carraig.

44,370. Stromas is inland, I think?—It is not adjacent to the shore, but it is the prettiest township in the whole place.

44,371. Can it be seen from the sea?—No, it cannot be seen until it is reached.

44,372. Is the whole of that coast known to you personally?—Yes, every spot of it.

44,373. And do you know the land to the watershed, to the top of the hills in the centre of Park?—Yes, on both sides.

44,374. Do you know any land occupied by crofters to-day in the parish of Lochs better suited for crofter holdings?—No, for two special reasons.

44,375. Please state the two special reasons?—The hill is more suitable for stock than any place that I know occupied by crofters in the parish of Lochs. Then again Loch-Seaforth is a better loch for winter fishing than any loch in the Lews; and that fishing can be prosecuted there without doing any harm to the working of the croft.

44,376. And it can be prosecuted when the weather outside is pretty bad?—Yes, they shoot their nets there in the evening, and leave them there till next morning.

44,377. Then direct your attention to the land on the Aline side. Is that land suitable?—It is; it is similar to the other both in regard to the grazing and also in regard to the hill grazing. The hill grazing is quite as good, and the arable land there is better than the land in Park.

44,378. Do you know Airidh-Bhruthaich?—Yes, I was born and brought up there.

44,379. Are you aware that Airidh-Bhruthaich is a recent crofting township, built on the pasture of Balallan?—That is so.

44,380. Was that place naturally as suitable for crofters' holdings as Aline or Park?—The people that came there first said that it was a most unlikely place to be tilled,—much more so than any place on either side of Loch Seaforth.

44,381. What was the excuse for putting a crofting township on the common pasture of Balallan?—I heard my father and my grandfather, who were the first to go there, say that they were put there as a crew to ferry people across, there being no road at that time. [The Chairman.—It was done, I think, by Mr John Scobie as factor for Sir James Matheson.]

44,382. And they multiplied there?—There were others planted there afterwards.

44,383. And how many holdings are there now?—Sixteen.

44,384. How many families?—Twenty-eight. [Mr Slater.—The population of Airidh-Bhruthaich is 1387.]

44,385. Mr P. P. Slater, Solicitor, Edinburgh, on behalf of Lady Matheson.—You personally have no knowledge of when Airidh-Bhruthaich was formed?—No.

44,386. You talked of a piece of land being taken from Balallan and given to Aline. Do you know that there was a piece of land got for Balallan from the farm of Valtos?—Yes, but they paid the rent when they got it.

Stornoway, Lewis.

John Maclennan.

44,387. You have talked of weaving. When you were answering the questions about weaving, you did not mean that you only weaved your own wool? I suppose you are a general weaver, and take in the spun wool from others and weave it?—Yes, I take in the thread that is made outside.

44,388. And what you mean by saying the weaving is going down, is that it has become less profitable because there are so many now engaged in it?—Yes. It is quite as profitable to the weavers but not to the spinners.

44,389. It is quite as good for you, but worse for the people who produce it?—Yes.

44,390. Then, if there were more weaving going on, it would be still less profitable, would it not?—If they were too numerous it would not be so profitable; but although there were a few more, it would not affect the present weaving.

44,391. But if weaving were more general it would not be so profitable?—No.

44,392. Is it a fact that at present they would be unable to dispose of what they produce if it were not for Mrs Platt buying a great quantity of it?—For the last two years Mrs Platt has not bought much, but previously she bought large quantities.

44,393. When did you go to this croft, No. 3?—Nine years ago.

44,394. And when did you build this separate house?—It was built before I went there, but I enlarged it.

44,395. When did you enlarge it?—About that time, or very soon after.

44,396. You lived with your mother-in-law for a long time, did you not?—No, I went out and in to this house that is alongside.

MALCOLM SMITH, Cottar, Balallan (42)—examined.

Malcolm Smith.

44,397. The Chairman.—Do you live on No. 42 Balallan?—Yes.

44,398. Is that your father's croft, or whose?—My brother's.

44,399. I see it has 2 acres, 2 roods, 7 poles arable, 3 acres, 31 poles outrun, and a share in a common of 9903 acres. The old rent was £3, 6s., and the present rent is £1, 16s. How many houses are on the lot?—Three.

44,400. Your father-in-law, yourself, and your brother?—No; my mother, my brother, and I.

44,401. How many individuals, men, women, and children, are on the holding?—About 13.

44,402. Do you live mainly by the fishing?—No, not to-day, but by labour.

44,403. Do you get labouring work down there?—Sometimes.

44,404. Where do you get it?—Working at houses and other new things that may turn up.

44,405. Do you mean doing work for crofters?—Yes.

44,406. How does your brother make a living?—Just as I do.

44,407. Do you wish to get a new holding?—Yes.

44,408. Could you take a holding without getting assistance?—I would try as far as I could.

44,409. Do the crofters of Balallan depend upon the fishing for a livelihood or upon their stock?—On their stock: there is very little coming from the fishing to-day.

44,410. Then, supposing they had an extension of grazings, could they easily put an additional stock on these grazings?—Some of them could.

44,411. Could you yourself?—Yes, a few.

44,412. What stock have you yourself just now?—I have one cow and 15 or 16 sheep.

44,413. Have you any stirks or heifers?—No.

44,414. Does that stock feed upon the crofters' land?—Yes.

44,415. And you pay no rent?—Yes, I pay the fourth share of my father's rent.

44,416. What part of the croft have you?—I have the fourth part.

44,417. What stock has your father got?—My father is dead.

44,418. Is your mother living?—Yes, she has one cow, but my mother takes nothing to do with the croft; my brother and I work the croft for her.

44,419. What stock has your brother got?—One cow, one three-year old, and two one-year olds.

44,420. And how many sheep?—Eight or nine.

44,421. Is he a cottar also?—No; he is the crofter.

44,422. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—What does Balallan need most,—is it an extension of grazing or the removal of some of the people out of the place?—Some of them to leave for another place.

44,423. Do you believe that if there were only one family for each croft the people would be able to live fairly comfortably?—In some crofts where there is only one family they could live pretty well. [The Chairman.—Would you say that of the minority of the crofts or the majority?—Most of them.]

44,424. Supposing such a number of the people were removed as would leave a full croft for each family that remained, would that make the township fairly comfortable?—Yes.

44,425. What lands do those in Balallan and in Airidh-Bhruthaich look to for relief from the congestion?—Park and Aline: these are the nearest lands to us.

44,426. Are these the lands that every township in the parish looks to for relief?—I think so, including Oronsay and Stiomrabhagh.

REV. DONALD MACCALLUM, Minister of the Parish of Lochs (44)—examined.

44,427. The Chairman.—How long have you been in the parish of Lochs?—For five years.

44,428. Have you a written statement to submit?—Yes.

44,429. We shall be obliged by your reading it.

Statement on lordism and waste lands submitted to the Royal Commission by Donald Maccallum, Minister of Lochs, Lewis.

Before bringing before you the evidence most directly relevant to your inquiry, I wish, with your permission, to make a general statement as to the causes that operated in bringing about the present grievous condition of the great mass of the people in relation to their occupancy of the land. The gist of the evidence I submit to you is that there is a great amount of land waste in this parish, and at the same time that the various townships are greatly congested — that the remedy to which the people look is permission for the cottars to reoccupy every inch of the land in the forests and large farms on equitable terms.

Great evils have necessarily resulted from the fact that land, lake, river, and estuary are appropriated to the sole use, and regulated by the will of a few irresponsible individuals styled by themselves and others as lords.

The right of the people, freely and equitably to use the land and the water, was wholly ignored by the legislature till the Crofters Act recognised it so far as present crofts are concerned. And the principal evils under which the people suffer are directly traceable to the system of absolute lordism that previously prevailed.

Since I became a preacher of the truth, I have endeavoured to find out how my countrymen were situated, what are their rights, in how far have they been deprived of them, the best means of preserving them the rights still left them, and of restoring them those they have lost. In disseminating the truths I have learned regarding the usurpation of the people's rights by the lords, and the people's miserable condition, I have laboured to the utmost capacity of my time, strength, and substance. For some of my words and deeds, at the hands of the powers that be I have suffered much—persecution and imprisonment. I am often denied the common civilities of civilised society. In offering my hand to a brother clergyman I am often repulsed with the taunt 'I shake hands with gentlemen only.' Often by an old acquaintance I have been regarded as thin invisible air.

In regard to the temporal right of the people and the evils of lordism the learned are profoundly ignorant and the unlettered are deeply apathetic. The most exasperating nonsense is often spoken and written on these subjects. The fashion is to glorify lordism as a divinely appointed system of which it would be sacrilege but to speak or write but in praise, lordism being considered beyond criticism. On the question of the people's rights the fashion is to pour forth the most scathing contumely and sarcasm ingenuity can invent, as an ugly monster brought forth by the addled brain of the demagogue.

Every man has a right, natural, and God-given, to the earth and its fulness—its fulness of light, air, and water, of vegetation and fruit, of beast, birds, and fishes, of metals and minerals. A nation, which by its laws and armed forces, deprives its people of their right to a share of the earth and its fulness is using its acumen and its power to hasten its own utter extinction. Certainly there should be land laws, not laws such as ours, whose chief end is to deprive the nation of its land with all its benefits, and to assist those to whom it is given to retain absolute and undisturbed possession of it, but laws such as reason teaches and the word of God approves, whose chief end would be to give every man his own share of the earth and its benefits, and to compel each to make a proper use of his share.

I believe the lords of the Highlands think that I condemn none but the rulers of the land for the grabbing of the land and its benefits by them, and for reducing the people to the condition of a conquered nation. The fact is I consider the people who allowed the land to be grabbed by so-called lords even more guilty than those who grabbed it. The answer which Naboth gave to Ahab when he asked him to give him his vineyard for its value in money, or for a better vineyard, should have been given by our fore-fathers to each lordling who coveted and would take their lands, not for payment nor for better lands, but as their spoil as the conquerors of the people.—'God forbid that we should 'give you the inheritance of our fathers.' There will be no prosperity till the people get the use of the land and water.

The lords who first sold the land had no right to do so, and therefore the lords who bought the land are not the owners thereof. That which a man has no right to sell cannot become the property of the man who buys it. Not only have the lords, who at present possess the land, no right to compensation for restoring the use of it to the people, but the people are entitled to payment from the lords for having so long held possession of their rights—not that the wholesale destruction of life and property, effected by the lords' grabbing and holding the land and its benefits, can ever be compensated.

The people of this nation regard with superstitious awe the possessors of its soil—the lords. They would like liberty to use the land, but they will not take upon themselves to ask but for very little bits — small holdings. They will not be so bold as to ask these but for a very small section—labourers. To show their humility they will promise to pay three times their value for these little bits. That they may not detract from the beauty of the scenery around the castles of their idols, they will only take these little bits in, out of the very corners. In short, they will only ask for little bits of comparatively worthless land, for a few people, if it will be the will and pleasure of the lords of the soil to grant them, on most exorbitant terms. They would like sometimes to reclaim pieces of land from the sea, but they will not take upon themselves to do so without the consent of the lord of the land, who will only grant leave on their binding themselves, and those who will be allowed to inhabit the land after them, to pay to him an enormous yearly tax. The reverence of the people of this nation towards the possessors of the soil, in my estimation, borders on superstition. The people of this nation would like to have leave to climb its mountains, but they fear the lords too much to ask leave to do so but for a few of their number—painters, invalids, and geologists. Of course they will only ask leave for these to climb but at certain stated times of the year, and only a few of the mountains will be scheduled as available for the purpose.

noway, is.

The Highlanders call the land they love—"Tir nan gleann, 's nam beann, 's nan gaisgeach." It is now more properly described as—"Tir na cain, a' mhail, 's nan Sas'-nach." It is not enough for the Highlanders to be the slaves of the lords at home—in the land which was once their fathers'. When their idols continue maltreating them till they must run away with their lives, in the land of their pilgrimage you will find them hiring town-halls where they may glorify their lords without fear, being far from their jurisdiction. On the cards, calling the expatriated Gaels to their yearly chief festival, will be printed this magnificent misnomer—'Tir nan gleann, 'nam beann, 's nan gaisgeach.'

Lordism impoverishes the land. The wealth that is earned on sea and land, instead of being used in rearing the families of those who earn it, is spent in providing luxuries for idle lords. The destitution and the plague which follow in the wake of this usurper lift up their voices against it and condemn it. Lordism devastates the land. The people, weakened and impoverished by landlord exactions are unable to do full justice to the land or the fishing. Owing to the enormous amount of rack rent and violent profits claimed and exacted by the lords for allowing their fellow-men to cultivate the land, through time, the cultivators must starve or give up the struggle. On the face of the deserted villages, once the happy homes of the free and the brave, now lying in silent desolation, we read:—The scourge of lordism has passed over us. I never heard of any creature having a swallowing capacity equal to that of lordism. The cattle and the ears of corn which Pharaoh saw in his dream come nearest to it.

Parliament thinks it has done great things for the Highlands in the new laws it has enacted within recent years. It has not done so much as it thinks. It is better to revoke one bad law than to enact many good ones. The old laws are the old rotten clothes, and the new laws are little pieces of good cloth sewn on the old clothes which make the rent worse. Owing to this being overlooked by Parliament, we have to bear the burdens of two kinds of government—Aristocratic and Democratic, without getting the benefit of either.

Lordism is a curse to the lords themselves. If the lords think it is not as their best friend I would ask the lands devastated by them and held in their possession, to be given to be cultivated and inhabited by the people they are very much mistaken. This is what the prophet declares—'Woe unto them that join house to 'house, and add field to field, till there be no room left, 'that they may live alone in the midst of the earth.' In the deer forests and waste lands held by the lords are there not fields added to fields? To make warm the great hearth of the shooting lodge were there not many made cold? The lords have no reason to thank the ministers, who, in order to enjoy their support and friendship, will not declare the truth in all its fulness.

Lordism only wants time and opportunity to appropriate every right and privilege capable of appropriation possessed by the people. It is not more reasonable and just that all fish found in lake, river, and estuary should be the property of the lords, than that all fish found in loch, sound, and ocean, should be their property. It is not more just and reasonable that men should be imprisoned for catching a salmon than that they should be imprisoned for catching a herring. Let lordism go on unchecked on its conquering career, and this is a sample of what will happen. All the fishing banks in the ocean will be appropriated by it. War vessels will be equipped and appointed to guard them from human poachers. Sea constables, fiscals, and sheriffs, will be appointed and paid enormous salaries—to be provided by the people—to arrest, prosecute, and punish any one who will dare to put a net or hook in loch, sound, or ocean, without the consent of the sea-lords, who will let the fishing-banks to sea-bank farmers for rack rents and violent profits. Just as you will now find landlords calling themselves by the names of parishes, districts, counties, nations, you will find the sea-lords calling themselves by the names of lochs, sounds, bays, seas, oceans. Just as now there are landlords who sign their names—Lochiel, Sutherland, Argyle, Wales, there will be sea-lords who will sign their names—Little Minch, Lochourn, Great Minch, Atlantic Ocean. Both sets of assumed names are equally reasonable or unreasonable. Or, rather, they are equally vain-glorious and audacious. The reason why the lochs, sounds and oceans are not already appropriated by sea-lords and guarded by sea-officials, appointed and paid by the people from inroads by themselves, is that lordism has not yet had time and favourable conditions to flourish and ripen to the full extent of its magnitude and fruitfulness.

Stornoway. Lewis. Rev. Donald Maccallum.

If, in the course of time, lordism will be able to grab them and to hold them in their possession, the light of the sun will be sold for so much per ray, the water for so much per drop, and the air for so much per breath. If these blessings are free it is in spite of lordism. It is quite as just and reasonable that the lords should own the light, the air and the water, as that they should own the soil of this globe. The fact is, the lords have already, to a very great extent, appropriated them. The sun that shines on the faces of the Highland mountains, the breezes that blow around them, the lakes that glitter in their bosoms, the streams that trickle down their rugged sides, the lords own. Just try to partake of yon light, and air, and water, and you will find for your foolhardiness in the prison cell, the faintest light, the poorest water, and the rankest air, measured out to you in very small quantities. We asked leave of the proprietrix of this island to enjoy the sunlight in a walk through the waste lands of Aline, and her factor wrote us to say that her ladyship declined to grant us leave to do so. I have seen the road from crofter townships to the harbour cut across with a trench. I have seen landing-places to their shores blocked with stones.

We do not expect to see lordism abolished, but we hope to see it greatly modified and weakened. I wish to point out to you some of the things we hope to see accomplished even under the kings, commonly called lords. We hope to see the lands laid waste by lord-usurpation and greed, inhabited and cultivated by the sons of those who were cleared off them, and are now confined on the barren rocks of the sea-shore. It is a most disgraceful state of matters that while, in this parish, there are good lands lying uncultivated, there are many landless cottars able and willing to work them for the support of their families. There will be no disputes between the townships of this parish as to who should get possession of the different lands we will point out to you as suitable for cultivation. We have made arrangements by which each township shall apply only for the lands allotted to them by common consent. Generally speaking, each township will apply for the lands from which their fathers were evicted.

If we must always see the rent spent unprofitably on luxurious idleness, we hope to see Government more keenly guarding its exaction. "Fair rent" may be an improvement on "rack rent," but the term "fair rent" is an absurdity, unworthy of the intelligence of this nation. If it means anything definite it is this:—something that will keep the lords in style and luxury becoming their exalted station, and that will make it worth their while paying a factor and his underlings to hold a rent collection twice a year. "Fair rent," means nothing more definite than this—something like the thing. Rent is the amount of money realised on a croft, after deducting the value of the seed sown, of the manure used, of the labour expended on the croft, of the food given to cattle other than what the croft produced, and of the interest of the money invested. Even as things are, a lord who would take the profit of crofts, when there would be a profit, should make up to the crofters the deficiency when their working would entail a loss. In other words, the profit of good years should go to make up the deficiency of bad ones. The profit of the years of plenty should be used in feeding the people during years of famine. I do not know of a more humiliating spectacle than to see a lord, after pocketing and spending the profit of an estate for years, asking the people of the nation to provide his tenants with food when the strict exacting of his rent causes them to be starving. There is a certain lord whom the Highlanders glorify as the most generous of the race, because some old men tell that, in the remote ages of antiquity, an ancestor of his in a year of famine, instead of exacting the rent, gave to his tenants a little meal for making roads around his castle.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Rev. Donald Maccallum.

It may be that the lands we will show you are not so good as the lands of the mainland; yet they are better than the lands at present cultivated by the crofters. It is because that is so that the lords coveted them and cleared them of human beings to make room for their sheep and deer. Though it is quite true that it is not by the produce of the crofts alone the men of Lewis are reared, yet, with the help it gives them, on these crofts are reared men and women, who, in perfection of physical and mental qualities, are not inferior to any at home or abroad. 'Feuch an laodh's na feuch a 'chuid.' Giving the lands we will show you to the Lewismen to be cultivated will be adding considerably to the strength and goodliness of the nation, as well as to the wealth derived from the produce of sea and land.

It will be said that the high rent, which the proprietrix of this island gets for the deer forest, is better for the parish of Lochs than that the people should have the lands of the deer forest for their own use, seeing she gives so much per pound sterling to feed and clothe the hungry and starving. The fact is this—the thing that, in this case, helps to sustain the poor is the very thing that causes their poverty. That is, the laying waste of fertile fields and fruitful valleys in order to get exorbitant rents for them. The lords, in clearing the people off the best lands to convert them into slaughter fields for the art and practice of artistic killing of beast and birds, pauperises the people. When the poor law compels the lords to contribute so much for the support of the poor, they will say to the world—'See and bear 'witness for us. If we cannot get high rents for our 'deer forests we cannot support the poor. Let the nation 'support them or let them starve. The addled-brained 'agitators who hold that deer forests should be abolished 'must admit that they wish the people to starve.' In this lordism is a great house-breaker and cattle-lifter who, after taking away everything the people possessed, comes back with a few bolls of meal, a few shirts and blankets, and calls all men to witness that it is the greatest benefactor of the race—that, without its assistance, the people would starve with cold and hunger—that it is the duty of all men to support and strengthen lordism.

(Signed) DONALD MACCALLUM.

44,430. That is the written statement which I have prepared for the Commission, embodying, as I take it, more or less, the aspirations of the people. It may be strong language that I use; it is not stronger than I feel. I thank the Commission for listening to my paper, and I hope that they will see it embodied in the report which they will present.

44,431. Mr Forsyth.—I see that your opinion, so far as I can gather from your statement, is that, to begin with, at least, it would be desirable to give the crofters the whole land on the island which is not occupied by them at present; is that so?—No, I would not take the Home Farm, for instance; I would leave to the proprietor or proprietrix of the island what would be a reasonable amount of land for a home farm; and small farms I would not at all think of breaking up.

44,432. There are not many small farms?—Not many.

44,433. Speaking generally, you have to deal with a very large number of crofters, and with several large farms, and two or three deer forests,—is that, roughly speaking, the state of matters in the island?—Yes. The deer forests are those of Aline and Park, and the small forest of Arnish.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Rev. Donald Maccallum.

44,434. Then, do you think that, assuming that were done, it would relieve the congestion of the Lews?—Oh no, but it would go a good way.

44,435. The evidence we have got from the various delegates to-day rather points to crofts handy to harbours for fishing, as their idea of what is most suitable for them. Is that not the case?—Yes, that is the case.

44,436. They do not seem, so far, to have a great idea of what we have heard so much of in the mainland,—the small farm or large self-sustaining croft?—I believe that the limited amount of land available in the Lews explains why they don't look so much to large farms; the land is so very limited, compared with the number of people, that they intuitively see that it would be absurd that they should ask for a large piece for each.

44,437. Simply because they are not to be had?—They are not to be had.

44,438. And the amount of arable land, I think I am correct in saying, is very small compared to the rough black hill grazing?—Very small.

44,439. And also that it is broken stony land, which almost requires to be cultivated in lazy-beds, even where it is not deep peat moss?—That is so.

44,440. Then, naturally, the people turn to fishermen's holdings?—Yes.

44,441. Assuming that to be the case, have you any remedy to suggest for this great population, seeing that the land would not carry them all?—What I would suggest would be to use the land not at present cultivated, by giving it to cottars so far as it would go; and what would become of the rest would be a subsequent question. I believe that, in a number of years hence, the young men will leave the island of their own accord. Education now is very much more advanced than it was a few years ago, and I find that lads, up to twenty years of age, leave more readily than men above that age. I quite believe that continuing to give them good education would of itself work out the problem. They will not take kindly to emigration so long as they see lands here to which they look.

44,442. You think, then, that the time may come when there will be a turning-point in the increase of population?—Yes, I am very strongly of that opinion.

44,443. But you think that would not happen until the whole lands available in the island were occupied?—Well, I believe that education would open up a way for them, but they would not so readily take it so long as they see the land unoccupied; that would be an obstacle in the way. But I quite believe that, even although the land was not all given, they would in process of time go away.

44,444. And do you think the interval of time from now onward, until the people learnt that the surplus population must move, could be tided over without disaster?—I think so, by giving them the lands now. That is my opinion.

44,445. Would not one or two more seasons of bad herring fishing and low prices be a very serious tax on their resources?—Yes, certainly.

44,446. I presume you do not consider that their condition is at present very satisfactory?—It is far from being satisfactory.

44,447. They have great difficulty in making ends meet, owing to the partial failure of the herring fishing and the low prices for stock?—Yes.

44,448. But, with reference to the evil (if it be an evil, and I think we must agree that it is) of a large population and small means, you have no anticipation that that would increase so much as to become unbearable during the next few years?—No, if Government were to take steps to give them this land, it would make them more willing to do the best they could themselves.

44,449. A great part of this land is far away from sea and harbour,—you will know that, of course, from your knowledge of the country?—Yes.

44,450. And, assuming that fishermen's holdings convenient to a harbour for the open sea were provided, it would supply a very large number, would it?—No, it would not supply a great number.

44,451. Then you are looking rather to the moral effect which would be produced, when all has been done which could reasonably be done?—Exactly; I put very great stress on that.

44,452. And the people having seen that, would they begin to turn their eyes to other sources of livelihood outside the island?—That is my strong belief.

44,453. Mr Munro.—How long have you lived in the island?—Five years.

44,454. And, during that time, I take it that you have become thoroughly familiar with the wants and wishes of the people?—As thoroughly as I could; I have always tried to find out their desires.

44,455. So far as your experience goes, is there really what is called a 'land-hunger' in the islands?—Not to the extent of desiring to own the crofts and live by them, but to the extent of wishing a holding that would help them in the fishing. They wish to have enough land to keep them going during the time when they are not fishing, and to provide their families with milk and other necessaries for the bringing up of their children.

44,456. Do I understand you to mean that they would elect to follow the fishing as a staple industry, and have a lot of land merely to supplement their income from the fishing?—That is so.

44,457. The population of Lewis is close upon 30,000, is it not?—I believe so.

44,458. Now, supposing that the whole island of Lewis were divided according to your ideas of division, would there be sufficient to sustain that population on the island?—Oh, no, not at all; but it would assist a great many in the way of giving them little crofts to help them as fishermen. It would go a long way, but not all the way.

44,459. Then, is it your view, with all your kindly feelings towards the crofters, that their only remedy, to a certain extent, lies in the direction of emigration?—Voluntary emigration. The remedy is, in my opinion, to equip them with education and prosperity, so far as they can be made prosperous.

44,460. Either emigration or migration?—I do not think migration is practicable.

44,461. But you are perfectly clear that the island could not maintain the present population comfortably?—Not comfortably.

44,462. In your paper I observed that you made some reference to what is called a 'fair rent'?—Yes.

44,463. And I understood you rather to deprecate what is called 'fair rent,' according to the modern definition of that term; am I right in that?—It is a tautological term; 'rent' alone is the word. What is not a fair rent is an immoral exaction,—an impossibility, in fact, for any man to exact in name of law.

44,464. On what principle then would you arrange that rents should be exacted from crofters?—By the sworn evidence of the crofters as to the amount of seed used, and the value of the seed sown, and the amount of labour expended, and as to the profit realised. Deducting the cost from the profit, I would call the difference rent.

44,465. Does that mean the establishment of another kind of Law Court?—Oh, no. I would instruct —that is to say supposing I had authority to do so,—I would instruct the Crofters Commission to ask the people what they spent in providing seed and manure, and how much they should be paid in daily wages for working the croft; and then I would ask them what was the profit of the croft; and I would deduct what they spent from what they realised.

44,466. Does that involve any change in the existing machinery for fixing rent?—No. But I would not at all like it to be thought that I find fault with the rent laid on the crofters; I wish to guard against that being thought. Although, theoretically, I hold rent to be what I have defined, I do not say so to find fault with the amount of rent laid on crofters; but I say that this is the proper way of finding it out.

44,467. But I suppose you come here to-day to say that there is plenty land in the island that would go to a large extent to modify the existing conditions of the crofters?—Oh, yes, that is so.

44,468. You could give no rough idea of the extent of it?—No.

44,469. The Chairman.—I gather from the views you have expressed, that if holdings were formed in the Lews which might be called self-sustaining holdings, these would not be readily taken up by Lewis crofters?—No, they would block the way: there is not sufficient room for that class of holding.

44,470. And probably you are also of opinion that the Lewsman is not a man who would readily take to such a holding?—That is my opinion.

44,471. Are you of opinion that considerable tracts of the land in the Lews are not capable of cultivation to profit by anybody?—Yes, I have no doubt of it.

44,472. Large tracts of moss land?—Deep moss.

44,473. Deep moss, and peat hags, and stoney lands that are utterly incapable of cultivation to profit?—Yes, that is so.

44,474. Or even being used for grazing purposes?—I do not think there is much of it but what could be realised for grazing purposes.

44,475. But there is some of it of very little value even for that?—Yes.

44,476. You spoke of migration. Suppose the Lewisman came to be satisfied that everything had been done that could be done within the limits of the island, would he not be disposed, if facilities were afforded, to migrate to any other land?—It was not from the Lewsman's point of view that I answered the question in the way I did, but rather from the mainlander's point of view, for I think that if the people on the mainland were dispersed over the land, there would be little enough for themselves.

44,477. And do you think the mainlander would be disposed to object to the settling of the Lewsman near him?—I don't know if he would object, but I think he would require all the land for himself.

44,478. Any available land there, could be occupied by himself?—I believe so.

44,479. Then, in the case of the Lewsmen being satisfied that everything had been done that could be done within the limits of the island, would they be disposed to emigrate if facilities were afforded?—I think the emigration would go on itself, perhaps imperceptibly: it would not be a conscious action on the part of the people, but it would work that way.

44,480. With the aid of education and the expansion of their ideas?—Yes.

44,481. But, I suppose, if Lewsmen were willing now, and you had the necessary authority and resources, you would propose emigration to them now?—Oh, no, I would not.

44,482. You would rather wait till they see what can be done for the island?—Yes, most decidedly.

44,483. At the same time, I take it that you look to emigration as one of the ultimate means by which relief could be afforded to the island?—Oh, yes.

44,484. Mr Forsyth asked you an important question in relation to the interval that would elapse between the present time, and such period as we are now pointing at. Are you quite clear that no serious disaster would ensue to the island during that interval?—I believe no serious disaster would result.

44,485. Because we have had a good deal of evidence both before this Commission and before the Crofters Commission, as to the congested state of a great number of townships in the island?—Yes, and so far as I could understand, you heard it at its worst. I don't think you need take it to be worse.

44,486. But what we have heard is, I think you will agree, pretty bad?—Yes.

44,487. I suppose we may take it that but for the money which is spent among Reserve men in Lews from year to year, their condition would be even much worse than it is?—That may be so: but I don't think the Reserve works in the end to their good at all.

44,488. I am not suggesting any opinion about that;

Stornoway, Lewis.

Rev. Donald Maccallum.

but I mean that the immediate income of money to the men is useful to them?—Oh, yes.

44,489. It provides them with cash so far as it goes?—Yes, but it keeps them waiting on it for the year with little else to do. They look to that to keep them, and my opinion is that it is not a good thing for the Lews on the whole.

44,490. You do not think it is a beneficial mode of assistance?—No.

44,491. Mr P. P. Slater, Solicitor, Edinburgh, on behalf of Lady Matheson.—Your statement was one of a very general character, I think, and did not deal particularly with the island of Lewis?—No, it did not refer more particularly to Lewis than to the mainland.

44,492. It did not seem to refer particularly to the Lews at all?—No; not more particularly than to the mainland.

44,493. At any rate I hope you have suffered no persecution in the island here?—No, I did not mean that.

44,494. I may take it that it is quite clear that since you came to this island you have been at perfect liberty to act as you chose?—Yes.

44,495. What struck me in regard to your statement was that when we did come, after the written statement, to particulars, they were in reality of a very general kind. You have not, I think, a very clear idea of Lochs,—I take it you speak more particularly for Lochs?—I represent the parish of Lochs here.

44,496. Do you have any idea of the acreage of Lochs?—No.

44,497. Do you have any idea of the proportion of that acreage that is under crofts, and the proportion under deer forest and farms?—No.

44,498. Then, does it not appear to you that it is putting it rather strong to say there is plenty of good land for a large increase of crofts?—Well, I would not emphasize the 'large,' considering the number of landless people in Lochs.

44,499. I can give you the particulars of the acreage and the rental, and perhaps it may tend to modify your opinions somewhat. I don't know whether you are aware of the rental at the present moment?—No.

44,500. Well, there is a total population in Lochs of 4700 souls, according to the last census. There is a total rental of £3622, so that at the present moment, supposing the crofters had the whole land at the present rental, it would mean paying 15s. per head in Lochs?—Yes.

44,501. Do you think that at 15s. per head of population the land in Lochs could possibly sustain the inhabitants?—But there is also the shooting. People do not live by what they pay but by what they earn.

44,502. That is inclusive of the shooting rental. I include not only the rent of Lady Matheson but the rent of other properties in Lochs. The details are:—

Crofting rents,	£931
Farm rent,	140
Sporting rent,	2,288
	£3359
and other proprietors of whom you form one in virtue of your glebe,	263
	£3622

—No, I am not a proprietor. I object to be called a proprietor on account of my glebe, for I have not the privileges of a proprietor.

44,503. Take it any way you like. Do you think that if the whole of that rental, including your common, were all thrown in and given to the crofters, 15s. per head of population could possibly support any increase of crofts? Do you think it is a possibility for life to be sustained with advantage either to the parties living there or to the community at large, the nation?—But do you take into account the fishing at all?

44,504. I am taking the land rental as one thing to fix the idea how many people can live in a certain locality?—That is not the way to look at it. Tell me what they earn.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Rev. Donald Maccallum.

44,505. Well, we shall not argue that point, but I will take you over some other ground. If you go into this question of increasing crofts, have you any idea how many new townships you would form?—About 30, I daresay.

44,506. Do you know how many new schools that would imply? Would it be a matter of from 10 to 20 schools?—Oh, no, not at all; very few. The new townships could be near each other in many cases. In many cases the existing schools would be available.

44,507. There are 12 schools in Lochs already?—Yes.

44,508. And if you are to set up 30 new townships in this very large district, would not that imply at least half a dozen new schools?—I think not: I should say three would do, but that is a mere guess.

44,509. Well, if you had only three schools, I am afraid some of the children would be unable to travel the necessary distance. But would not that be a cost that could not well be borne by the present rental?—It would be no cost at all to educate and rear the children for it would be adding to the strength of the parish.

44,510. Do you know what it costs at present to educate the children of Lochs?—If you go on that ground, you could argue that Balallan should not exist at all because it has to keep a school.

44,511. I am not making any arguments at all, you mistake me: I merely state facts, and ask your opinion about them?—My opinion is that it would be a very proper thing to have a school for them, and the more schools the better.

44,512. Have you any idea what it costs at present to educate the children of Lochs?—No.

44,513. Would you be surprised to learn that there will be a deficit of about £1300 to get from Government this year?—I daresay that may be so.

44,514. And would you be surprised to learn that the whole of the rates received by the School Board from the parish of Lochs amount to only £75?—But there are questions within questions. One of the reasons why the rates are so high and the Government grant low is owing to the epidemics that are constantly raging in these townships, whereby the attendance is very much reduced.

44,515. The attendance is just a little over 70 per cent.?—That is very low; much lower than it should be.

44,516. Perhaps it is; but considering that the Government (rightly, as I believe) expends on the poor districts a matter of some £1500 or £1800 a year on education in Lochs, could you ever face the possibility of the parish being able to do that itself?—Oh, yes.

44,517. Out of a rental of £3600?—The rates would not be so high.

44,518. But they could not be lower than they are at present,—6d. per £?—Eliminate the epidemics.

44,519. At present the rates are only 6d. per £?—Yes, I know.

44,520. Could you have them lower in Lochs? Have they not been up as far as 4s. 6d.?—But Government pays the rest, you know.

44,521. It is all very well to look to Government, but it must be kept in view that an increase of the crofting area would result in an increase in the cost of schools?—Assuredly.

44,522. And Government alone has to look to that?—Well, no, the children grow up to make the nation.

44,523. Undoubtedly, but they do not grow less, they always grow more. [The Chairman].—Is what you look to then a perpetual Government grant?—Not at all. I quite believe that after the sun of prosperity shall have begun to shine upon the island the people will be able to pay the rates themselves.

44,524. My question did not refer to the matter of perpetual grants, but to the interval between the present state of matters, and the attainment of a good situation in Lochs. What period do you look forward to as likely to elapse between now and that future noway, is.

Donald callum.

time? Have you formed any idea in your own mind? —No, I have not.

44,525. Would it take a generation, do you think? —Perhaps it might: I don't think it would take more.

44,526. And, in the meantime, you think there is room in Lochs for the population to go on increasing during the next generation?—No, I don't; I explained my views on that point already. I believe that there would be a regular flow of people out of the island, educated people who could make their way in the world; and giving them the land would, I think, open up the way for the people to leave the island of their own accord.

44,527. You think that, in the interval, people would gradually dropping off?—I am certain of it. [The Chairman.—Are they dropping off just now?—Yes, the Chairman lads are.]

44,528. The population, as a matter of fact, is increasing, and is more since the census of 1891, I think?—Yes.

44,529. Well, even assuming that they were not so, and that the population would be stationary during that interval of a generation, do you think that if they got the forests of Park, Aline, and Arnish, and the small farm of Stiomrabhagh, they would be able to pay the same rent as at present?—That would depend upon the produce, according to my definition of rent.

44,530. But accepting your definition of rent, do you think the land, if given to crofters, would return anything like the present rental of Lochs?—No, but the shooting rental would go along with it.

44,531. But it is all put in here in the rental I have quoted. Do you look forward to the prospect of increasing your rates, parochial and otherwise, if you decrease your rental?—No.

44,532. The rates are at present, as you know, very high: I think you will bear me out in saying that the rates, taking them all over in Lochs, are 8s. 4d. per £; falling between landlord and tenant. Do you not think that is already an excessive rate?—It is.

44,533. And that, if there is any decrease in the rental, the rate per £ must go up?—But pauperism would decrease.

44,534. You think pauperism would decrease with the increase of population?—No, but with the giving of the land.

44,535. You think so?—I am certain of it.

44,536. And are you still of opinion, after these explanations about actual figures, that it would be a judicious thing to give more land to the people at the rate of 15s. per head of population?—But you see I do not admit that that is the proper rate, as it has not been placed before me, nor that that is a proper way of considering the question.

44,537. I think you may accept it from me that that is the proper amount?—Well, I daresay it is not very far wrong; but I cannot say.

44,538. Do you think it would be judicious to increase the population at that rent?—This would not be increasing the population at all: it would decrease the population. They increase in their present circumstances much more than they would then. They are too poor at present to go away.

44,539. That just brings me to the point I was coming to. You spoke of emigration, but you are not, I think, very clear as to the point when emigration would take place in a voluntary way. You put it that they would first have to be equipped with education and prosperity?—Yes.

44,540. I understand your equipping them with education, but I confess I am a little at sea as to the meaning of equipping them with prosperity?—I mean that they would prosper when they would have the land.

44,541. Do you mean that at present the people are too poor to emigrate?—Well, yes.

44,542. And you think that, with education, they would be able to make a little more money?—Yes.

44,543. Your statement was, as I have said, of a very general nature, but you talked of 'fertile fields and fruitful valleys.' Has that any reference to the Lews? —I do not exclude the Lews.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Rev. Donald Maccallum.

44,544. Well, could you give us an instance in Lochs where we could find 'fertile fields and fruitful valleys' on which to place more crofters?—Yes, I can.

44,545. I shall be glad to hear it.—There is Ceannamhuir and several other townships mentioned by crofter witnesses. I don't see why the time of the Commission should be taken up by my mentioning them.

44,546. My reason for that question is that I believe that Park was, to a large extent, a forest from time immemorial, until it became a sheep farm. Is not that the case,—that Park has been a forest or a sheep farm from time immemorial?—Not at all; it was under crofters.

44,547. Is it not the case that a great many of these places which are called townships were merely shepherds' houses, used for looking after the sheep, and that these shepherds would often increase in the same way as crofters?—I deny that these townships were shepherds' houses. I deny that they were keepers' houses.

44,548. Well, we will leave that matter alone. Can you give us any estimate of the number of families you would place in Park?—I think I have answered that question already.

44,549. No, you have not; excuse me. When a man talks in the way you have done about placing crofters on the land, I should like to have his idea, if he has an idea in his own mind, how many acres there are?—I could not say how many. But as to your question whether I speak of the Lews when I say 'fertile fields' and fruitful valleys,' I say I do include the Lews, and I mention Ceannamhuir, Brunigil, Scealadail, Stromas, Valamus, Oronsay, Stiomrabhagh, and many others which I could name.

44,550. Well, I leave it to be judged by the Commission whether these are suitable places. But taking it in the rough, and summing up your evidence, may I take it that you have formed no idea as to the statistics of this question at all?—Not particularly.

44,551. But generally?—I did generally.

44,552. Well, generally, give us your idea. [The Chairman.—I think the witness has given as much evidence on that point as he is able to give.]

44,553. But the summing up of his evidence is that he has no statistics to go upon? [The Chairman.—That is your comment on his evidence.]

44,554. But I ask him if he knows how many acres there are available? Witness.—No, I do not, but I say that there are fertile fields and fertile valleys capable of sustaining many crofters.

44,555. That is a matter of opinion; but you do not know how many arable acres there ever have been in Park Forest?—No.

44,556. And you do not know how many arable acres the crofters possess?—No. But that information is contained in the books you have before you. If I had known you wanted that information from me I would have made an effort to find it out.

44,557. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Reference has been made to the question of education. Is it a matter, within your knowledge, that the prevalence of epidemics has seriously reduced the grant-earning capacity of the schools of Lochs?—Yes, that is so.

44,558. Is there any one school in particular which has been seriously and periodically afflicted with epidemics?—Yes, the school at Barnish.

44,559. Who is the teacher there?—Mr Wood.

44,560. Has he been in Lochs for a number of years? —Yes.

44,561. And what has he to say with regard to the prevalence of epidemic?—He says that, unless the township is better looked after, it will soon be extinct.

44,562. Have you heard him discussing the matter, and mentioning the fact that, every year since he has come, the school has had to be closed for a considerable period because of a prevailing epidemic?—Yes and I believe there is an epidemic there at the present time. [The Chairman.—A fever epidemic?—Yes, scarlet

Stornoway, Lewis.

Rev. Donald Maccallum.

fever]. [Mr Slater.—Is that in the spring time or all through the year?—All through the year.]

44,563. What, in your opinion, is that perennial epidemic caused by?—By overcrowding, and the houses not being in a sanitary condition.

44,564. And the removal of a number of families to the lands you referred to would so far relieve the congestion and remove the cause of the epidemic?—It would go a long way towards that.

44,565. Then a good deal has been said about emigration. But is it your opinion that even although the Government came and offered liberal assistance to emigrants, the people of Lewis would not take to that for the reason that they could not believe that it was meant for their good, seeing that lands at home which they considered suitable were refused?—I would not say they would assert that the Government consciously did that.

44,566. They don't blame the Government?—No.

44,567. But is this, in your opinion, the reason why the emigration scheme was not accepted?—Yes: they see the land at home.

44,568. You believe that the first thing to be done is to give all the land in the island to the people?—Decidedly.

44,569. And you think that, if that is done, a considerable number of them will accept assisted emigration?—Yes, I quite believe it.

44,570. But not till then?—No, not till then.

44,571. The Chairman.—In fact, your policy would be one which, in your judgment, would have the effect of gradually reducing the population of the Lews by the very extension of townships?—Exactly. That is my policy.

44,572. Relieving the congested holdings, affording accommodation for a certain number of new holdings, and when the people saw there were no more new holdings to be got, thereby inducing them the more willingly to leave the island?—That is decidedly my opinion.

44,573. And in your view such a policy, if carried out, would, before many years had run, greatly reduce the population of the island?—Yes.

44,574. I ought perhaps to call your attention to a letter which the Secretary has put into my hands dated 'Crossbost, Lochs, 28th May 1894. Sir,—The 'cottars of the township of Crossbost earnestly desire 'to bring before the notice of the Commission that 'they wish to be removed to Oronsay in Park, Lewis, 'where our fathers were cruelly treated before and sent 'off. We, the undernamed, have also suffered for the 'above noted place. We hope it is now in the hands 'of a law that will give us it. We recommend Rev. D. 'Maccallum, E.C. Minister, Keose, Lochs, Stornoway, 'N.B., to stand on our behalf before the Royal Com-'mission.' Do you wish to add anything in reference to this letter?—No, except that I hope to see the prayer of it granted. And also that, as I have said in the written statement, there would be no disputes in the parish as to who should occupy the lands: arrangements have been made in each township which would avoid any dispute, and the crofters of each township would apply for a particular piece of land. Oronsay is the township which we arranged should be given to the cottars of Crossbost.

John Graham.

JOHN GRAHAM, Five-Penny, Borve (56).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,575. The Chairman.—What is the number of your lot in Borve?—No. 12.

44,576. Are you in Fivepenny Borve?—Yes.

44,577. The area of the holding is 4 acres, 1 rood, and 24 poles arable; 1 rood and 22 poles outrun, and one seventy-fifth share of a common extending to 4786 acres; also share in Galson Moor, extending to 6936 acres common to 485 crofters; the former rent was £2, 3s., and the present rent is £1, 5s. How many crofters are in Borve?—There are 49 who have a number.

44,578. And how many have no number?—Seventeen. Stornoway, Lewis.

44,579. Do you know Mid-Borve?—Yes.

44,580. How many are there with a number?—Eight or nine. John Graham.

44,581. And how many cottars?—Seven, or so.

44,582. How many dwelling-houses are on the holding you occupy?—One only; it is little enough for myself.

44,583. Is it a common thing to have more than one dwelling-house on a croft in the township of Fivepenny Borve?—It is.

44,584. Are there sometimes as many as three dwelling-houses on the one holding?—No, not three, but two are common.

44,585. Is there a desire in your township for additional land?—Yes.

44,586. Can you say where such land might be obtainable?—Yes, that I can.

44,587. Where?—Out on Galson South Farm, where my forefathers were reared.

44,588. Was the land that is now in Galson formerly in townships?—Yes, from time immemorial.

44,589. What are the names of the townships once on what is called Galson Farm?—Balmeanach, Melbost, and another small township that was placed above the square,—they called it Balure or Newton. There were eight houses there originally.

44,590. Any others?—North Galson; that is all that I know of.

44,591. Was a part of what used to be Galson Farm added to the crofters some years ago?—Balmeanach was given to the Ballard crofters. [Mr Slater.—To Mid-Borve.]

44,592. Any other portion?—No.

44,593. Is the grazing land of Galson suitable for occupation by crofters?—It is suitable enough.

44,594. Would a great number of the Borve crofters be ready to take holdings there without assistance?—Yes.

44,595. Were you appointed as a delegate at a public meeting?—Yes.

44,596. And you represent the views of the township of Fivepenny Borve?—Yes.

44,597. Has the obtaining of additional land been a frequent subject of discussion among yourselves?—Yes, indeed.

44,598. For a number of years?—Yes.

44,599. And does great anxiety prevail in your township on that question?—Yes. There is suitable enough land there for them: it was taken from them against their wills.

44,600. Do you know another farm to the north of Galson,—the farm of Dell?—Yes, it is a small farm.

44,601. Who holds Dell?—One Murdo Macfarquhar.

44,602. Do you know what rent he pays?—No, I do not know.

44,603. Has the attention of the crofters of Borve not been directed to it at all?—No, they have plenty beside themselves if they could get it.

44,604. At Galson?—Yes.

44,605. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—How far does the farm of Galson extend along the road to Ness?—Four miles.

44,606. And is the whole of that extent suitable land for new holdings on both sides of the road?—Not the whole length; but there are over two miles suitable enough.

44,607. Is there a sufficient population of cottars in your parish to take up all the available land there?—Yes, and more.

44,608. Mr P. P. Slater, Solicitor, Edinburgh, on behalf of Lady Matheson.—Were you an applicant for an enlargement of holding in Galson?—Yes, I was one of them.

44,609. And was the enlargement refused by the Crofters Commission?—It was; but it was quite likely that we were to get it until the Commissioners went into dinner with Mr Helm. I accompanied them through the land, and their talk conveyed to me that we were going to get it as an addition to our crofts.

44,610. It was not contiguous to the holdings?—Perhaps not. I am not done yet.

44,611. The Chairman.—What else would you like to say?—I was born and brought up in North Galson, and we were sent away against our will, every one of us.

44,612. Who sent you away?—Thomas Macdonald was the ground officer, and the late Mr Donald Munro was the factor.

ROBERT SAUNDERS, 30 Fivepenny Borve (67). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,613. The Chairman.—Your holding appears to have 6 acres, 38 poles arable, 3 roods outrun, and a share in a common of 4786 acres. The old rent was £4, 14s. 9d., and the present rent is £3, 2s. How many dwelling-houses are on your holding?—Only one.

44,614. Are you anxious to get additional land from Galson Farm?—Yes. I have two sons, and one of them has a bothy outside the dyke, but I gave him a share of my croft. He is on the common.

44,615. The rent of Galson Farm is £165, 13s., and the rent of Delve is £68. Do you agree with the evidence you heard from Graham?—Yes. [Mr Slater.—The population of Fivepenny Borve is 357.] We are waiting for this extra land. There is a large number of poor people in the township, many of whom have no meal from the croft to-day, not a pound.

44,616. They buy all their meal?—Yes: I buy sometimes 18 bolls in the year.

44,617. How many are in your household?—I have only six to-day, but I had nine or ten when I was buying that quantity.

ANGUS MORRISON, Five-Penny, Borve (60). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

44,618. The Chairman.—What is the number of your holding?—No. 41.

44,619. It seems to have 6 acres, 33 poles arable, 1 rood, 35 poles outrun, and a share in a common of 4786 acres. The old rent was £6, 5s., and the new rent is £3, 10s. How many houses are on your croft?—One just now.

44,620. Do you agree with the evidence that has been given with regard to Galson Farm?—We want Melbost Borve, a place beyond Ballard. That is the township that the meeting claimed.

44,621. That is now a part of Galson Farm but was formerly a township?—Yes.

44,622. And what those you now represent are most anxious about, if it can be obtained, is to get the land of Melbost?—Yes, we are very anxious to get it. There was £100 taken off the tacksman and put on to the crofters between my place and the Butt of Lewis; and there was added to my rent 11s. or 12s. as my share. It is useless to me; I can take no bread out of it unless I get the other piece. These were swamps and soft places that were cut off.

44,623. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Did you want this land as an extension of your present holdings, or for new holdings?—For the whole township. There are such a number of people on the common who are taking up a right to their crofts.

44,624. What has become of those who have no land at all?—We are willing to take them in along with us, because they are at present at the back of the dyke, and thus cause injury to our stock.

44,625. But would you take them into this place, Melbost, and give them a croft or a piece there?—If we get Melbost and the old marches we will take them in along with us. At present there are in some houses three families around the one fire.

JOHN SMITH, Fivepenny Borve (60)—examined.

44,626. The Chairman.—Have you a croft?—I have the third of croft No. 43.

44,627. Whose name is it entered in?—My brother has two shares: Malcolm Smith is his name. Stornoway, Lewis. John Smith.

44,628. The area of the croft seems to be 2 acres, 14 poles arable, 24 poles outrun, and $\frac{1}{15}$ share in the common. The old rent of £1, 18s. was reduced to £1, 2s. You are here doubtless to give us the same sort of evidence that has been given already about Galson?—Yes, the same, being very needful of it for a long time.

44,629. We quite understand the particulars from the other evidence that was given, and we intend to go and see the ground.

44,630. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Are you speaking for crofters or for cottars?—For myself in the first place, and if we get the land, we will take in the other people as well.

44,631. Were you appointed as a delegate?—Yes.

44,632. By the crofters?—Yes.

44,633. Did the cottars appoint you?—They did.

PETER PETERSON SLATER, Solicitor, Edinburgh (38)—examined. Peter Peterson Slater.

44,634. The Chairman.—You are here as representing the agents for Lady Matheson of the Lews?—Yes, and with the wish to give every possible assistance to the Commission, and lay before them all facts that may be desired. First, in regard to North Galson, I may just say that in 1863 the crofters there found that they could not support themselves on the land, and they petitioned to be sent to America. Some of them did go,—24 out of 43, and the remaining 19 were provided with holdings elsewhere. The state of matters is referred to in Mr Mackay's evidence before the Napier Commission in 1883, Appendix 162. Then, with your liberty, I would wish to make a statement as to the whole island.

The island of Lewis contains, roughly speaking, 404,000 acres of land, excluding water and foreshores. It has 3076 crofters, and, I believe, about 900 or 1000 squatters, although we have not actual statistics of these later than 1885. These squatters are not, of course, on her ladyship's rental. The acreage occupied by the crofters, and, of course, by the squatters as well, is 258,958 acres, consisting of arable land, outrun, and grazing rights; farmers in Lewis hold 65,969 acres, sportsmen hold 74,925 acres, and the remainder 4148 acres is occupied by glebes, schools, town lands, and the Flannen and Rona Islands, and a number of other parts occupied by outsiders. The rental of the island payable by crofters at the present moment is £5917, 10s. 5d.; the farm rental is £2279, making a total land rental of £8196, 10s. 5d.; the sporting rental is £6135, but over and above that there is the rent of the castle grounds, &c., £700, so that Lady Matheson's rental comes to £15,731, 10s. 5d. All other landward rental held by other proprietors is covered by the sum of £1346, 9s. 7d., so that the total landward rental of Lewis is £17,078. I leave out the town of Stornoway, both as regards population and rental, and the above figures thus give an average rental of the landward population of the Lews of 14s. per head.

The average rent of the crofter population, taking it at 24,000 (I believe it is above that now) is less than 5s. per head. The number of land holdings of all descriptions in Lewis is 3105, and the average rent per holding is about £2, 13s. 4d. The crofters' holdings, however, embrace 3076 of these, and the rental being £5917, gives a very much smaller proportion per holding,—under £1, 12s.

I may say that we have a very great number of small holdings in the island. Of holdings rented at £1 and under there are 483, 232 of which are in Stornoway parish, 126 in Barvas, 66 in Uig, and 59 in Lochs. I would compare that with the state of matters when Sir James Matheson bought the island in 1844. There are now 995 more holdings, taking all the farms and the crofter holdings together, than there were in 1844, when the holdings numbered 2110, with a land rental of £9437, 19s. 2d., or over £1200 above the present rental. But the division of the crofts then was peculiar. In Stornoway parish there were then only 98 crofts under £1 of rent, as will be seen from the following table :—

The only holding under £600 is the farm of Park, let as a sheep farm at £587. The average rent per holding in 1844 was £4, 10s., while it is now down to £2, 13s. 4d.

44,635. Is that the average fair rent ?—No, the whole land rental, giving an average for each holding.

44,636. Does it include the large sheep farms ?—Yes, it includes the whole of the land rental ; only the shooting rent is excluded from the average. The smaller average of £2, 13s. 4d. is accounted for by the increased number of holdings and the decreased land rental.

The details of Lady Matheson's present rental are as follows :—

Parish.	No. of Crofters.	Crofters' Rental.	Farmers, Castle Grounds, &c.	Sportsmen and Fishings, &c.	Other Proprietors.

I may say, in passing, that the comparison in the case of Lochs and Barvas is not quite accurate, inasmuch as there have been certain changes of boundaries made by the Boundaries Commission. The land rental has fallen since 1844 by £1241, but, of that, £963 is accounted for by changing farm land into forest land, leaving a difference of £278. But the reductions of rent given by the Crofters Commission are over £2000 (the exact figure is £2195, 14s. 7d.), so that land outside that, occupied by crofters, has increased in value to the extent of the difference,—about £1970. That is to say, had there been no reduction in the crofting rents by the Crofters Commission, our rental, instead of showing a decrease, would have shown an increase of £2200. As it is, it shows a decrease of only £278 : therefore, the real difference is made up by increased farm rents, and interest on improvements, of course, and other matters.

I do not propose to detain you with any words as to Sir James Matheson's prior management of the estate, or of the state of matters during the years of destitution caused by the potato failure. His efforts from 1844 to 1850 are matters of history, and were strongly in the direction of alleviating the distress by giving employment to every one in Lewis that would and could work. In 1850 the population had risen from 17,000 to 19,000, and at one period of that year there were no fewer than 12,829 individuals getting relief from the Highland Destitution Committee,—2269 men, 2560 women, and 8000 children. That was, of course, the largest number that ever received relief at one time, and then only for a month or two ; however, the average number receiving relief throughout the year was about 5000. At that time there were about 2261 crofters and 773 cottars. I need not refer to the amount distributed by the Destitution Committee, but I should like to state a few facts concerning crofters' rents and arrears.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Peter Peterson Slater.

In 1882 there was paid by the crofters in the Island of Lewis £6787, 15s. 10d., and their arrears stood at £6741, 14s. 2d. At that time there was the expectation of the Royal Commission, which was appointed, and which came next year to inquire into the state of the crofters, and the arrears of rent went up by £1700 to £8476, 19s. 5d. In 1884, after the visit of Lord Napier's Commission, the arrears rose to £11,789, 16s. 6d. ; in 1885 they rose to £14,886, 5s. 3d. ; and in 1886, when the Crofters Act came into operation, to £19,423, 4s. 3d. They went steadily up thereafter, and in the case of the crofters dealt with by the Crofters Commission, 2572 in number, between 1888 and 1892, the arrears amounted to £40,981, 18s. 1d. Of these arrears the Crofters Commission cancelled £30,092, 7s. 4d., or about 75 per cent., while during the years 1890 to 1892 Lady Matheson herself cancelled £3156, 12s. 11d. of arrears. The total arrears wiped out between the Commission and Lady Matheson thus amounted to £33,249, 0s. 3d., which, taking the fair rents fixed by the Commission as the annual rental, has given the crofters the benefit of five years' non-payment of rent.

At the present moment, leaving out the year 1894, which it is quite fair to do (the usual date for payment of the year's rent due at Whitsunday being September in each year), the arrears amount to £12,168, 8s. 4d., or more than two years' fair rents. It is right to point out that, as Mr Orrock has carefully noted, this excludes £198, 8s. of instalment arrears, of which the period for payment has not arrived,—I believe it takes place in September. That, however, is a mere bagatelle compared with the total arrears.

Next, I should like to give a few details to what the estate has done to increase the crofting area in the island. There were, of course, many demands made for increase of crofter lands which could not be met. Wherever they could they had been met during the past 23 years. The bulk of the cases have occurred during the last 16 or 17 years. In 1878, the township of Kirkibost in Uig, which consisted of 1400 acres (476 arable and 924 pasture), was given to a certain number of crofters and squatters from Bosta and elsewhere in Bernera, who settled in 26 holdings. The land was taken from the farm of Linshader, and the rental fixed on the crofters was £120. I may say, in passing, that there was an offer of £150 for the place as a sheep farm, which was not accepted, because the land was taken with the view of giving it to the crofters. In 1888, however, the estate reconsidered the matter, and readjusted the rent as from 1878, the date of entry, at £100 only, arrears of £180 on the £120 rent being at the same time written off. Of the 26 crofters thus settled in Kirkibost, 22 applied to the Crofters Commission and had their rents reduced from £91, 3s. 4d. to £67, 3s., and their arrears reduced from £400, 13s. 8d. to £180, 10s. Their arrears now amount to £200, 11s. 10d., not including the rent due at Whitsunday 1894. Then, again, when the other parts of Linshader Farm were broken up in 1892, though they were in arrears of rent, Mr Orrock, no doubt with judicious management, gave them, for wintering, the island of Chearstaidh with about 200 acres of good pasture.

Again, in 1880, the crofters of Croir, eight in number, together with some squatters,—20 in all, took Hacklete at £85, 8s. Whenever a large acreage is offered, it invariably happens that the crofters cannot take it all, and they have to take in squatters. The acreage given at Hacklete is 977 acres. The whole of these settlers applied to the Crofters Commission, who reduced the rent to £55, 9s., and cancelled £474, 4s. 6d. of arrears amounting to £645, 14s. 6d. The arrears now amount to £197, 3s. 8d. Hacklete and Breaclete, another township in Bernera, has got the island of Little Bernera with 276 acres for wintering. Tobson, another township in Bernera, has got Bosta (from which the crofters were removed) with 425 acres, for wintering. Six crofters from Tobson have got an acreage of 1200 acres in Lundail to form new crofts upon. Valtos has got the island of Pabbay, with 270 acres for wintering. All these places, with the exception of Hacklete and Kirkibost, formed parts of the grazings of Linshader till May 1893.

In regard to other increases of pasture,—in 1887, 60 acres of grazing was given from Dalbeg Farm to Carloway township, and 140 acres of moor grazing on the same farm was given to South Shawbost township. The reduction of rent given to the farmer was £12, and the land formed good pasture, but there was no additional rent charged against the crofters. Under an enlargement application, Mid Borve got from Galson Farm an addition of 61 acres of pasture at a rent of £14, 17s. In 1891, the arrears of rent were only £20, 6s.; they now amount on the increased holdings to £67, 13s. 6d.

In Stornoway parish, the crofters of Tong and Aird of Tong in 1891 got 2468 acres of moor off the farm of Coll. In the same year, the crofters of Back and Tolsta got 4701 acres of moorland from the farm of Gress. In 1887 Melbost Links (192 acres) were given to the Melbost and Steinish crofters, and in 1890 Eilean-nan-Uan (5½ acres) was given to the crofters of Holm. Coming now to Lochs parish; in 1883 Eilean Ewart, containing 200 acres rented at £12 and till then attached to the farm of Park, was given to the crofters of Leumravay without additional rent. In 1885 the island of Torraidh, rented at £6, 6s. as part of the farm of Valtos, was given to the crofters of Calbost and Maravaig without additional rent. I may say that in the case of moor pastures there was no additional rent charged to the crofters. In 1886 the island of Rosaidh, rented at £8 and till then attached to Crobeg Farm, was given to the crofters of Grimshader, but was stocked, I believe, by the Cromore crofters. No additional rent was charged.

44,637. What was the extent of that?—Eilean Rosaidh will be about 40 or 50 acres, but we have not measured it. It was entirely for wintering. Then there is another experiment which is one of the most recent. In 1886, when Park Farm lease ran out, part of it forming the ewe hirsel and consisting of 4486 acres at Seaforthhead, which used to summer about 700 ewes and winter 300 or 400, was given to six crofters at a rent of £51. From £65 to £70 was offered for the place for a farm at the time. One of these has since had to give it up, and his arrears of £24 are still outstanding. Two years after it was given to the six crofters: they were £80, 5s. in arrear, and they applied to the Crofters Commission. I should say that they were allowed to apply to the Commission, for if the estate had taken advantage of the terms imposed by the Act, their applications could have been successfully opposed, as also in numerous other cases.

44,637A. I deem it well to notice that I do not think there was any endeavour on the part of the estate here either to keep crofters outwith the operation of the Act, who might have been excluded, or to take any undue advantage of purely technical objections to applications made?—I understand there was no such objection taken before I had to do with the estate, and there certainly have been no frivolous objections since.

44,637B. Very few objections of any kind have been taken?—The estate has endeavoured to carry out the spirit of the Act. In the case of the Seaforth-head crofters, of whom I was speaking, their applications were disposed of in 1892, when their arrears amounted to £143. The Crofters Commission left the rent of £51, unchanged, but cancelled £50, 15s. of the arrears,—practically a year's rent, to give them a start, I presume. Their arrears now are £70, of which £20, 5s. is not payable till September.

The only other matter to which I would direct your attention is the very serious question of rating. Of course, the very heavy rates falling on the Lews are borne by Lady Matheson, in common with all the tenants; but she, as proprietrix, has suffered to an extent beyond all tenants, because she used to pay the rates for all tenants under £4. The rates in 1888 and in 1893 falling on landlord and tenant were as follows:— Stornoway, Lewis. Peter Peter on Slater.

Parish.	1888.	1893.
Stornoway, . .	5s. 8d. per £	5s. 0¼d. per £
Barvas, . . .	11s. 6d. ,,	9s. 8¼d. ,,
Uig, ...	6s. 6d. ,,	5s. 6¼d. ,,
Lochs, . . .	11s. 8d. ,,	8s. 4¼d. ,,

The school rate in 1893 was 6d. per £, except in Uig, where it was 9d. In 1887 and 1888 Lady Matheson paid, in poor and school rates, £4156 (including crofters' rates under £4 of rental), and in road assessments £657; in all £4813. That is paid out of a rental of under £8000. During the years from 1879 to 1888 Lady Matheson paid in local rates on rents not received, a total of £4581, 13s., also during the same period on rents under £4, £1893, 10s. 2d., and of the latter sum there is still unpaid £1228, 7s. 6d.

Dealing now with the question of education, we find that the children of school age in the island of Lewis number 5517, and their education during the year to Whitsunday 1893 cost £7164. The amount of that raised by the rates is in Barvas parish £60, in Stornoway £450, in Uig £150, and in Lochs £78. Education in Lochs parish costs £1436, and the total rate of the parish was £78. I may say that Stornoway town pays its own way in the matter of education rates, and the school grants are very well earned. The ordinary school grants earned were,—in Barvas £802, in Stornoway £1182, in Uig £765, and in Lochs £637. Then there are grants in relief of fees,—Barvas £414, Stornoway £726, Uig £393, Lochs £346. These are all ordinary grants which any school is entitled to earn; but the Lewis schools also get the Lochiel grants, which are confined to certain districts in the Highlands, — 13 School Boards I think. The sums obtained for Lochiel grants are, Barvas £284, Stornoway £300, Uig £172, and Lochs £204. They also get a special probate grant, as it is called, as follows:—Barvas £140, Uig £400, and Lochs £517. These are the figures for last year, but the deficiency this year, I am informed, will amount to a matter of £1200 or £1300. There has been great strides in the matter of education, undoubtedly, and 70 per cent. of the children now attend school, on an average. These grants that I have detailed show that a large sum of money is earned by the children, so that, were the attendance to be larger than 70 per cent., the schools might be practically self-supporting. I do not think I need trouble you with more figures, except to mention the amount of debt on each School Board, towards which, no doubt, the Government will ultimately have to give some relief. In Lochs the outstanding school debt is £5678.

44,638. What does the debt consist of?—Building debt.

44,638A. Is not that being paid off by instalments?—Yes, but the instalments have stopped: they should be paid out of the rates.

44,639. Are they not being paid somehow?—I am afraid they came to a stop some years ago. I am told that they retain the Lochiel grant for that purpose. There is a total building debt outstanding in the island of £15,321 on the building of 36 schools.

44,640. Which is going off by instalments?—Yes, from the special Lochiel Grant. The debt of the Stornoway Board is £4209, on Barvas £2277, on Uig £3157, and on Lochs £5678. The parish of Lochs, where the crofters' rental is only £931, or very much lower than the others, the number of schools is twelve, or three more than in any of the other parishes, even the large parish of Stornoway. That is why, when Rev. Mr Maccallum was in the witness-box, I asked him specially about this question of schools for Lochs; I may be wrong, but I have an impression that if the townships suggested by Mr Maccallum were to be formed in Lochs, the parish would require other six to ten schools, for many of the new townships would be out of the three-mile boundary.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Peter Peterson Slater.

If there is any further information or explanations that Mr Orrock or I can afford to the Commission, we shall be very happy to do so; and the estate books will be made patent to any one of you.

44,641. I understood you to say that of the total area of the island, 404,000 acres, about 259,000 acres or much more than the half is under crofters?—Yes, and there is certainly more than nine-tenths of the arable ground in Lewis already under crofters.

44,642. What is the extent of the forests,—Park forest, Aline forest, Arnish forest, and Scaliscro?—There are only two parishes in the island on which we have preserved ground, Lochs and Uig. In Lochs the forest of Park occupies 41,913 acres; the forest of Aline occupies 8774 acres; and the little home forest of Arnish 2776 acres; total 53,293 acres. In Uig parish, Morsgail forest occupies 13,311 acres; Scaliscro forest occupies 3143 acres; Grimista forest occupies 5178 acres. Grimista, however, is more of a fishing than a shooting. The total forest acreage is thus about 75,000 acres.

44,642A. Can you tell me what farm land has been turned into forest land since Sir James Matheson acquired the property?—Yes, I think I can. First of all there is Park. When the lease of Park Farm ran out with Mr Sellar, the whole of the sheep stock had to be taken over by the proprietor at a very serious loss. The farm was advertised repeatedly to let as a sheep farm.

44,643. That was in 1883?—That was in 1883. It was advertised extensively, but nobody would take it as a sheep farm. It was then decided to make a forest of it.

44,644. Can you give us the area of land then afforested?—Not without some calculation: but, speaking very roughly, I might say perhaps about 40,000 acres.

44,645. Now, has there been any other land besides that turned into forest?—Aline was rented as a farm at £90; Scaliscro at £100; Morsgail at £150; and Arnish at £30: all these were farms turned into forest, and adding £587 as the rental of Park Farm we get a total farm rental of £963 for land, which under forest yields over £3000.

44,646. Is that including the fishing rental?—No.

44,647. All that afforestment has taken place since Sir James acquired the island?—No, not exactly: the farm of Park has from time immemorial been a sheep farm with deer on it.

44,648. It was the old Seaforth Farm?—It was known from time immemorial as The Park or Deer Forest of the Lews, and there are still to be seen the remains of an old dyke to keep the deer in.

44,649. I wanted to ask you one or two questions about Sir James Matheson's reclamations?—These, I may say, I have not taken up, as the matter was gone into so exhaustively before previous Commissions that I have not thought it necessary to refer to it here.

44,650. You dealt fully with the matter of the cancellations of arrears by the Crofters Commission, and, I think, you said that the total arrears cancelled, whether by the Commission or by Lady Matheson herself, between 1888 and 1892, came to £33,249?—Yes.

44,651. Is it not the fact that, in previous years, it sometimes happened that large cancellations had to be made?—Not to the same extent, or anything approaching it. I could give you the arrears in the years of destitution.

44,652. If you please?—I cannot give you them off-hand, but I think I have already given a note of them to the Crofters Commission.

44,653. No previous cancellation has been at all comparable to this?—Nothing approaching it. If you wish it, we can submit a note of all the cancellations for the last twenty years.

44,654. If you please, we should like to have such a note, say for the period from 1868 to 1888.* You mentioned in detail the matter of rates?—I did so, because, I think, they had a strong bearing on the question.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Peter Peterson Slater.

44,655. Is it the fact that Lady Matheson has had to pay rates on unpaid rents?—Very extensively; on several thousands of pounds.

44,656. And she raised the question, I think, in the Supreme Courts, whether she was liable to pay such, and it was held by a majority of three to one, the dissenting judge being the late Lord Lee, that she was not entitled to relief or rebate of rates paid on unpaid rents?—Quite so, and she had to suffer; but since then the Boards have taken up what I may call the moral standpoint of assessing tenants direct. It was such a well-known state of matters that it was felt it would be immoral to assess her any longer.

44,657. Mr Forsyth.—Is it the practice of the Parochial Boards now to charge tenants under £4 direct?—Yes, throughout Lewis that has been the practice now for some years.

44,658. Has that been since the passing of the Local Government (Scotland) Act?—No, since 1889, I think.

44,659. The Chairman.—Lady Matheson has endeavoured always to keep on as friendly relations as possible with her tenants?—That was always her wish and intention. I may say that there has been a disposition on the part of certain of the crofters to take up a position as if Lady Matheson were their natural enemy,—I do not think this arises out of any personal illwill at all, but simply because she happens to be proprietrix of the island.

44,660. A state of tension has grown up in the relations between them?—But on her part there has been no feeling whatever.

44,661. Mr Maccallum.—You gave 75,000 acres as the area devoted exclusively to sport?—Yes.

44,662. And the sporting rental is £6835?—Yes.

44,663. Now, the sporting rental is not derived wholly from the 75,000 acres?—Oh, no.

44,664. Can you tell me how much of it is derived from land held by crofters?—It is a little difficult to give that off-hand, and I would not like to commit myself on the point at present.

44,665. Well, taking it in round numbers, is not more than the half of this sporting rental derived from farms and crofts?—No, I think not. I can give you the figure in Lochs.

44,666. Can you give me exactly the deer forest rents?—Yes. In Lochs the rents are £2020, and in Uig £3662. But that includes the fishing rent, and it would be a little difficult to discriminate off hand. You cannot distinguish the fishing rent from the shooting rent, because they go together.

44,667. But reading your paper one would readily conclude that you derive the rental of £6135 from the 75,000 acres; that was the gist of your statement, although you afterwards explained that it was different. Your original statement, however, would lead me to suppose that you derived the £6835 from the 75,000 acres: there was nothing to show that that is not so?—I beg your pardon; I think there was. I told you that in Stornoway and Barvas we had no preserved land, and I gave you the shooting rental there.

44,668. Well, I took the figures as you gave them, putting figures opposite acreages; e.g., you give so many acres under crofters, so much rent; so many acres under farms, so much rent; so many acres for sporting, so much sporting rental; which would lead a person to suppose that the sporting rental was derived from the 75,000 acres in the same way as the other rentals were derived in the manner mentioned.—Yes, but I specially mentioned the sporting rent received in the two parishes in which there was no preserved land.

44,669. Then, with regard to Park, considering the large number of crofters there and the great congestion, how is it that more of it was not given to the crofters?—There were petitions for parts of Park, but there was one offer which the estate considered at the time would take the heart of the forest out of it, and for this a rent of some £40 was offered. But it was considered quite unsuitable, and that was the primary reason for refusing the petition.

* For the statement of arrears abated by the proprietor during the period stated, see page 1085.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Peter Peterson Sluter.

44,670. Is that the answer that was sent?—Certainly; I am not here for a moment to say that the matter of rent would not be a consideration, but I may tell you that after a very careful examination of Park, and from information as to old arable land by old plans, &c., we came to the conclusion that it was not at all suited for crofters.

44,671. Was not there a reply sent to the effect that they had not sent a sufficiently respectful petition?—I need not go back on that ancient history.

44,672. It is not at all ancient history; it is as recent as the afforestment?—But I do not care about raking up these old matters. If I did, I would have to state the terms of some of the applications and the threatening letters received, and these are things which I would prefer should remain buried in the past. I scarcely think it would be prudent or judicious now to come forward and tell you about those letters which Lady Matheson received.

44,673. Do you say that the reason of the refusal was that the ground was not suitable for crofter occupation?—Yes.

44,674. But was not the reply that was sent to the applicants to the effect that the application was not respectful?—If you produce the reply I will tell you whether it is correct.

44,675. I cannot produce the reply.—Well, I am not here to say whether every rumour or matter of hearsay knowledge is true or not.

44,676. It is on the report of the Napier Commission.—I will leave it on the report of the Napier Commission: I am quite content to do so.

44,677. Now, you say that the reason why Park was not let as a sheep farm was that nobody would take it?—There was no offer for it.

44,678. But the crofters wanted to take parts of it?—Certainly.

44,679. Did they ask for Stiomrabhagh?—They asked for a good many individual parts of Park, to give which it was thought would not be judicious for crofters, and would certainly be entirely destructive of the place as a deer forest.

44,680. Why would not Stiomrabhagh be suitable for crofters?—It was considered unsuitable by the estate authorities, and, I think, they had better and more complete information before them than we have before us now.

44,681. But you are speaking just now for the estate?—Certainly I am.

44,682. Well, I ask how it was that the estate management did not consider that place suitable for crofting?—I am giving you the result at which they arrived.

44,683. It is not the result I am asking, but the reasons which influenced them in coming to that result?—But you see I am not here to give you all the private reasons of the estate management during past years. I am willing to give you every result they arrived at, but I certainly would not produce private letters and private correspondence, even for the information of the Royal Commission. I don't think I am called upon to do so.

44,684. You are called upon to give us any information which would throw light upon our inquiry.—Yes, and I will submit to the ruling of the Chairman on the point whether that covers the information you seek.

44,685. The Chairman has not ruled that I have asked anything which is not quite pertinent and allowable?—I hope he will have no occasion to make any such ruling.

44,686. Well, can you tell us why the estate management thought Stiomrabhagh unsuitable?—I have already answered that the decision was reached after mature deliberation and consideration.

44,687. That is not an answer.—That is an answer to the question.

44,688. Is that an answer why the ground was considered unsuitable?—I will leave the Commission to judge whether it is not a sufficient answer. [The Chairman.—I think you should either give the reason, or say that you do not wish to give it?—I do not wish to give any reason further than that it was considered unsuitable.]

44,689. But what was the reason why it was so considered? You are not giving an answer to the question, but simply stating that it was refused, and I ask on what grounds it was refused?—I say the estate considered the ground unsuitable for crofters. You ask why the estate considered it unsuitable; but that is not a proper question to ask. [The Chairman.—We must be the judges of what is a proper or competent question. Mr Maccallum asks on what ground the estate considered the place unsuitable for crofters?—On the ground that they would not be successful as crofters there, either for the benefit of themselves or of the forest. I may add that in the case of Stiomrabhagh and Leumrabhagh it was thought better that the farm as a sheep farm should be compact. I could not go back and give you all the various reasons which influenced the estate management.]

44,690. Is it not well situated for fishing crofts?—I have not seen the ground, but my understanding is that it is not; and it was not a successful fishing township before.

44,691. It is situated on the coast of Loch-Shell, is it not?—I believe so.

44,692. Well, I may say that we have had a very successful fishing experience ourselves in our yacht, 'The Marmion,' just opposite that place.—I am glad to hear that.

44,693. Part of the farm was let, you say. Seaforth-head was let to crofters?—Yes, to six crofters.

44,694. Now, is Seaforthhead a suitable place for fishermen's crofts?—No, I don't think so; the object of giving it to the crofters was to try crofting pure and simple.

44,695. Self-sustaining holdings?—Yes. The extent of the place, 4486 acres, puts the question of fishermen's lots quite out of the question.

44,696. But you know that the desire generally in this island is for fishing crofts?—No, I am not sure that that is so. I have met here with numerous replies as to why the fishing has not been successfully prosecuted, and it has been stated that three or four acres of arable land is requisite for a fishing crofter. Before the Crofters Commission I have had similar evidence. I have had the reply that a crofter could not go to the fishing because he had not a horse, which meant that he could not go to the fishing and have his croft too. My experience on the whole is that they want land, and that the fishing is a subsidiary affair.

44,697. The evidence we have had here to-day was certainly to the effect that they desired, above all things, to have crofts situated conveniently for the fishing?—That is so to-day.

44,698. And these Seaforth-head crofters are not such?—No, and I would deprecate the idea that the estate ever meant them to be such.

44,699. And you did not try to form fishermen's crofts on land better situated for fishing?—I have given you the whole of the changes made by the estate management.

44,700. The rent that was put upon them was something like £50?—£51.

44,701. Which, I suppose, did not give them the sporting privilege of the place?—No.

44,702. What do you think would be the sporting rent of Seaforth-head?—I am not competent to decide on that point. But I may tell you that the land was given to the crofters at a rent of £51, and the Crofters Commission decided that that was a fair rent.

44,703. But there is over and above that a certain sporting value on the place?—There will be some, more or less.

44,704. It would not let as a large farm, the remainder of it?—Not at the time of the lease running out.

44,705. But would it not let well enough for crofters holdings,—just as well for instance as Seaforth-head?—Oh dear, no. Seaforth-head was the ewe hirsel of Park; it could summer 700 ewes and winter over 300,

Stornoway, Lewis.
Peter Peterson Slater.

and I don't think you will find any other place in Park capable of doing that.

44,706. But every other part of Park is better suited for the great industry of the people,—fishing?—That may be so, but so far as lots go I think Seaforthhead was the prime part of the farm.

44,707. Did they not show as great a willingness to get other parts of Park as well as Seaforthhead?—I really cannot follow you there, further than saying that I have given you all the estate changes of the kind. I have not the slighest doubt that you are correct in stating that there are numerous people who would have taken lots.

44,708. Then, even when the Park forest was held as a farm, it had a great sporting value?—It had undoubtedly. I cannot condescend on the exact amount, but, I believe, it was something like £1100 while the rental of the place was only £800 or £900.

44,709. And what is the total value of it now?—£2000.

44,710. Do you get £2000 for Park Forest?—It is entered in the Valuation Roll at £1760, but that is after deducting the tenant's share of taxes. It is really a matter of about £2000.

44,711. And while it was under sheep the sporting was worth £1100?—Yes.

44,712. And the farmer paid £800?—I am not perfectly certain; Mr Orrock tells me £850 was the pastoral rent.

44,713. Then these two rents added together come to more than the amount now yielded by it as a deer forest?—It is a little higher now than the two together; but the rent that Mr Platt paid as sub-tenant of the shootings I have merely on hearsay.

44,714. Mr Munro.—Do I gather from all you have stated here to-day that there is really no additional land in the Lews available for crofter cultivation?—I would not say that there is no land that could be cultivated by crofters, but I hold that the condition of matters is that there is no available land in the proper sense of the word.

44,715. Is there land which could be given to them, and which they could cultivate with profit to themselves and pay you a fair rent?—In my opinion there is not. I speak with conviction upon that point,—an opinion which I have formed after hearing possibly 1600 or 1700 of them in their fair rent applications.

44,716. No one is better aware than you are that there is a great amount of discontent in the island. Now, have you any remedy to suggest for that discontent, seeing you have no additional land?—I am afraid I cannot suggest a remedy: I would leave that for the recommendation of the Royal Commission, though it is perhaps outside of their object of finding available land. I should think that, in the case of children of school age, who number between 5000 and 6000, if the boys, instead of leaving school at 13 or 14, and doing nothing till they are about 18, which is practically the case in the Lews, could be employed immediately after leaving school, they would not be so apt to take on the habits of the population around them; that would be the first step towards the remedy. This, however, is a private opinion of my own, which I do not submit as coming from the estate at all. If the boys went to the navy at the age of 14 or 15 it would be a good thing for them, but you will not get many of them to go when they are lads of 18 or 19 years of age. They do not employ themselves actively, it seems to me, until they are about 18 years old.

44,717. Do you consider the present population of the island more than it can properly sustain?—I state, with perfect frankness, that, I think, there should not be more than a third of the present population,—not even comfortably,—but to live with fair elbow room.

44,718. Looking at that state of matters, would you suggest emigration as one remedy?—I would rather leave these suggestions for yourself: it is really a very hard question to put. The estate has certainly tried to help emigration: Sir James Matheson spent £11,000 or so on voluntary emigration. No doubt numbers of these people were in arrear of rent; they had either to emigrate or leave, but their way was all paid for them. I understand the Government has attempted a scheme of emigration and has failed; what the causes of the failure are I cannot say, and I would not feel inclined to press my views upon the Commission even if I could.

Stornoway, Lewis.
Peter Peterson Slater.

44,718A. I think you are answering in a manner that is perfectly straightforward and frank in this matter.—That is my intention, at all events.

44,719. You have furnished us with a list of arrears of rent in the island, both of fair rents and otherwise,—a list which, I think, is perfectly appalling. Do you think the failure to pay these arrears is owing to want of will or to want of ability?—That is a matter I would not like to express any opinion upon. The arrears are there; I have stated their existence as a fact that faces us, but I would not like to judge one individual crofter in the island as to the cause of the arrears.

44,720. Take the forest of Park; supposing you advertise it to-morrow in one or more sheep farms, could it be let without a considerable loss to the proprietor?—Certainly not. If I am able to form any opinion whatever, it is let now at its best value.

44,721. The Chairman.—Am I right in saying that, in the cases heard by the Appeal Court of the Crofters Commission, which I think you attended throughout, the complaint of the appellants was mainly with regard to arrears?—That is so; mainly with regard to arrears.

44,722. And in a good many cases it was exclusively with regard to arrears?—Exclusively from the island of Bernera.

It is right that I should clear up the matter of this correspondence between certain crofters and Lady Matheson, which has been referred to more than once to-day. Lady Matheson received a letter from the villages of Gravir, Calbost, and Crobeg, in the parish of Lochs, dated 22nd November 1881. She then received another letter, apparently dated 23rd December 1882, that is fully a year afterwards, and in a letter of 5th December 1882 the following words occur:—'We have patiently waited for the last twelve 'months for your reply, having called for the same at 'your office repeatedly to no purpose. We most 'respectfully request a reply in writing, so that we may 'consider what steps should be taken so as to secure 'our object. We expect that the prayer of said petition has been favourably received by Lady Matheson 'and all concerned, and that our very distressing condition, which is becoming more and more serious, may 'induce you to give us an opportunity of earning an 'honest livelihood in our native island, specially when 'such a suitable opening occurs.' [That refers to Mr Sellar giving up his farm.] 'Waiting your reply, in 'name and on behalf of said petitioners, we respectfully 'remain your obedient servants, Kenneth Nicolson, 'Kenneth Macleod,' and many others. [Minutes of Evidence, vol. ii., p. 1144.]

Now, following upon that, was a letter dated 23rd December 1882, which, however, is only printed in the Appendix to Lord Napier's Report (vol. v., p. 152), which says:—'Honoured Lady, on behalf of a number 'of fishermen residing at Calbost, Maravich, and Gravir, 'in the parish of Lochs, I beg leave most respectfully 'to send you herewith copy of a petition, addressed by 'us to your ladyship, through Mr M'Kay, Chamberlain 'of Lewis, last January, and to which we had no 'reply.

'Trusting we may not be led to resort reluctantly 'to such steps as many of our unfortunate countrymen 'are forced to adopt.

'May I take the liberty of asking that you be so good 'as let the petitioners know your own views regarding 'the matters contained in the petition.—I have the 'honour to be your ladyship's obedient servant, 'Kenneth Nicolson.'

And then came Lady Matheson's reply, which is dated from Cleveland Row, London, 3rd January 1883:—

'Lady Matheson regrets that the above-named 'respectable class of Lewsmen should have been led to 'address her on a subject of such importance as that 'contained in their petition, by adding to it a letter

'which causes her to set aside their request, as Lady 'Matheson is too devoted to her Queen and the laws of 'which Her Gracious Majesty is the representative, to 'listen for one moment to a petition accompanied by a 'threat from them to infringe the laws by which all 'are governed, and by the support of which, as indi-'viduals, the well-being of the land and its communities 'at large can alone be promoted.' That seems to be the correspondence referred to?—Well, I leave the matter on that footing. I have not a word to say about it.

Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—There is a small township in the neighbourhood of Stornoway here which appointed two delegates to appear before the Commission, but by a slight mishap their names have not been brought forward.

The Chairman.—A mishap of your own, do you mean?

Mr Macrae.—Well, on both sides,—on their part and on mine; and if your lordship would allow these delegates to appear and answer questions I will not ask any questions of Mr Slater. They are cottars in the immediate neighbourhood.

Mr Slater.—There is no wish on my part for such consideration.

DONALD MACLEOD, Laxdale (36)—examined.

44,723. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, a squatter.

44,724. Where do you live?—At Laxdale.

44,725. Do you live on some one's holding there?—No.

44,726. Whose land are you upon?—I live in a small bothy outside the township.

44,727. Are you on the common?—On the roadside, between the fence and the road.

44,728. What evidence do you wish to give us to-day?—We are wanting some assistance like what the rest get.

44,729. What kind of assistance; do you want to get a holding?—Yes.

44,730. Could you pay the rent of a holding?—Yes.

44,731. How do you live at present; do you carry on any occupation?—Labouring.

44,732. In Stornoway?—Yes.

44,733. Have you employment at present?—No, I work about the quay.

44,734. You are anxious to get a holding near Stornoway?—Yes.

44,735. Was your father a crofter?—Yes.

44,736. Is he alive?—No.

44,737. Where was his holding?—In Gearshader.

44,738. Are you a married man?—Yes.

44,739. Have you a family?—Yes, two.

44,740. Where is it you desire to obtain a holding?—In Gearshader.

44,741. Could you set up a holding there without assistance?—Not very well.

DUNCAN MACDONALD, Cottar, Newmarket, near Stornoway,—examined.

44,742. The Chairman.—Are you a cottar?—Yes.

44,743. Where do you live?—I live at Newmarket, at the head of Loch Beneside?—I have a house on my father-in-law's croft.

44,744. When did you build that house?—About seven years ago.

44,745. What is his name?—John Macleod.

44,746. Do you pay him a rent?—I just pay him whenever he is in any need: I give him help, but not in the shape of rent.

44,747. Do you want to get another holding?—Yes, if I could possibly get it.

44,748. In that neighbourhood?—Yes.

44,749. Do you carry on labouring work?—My chief occupation is chimney-sweeping in Stornoway; I am well known here.

(Signed) CHARLES ORROCK,
Chamberlain of the Lews.

Stornoway, Lewis.
Duncan Macdonald.

Stornoway, Lewis.

Duncan Macdonald.

44,750. You have regular employment?—Not regular, except during two months in the spring.

44,751. But you would like to get a holding?—Yes, I think I could make a decent living if I got a holding.

44,752. You are a married man, I suppose?—Yes.

44,753. With a family?—With a small family, and perhaps helping others as well as myself occasionally.

44,754. What family have you?—I have none of my own, but there are some women on the place nearly invalid, who cannot support themselves and they cannot work. Of course, I don't want to be an encumbrance: there is a young man who came from Glasgow last year who is the heir to the croft, and I see plainly that I cannot be long there.

44,755. You apprehend danger, and would like to get a holding somewhere else?—Yes.

44,755A. Supposing you got a holding, could you put up the necessary buildings without assistance?—I could, but that is not the case with many others whom I represent.

44,756. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—Did you apply to the estate for a holding?—Yes, we did.

44,757. A number of the cottars applied?—Yes, and we sent letters also to Mr Weir, M.P., and even as far as the Secretary for Scotland.

44,758. Have you got copies of the letters that you sent to the estate?—I have none here, but, I suppose, Mr Orrock there could produce his own answers to Mr Weir.

44,759. But you wrote to the estate asking for holdings?—Yes.

44,760. What land did you apply for?—We applied to break up the farms. The tenant was leaving the small farm of Tong, and when we came to know that, we applied to the estate through Mr Orrock, but got a blunt refusal, only expressing regret that there was no land to be given. But we heard that that farm was given to another tenant.

44,761. Was there a number of cottars applying along with you at that time?—Yes, 31 cottars in the district that I am in.

44,762. Within a mile or two miles of Stornoway?—Two miles.

44,763. Do you know farms there that would be suitable for small holdings, for allotments?—Plenty places.

44,764. Give me the names of places that would be suitable?—Manor Farm.

44,765. Who has the Manor Farm to-day?—Mr Dugald Maclean.

44,766. Are there lands there suitable and available?—Yes, there are lands there suitable and as good as any in the whole island of Lewis.

44,767. Is there any other suitable farm in your neighbourhood?—There is a place called Marybank, and another piece at Gearraidh-Scoir, and between that and the black river, but I cannot say in whose occupation it is. There are lots of pieces that would do.

44,768. You invite the attention of the Royal Commission to these places as suitable for allotments for the cottars in the neighbourhood of Stornoway?—Yes.

44,769. How many cottars are there, do you say?—There are 31 cottars in our branch.

44,770-71. How many crofters are in that district?—There are three times as many crofters.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTY-THIRD SITTING.

Whalsey, Shetland.

WHALSEY, SHETLAND, July 17, 1894.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
George Gordon, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

James Rendall, Crofter, Clett, Whalsey (39)—examined.

James Rendall.

44,772. The Chairman.—You are a crofter in Clett?—Yes.

44,773. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

44,774. I see from the Report that your croft contains 5 acres, 1 rood, 37 poles arable, and 7 acres, 1 rood, 14 poles outrun. The old rent was £4, 10s. and the new rent is £2, 10s. You are one of several applicants who got an enlargement of holdings from the farm of Symbister. There were 13 applicants to whom 302 acres were assigned in equal shares at a rent of 15s. per share, thus raising your rent to £3, 5s.?—Yes.

44,775. Was that additional land grazing land, or was it partly arable and partly grazing?—It was all grazing.

44,776. Now, what is it that you desire to say to us? Have you a written statement?—No, I have just newly come ashore from the fishing, and had just time to get here, so I am rather hurried. We got a small bit of pasture when the Crofters Commission was here, but I am sorry to say that it can do us very little good; it is only a scrap along the shore, and there is no shelter in it. The sheep cannot live on it in winter.

44,777. What stock have you got?—Sixteen sheep go to a croft, but I have only part of a croft.

44,778. How many sheep belong to the holding?—Sixteen, as near as I can tell.

44,779. Are these of all sorts?—No, there are lambs as well, perhaps five lambs.

44,780. What cattle stock belongs to the holding?—Three cows, a quey, and a calf.

44,781. Is that the whole stock?—Yes.

44,782. You say you have a part of a croft only?—Yes.

44,783. What part have you?—Two-thirds.

44,784. Who has the other third?—My brother.

44,785. What is his name?—Hector Rendall.

44,786. Are there two separate dwelling-houses?—Yes.

44,787. And you tell us now that the enlargement you got is insufficient,—you desire more land still?—Yes, if we could get it, we would be glad of it.

44,788. You do not, I suppose, wish to leave your holding; it is an extension of grazings that you want?—Just extension of grazings for a few sheep.

44,789. Are you speaking just now as a delegate?—Yes, I am for the three townships of Clett, Sandwick, and Huxter.

44,790. You were appointed at a meeting to represent them?—Yes.

44,791. And do these three townships combine in asking us, through you, to consider whether you can get an extension of grazings on this island?—Yes.

44,792. I suppose such an extension would naturally come from the farm of Symbister?—Yes.

44,793. How is the rest of the island outside the limits of the farm occupied? Is it crofting land?—Patches of crofting land all along the sea-shore, except the middle of the island which is held in for a sheep farm.

Whalsey, Shetland. — James Rendall.

44,794. There is just one farm, I think, on the island?—Yes, one farm.

44,795. And that farm consists partly of land on the island of Whalsey, and partly of some outside islands?—Yes; there are some big islands.

44,796. Are these the islands of East and West Linga?—Yes, and the neighbouring islets.

44,797. Are there other small islets attached to that farm?—Yes, the Wether Holm, Bruse Holm, and Little Linga, on the west side; and on the east side of Whalsey is Great Skerry, and Nista, and Mooa, and Isbister Holm.

44,798. So that there are islands attached to the farm, or held along with the farm on both sides of Whalsey?—Yes.

44,799. And the principal of these is the island of West Linga?—Yes, that is the largest.

44,800. Are you able to indicate to us what part of the farm you have in view?—Yes, we would like just a little extension of what we got.

44,801. An extension of the existing enlargement?—Yes, it is named the Hoga Clett, the ancient scattald.

44,802. You refer particularly to the bit called the Hoga Clett: is that at the south end of the island?—Yes.

44,803. Can you tell us the extent of it?—No, I cannot.

44,804. How far is it from Symbister House?—Part of it is only half a mile or less distant.

44,805. Is any of it arable land now?—No.

44,806. And do you say that that land formerly formed part of your grazings?—Yes.

44,807. The grazings of the townships you represent?—Yes.

44,808. Can you tell us when it was lost?—It was lost about the year 1864, if I remember aright. We had been entirely without scattald for about 24 or 25 years at the time when the Crofters Commission came here.

44,809. Had you no scattald up to the date of the visit of the Commission?—No, we had none.

44,810. But you had had a scattald in former times?—Yes, Hoga Clett was the scattald.

44,811. Now, can you tell me how many crofters are in your township?—Five in Clett.

44,812. How many in Sandwick?—Five in Sandwick.

44,813. And in Huxter, how many?—Three.

44,814. Are there any cottars in these townships?—Yes, there are two in Sandwick.

44,815. And any in Huxter?—No, I think not in Huxter.

44,816. Are there any in Clett?—No.

44,817. Then there are just two cottars altogether as far as you know?—That is as far as I know. There are crofts on which two farmers live, but, I think, only two cottars, properly speaking.

44,818. Do you and your neighbours in these townships live mainly by your crofts, or mainly by fishing?—We would live very poorly by our crofts.

44,819. You are all fishermen, I suppose, those who are able to go to sea?—Yes, all fishermen.

44,820. And you have all boats or shares of boats?—Yes, most of us.

44,821. You depend mainly on the sea for your livelihood?—We depend partly on the fishing, but it is sometimes very poor. The fishing is a poor outlook, but the crofts cannot keep us half a year.

44,822. When you speak of fishing, you mean herring fishing and white fishing?—Yes.

44,823. And lobster fishing?—No.

44,824. Only herring and white fish?—Yes, and in some cases nothing but herring fishing.

44,825. Do you know who is tenant of the farm of Symbister at present?—Mr Adie of Voe. [Mr Bain.—Mr Thomas Adie].

44,826. Mr Alexander Bain, Solicitor, Lerwick, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—Is the croft held by you and your brother?—The croft was taken in my father's name.

44,827. Then, is it now in your brother's name and your own jointly?—No, his part is in his own name, and my two-thirds in my name.

Whalsey, Shetland. — James Rendall.

44,828. And what is his rent?—His rent is one-third of £3, 5s.

44,829. And £3, 5s. was fixed by the Crofters Commission as the rent of the whole?—Yes, the rent of the whole.

44,830. Have any of the two cottars a share in the scattald?—No.

44,831. I see that in the findings of the Crofters Commission, when you got the extension, there was a provision for payment to the farm tenant of the value of certain fences, the value being set forth in the final order. Did the thirteen crofters pay that value?—Yes, we paid £47 for the fencing of the small patch that we got.

44,832. Has it been paid?—Yes, it has been paid.

44,833. What was your share of the herring fishing last year, which was a bad year?—I think my share came to £23 gross; but we were pretty successful; you need not measure everybody by that.

44,834. You have been pretty successful?—Yes. I must say we have, when there was any fishing; but nobody has been successful this while past.

44,835. When the scattald was taken away from you, in 1864 or whenever it was,—1865 I believe is the correct date,—was any reduction of rent given to you?—Yes.

44,836. How much?—25 per cent. I think; but that was about 30 per cent. above the fair rent still.

44,837. And you afterwards got back 300 acres of that scattald?—Yes, but a good many acres of it are simply stones along the sea-shore.

44,838. That was got back by agreement between you and the landlord?—No, it was done at the time we got it from the Crofters Commission,—we understood at the time that it was from the Commission, but we came to find afterwards that it was from Mr Hamilton.

44,839. There was a joint minute signed by your agent and the proprietor's agent by which the extension was given, but the place being let on lease it was contended that the extension was granted ex gratia by the landlord.

James Arthur.

James Arthur, Crofter, Nisthouse, Whalsey (61)—examined.

44,840. The Chairman.—You are a crofter at Nisthouse?—Yes.

44,841. Your holding seems to have 5 acres, 3 roods, 10 poles arable, 6 acres, 2 roods, 29 poles outrun, and a share in a common or scattald of 2458 acres, divided into 73 shares, of which 62 were dealt with by the Crofters Commission. The old rent was £6, 10s. and the fair rent £3, 5s.; the arrears were £5, 5s. 1d. and these were cancelled. Were you appointed as a delegate?—Yes.

44,842. Was that at the same meeting which appointed Rendall, or at another meeting?—I have been present at the whole of them. I was here when Mr Lyell was holding a meeting in Whalsey.

44,843. But was there a meeting recently to appoint delegates to appear before this Commission?—Yes.

44,844. And were you appointed?—I could not say.

44,845. Are you here to represent your own views?—Yes.

44,846. Or the views of the township to which you belong?—Yes, more especially.

44,847. How many crofters are in Nisthouse?—Six.

44,848. And how many cottars?—Three.

44,849. Do you represent any other township besides Nisthouse?—No.

44,850. What are the townships that share in the scattald of 2458 acres?—A number of tenants.

44,851. There seem to be 73 shares, but what are the names of the townships?—Toft, Sanswell, and Nisthouse.

44,852. Then, what is it you wish to represent to us?—I could not well say what all hands might be reflecting on.

Whalsey, Shetland. — James Arthur.

44,853. But perhaps you can say what is in your mind?—Yes.

44,854. Well, what is that?—There are various 'scruplings' about the scattald.

44,855. You want more scattald,—is that the point?—Well, I should not say it was not; I think it is true.

44,856. What is your own personal view of the matter?—The scattald we have is of no account.

44,857. What is wrong with it?—It cannot feed the animals at all; they put too many on it.

44,858. But would it be very good if they put a proper number on it?—Yes, it would.

44,859. It would be greatly improved if the cattle and sheep were in proportion to the grazing?—Yes, it would.

44,860. What stock have you yourself?—I think I have about a score of head to my family.

44,861. Twenty head of sheep?—Yes.

44,862. And how many lambs?—About an equal number.

44,863. What cattle have you?—Four cows and a calf.

44,864. Anything else?—No.

44,865. Are there any horses on the island among the crofters?—Yes, a few.

44,866. Have you a horse?—I have a share,—the tenth share of five horses.

44,867. Then, you have the horses among you to work the land?—They just go on the scattald like the sheep.

44,868. They are ponies, I suppose?—Yes.

44,869. How do you till the land in spring,—is it by means of the ponies?—No, we slave our poor bodies over it, and we have very little for it when all is done, if it comes a bad season. So it all depends on the sea, and if the sea fails us, where are we? The prices for the fish are very low.

44,870. Does each crofter in Whalsey look after his own sheep, or are they herded by a common herd?—They are supposed each to look after his own.

44,871. And every one keeps as many as he likes?—Yes.

44,872. Then, perhaps you have as much grazing as you are able to look after already?—Perhaps, but it is very little, for the whole of the sheep from the one end to the other, from Symbister to the Skaw, are all put together to go heads over heels, and they eat the place up.

44,873. Then, do you, or do you not wish more land?—My reflection for the whole is that the best of the island is taken up by the farm of Symbister, and the rest is of no account to feed the animals upon.

44,874. Is there more than one house on your croft?—Only one.

44,875. Are any of the crofts in Toft or Nisthouse divided?—Yes.

44,876. How many are divided?—Two in Nisthouse are divided, but none in Toft.

44,877. Any in Sanswell?—No.

44,878. I suppose you all depend on the sea a good deal for your livelihood?—Yes.

44,879. More than on the crofts?—Yes.

44,880. Your crofts are handy for the sea-shore?—Yes.

44,881. And for fishing?—Yes.

44,882. Mr Munro.—Did I understand you to say that you wished part of the farm of Symbister divided among the crofters of the island?—They were not free of asking it, but it was not granted.

44,883. What part did they point at, any particular part of the farm?—It was two islands on the east of Whalsey that they wanted.

44,884. Mr Gordon.—Did you say that the sheep from Symbister went down to Scarpa Point?—Yes, they go from the one end of the island to the other, outside of fences.

44,885. They mix with your sheep?—Yes, outside the fences.

44,886. Is there not a fence between the crofter land and the farm?—Yes.

44,887. And does that fence not keep the sheep in on each side?—Yes, but it is of very little account; outside the fence is of no account.

Whalsey, Shetland. — James Arthur.

44,888. As a matter of fact then, do the sheep from the farm stray over the crofters' grazings?—No.

44,889. What is it then?—The crofters' animals go into the park.

44,890. Do the farm sheep come down to Scarpa point?—No, the crofters' sheep that are outside of the fence go all to the sea, and everywhere they can go. There is many a place they cannot winter, and they go down to the ebb to feed.

44,891. Then the farm sheep do not get on to the crofters' scattald?—No, no.

44,892. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Supposing the scattald were extended, how could you be sure that the crofters would not put too much stock on it still, just as they do on their present pasture?—I doubt they might.

44,893. The Chairman.—Have you heard of the Crofters Grazings Act for regulating common grazings, under which the crofters form a committee among themselves to regulate the grazings?—Yes, just lately.

44,894. But you have not done anything to adopt it?—No; but we hear that a committee has been appointed in this island to adopt it and carry it out.

44,895. I think you and your friends should consider that Act. Now, you spoke just now about the sheep getting down to the ebb to feed. What do you mean by that?—That is the best feeding they get.

44,896. They feed upon the sea-weed?—Yes.

44,897. At ebb-tide?—Yes.

44,898. Is that their main feeding during winter?—It is.

44,899. How many months of the year do they go to the ebb?—The whole of the winter, from the end of harvest till the month of May, and all summer as well as all winter.

44,900. They take it in summer as well as winter?—Yes, most of them.

44,901. For how many months of the year would you say the grass grazing is good?—From May till November, and past that; I might say almost on to Christmas.

44,902. The crops this year are very good, are not they?—Well, we are not considering that yet; they are somewhat poor at present, but we are hoping for good weather to bring them forward.

44,903. I understand regulations have been issued applicable to some parts of this island if not to your township; but you have not got them?—No; but we hear they are to be enforced after the crops are off the ground next autumn.

44,904. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—Was there any scattald taken from you?—No, except what the outsets have done, but outside the park itself at Middle Whalsey is free to everybody.

44,905. Now, you tell us that the quality of the stock that the crofters have is exceedingly poor?—Very poor, that is the worst.

44,906. And the quality of the scattald in Mr Adie's farm is better?—It is kept better, so it must be better.

44,907. Is that because there is less stock on the land?—Yes, the stock is very small for the extent of the pasture.

44,908. The scattald is of the same quality itself, only it is kept better?—Yes.

44,909. Do I understand you to say that the crofters' sheep graze on Mr Adie's farm,—get through the fence and graze on Mr Adie's scattald?—From inside the fence?

44,910. Yes?—Oh, the sheep are well kept; he has a man for the purpose.

44,911. But do the crofters' sheep go on to Mr Adie's farm?—Yes, they creep in about it and annoy him, that is, a few of them.

44,912. Do I understand you to say that the crofters that you represent would be perfectly satisfied, or, at all events, much better pleased if every man had his own share in the scattald,—is that what you want to say?—Well, I could not say,—I never reflected upon that, because I see no scattald to get a share of.

44,913. Would it not suit you if every man were allowed to carry a certain stock and no more?—May be it might not be what I or others would desire, but it would be a just thing.

44,914. And the scattald would be very much improved, would it not? It would be better as the years go on?—Oh, yes, of course, with less stock.

44,915. What number of ponies did you say you have?—I have a tenth share of five.

44,916. Are these five grazing on the common scattald?—Just so.

44,917. Have any of your family any ponies?—No.

44,918. That is all that belongs to the house?—Yes.

PETER GILBERTSON, Brough, Whalsey (31)—examined.

44,919. The Chairman.—Were you appointed a delegate at a public meeting?—Yes.

44,920. Are you the son of James Gilbertson?—Yes.

44,921. His croft extends to 4 acres, 31 poles arable, 1 acre, 18 poles outrun, and a share in the common of 2458 acres; old rent £5, 10s. and fair rent £2, 12s.?—Yes.

44,922. What is it you wish to say to us?—That we are in need of more scattald. I represent all the rest of the island.

44,923. Just mention the townships, please.—Brough, Hamister, Marrister, Creedyknowe, Burns, Challister, and Skaw.

44,924. You represent the whole of these seven townships?—Yes.

44,925. And were these crofters from all these places at the meeting which appointed you?—Yes.

44,926. In what respect do you find the scattald you have already insufficient?—It is bad in quality; there is no grass on it.

44,927. Is that the fault of the quality of the land, or for its being over-grazed?—The quality of the grazing.

44,928. Is it or is it not over-grazed?—It is not overgrazed.

44,929. Does each crofter put any number of sheep he chooses upon the scattald?—Yes.

44,930. And cattle also?—Yes.

44,931. And ponies?—The cattle are generally inside of the dyke, unless sometimes through the day for a while, if it is a fine summer's day they may be out.

44,932. Can you give us any idea of the number of ponies there are in the townships you represent?—No, I cannot say.

44,933. Has your father a pony or a share of one?—No.

44,934. In what direction do you suggest that the scattald might be usefully extended,—I suppose it could only be extended into the farm lands of Symbister?—That is all.

44,935. What part of the farm have you in view? Do you mean a part of the farm in the island itself, or on those outlying islets, or has that matter been considered by you and your friends?—The islands or the home scattald would do.

44,936. That is to say, part of the scattald which is at present attached to the farm of Symbister?—Yes.

44,937. Can you give us any idea of the extent of scattald belonging to the farm at present?—No.

44,938. Can you tell us what extent of additional land these townships desire?—No. All the best of our scattald is taken away for cottars, all along the seashore.

44,939. How many cottars are in Brough?—There are over a dozen in the townships I have mentioned.

44,940. Has each of these cottars got stock?—Yes.

44,941. Both cattle and sheep?—Yes.

44,942. And do these cattle and sheep feed upon the crofters' scattald?—Yes.

44,943. They have no other feeding?—No.

44,944. Do the cottars pay any rent?—Yes, a little.

44,945. To whom do they pay rent?—To Mr Bruce, the proprietor, I suppose.

44,946. What is the average cottar's rent, do you think?—£1, or 30s., or thereabouts. [Mr Bruce.—From £1 to 12s. is the average]. Those that pay 12s. have no land, but only peats. Whalsey, Shetland.

44,947. Do the cottars pay for peats?—Yes, the house site and the right to cut peats, that is 12s. Peter Gilbertson.

44,948. And those who have land pay from 20s. to 30s.?—Yes, 20s. to 25s. and 30s.

44,949. Have these cottars both arable land and grazing?—Yes. Some of them have far more than the crofters have; some of them have three times as much.

44,950. Are the cottars scattered over these townships, or are they chiefly in one particular township?—Scattered over the whole.

44,951. Are the houses in these townships divided?—Some of them are divided.

44,952. Many of them?—No, not many.

44,953. Are there any divided houses in your township of Brough?—Just one, I think.

44,954. Your own croft is not divided?—No.

44,955. And there is only one divided house in your township?—Yes.

44,956. Do you live with your father?—Yes.

44,957. Are you a married man?—Yes; I am his only son.

44,958. And you live in family with your father?—Yes.

44,959. Do these townships depend mainly on the fishing?—Yes, principally.

44,960. Herring fishing and white fishing?—Yes.

44,961. Would the crofters you represent be prepared to pay such an additional rent as might be laid upon land assigned, in addition to the scattald you already have?—Oh, I think so.

44,962–63. They are able to pay?—Oh, yes.

44,964. What was your share of the herring fishing last year?—Between £12 and £20 gross.

44,965. And this year it will be more perhaps?—Yes.

44,966. This is a better year for fishing?—Yes.

44,967. Mr Munro.—To put the crofters in a fairly comfortable position, would they require really the whole of the island?—Yes, the whole of the island, and that even would not put them in a comfortable position. There are about 900 inhabitants on this small island.

44,968. What would put them in a comfortable position,—nothing in the island I suppose?—No, nothing in the island.

44,969. They would require always to supplement their living by fishing, I suppose?—Yes.

44,970. Now, could they pay a fair rent for the whole island supposing they got it?—Oh, yes.

44,971. It would go a long way to satisfy their demands and needs at present if they got that?—Oh, yes.

44,972. Mr Gordon.—What is the difference between a crofter and a cottar if the cottar has land?—Well, I don't know I am sure.

44,973. Why do you call the one a cottar?—It is people that went outside our dykes and fenced in ground there.

44,974. A cottar is a man set down on the common pasture?—Yes, who went in on our pasture and fenced in a bit of ground and built a house on it.

44,975. Does he fence his crops, or how are they protected?—He fences them.

44,976. The only distinction between a cottar and a crofter is whether he is within the township dykes?—Yes.

44,977. If he is, and holds land, he is a crofter, and if he is outside and holds land he is a cottar?—Yes, we call them cottars.

44,978. How many of these are there in the townships?—I know there are more than a dozen.

44,979. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You say that the crofts which the crofters have at present are too small?—Yes, I say so.

44,980. Would some of the crofters be willing to leave the present townships and take new holdings that might be formed on Symbister farm?—I think so; I have no doubt about it.

Whalsey, Shetland.

Peter Gilbertson.

44,981. Have they been considering that, and do they look to that as the solution of the question here?—They have considered that, I think.

44,982. When was this farm of Symbister formed?—I could not say,—it was before I was born. [Mr Bain.—It is over a hundred years old.]

44,983. The scattald was taken from the crofters, I think, in 1865?—Yes, I think so: I heard so.

44,984. Do you know whether there were ever crofters on the low ground of Symbister?—Yes, there were some crofters there: there are two crofts in Sodom and two in Whitefield.

44,985. And you think it would be an advantage to the islanders to have the whole farm of Symbister divided amongst them?—Yes, I think it would be a great advantage.

44,986. That would mean, of course, the formation of new crofts there?—Yes.

44,987. The peats are cut, I suppose, on the scattald?—Yes.

44,988. And do you say that the cottars pay to the landlord for the peats which they use?—Yes, the peats are cut out of our scattald and paid to the landlord.

44,989. These cottars have enclosed, you say, some land which they cultivate?—Yes.

44,990. And they pay for that land to the landlord also?—Yes.

44,991. When was the last cottar settled on the scattald?—The last one that I remember was about 20 years ago.

44,992. Was he placed there by the landlord, do you think?—I think he just went of his own free will.

44,993. But he paid rent to the landlord for the land which he took?—Yes, but how much or how little I don't know. He was put out of the croft he was in, and he went outside the dykes and fenced in a piece.

44,994. Do you know the total number of crofters in the island?—No, I cannot say.

44,995. Do you know the population?—The population is surely pretty near 900, or between 900 and 1000. [Mr Bain.—In 1886 it was 942.]

44,996. A great proportion of this island and all the neighbouring small islands are included in the one farm of Symbister?—Yes.

44,997. And the best of the land, I suppose, is included in that farm?—Yes, by far the best; what is outside of that farm is of no use at all; there is not a worse place in Shetland nor yet in Scotland.

44,998. The Chairman.—The population is stated to have been 942 in 1886. Can you tell us what it was at the last census, 1891?—No, I cannot tell, but there were over 1000 in Whalsey and Skerries together.

44,999. Do you know what the population was at the previous census of 1881?—No.

45,000. Can you tell us generally whether the population has been increasing?—Yes, it is always increasing; it has increased a good deal since the herring fishing commenced.

45,001. When did it commence?—They commenced with big boats in 1879, I think.

45,002. And that led to an increase of the population?—Yes.

45,003. You say there are about a dozen cottars, and we have it that you have 2458 acres of scattald, and the cottars live on the scattald. Is the land which the cottars occupy and have fenced in included in the 2458 acres, or excluded?—I don't know: it is likely to be excluded, I think. [Mr Bain.—I understand it is excluded. That area is probably the extent of the scattald when the Crofters Commission was here.]

45,004. Do the crofters pay anything for peats?—No.

45,005. It is all in the rent?—All in the rent.

45,006. Can you tell me how many large boats are in the island altogether?—There are about twenty, I think.

45,007. Boats that can go to sea for a fortnight at a time?—Well, yes, but they never go for more than a week. I believe the population of Whalsey and the Skerries at last census (1891) was 1094.

45,007A. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—In 1865, the grazing was taken from the crofters: can you tell me how the Symbister sheep grazed before that time?—They just went at large over the whole island.

45,008. Before 1865, the Symbister sheep and the crofters' sheep all grazed promiscuously?—Yes.

45,009. And in 1865, a portion was fenced in for the farm?—Yes.

45,010. Now, can you tell me how you come to say that the grazing is not overstocked just now? When did you count the stock on the grazing?—It has never been counted: some have a few and others none at all.

45,011. You cannot tell me what stock is on it just now?—No, I could not.

45,012. Not even approximately?—No.

45,013. Then, you cannot say, as a matter of fact, whether the grazing is overstocked or not?—To all appearance it is not overstocked, going through it and seeing what sheep are on it. But it is overstocked, keeping in mind the quality of the ground, which is bad.

45,014. Can you imagine that twenty years ago the grazing outside Symbister farm was as good as the grazing inside the farm is now?—No, it was not.

45,015. You think the best part was taken in for the Symbister farm?—Yes, it has always been that, because there is never anything on it except a few sheep sometimes.

45,016. Did the Crofters Commission give the cottars any right in the scattald?—I don't know, I am sure.

45,017. As a matter of fact, have the cottars that you talked to the Court about any right to graze sheep or cattle on the same scattald that you graze them on?—Whether they have right or not they graze on the scattald the same as we do.

45,018. Are there more than 73 houses having grazing rights on the 2458 acres of scattald?—There are surely that; I don't know the number.

45,019. When you say that there are people grazing on the farm other than the crofters, do I understand you to mean people paying 12s. or 10s. of rent?—Yes.

45,020. And they are grazing on it?—Yes.

45,021. But if they had no right to graze on it, and their stock was taken off, that would improve it very considerably, would not it?—Not much.

45,022. Have they not much stock?—Some of them have more stock than the crofters.

45,023. Then, if their stock were taken off, would not that improve the grazing very much?—Not much, I think.

45,024. You think it would not improve, in fact?—No, I don't think it ever will improve.

45,025. Nothing will improve it?—No, nothing will improve it, because it is useless.

45,026. You say you would take the whole farm of Symbister. Do you know what the rent of Symbister is?—The rent of Symbister in 1889, when the Crofters Commission was here, was, I think, £85, besides the islands.

45,027. But I understand you would take both the islands and the farm?—Yes.

45,028. You would not leave out the islands?—No, we would have the islands too.

45,029. Can you tell me what the rent of the whole would be?—No.

45,030. If it was £117, 10s., would you be prepared to take over that?—Yes.

45,031. And to take over the present stock at valuation?—Well, I don't know about that.

45,032. You don't think you would be able to take over the stock that is on it just now?—No, I don't think they would be able to purchase that.

45,033. Supposing the gross rental of the land part of the island, apart from what is held by the crofters, to be over £200, would they be in a position to take over all that?—Yes.

45,034. And pay the rent?—Yes.

45,035. Was the name of the squatter you spoke of John Irvine?—Yes, that is the only one I remember about.

45,036. He paid no rent for many years?—No.

45,037. Are your peats not largely cut on Mr Adie's farm?—No, none of the townships I represent.

45,038. Do you know whether a large portion of the peats of the island are cut on Mr Adie's scattald?—I don't know I am sure. I don't know about the south part of the island. [Mr James Rendall.—Yes, we cut some there.]

45,039. Are the crofters given to scalping the scattald?—They did once, but they do not now.

45,040. When did they stop?—I don't know: they have not done much in my time, but a great deal was done before that.

45,041. They are not scalping any now?—No.

45,042. The Chairman.—How many schools are in the island?—Two.

45,043. And how many churches?—Just this one.

45,044. Has any scattald been taken from you?—Yes, all the best part was taken in by cottars.

45,045. But you have not lost scattald except in so far as it has been taken in by cottars?—No, except, of course, what was added to the Symbister farm in 1865.

45,046. They take it by simply appropriating a piece, fencing it round, and cultivating a portion of it?—Yes. There is a part to the southward of Marrister that was taken in by the landlord: it belongs to the farm.

45,047. Mr Bain.—But your croft never shared in that?—Yes, it was common the same as the rest.

45,048. That was before 1865?—Yes, it might be before that.

45,049. It was all common then?—Yes, all common then. It belongs to the farm of Symbister, and there are a few crofters who have it under rent from Mr Adie.

ROBERT WISHART, Symbister, Whalsey (33)—examined.

45,050. Mr Bain.—I understand this man, who is a joiner, is not a tenant in the island at all.

45,051. The Chairman.—I will see what he says, and if he is not a competent witness, of course, we will not take him.

45,052. The Chairman.—Where do you live?—At Symbister.

45,053. Are you a joiner to trade?—Yes.

45,054. Your name is appended to an application received by the Secretary for examination as a landless man. In whose house do you live?—In a house belonging to Messrs Hay & Co.

45,055. And what rent do you pay them?—£3, 10s.

45,056. Have you any land?—No, I have no land.

45,057. Have you not even a patch for potatoes?—No, none whatever.

45,058. And do you gain your living entirely by your trade?—No, not entirely; the trade is of little account in this island. I live partly by my trade and partly by other work.

45,059. Labouring?—Yes.

45,060. You do not go to the sea?—No: I have been at sea.

45,061. But you do not live by the sea at present?—No, not at present.

45,062. What is it you wish to say to us?—I wish to be a crofter if possible, to get a bit of land to cultivate.

45,063. You wish to get a holding upon this island if it can be obtained?—Yes.

45,064. What size of holding do you wish to get?—I cannot just say the size, but I would like to get a small bit. There are four crofts that were taken away from the crofters, that is the townships of Sodom and Whitefield.

45,065. Which are now part of the farm of Symbister?—Yes.

45,066. And I take it your idea is to get a holding there?—Yes, if possible.

45,067. With some arable land and grazing attached?—Yes.

45,068. In short, you would like very much to be as well off as one of the crofters in the island?—Yes.

45,069. Could you pay a rent for such a holding?—Yes, I think so. Whalsey, Shetland.

45,070. And could you enter upon such an undertaking and put up a house without assistance?—Well, the house belonging to the croft is still there. Robert Wishart.

45,071. You would propose to repair it and reconstruct it?—Yes, the four of us want to apply for the four crofts. There are four applicants, and two of them are stopping in the houses. The houses belonged originally to the crofts.

45,072. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—When were these four crofts added to the farm of Symbister?—About 30 years ago, I think. There are two of the crofters still alive who were on it.

45,073. Where are they?—They are on this island; they are old men now.

45,074. Do you know why these four were removed at that time?—No, I could not say; I think it was just because they wanted it taken into the farm as part of the grazing.

45,075. You think it was just in order to add their holding to the farm?—Exactly so.

45,076. And is the land under cultivation at present?—No, it is under grazing on the farm of Symbister.

45,077. The Chairman.—Are Messrs Hay & Co. located here as fishcurers?—Yes.

45,078. What extent of ground have they?—They have nothing but the shop and the station.

45,079. And is your house situated on the station?—Close by it.

45,080. And you work to them?—Yes.

45,081. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—When these crofters were shifted, did they get other crofts, or were they turned out?—One of them got an inferior croft and the other three were put into little houses for shelter. They were not put out of the island.

45,082. You do not remember about it yourself?—I do not.

45,083. The Chairman.—Do you belong to Whalsey?—Yes, I was born in Symbister.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON, Sodom, Whalsey (45)—examined. William Johnston.

45,084. The Chairman.—Do you live at Sodom?—Yes.

45,085. And have you any land?—No.

45,086. Do you desire to obtain a holding if it can be got?—Yes.

45,087. Where would you have it?—Either in Sodom or in Whitefield.

45,088. Do you know about these places being brought into the farm of Symbister?—No, that is a thing I don't know about.

45,089. Do you not belong to Whalsey?—No, I belong originally to the Skerries.

45,090. That is the Outer Skerries, is it?—Yes.

45,091. Could you take a holding if you got one, and put up a house?—Yes.

45,092. And pay a rent?—Yes.

45,093. Are you anxious to obtain such a holding?—Very anxious.

45,094. How do you earn a living at present?—By fishing and labouring.

45,095. Do you work to Hay & Co.?—Yes.

45,096. And are you paid by them according to your fishing?—Yes.

45,097. You have no wage from them?—I work ashore for them and earn 3d. an hour; some days I do nothing, and other days perhaps only a few hours.

45,098. Do Hay & Co. supply you with a boat, or have you a share of a boat?—The boat I was in Mr Hamilton had a share of, and I fished to him for some time.

45,099. And now you are fishing to Hay & Co.?—No, but labouring to Hay & Co.

45,100. Do you pay a rent at present?—Yes.

45,101. What rent?—26s.

45,102. For the site of the house?—Yes.

Whalsey, Shetland. — William Johnston.

45,103. And for the right to cut peats?—Yes.

45,104. Where do you cut your peats?—In the park of the Hoga, and park of Huxter, in Mr Adie's farm of Symbister.

45,105. What is the Hoga,—is that a bit of the farm?—No, I am in the Clett folks' share of the Hoga.

45,106. You cut peats on the part of the Hoga where the township of Clett go for their peats?—Yes.

45,107. And do you cut peats anywhere else?—On the park of Huxter belonging to Mr Adie.

45,108. That is in Symbister Farm?—Yes.

45,109. Now, is this land that you have in view grazing land, or arable land, or both?—Grazing land at present, but it has been arable land before.

45,110. How long is it since it was arable land?—About 30 years.

45,111. Do you remember the transaction that took place in 1865?—No, I was not here at the time.

45,112. Mr Munro.—Are there many people in the island at present landless who desire to get land?—A good number.

45,113. Can you give us any idea of the number?—No, really I cannot, but there are a good many.

45,114. The desire is strong amongst them, I suppose, to get land?—Yes, it is.

45,115. What size of a croft do you aim at yourself?—About the common run, I suppose; that will be about seven or eight acres arable and outrun.

45,116. Would that be sufficient to maintain yourself and your family without outside work?—It may not be sufficient, but it would be a great help with the bit of earnings we get otherwise.

45,117. You would still follow the fishing?—Oh, yes.

45,118. Can you cultivate a croft and follow the fishing satisfactorily at the same time?—Yes.

45,119. The family would cultivate the croft while you were away at the fishing?—Yes.

45,120. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did you hear one of the witnesses say, that if the crofters had the whole island they would still not be in a comfortable position?—Yes, I think I heard that.

45,121. Do you agree with that?—Well, of course, if they had the whole island it would be a great help in several ways, for they are severely hemmed in at present in every way. The average that they can have at the present time is about a dozen sheep to a croft, and what benefit can that do them? None. Some years again the crop is destroyed by the gust and they get no benefit from the earth. The only thing they have to fall back upon is the fishing, and when that fails too they have nothing to depend on.

45,122. And yet, in spite of all the difficulties, the chances of seagust, and the bad land, and sometimes bad crops, you still think you could make a good thing of a croft?—Oh, yes; it would be a great help at any-rate.

45,123. Mr Gordon.—Are these crofts of Sodom and Whitefield that you mention not just about the very centre of the farm of Symbister?—They are close to the township of Sodom; there is just a fence between them and it.

45,124. Are they near Skiberhoull?—No, further east.

45,125. That is in the very centre of the pasture of the farm?—Yes.

45,126. You could not have crofts there without great inconvenience to the tenants of the farm?—I don't think it would damage the farm much.

45,127. Are there any crofts at Sodom at present?—Yes two crofts, and only a fence between them and Symbister.

45,128. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—Is it not the case that the crofts at Sodom of which you speak, are merely potato patches, without any arable land?—I don't believe but what they are cultivated, every bit of them.

45,129. But at the present moment the crofts there are only potato patches?—They are regular crofts.

45,130. You say you could pay for a farm and build a house?—Yes.

45,131. Are you considerably in debt at this moment?—No. — Whalsey, Shetland. — William Johnston.

45,132. You owe no very large debts, do you?—No.

45,133. Now, you say a great many people want land and cannot get it in Whalsey?—Yes.

45,134. Can you tell us whether that may mean half a dozen or a dozen, or thirty or forty, or a hundred, or what?—I would not wonder if it was over twenty.

45,135. Over twenty in Whalsey at this moment who could stock land?—As to their capabilities I cannot speak.

45,136. Are these twenty men, men who could build a house and stock a farm?—I cannot speak for them.

45,137. Are these men of mature years, 21 and upwards?—Yes.

45,138. Have you ever been a crofter yourself?—No, but my father was.

45,139. You have never had anything to do with the working of a croft yourself?—No.

45,140. The Chairman.—How do you dispose of sheep in this island? Are they taken to Lerwick, or do drovers come here?—Some use them for themselves.

45,141. Is the value of the sheep mainly in the wool?—Mainly in the wool.

45,142. And is the wool of sheep grown on this island largely used by the female members of the community for knitting?—Yes.

45,143. And making hosiery?—Yes, but they cannot get as much as will keep them going.

45,144. Is there a considerable manufacture of hosiery here by the women?—A great deal.

45,145. And how is it disposed of?—Sent to Lerwick and further south.

JOHN JOHNSON, Sodom, Whalsey (34)—examined. — John Johnson.

45,146. The Chairman.—Have you no land?—No.

45,147. Are you a fisherman?—Yes, I have been a fisherman, but I am labouring with Hay & Co. now.

45,148. Do you pay a rent to them?—No, I pay rent to Mr Bruce.

45,149. What rent do you pay him?—I pay 12s. for the peats. I built the house myself: it is a small house.

45,150. Are you anxious to get a holding?—Yes: the house is too small; it is not comfortable, and we cannot make it larger.

45,151. Why not?—We cannot get liberty.

45,152. Have you applied for liberty?—Yes.

45,153. And was it refused?—Yes.

45,154. What was the reason given?—The tenants that have the ground won't give liberty.

45,155. The tenants will not consent?—No.

45,156. You heard the evidence given by William Johnston?—Yes.

45,157. Is he any relative of yours?—He is an uncle of mine.

45,158. Do you concur in the evidence he gave with regard to getting a new holding?—Yes.

45,159. Could you undertake a holding, and put up a house at your own expense?—Yes: I would get a little help if I required it.

45,160. You would have no difficulty in getting help?—No.

45,161. What was your share of the fishing last year?—I was not fishing last year; I was working ashore as a labourer.

45,162. Then, I suppose, I may take you as concurring in the evidence given by your uncle?—Yes. It is a croft I was wishing, if possible.

45,163. A croft such as we have on the island already?—Yes.

45,164. With some arable land and outrun?—Yes.

45,165. And a right of grazing?—Yes; one of the crofts at Whitefield.

45,166. Have you any stock yourself?—No, I keep none: I have no liberty to keep stock.

45,167. Do you belong to Whalsey?—Yes, I was born in the Skerries.

45,168. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—What land is your house on?—On John Arthur's land, originally: John Arthur, Sodom.

45,169. It is on a croft?—Yes.

45,170. And you were refused liberty to add to your house,—is that so?—Yes.

45,171. Who built the house originally?—We built the house for ourselves; it was one of the offices belonging to the land we were applying for,—a barn or a byre.

45,172. How many apartments are in your house?—One room divided in two; and I have a wife and two children, and a mother.

45,173. Is there just one room, or two rooms?—We can only call it one room.

45,174. And one fire?—Yes, we have a small fire occasionally, but it is not very comfortable, the house is so small.

45,175. How far is the place where you live from the fence of the farm of Symbister?—The fence goes down by the side of our house: the land we are applying for is just alongside the house.

45,176. Was that the land you asked to build upon?—Yes, that is the croft we are wishing, or any land suitable about the farm.

45,177. But was there a croft next to the house you live in?—Yes, that one that the office belonged to.

45,178. What was the name of it?—Sodom.

45,179. And is anyone living in the dwelling-house of that croft?—Yes, Laurence Laurenson.

45,180. Is he a crofter?—No.

45,181. He has no land?—No.

45,182. How long have you been living there?—About 20 years.

45,183. Then, you came there as a boy?—Yes.

45,184. Was your father with you?—No.

45,185. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—You were not refused liberty by the landlord to improve your house in any way?—No.

45,186. It was the neighbouring tenants who would not give you permission?—Yes.

45,187. You do not remember Whitefield being occupied as crofters' houses, do you?—No, but there is very good evidence about it for all that.

45,188 As a matter of fact, it was so.

45,189. The Chairman.—Can you give us any idea how many men, like yourself, are in this island that have no land at all?—There is a good many.

45,190. Will there be more than twenty?—I think there will be three times that.

45,191. Scattered over the island?—Yes.

45,192. Are there any others in Sodom that have no land, except yourself and William Johnston?—No, unless Laurence Laurenson, who is an old man.

45,193. Has he no land?—No, he stops at the house on the land we are asking about.

ROBERT ANDERSON, Whitefield, Whalsey (29)—examined.

45,194. The Chairman.—Do you live at Whitefield?—Yes.

45,195. Have you any land?—No.

45,196. Are you with Hay & Co?—I fish for Hay & Co.

45,197. To whom do you pay rent?—To Mr Bruce.

45,198. What is your rent?—£1, 12s.

45,199. What do you get for that rent?—Just the four walls of the house.

45,200. And the right to cut peats?—Yes.

45,201. But no land at all?—No land.

45,202. Who put up that house?—Mr Bruce, I believe.

45,203. How long have you been there?—Over five years.

45,204. Where do you come from?—From Symbister.

45,205. Where was your croft on Symbister?—We had no croft there.

45,206. Were you a servant there?—My grandfather was cooper for Hay & Co. there.

45,207. And did he live on what is now the farm?—He lived in the township of Symbister, just above the beach. Whalsey, Shetland. Robert Anderson.

45,208. And your father, did he live there?—No.

45,209. Where did he live?—In Sandwick.

45,210. Have you the same desire as these other witnesses who have been examined to get a croft?—Yes.

45,211. Are you willing to pay rent for it, and to put up a house on it?—Yes, the house is up.

45,212. Where is the house?—The house I live in.

45,213. You just want land as near the house as can be got?—Yes, the land is just before the door: the house stands on the land.

45,214. Is there a fence in front of the house?—No.

45,215. Who occupies the land at present?—It is part of the farm.

45,216. And it is not fenced off from where you are?—No. It is fenced off from the rest of the townships.

45,217. Does the farm come close up to your door?—Yes, the house is standing on the farm.

45,218. What was your share of the fishing last year?—For the last five years the average has been £11 gross. I have no share as owner of a boat: I am only a hired man.

45,219. But it will be more this year, I suppose?—It is not more at present at anyrate.

45,220. Are you a married man?—Yes.

45,221. With what family?—Three.

45,222. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—Can you tell us the extent of Whitefield?—It is about 30 acres.

45,223. Of arable land?—Yes. During the last two years three families have had to leave the island for want of land, and take land in the Island of Yell.

45,224. The Chairman.—What are their names?—James Arthur was one.

45,225. What family had he?—A mother and two or three sisters.

45,226. He was not married?—No.

45,227. And the names of the other two?—Laurence Irvine and William Bruce.

45,228. Was Laurence Irvine a married man?—Yes.

45,229. What family had he?—Three or four children.

45,230. Was William Bruce married?—Yes, he had eight or nine children.

45,231. Where did they stay?—They stayed on the east side of the island.

45,232. What was the name of the place?—These two stayed in a place called Rooier, and James Arthur stayed at Nisthouse.

45,233. Did they try to get land on the island?—There was no chance for them to get land.

45,234. And they have got holdings in Yell?—Yes.

45,235. Who is their landlord there?—I cannot say.

45,236. That happened two years ago, you say?—Yes. A croft would be a great benefit to the like of us who have nothing to depend on but the fishing.

45,237. You have nothing but the fishing?—Yes, I have the Reserve.

45,238. Do many men on the island go to the Reserve?—About 100, I believe.

45,239. And there is a good deal got from knitting, I suppose, the hosiery by those who have wives and daughters?—Yes.

ZACHARY MACAULAY HAMILTON, Baltasound, Unst (39)—examined. Zachary Macaulay Hamilton.

45,240. The Chairman.—You are at present factor on the Garth estate at Baltasound in Unst?—Yes.

45,241. For how long were you tenant of the farm of Symbister?—For 19 years.

45,242. When did you leave it?—At Martinmas 1893.

45,243. You have nothing to do with the estate of Symbister now?—Nothing whatever.

45,244. Can you tell me the extent of the arable land of the farm?—I am afraid to say from memory

Whalsey, Shetland.

Zachary Macaulay Hamilton.

the exact extent, but I should think the whole of the arable land, including what was originally arable, but was in pasture during the currency of the lease, is about 72 or 73 acres.

45,245. This is all that has ever been cultivated?—Yes.

45,246. And, therefore, it includes Whitefield?—It does not include Whitefield.

45,247. But Whitefield has been cultivated, has it not?—Well, it has, but it can hardly be reckoned arable land; it was taken from the hill, and only cultivated for a few years.

45,248. Now, can you tell me the extent of Whitefield?—I cannot tell you the exact extent, but from the look of the eye I should say about 16 acres. [Mr Gordon.—The plan shows pretty nearly 30 acres]. Yes, but the arable land only goes about half across.

45,249. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—Can you tell us the extent of the scattald belonging to the farm of Symbister?—No, I cannot.

45,250. Can you tell us roughly what it would be?—Roughly, I should say 1100 or 1200 acres, including West Linga.

45,251–52. But not including the other small islets?—No.

45,253. And 72 or 73 acres of arable land?—Yes.

45,254. What was the rent you paid for it?—My last lease was the same as the present rent, £117, 10s.; that is after the deduction was made in respect of the land given to the crofters for increase of their holdings.

45,255. That was a sum of £9, 15s. or thereby?—I think it was about that. There was another piece taken off and given to crofters, mutually between Mr Bruce and myself, for which £2, 10s. was deducted, making £12, 5s. in all.

45,256. That was another bit taken off which was ex gratiâ given to the crofters?—Yes.

45,257. Do you remember the scattald when you came to it first?—Perfectly.

45,258. Was there any great difference between the scattald then belonging to the farm of Symbister, and that which the crofters hold?—There is a very great difference in the quality of the grazing on it, but that is simply owing to the stocking. The actual and natural quality of the land outside the fence is as good as it is inside.

45,259. Do the crofters over-stock the grazing?—They do, I think, very generally.

45,260. They use it differently from the way in which you would use it if it were in your possession?—Very much.

45,261. Now, looking at the part of Whitefield,—the 16 acres or 16 to 30 acres, would you, if you had the farm of Symbister, consider that the taking away of that bit of Whitefield would materially depreciate the value of your farm?—Most materially, for this reason: the scattald or hill ground lies out to the north, and this piece of 16 acres, or whatever size it may be, is the only bit of green ground pertaining to that scattald within reasonable reach, and you must either have your sheep entirely in upon the home farm, or they must be out upon the hill here and have this little bit of ground. The sheep, of course, want a little bit of butter to their bread the same as we do.

45,262. The Chairman.—Did you hold the farm under two successive leases, or only one?—Two leases.

45,263. For nineteen years each?—No, I took up the remainder of an old lease when I entered, which had fourteen years to run, and then I renewed for five years, which made nineteen years.

45,264. That was your total occupancy?—Yes.

45,265. Now, could we see your lease?—You can see my old lease, certainly.

45,266. I should like to see it, if you please. Now, when you took over the lease which had fourteen years to run, you took the farm, of course, as possessed by the previous tenant?—Yes, exactly.

45,267. What was the extent of arable then?—Just the same as it is now; there has been nothing either added to or taken from it.

45,268. How much of the arable land is old arable, and how much is what I might call new arable, or land under cultivation?—There are only about 33 or 34 acres under cultivation at present.

45,269. The rest is what we may call old arable?—Yes.

45,270. That could be made arable again, but has not been cultivated for a number of years?—Not for a number of years.

45,271. And not in your time?—Not in my time.

45,272. What extent of stock had you upon the farm when you were working it as tenant?—On the home farm I kept 320 ewes and about ten to a dozen cattle.

45,273. How many horses?—Just a pair of working horses.

45,274. You only required a pair?—Only a pair.

45,275. You were asked a question about over-stocking. Is it a fact that here each crofter puts what stock he chooses upon the scattald?—So I believe.

45,276. There is no limit?—There is no limit.

45,277. And each crofter looks after his own stock, such as it is?—Such as it is.

45,278. Was the enlargement granted by the Crofters Commission opposed?—No, we did not resist it.

45,279. Did you take up any plea of material damage there?—No. I knew the circumstances the people were placed in, and I think I could have objected successfully to the enlargement, but knowing their circumstances I was willing that they should have this, so under a joint-minute it was agreed to. [Mr Bain.—There were objections on behalf of the landlord, but these were afterwards adjusted. The landlord took the legal plea of material damage, but he gave it up afterwards.]

45,280. You said you knew the circumstances of the people. What were the special circumstances which induced you to take a conciliatory position in that matter?—The crofters of Clett and Sandwick were very much shut in. The general scattald of the island, to which they had a right, was at the other side of the farm, and they had no means of getting at it. As a matter of fact, a few of them had one or two sheep in the general scattald during summer; but practically they were unable to enjoy the use of it.

45,281. They were practically without grazing ground?—They were.

45,282. And you felt that it was a disadvantage that should be got over as far as possible?—As far as possible.

45,283. Is it your opinion that if these 2458 acres were grazed under proper regulations by those who presently have a right to the grazing, that would be sufficient for them?—I think so. I am quite certain that if it were grazed in the same way that the farm is grazed, in five or six years there would be no difference between the quality of the grazing inside and outside the fence.

45,284–85. Is the soil the same?—The soil is identically the same.

45,286. What soil is it?—Moss.

45,287. There is no limestone here?—No limestone.

45,288. I suppose it is correct, as stated by one of the witnesses, that the sheep feed during the later part of the year and in the beginning of the year on the shore at ebb-tide?—They always do: the native sheep do so, even if they have the very best of pasture.

45,289. Does it consist with your knowledge that there is a considerable hosiery trade done here?—That is done all over the Shetland Islands.

45,290. Would you say,—because you have a very thorough knowledge of this island,—would you say that the island is over-populated?—I think it is.

45,291. It seems to have a population of nearly 1100 including the islanders?—That includes the Skerries.

45,292. How many are in the Skerries?—I think somewhere about 170,—I am not quite sure, but I think about that.

45,293. That is the Skerries on the east side?—The Outer Skerries, where the lighthouse is.

45,294. The islands that were mentioned to us,—West Linga, East Linga, and the neighbouring islets on the east and west of Whalsey, are held along with the farm?—Yes.

45,295. Are they part of the farm?—Yes.

45,296. And included in the rent?—Included in the rent.

45,297. Would the assignment to crofters of these islands or some of them cause material damage to the farm?—I think so.

45,298. Why?—The islands are required for the shifting of the stock and the grazing of the stock. I should mention that only one half of the island of East Linga belongs to the estate of Symbister.

45,299. And the other half?—To the estate of Lunna.

45,300. But it is held as part of the one farm?—Yes.

45,301. But separately rented, I suppose?—Yes. It is rented by the tenant of Symbister, but there is a reservation in the lease that if Lunna resume their half the tenant gets an equivalent deduction.

45,302. Are these islands used for wintering purposes?—Yes.

45,303. Mr Gordon.—Are the two townships of Huxter and Clett still the worst off townships in the island for pasture?—Not Huxter, but Sandwick and Clett.

45,304. Does Huxter not participate in this extension of grazings which was granted?—Huxter did participate, but Huxter can get to the general scattald, such as it is.

45,305. It is at the very southmost corner of it?—It is.

45,306. Would it cause very material damage to the farm provided the portion of the hill grazings lying to the south of Huxter were given?—An increase of the extension they have already got would injure the farm, certainly, but not so materially as Whitefield would.

45,307. Looking at the map, I would think it would cause possibly the least injury of anything that could be done?—It would.

45,308. And would benefit those crofting townships that are at present the worst off for grazing?—Yes.

45,309. You have been a long time living in the island: perhaps you will tell us about those harbours at Symbister and North Voe. Are they pretty safe harbours?—North Voe is a pretty safe harbour; Symbister is not safe.

45,310. Is there any demand, or would there be a demand, provided there was a supply, for small holdings of say half an acre each there for potato land for fishermen?—I believe there would.

45,311. What do you think of the benefit to the island generally of giving up a small part of the farm of Symbister in the neighbourhood of one or other of these two harbours? How would that meet the wants of the island?—I believe it would meet the wants of the island very well.

45,312. Do you think they would be taken advantage of if they were available?—I believe they would.

45,313. Small holdings of potato land and house stances?—These would certainly be taken advantage of.

45,314. I think one of the witnesses mentioned that if they got the whole island it would not be sufficient to put them in a comfortable position, and I quite agree with him, looking at a number of people and the amount of available land; but a little might possibly be done for the relief of the congestion, especially of the cottars, by small holdings for fishermen?—Yes.

45,315. In the neighbourhood of one or other of the best of these harbours?—Yes,

45,316. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know whether these islands that are now in the farm of Symbister were ever occupied by crofters?—I don't think so; not for many years at any rate. The proprietor, who kept the farm of Symbister in his own hands, always occupied the islands.

45,317. And you think these could not be granted without material damage to the farm?—Certainly, it would materially injure the letting value of the farm.

45,318. Then, with regard to Whitefield, that is the land that was formerly held by crofters?—I believe it was for a short time.

45,318A. Why do you think it was for a short time?—The crofters were not very long on it.

45,319. They reclaimed the land, did they not?—Not entirely: it was reclaimed by Mr Bruce, so I am informed, when he had it in his own hand.

45,320. Have you any idea how long it was held by crofters?—Only from hearsay.

45,321. And you think that could not be granted to crofters without material damage to the farm?—No, I think it would injure the letting value of the farm immensely if Whitefield was given, because it lies right in the middle of it.

45,322. But still the farm of Symbister existed when Whitefield was held by crofters?—Certainly, the farm of Symbister existed, but the whole stock belonging to the farm of Symbister was grazed pro indiviso along with the crofters over the whole ground.

45,323. I quite understand that; but Whitefield was occupied by them as their own holding, and was cultivated by them?—That is so.

45,324. So that it cannot be absolutely essential to the existence of the farm?—But the stock of Symbister Farm grazed over the crofts of Whitefield in winter the same as over the rest of the island. It grazed over the whole place.

45,325. Over the arable land of the place as well as the outrun?—Yes, the arable land also. As soon as the corn is cut and the crops in, then the hill gates are taken up and the stock allowed to graze over the whole place. There is no such thing as new grass.

45,326. It has never been cultivated since the crofters left it?—Never. It would be most injurious to the farm to cultivate it.

45,327. Then, do you agree that the arable land of Symbister is superior to the arable land held by the crofters?—Some parts are, and some are not. I don't think the intrinsic quality of the land is better, but it has been better done to.

45,328. Better managed?—Better managed. You can soon turn very good land into very bad by mismanagement and continuous cropping.

45,329. But the land in Whitefield has not been improved by the farmer?—No, it has been lying in grass, which, of course, improves it.

45,330. But was it not improved and reclaimed partly by the crofters?—I don't think so; I think it was reclaimed by Mr Bruce.

45,331. I think you mentioned yourself that some of it was taken in from its natural condition and made arable; do you say that the crofters did nothing of that?—It is only from hearsay that I am giving this evidence. I believe that Mr Bruce took it in, and wrought it as far as it could be wrought with horses, and paid the men so much a day for trenching it. That is my information; whether it is correct or not I cannot say, but, no doubt, some of the older men present will be able to tell you.

45,332. Presently, at any rate, there is no doubt that the grazing on the farm of Symbister is much superior to that on the crofters' scattald?—Undoubtedly.

45,333. And the cropping land is also better?—Part of it, not the whole.

45,334. Don't you think it would be a very great benefit to the people to have this land of Symbister divided among them, or what is your opinion?—I question if it would; I don't think it would be any benefit.

45,335. How?—Unless there were scattald regulations; unless they adopted the Grazings Act.

45,336. I quite agree that that is necessary, but you see that is the law now, and they can easily adopt it?—True, it is the law, but it is optional; and if they do not take advantage of it it is no good.

45,337. But let us suppose that they did adopt the regulations which you think—and I agree with you—are necessary, why should it not be beneficial for them to have this farm divided among them?—It would, no doubt, benefit them if they had that, but if they overstocked it in the same way as they over-stock what they already have, it would not be any benefit.

45,338. But there is no reason why they should not adopt sensible regulations with regard to stocking?—No reason that I know of, but, as a matter of fact, it has not been done.

Whalsey, Shetland.

Zachary Macaulay Hamilton.

45,339. You are not aware whether it may not have been adopted in some townships?—Well, it was not adopted when I left the island.

45,340. The Act is not a very old one, and the people may be only just getting acquainted with it?—Yes.

45,341. Then, you have said that the women here are engaged in the knitting industry to a great extent. Don't you think it would be a very great advantage to the crofters to have sheep of their own, so that they would be able to have wool for their industry?—Undoubtedly.

45,342. Do you think they would be able to pay as good a rent for this farm if it were divided among them as is paid by the farmer?—I really cannot say that; at present, I consider that suppose it were divided up at its present rent, it would make the new crofts very much dearer than the present rents.

45,343. Even keeping in view the superior quality of the land?—Yes.

45,344. Then, is it your opinion really that the crofters hold at a cheaper rate than the large farmer?—It is.

45,345. Looking at the quality of the land they hold respectively you think so?—Yes.

45,346. I suppose the houses of the crofters have been put up by the people themselves, as a rule?—Oh, no.

45,347. Is that not the case?—All done by the proprietor. There may be an individual case where it has been done by the tenant, but the great majority have been put up by the proprietor, and until recent years kept up by the proprietor. Of course, after the passing of the Crofters Act the repairs and upkeep fall on the tenants.

45,348. It is rather an exceptional state of matters to hear of the proprietor building and keeping up the crofters' houses?—That is common over the whole of Shetland.

45,349. Without any help from the crofters at all?—Well, the crofters usually put on the roofs. The proprietor built the walls and supplied the wood and all that sort of thing, and the tenants put on the roofs. That was the usual custom.

45,350. Have the crofters made any improvements on their houses since the passing of the Act?—Some of them have improved immensely and some of them have not. Some are letting them go to destruction.

45,351. But you are able to say that several have improved their houses?—Yes.

45,352. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I would like to understand the exact use to which the islands belonging to the farm are put?—In East Linga and the other two small islands we winter hoggs which we cannot do at home; and the large island of Linga West was used exclusively for Shetland stock, so as to be able to breed and rear them pure, while the small islands to the west were used for wintering their lambs, with the exception of Wether Holm, which was used as a grazing for feeding cattle.

45,353. What class of sheep is grown on Symbister farm?—Blackfaced ewes and cross lambs.

45,354. Is it the same class of sheep on the tenants' land?—No; native sheep, with the exception of the island I referred to.

45,355. The Chairman.—Mr Maccallum asked you about the crofters improving their houses. Can you tell me how many new houses have been built since the passing of the Crofters Act?—So far as I know, only one, since the passing of the Act.

45,356. But a number have been improved?—Yes, by taking off the old roof, raising the walls, and putting on felt.

45,357. What is the total acreage of Symbister Farm, the land leased to you?—I am sorry I cannot give you it exactly, but approximately it is between 1100 and 1200 acres, including the islands.

45,358. When you took over the remainder of the lease, what was the rent?—£170.

45,359. Was that an increase or a decrease on the previous rent?—It was the current rent. Whalsey, Shetland.

45,360. And what rent did you pay when you took the farm for five years more?—I got a reduction of 25 per cent., which made the rent £129, 15s., from which you have to deduct the additions given to crofters, £12, 5s. Zachary Macaulay

45,361. And that brings out the amount at which it now stands, £117, 10s.?—Yes.

45,362. Have you any cottars or farm servants living on the farm?—Farm servants.

45,363. How many?—Three.

45,364. Would you just tell us, for I think I forgot to ask you, what are the buildings on the farm?—There is the farm house, and there is a very extensive steading,—the most extensive steading in Shetland.

45,365. Is that of recent erection?—It was built about 40 or 50 years ago. It was built the same time as Symbister House, which was begun in 1828.

45,366. Are there policy grounds round Symbister House?—One park.

45,367. You spoke about continuous cropping by the crofters. Would you say that continuous cropping is almost a necessity on their part?—In some cases it is, in others it is not.

45,368. Are the holdings large enough to cultivate by rotation?—What I mean is that where there are three or four crofters in a township, if they chose to work in harmony with each other they could work their land in rotation, because then they could keep the stock off it in winter.

45,369. But taking it that each crofter keeps himself to himself as it were, there must be continuous cropping, I suppose?—Almost. Of course, some of them can fence in, and if they chose to unite the expense of fencing should be reduced.

45,370. Mr Gordon.—Is this very large steading, which you have described, in full occupation at present?—Yes.

45,371. Is it required for the wants of those 70 acres?—No, but at one time the whole land was cultivated, and then it was required.

45,372. The ceasing to cultivate a large proportion of the farm has been owing to its being found unprofitable, I suppose?—Yes, it was found that grazing paid better.

45,373. The Chairman.—Referring to the enlargement which was granted under the joint-minute that has been alluded to,—setting aside any question of material damage, do you consider that that enlargement is an adequate enlargement for those to whom it was granted?—Well, I cannot say that it is. [Mr Adie.—I consider it has been a great drawback to the farm; it excludes them entirely from any sea right].

THOMAS ADIE, Symbister, Whalsey (45)—examined. Thomas Adie

45,374. The Chairman.—You are the tenant of Symbister farm?—Yes.

45,375. When did you enter into occupation?—At Whitsunday 1893.

45,376. Do you hold it under a nineteen years' lease?—Yes.

45,377. Are you the lessee of the Outer Skerries?—No.

45,378. Is that your brother?—He was lessee.

45,379. Mr Bain, acting as Agent for Mr Bruce of Symbister.—You heard the evidence given by Mr Hamilton?—Yes.

45,380. Can you tell us the extent of the Whitefield portion of your farm?—I should think it would be about 76 or 77 acres.

45,381. Then, you agree with Mr Hamilton as to the extent of it?—That is the arable ground; but I consider that to be the very utmost that it is.

45,382. Supposing these 76 or 77 acres to be taken from the farm of Symbister, do you agree with Mr Hamilton in thinking that that would destroy the value of your farm materially?—I do, owing to the way in which the hill pasture of the farm is situated.

45,383. And would the taking away of the island have a similar effect?—It would.

45,384. You would not willingly part with either of these?—No, I would not willingly part with either.

45,385. Your rent is £117, 10s.?—Yes.

45,386. I understand you have not yet got your copy of the lease from Mr Bruce?—No, the lease is signed, but I have not yet received my copy.

45,387. These are the Conditions of Let on which you took the farm, I believe (producing document)?—Yes, these seem to be the Conditions.

45,388. If the Court would prefer it, I will lodge a copy of the lease. [The Chairman.—If you please; that would be more regular.]*

45,389. Mr Gordon.—In reference to Whitefield, if that portion of the farm were put under crofters would it necessitate your driving the sheep through a very narrow neck of land between the crofting ground and the loch, before you got them from the arable part of the farm to the hill pasture?—Yes.

45,390. Is that your main objection to parting with Whitefield?—Yes; and the want of the arable land such as it is in the centre of the farm.

45,391. But it would be very inconvenient to have the sheep forced through this narrow piece of ground?—Yes, the farm is practically divided in two by the hill,—the Hoga and the home towns go together, and Whitefield and the backlying part of the hills.

JAMES RENDALL, Clett, recalled—examined.

Please your honour I would like to add a few words.

45,392. The Chairman.—We shall be glad to hear what you have to say.—I would wish you to take into consideration the crooked way in which the fence was run when we got the scattald. It was run in such a direction that two-thirds of the fence could have taken in twice as much ground, which made us pay double the money we might have paid for the fence.

45,393. The crooked fence is more expensive?—Yes, in the first place, it was made more expensive in that way; and in the second place, every shelter was fenced off for the farm and away from the crofters, so that in a severe winter our sheep would all die off if we did not protect them in our own crofts.

45,394. There is no protection to sheep from the shape of the ground?—No, there is not; it is mostly all bare and wet, and during winter it is mostly all bogs and peat moss.

* The lease, which is dated 7th May 1894 and runs for nineteen years from Martinmas 1893, with a break in favour of both parties at the end of the first ten years, was produced and found to be in the ordinary terms.

[ADJOURNED.]

FIFTY-FOURTH SITTING.

Lerwick, Shetland.

LERWICK, SHETLAND, July 24, 1894.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
Rev. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

ANDREW SMITH, Crofter, Vadsgarth, Cunningsburgh (40)—examined. Andrew Smith.

45,395. The Chairman.—Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

45,396. The area of the croft is 1 acre 3 roods 22 poles arable, 1 acre 37 poles outrun, and a share in a common of 730 acres, divided equally with the tenants of North and South Cunningsburgh. The old rent of the croft was £3, 5s., and the 'fair rent' is £1, 13s.?—Yes.

45,397. Were you appointed as a delegate at a public meeting?—Yes.

45,398. Where was the meeting held?—In Cunningsburgh.

45,399. And were some others appointed along with you?—Yes.

45,400. Have you a written statement?—Yes.

45,401. Kindly read it:—

'At a meeting of South Cunningsburgh crofters, held 'on the 22nd July 1894, it was agreed to lay the 'following statement before the Royal Commission '(Highlands and Islands, 1892).

'In 1872 the present Mr John Bruce of Sumburgh 'raised the rents in South Cunningsburgh to a high 'figure. The Crofters Commission reduced these rents 'largely, in 1889. When the rents were raised 'nothing was said about taking away the scattald or 'hill-pasture. It was understood by the crofters that 'it would still be held by them as formerly. But, 'shortly afterwards, Mr Bruce, by his ground-officer, 'asked them to sign a paper giving it up. "You need '"not fear to sign it," the officer said, "you will still '"get your animals kept on the scattald."

'This promise was broken. Soon the best part of 'the scattald was enclosed, and the crofters' stock 'driven out. No compensation was given for this. 'The rent which had been charged before the scattald 'was taken had still to be paid. It was a great 'injustice, and caused much ill-feeling which has not 'died out yet.

'The present crofters wish back the scattald which 'Mr Bruce took in 1872.

'In 1889 they made an application to the Crofters 'Commission for part of it. The application was not 'in proper form, and was withdrawn. Another applica-'tion was made, but, in the interval, in order to 'defeat it, Mr Bruce sold the scattald to his brother, 'Colonel Bruce, who let it to another brother, 'Lieutenant Bruce.

'There is no hope of getting anything from Mr 'Bruce or his family.

'The scattald now let to Lieutenant Bruce would be 'a great benefit to the crofters if given to them. It 'would enable them in these hard times to keep sheep, 'which would furnish wool for knitting purposes. This 'is very much wanted. It would give employment to 'many. There is a demand for more land for pasture. 'The scattald referred to is nearly 1000 acres in 'extent, but its annual value is only about £55. It 'can keep over 1000 sheep well. In the neighbour-'hood there are the farm of Tow, the old crofts in the 'cliffs, and at Vadsgarth and Shumire (now forming Lerwick, Shetland. — Andrew Smith.

'part of Lieutenant Bruce's sheep-run), the island of 'Mousa, Burland, and Pickigarth. All these were 'once occupied by crofters. There are people in 'Cunningsburgh and Sandwick who would willingly 'take up these old crofts.

'In the name of the meeting,

(Signed) 'ANDREW SMITH.,
Chairman.'

45,402. The meeting was held last night?—Yes.

45,403. What extent of common grazing have you?—I have no common grazing except the 3 acres which the Commission went over.

45,404. But have you any grazing in common with other crofters?—A share of the hill scattald that Mr Bruce left at the time he fenced the 1000 acres.

45,405. Then the other scattald you have been telling us about in this paper extends to about 1000 acres?—About that.

45,406. And would graze 1000 sheep?—That is Mr Bruce's statement of what he grazes on it.

45,407. Does he graze 1000 ewes on it?—Lambs or ewes,—1000 head.

45,408. Do you yourself remember when that grazing formed a part of the crofters' grazing?—I do.

45,409. It was taken away, you say, in 1872?—Yes, in 1872; it was taken from the tenants about the 16th day of June, when there was no market,—at least the crofters' sheep were driven outside the fencing at a time when there was no market for them. My father had at that time to sell his ewes at 2s. 6d. a-piece, what he could sell; and what he did not sell had to lie outside and die. When the sheep broke through the fences they were threatened with the shepherds' dogs, and kept outside.

45,410. What head of sheep stock had your father at this time?—Between seventy and eighty head.

45,411. To himself?—To himself.

45,412. What was the total stock kept upon the land at the time by the crofters?—The stock kept upon the land was somewhat more, because in the summer time the crofters' queys and stots were put to this hill along with the sheep, also ponies; and that allowed the grass they had to eat now to become bog hay for their winter feeding.

45,413. Do you remember the names of the townships that were in these places you have mentioned, which now form part of one compact grazing?—Yes, I can remember them. In Vadsgarth 3 acres belong to the house; 11 or 12 acres more land is in the farm. Then, there is another township adjoining that, which they call Shumire, and one adjoining that again called Blumire. These are all now in Mr Bruce's farm.

45,414. And what are the names of the others?—Catpond in the Clifts of Cunningsburgh, and Clevigarth. There were two crofters' houses in a place called Clifts, also four in Pickigarth and four in Burraland.

45,415. Were there any in Mousa?—There were two,—that was before I was born, but all the others are cases of crofts that existed during my recollection of thirty or forty years.

45,416. But is it the fact that at one time there were crofters on Mousa?—Most decidedly; the remains of their houses are there still.

45,417. What farm does that land, that you say is in one grazing, belong to?—The grazing farm that it belongs to, through the letting of it from one brother to the other, as I understand, belongs to Lieutenant Bruce.

45,418. By what name does the farm go?—The farm of Sumburgh so far as I know; it is all in one family.

45,419. Has there been, since the loss of that pasture in 1872, a great want of grazing felt by the tenants whom you represent?—Most decidedly; that is where all their grievance is.

45,420. And if proper means could be found, you desire the restoration of that land?—We do, decidedly, as one man.

45,421. The case you present to us is for restoration of these 1000 acres, or whatever the extent may be, of grazing which was lost in 1872?—Yes.

45,422. And you would be satisfied if you had that?—Yes, we would be satisfied if we had that, or if crofts were laid down. It is all one sheep-run. Lerwick, Shetland. — Andrew Smith.

45,423. Mr Gordon.—How many people were turned out of the pasture at the same time that your father's sheep were turned off?—The whole of the crofters belonging to the late Mr Bruce's estate at that time, exclusive of the few sheep that they keep on the said 350 acres that belonged to them then. The South Cunningsburgh scattald was all enclosed to the extent of about 1000 acres, and at that time, or before anything that I remember, there were hogg marches set down. Then the North Cunningsburgh tenants claimed the share of the hill scattald as theirs by marches up till the time when the Crofters Commission came, and the valuators came on it, and then they equalised North Cunningsburgh scattald and South Cunningsburgh, and made it all as one. All the tenants round about had to take their sheep in the month of June at the same time. They got no warning at Martinmas.

45,424. How many people were there at the time?—I could not say exactly, but I would think about fifty or sixty tenants that were holding sheep in the district at that time.

45,425. There would not be very many sheep to each of them?—Oh, they all had a good trifle of sheep. It is not exactly the produce of the mutton or the market, but it is the knitting that was the main thing. Now, the great drawback we have at the present time is that the sheep Mr Bruce has are no good: they are Highland blackfaces, and damage the croft as well, and the wool is no good. It is only by the produce of the women's work that the circumstances of the people in the place can be improved.

45,426. And is the application of which you spoke to the Chairman, an application for extension of holdings, or for new holdings?—Both for extension of grazings and for new holdings. There are a great many men who are willing to take the lands that may be laid down for new holdings.

45,427. Is there much arable land in this sheep grazing?—I cannot give you the average, but all the crofts that I mentioned are in this run.

45,428. And do you mean that the people were turned out of the crofts, as well as the sheep turned out of the hill, at that time?—The people were turned out of the crofts in this way; they were not turned out by violent evictions, but by taking the scattald, and by being rack-rented. It came to this that they could not pay their rents, and when that happened Mr Bruce just called a roup and sold all their effects. They had nothing left, and it behoved them to shift and go.

45,429. Did they remove from their arable crofts and houses at the same time that their sheep were removed from the hill?—Yes, about a year after, and some the same year.

45,430. How many people then left their holdings?—Eight farmers.

45,431. Eight farmers left their holdings at or about the time when the sheep were turned off the scattald?—Yes.

45,432. Is there any fishing done in the neighbourhood of these crofting holdings?—Yes, there is a fishing station.

45,433. Is there a boat harbour?—A little harbour called Aiths Voe.

45,434. Is it a safe harbour where people could prosecute the fishing with comparative safety?—That is hard to tell. I have prosecuted the fishing all my time.

45,435. Where is the nearest safe harbour?—There is none nearer than Lerwick.

45,436. And what distance are you from Lerwick?—Between 8 and 9 miles.

45,437. Are the people still living in that neighbourhood in the habit of bringing their fish to Lerwick?—In summer time the herring caught is all taken to Lerwick, with the exception of two or three boats.

45,438. Do the people there follow the white fishing?—They do, and some people cure for themselves; others send the fish to a merchant there, Thomas Tulloch, who is a curer.

45,439. Now, suppose the people were reinstated in these crofts, would Lerwick be the nearest market to which they could bring their fish?—Yes, except the present market they have with Thomas Tulloch.

45,440. Where is his place?—At Mailsaire, Cunningsburgh.

45,441. Is that near Aiths Voe?—Close to it.

45,442. Is there any secure harbour there?—It is a place where herring boats generally go.

45,443. Could you land fish there in ordinary circumstances?—Yes, except with gales from the south-east or southerly.

45,444. Do many of the crofters in that district follow the white fishing?—Mostly all follow the crofting and fishing together.

45,445. They follow the white fishing more or less along with the herring fishing?—They cannot do the one without the other, because the crofts are very small, and never could keep them, unless they followed the whole thing through.

45,446. Are there any people in your neighbourhood, or in the district which you represent, who are exclusively fishermen?—No, none. Well, there are a few cottars whose fathers have had land, but there is no land for them, so they just follow the fishing.

45,447. Are there many cottars there?—Not very many.

45,448. How many would there be?—There are only three or four in Cunningsburgh that follow the fishing specially.

45,449. Most of the fishing population of Shetland would prefer to have a small croft along with the fishing?—They think it would lighten them in the spring, when the weather is too rough to fish. They could then do a little work on crofts, and it is, as a rule, small crofts that do not take much ploughing, that they want. When the fine weather comes they return to the fishing, and, between the two, they generally make a fair living.

45,450. Do the crofters in this district prefer large or small crofts?—I don't think they would care about large crofts, that would keep them from the fishing.

45,451. They would like crofts that would not take up too great a part of their time?—Well, say one-half of their time.

45,452. Do they keep a couple of cows and a few sheep,—is that the general stock?—Yes, about that.

45,453. Are any ponies kept in your district?—A few.

45,454. Do you find the rearing of ponies profitable?—It would be, if there were anywhere to rear them, but they have no place to rear them on.

45,455. You find the want of land in the neighbourhood of your crofts operates against that?—Yes.

45,456. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Is this farm of Sumburgh composed altogether of the scattald that was taken from the crofters?—Yes, it is composed of the scattald and the laid down land.

45,457. Then, was there a farm of Sumburgh before 1872?—There was a farm at Sumburgh-Head and a farm at Sandwick where the mansion house is. But there was no farm at Cliffs before it was taken from the crofters.

45,458. Mr Munro.—From the information you have given us here to-day I gather that there is considerable knitting and spinning industry carried on in Cunningsburgh; is that so?—Yes, and when the hills were taken from the crofters, if it had not been that there were merchants who supplied worsted, pity the women for that industry.

45,459. Does the scarcity of land operate against prosecuting that industry to sufficient advantage?—It does, because we cannot keep them, and now we have no chance to keep them at all. If we keep three Shetland ewes on the bit of scattald we have for each of us, the produce in the shape of wool for knitting would not repay us for the keep.

45,460. If you got back the scattald you were deprived of in 1872, and got an extension of your holdings, would that enable you to prosecute the knitting and spinning industry to better advantage?—It would.

45,461. You say you have not been able to obtain an extension from Mr Bruce?—We have asked, and been refused it.

45,462. Then, your only hope lies in a change of the law to enable you to get it?—That is all the hope we have, because the Crofters Act has been made a hammer for us from the day it came out. All the hope we have is from Parliament, and it is a good job we have a hope there.

45,463. You have no hope whatever of obtaining anything from Mr Bruce?—Nothing, except what the Act gives; we have nothing else to look to.

45,464. The Chairman.—You say the Crofters Act has been made a hammer for you; in what way?—I have hardly been out of this Court-house for the last six months since the Commission was here.

45,465. How do you mean?—Because I am always being taken up on innocency, and nothing has been proved against me yet. Mr Bruce thinks I am an agitator for the place, but I am nothing of the kind. Another thing is that we have very little show; I do not have very much show here; I am only a poor man without a pocket. Mr Galloway, the Procurator-Fiscal, is Mr Bruce's legal adviser, and I have no show to go to him, and I have no show to go to any other man. I have no money to afford it, and I am always here.

45,466. How often have you been here?—First of all, Mr Bruce put a barbed wire on the croft you rented to me. I told his servant that I was determined to have it taken off by legal steps within twenty-four hours as a danger to my children. I raised an action in this Court, which cost me a lot of both trouble and money, and, in the end, the wire was taken off. Then there was a fence broken down, no one knew by whom, but I was brought to the Court here, because they thought I had done it after the barbed wire business. I was taken in here and hammered away here, Court after Court, till latterly he slipped me away. There was no reason for it except just this; it is my belief that it was because I applied to the Crofters Commission. It is the truth I am stating.

45,467. You say, in the paper you have read, that you were asked by Mr Bruce to sign a paper giving up the scattald. Have you a copy of that paper?—No, the sheriff-officer took good care to keep all these papers. I think he or Mr Bruce has them all yet.

45,468. Now, suppose this land, by some subsequent process, were to be assigned to you and those you represent, in enlargement of holdings, would you be prepared to pay a fair rent for it?—Yes, most decidedly; that is just what we want.

45,469. Can you tell me how many cottars are in the township you represent?—I think there are three or four cottars without land all the year round, but it is just because there is no land to give them.

45,470. And do these cottars live by the fishing?—Yes, as they have no land of their own, they may get a little patch from others to grow a few potatoes on.

45,471. They do not pay any rent?—They pay rent for the cottage they live in.

45,472. To the landlord?—To the landlord.

45,473. To whom are you paying rent just now?—To Mr Bruce.

45,474. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Shetland Proprietors.—Is your scattald allocated just now under the Commission Grazings Act? Has there been any application of that Act to your scattald?—That is a thing that we would very much like, so far, but if we were to get that Act to cover us in the meantime, it is no more than we have; we have only a peat bog belonging to the tenants; we need not care whether we have scattald or not.

45,475. Had you had any meeting to apply the principles of the Commission Grazings Act?—We had none, and none of the other proprietors alongside of us, because, although they are paying rent for the scattald, they do not feel inclined to quarrel with us, even if our sheep were to stray on to them, or theirs to us.

45,476. Then, there is no regulation on your scattald?—There is no regulation as yet.

45,477. How many sheep may there be feeding on

Lerwick, Shetland.

Andrew Smith.

the scattald?—I can give no estimate of that: I would have to go right from Quartf to the south, if I did that. I may have one, or two, or three, or four; my sheep may be here to-day and away to-morrow, and, if they come to Mr Bruce's fence, they may be poinded.

45,478. Have the cottars got sheep on the scattald?—They have no sheep in my district, and as to the other district I cannot say.

45,479. Do the cottars keep sheep on the scattald?—I dare not say whether they do or not; they may; I don't know.

45,480. Is the stock of sheep on the scattald in your opinion more than it will feed?—Yes, it is more than it will feed, because the crofters' stock, which feeds there in summer, has to be taken home in winter to be fed on sea ware, and to be hand-fed; but, if it were on the scattald all the time, I don't think the scattald would keep 40 sheep.

45,481. Then, you think the scattald is over-stocked?—It is only over-stocked in the sense that people keep them, and plenty people buy from the shops to feed them in winter.

45,482. Over what extent of ground do your sheep run at present?—I could not give you any estimate of that. I might have a sheep going from Mr Bruce's fence coming along there to-day, and it might be on the other side of the cliffs to-morrow.

45,483. You say your scattald is 770 acres; is this fenced in?—My scattald is 730 acres, and it is not fenced; only the one side that Mr Bruce occupies.

45,484. Then, as a matter of fact, your sheep and the neighbouring tenants' sheep feed in common?—Yes, most decidedly.

45,485. Have you any sheep on the south side of the enclosure?—None.

45,486. Have any of the other Cunningsburgh people?—I cannot say: they might have one, or they might have two or six; or, again, they might not have one.

45,487. You said you have been often in this Court?—Yes, I have, and you are well aware of that, are you not? Are you finding any depredation charges against me here?

45,488. Were any of the cases in which you were brought here criminal cases, at the instance of the Fiscal? [The Chairman.—I cannot allow that question to be put. You are entitled to ask whether the witness has been convicted of any criminal offence]. Have you been convicted in this Court of any criminal offence?—I have been convicted in this Court for a criminal offence, said to have been committed by me on John Bruce of Sumburgh's estate.

45,489. The Chairman.—What was the offence?—There were ponies belonging to a Cunningsburgh crofter who was in Lerwick, and he received a letter from his agent to receive the ponies. The ponies were thought and understood by me to be at the house in Tow. It was between 10 and 11 o'clock at night, and the man that had the ponies asked me to come along with him and drive the ponies to the public road.

45,490. What was the charge that was made against you?—The charge was breach of the peace.

45,491. There was no charge of theft?—Oh, no; that is one thing that he cannot say against me.

45,492. Mr Small.—Is there any rotation of crops in your land?—What do you mean?

45,493. How do you cultivate your arable land; do you follow a rotation of cropping?—In most cases, where the land is cultivated, it takes the one-half of the present croft to grow potatoes for the house, and it can do that only for five or six months; the other half is generally put under corn, or laid down in field or hay.

45,494. And the next year, what do you do with the ground?—The ground with potatoes is generally cleaned with manure and turned to corn again, and the other land is turned over to potatoes.

45,495. And the third year?—Well, if a man has only the two halves, what can he do? He cannot make a third out of the two halves.

45,496. Then it comes to pass that you put land in corn once every two years and in potatoes the third year?—The crofters that have some more land generally lay down some of it for a twelve-month and some for two years and then over again. In some cases they sow in rye-grass and let it lie that way, and others with more land put it in turnips.

45,497. Then, is it the case that your usual white crop is once in two years?—Where there are only small bits of land, but in the bigger holdings it is generally three or four years. In small holdings, where it is manured every year, there are plenty people who lay down the field one year and turn it over the following year.

45,498. Can you tell me the names of the eight crofters who were evicted?—I don't mean that they were evicted, but they were burdened out—Simon Smith, Shumire, and Arthur Smith, Blumire. The land that I now occupy was inside three acres, and was taken from a tenant.

45,499. What was the tenant's name?—John Jarmson or Adam Jarmson, Mr Bruce's ground officer. Then there were Thomas Tulloch of Catpund, Peter Tulloch, his brother, John Smith of Clivigarth, Arthur Gilbertson, and, I think, John Tulloch. The house is there yet. Then, there are two houses in Pickigarth, John Manson's and Magnus Smith's. Then there were the houses of Burraland; I could not distinguish by name the tenants who were there.

45,500. Where did these men go to, or what became of them?—I will tell you where they went to. I know some who were a little better to do at that time, and they went to America, whereby the tenants that were left to make room for the sheep run were shifted on to the ground that these tenants left. By some dying out and other families going away the place became vacant.

45,501. What became of Simon Smith, the first man you named?—Simon Smith was shifted to a cousin of mine in a place called Villans.

45,502. Where is that?—In Cunningsburgh.

45,503. Was that place better or worse than where he was before?—Oh, that I could not judge: I believe it might be better. But what signified that? He had to go without notice: everything was taken from him: his crop was sold, his cow was sold, and his debt was paid. His son got the land.

45,504. But he got another place?—Yes, he got a place by the said John Smith shifting to a place which another man left who went to America.

45,505. Did Simon Smith remain there?—He did not. He did not remain in Blumire.

45,506. Then Arthur Smith, what became of him?—Arthur Smith was shifted to another place where a man left and went to America: John Bruce knows it.

45,507. Was it a better place that he got?—It was much about the same. I would take the one place as soon as the other.

45,508. It was as good a place?—Well, it might or might not be: it was not so good for some things.

45,509. What became of Adam Jarmson?—Adam Jarmson was shifted to Midgarth; the woman who was in Midgarth was shifted to a little house, and her son is without land now, a cottar to Mr Bruce. He had to build a house, and he had no land at all. John Jarmson was put there. Mr Bruce gave Adam Jarmson the privilege of three acres of ground to keep a cow, and that is the bit of land I now have.

45,510. And what became of Thomas Tulloch?—He was shifted all the way over; and his son, what land had he?

45,511. Peter Tulloch?—Peter Tulloch has one son in the lunatic asylum, and his other son is away north.

45,512. The Chairman.—The main point of this man's evidence is that these people were not evicted, but, in consequence of proceedings, had to leave and find a place elsewhere. Where they went to is not of much consequence; he has deponed to details of the fact that they had to remove not so much by process of eviction as by what happened succeeding it.

45,513. Mr Small.—But still if they were removed to other places—

45,514. The Chairman.—The land that he mentions erwick, Shetland. Andrew Smith.

was formerly in the occupation of crofters, whose names he has given: where they went to is of less consequence. You are quite entitled to show that these men got holdings as good or better in the vicinity.

45,515. Mr Small.—That is what I asked to bring out,—that they left not so much because they were compelled to leave as to better themselves.

45,516. Mr Gordon.—Is it a fact that they were rouped out? [Witness].—Yes, and deprived of everything: and where that did not suffice to pay the debt the sons were obliged to undertake to pay the remainder. Such cases have been before Sheriff Brand here.

45,517. Mr Small.—With regard to manuring your crops, is it the case that you take turf from your common pasture to lay on your soil?—In plenty cases it is taken from the bog, out of the peat banks. Formerly it used to be so, but now the tenants apply to Mr Bruce for a little bit of road to their peats, or a help with it. Then they had to turn to and make the road themselves, and if they have not a pony and cart they have to employ one, and it is just about as easy to get it from the landlord.

45,518. What I am asking is, do you take turf from your pasture to put on your individual land as manure?—And what I am answering is that they take it from the peat bog, and make manure of it with cows' dung.

45,519. Is it the case then that when this goes on year after year, it makes your pasture of less value?—Most decidedly, it makes it of less value when you scalp the ground, you are well aware of that; that is a thing we all know. But, in the present case, the tenants have very little chance to scalp any.

45,520. But they do scalp it?—I admit it has been done in time past, but it is not done now to any extent.

eorge Smith.

GEORGE SMITH, Villans, Cunningsburgh (37)—examined.

45,521. The Chairman.—Are you any relative of Andrew Smith?—Yes, I am his brother.

45,522. Your mother is Philly Smith?—Yes.

45,523. The area of the croft is 5 acres 1 rood 20 poles arable 3 roods, 35 poles outrun, and a share in a scattald of 730 acres, common to the tenants of North and South Cunningsburgh. The old rent of the croft was £4, 17s. 3d. and the new rent £2, 13s. Can you tell me how many crofters share in the 730 acres?—No, I cannot give you an accurate account of it.

45,524. Were you appointed a delegate at the same meeting at which Andrew Smith was appointed?—Yes.

45,525. And do you agree with the evidence he has given?—Yes.

45,526. Is there anything additional you wish to say?—There is nothing additional above what Smith has told you, except that Smith has told you the whole truth. But, as regards the signing of that paper that Mr Bruce sent with his officer, about the hill grazing, I was along with my father at the house when the ground officer came. Mr Bruce's officer stated that the tenants need not, in any wise, be frightened to sign the paper, as their animals never would be taken off the hill. The hill would not be taken from them, he said, nor their animals removed, and they would have the hills as formerly. But that only went on until 1875, until the 16th of June or thereabout, when there was not one animal left belonging to my father, or one tenant in Cunningsburgh, that was not driven out of the said hills. Not only were they driven out, but this I saw with my own eyes; the dogs belonging to the shepherds of Mr Bruce of Sumburgh, attacked the sheep and tore the skin off them, until the lambs stood sucking the mother with the skin torn down from the breasts.

45,527. What was the name of the shepherd?—William Gunn.

45,528. Is he there yet?—No, he is dead and away: Robert Gunn has been there since, and John Henderson is there now.

45,529. I understand then that you represent a meeting of people who are anxious to get back, if possible, this 1000 acres, or whatever the area may be, of scattald that was taken in 1872?—Yes. Lerwick, Shetland. George Smith.

45,530. And are you ready to pay a fair rent for it?—Yes, a rent fixed by you or any one else that may come and fix it for us.

45,531. Does this 1000 acres of land march with the land you have already?—It lies in close connection with it. There are a few crofts, both laid down crofts and laboured crofts, between us and the said scattald at present, but it is the very hill that lies closest to us: there is no hill between us and it; none whatever.

45,532. Is the 1000 acres fenced in?—Yes.

45,533. Was it fenced in after it was taken possession of by Mr Bruce?—No; he fenced it in before he cleared out our stock and put in his.

45,534. And your scattald of 730 acres is not fenced, I understand?—Had it been fenced, or had we been compelled to keep on it no more than it could keep, we would have been at starvation long ago. We have perhaps two or three to half a dozen sheep, which we keep for the wool, so that our women may do a little knitting for us in winter-time to help to sustain life. If it had not been for that we should have been driven out of the island through poverty or starvation.

45,535. At present, have you less wool of the kind used for knitting than the women could employ their time upon?—My lord, they do not have as much as would keep them for two months instead of twelve.

45,536. And you represent that if you had that additional ground to graze with Shetland sheep the women could be much more fully employed?—Yes, and they could keep the families in a far better situation.

45,537. Is the amount of Shetland knitting done far less than it used to be?—It is not one-sixth share of what it used to be before the land was taken.

45,538. The Shetland knitting is one of the principal industries of the island?—It is the only industry that my father had in his lifetime to live by. But now there is not enough wool, and my wife has to go out of the parish for it, and buy wool from the parish of Northmavine.

45,539. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did you say you could not give us the number of crofters who share in this scattald of 730 acres?—No, I cannot give you an accurate number of them. Mr Bruce is here and perhaps he can tell the number.

45,540. What is your occupation?—I am a fisherman and crofter: my mother is the crofter, and I live with her.

45,541. Do you go to the herring fishing?—Yes.

45,542. Do most of the crofters who live near you do the same?—Yes, mostly all.

45,543. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Shetland Proprietors.—Can you tell me the name of the ground officer you spoke of?—I can indeed: many is the time that he was around. His name is Francis Smith.

45,544. Was there one Adam Jarmson?—Adam Jarmson was sheriff officer or ground officer to Mr Bruce; but remember, Adam Jarmson was done out before that.

45,545. It was not Adam Jarmson?—No, he was done out before then; Mr Bruce knows that, he need not put that into you. It was Francis Smith of Clumlee that came round with the paper; and his words were words of guile.

45,546. Was Jarmson dead?—He was not dead at the time; he was there too, but he was not in power.

45,547. You say you are a fisherman?—Yes.

45,548. Is it possible for you, being a fisherman, to work your croft as well as if you were not?—Yes, and twice as well. I require the fishing to sustain my family, and if it were not for that the croft could not keep my family for six months.

45,549. Does the croft not take you away from the fishing?—No, it does not, because the climate of Shetland is not always suitable for fishing, and when the weather is too rough I can get a better return by working at my croft than from the fishing. If it is the will of God to give me a piece of land to work on, it is not for food

Lerwick, Shetland.

George Smith.

for animals that I am here to-day; it is food for my infants and for my wife and mother at home.

45,550. What is the average number of sheep the crofters have on the scattald?—That is more than I can tell. I can tell the number I have: I have four ewes and four lambs to my mother's house.

45,551. Are there any of your neighbours who have large stocks?—No, indeed, there are no large stocks in Cunningsburgh now-a-days.

45,552. What stock of sheep will there be on the scattald altogether?—I cannot tell, but I will say one thing. If the bit of hill that was given to Cunningsburgh by Mr Bruce had been stocked by Cunningsburgh I question if it would have kept three sheep to each family.

45,553. Would your scattald not be better if it were regulated?—Indeed, if it were regulated it could not, as I say, keep more than three to each family summer and winter.

45,554. Would not it be better for you to have the stock regulated?—No, indeed, because the other proprietors who lie outside of us would drive us on to it, whereas just now they are giving us a chance to feed alongside of them. They are not for tyrannising us. If they were doing to us the same as you appear to wish to do, what would become of us?

Laurence Laurenson.

LAURENCE LAURENSON, Mail (44)—examined.

45,555. The Chairman.—Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes, or rather my mother's case; she is the crofter.

45,556. What is her name?—Ann Laurenson.

45,557. There appear to be two holdings; one of 6 acres 1 rood 15 poles arable, 35 poles outrun, and another of 5 acres 1 rood 30 poles arable, and 5 acres 2 roods 23 poles outrun; and in the third place there are 2 roods 2 poles outrun: the share of the hill is $\frac{6}{65}$ of 29 acres and a share in the scattald of 730 acres. The old rent was £10, 5s. and the new rent £5, 12s. Who are the others who share in the 29 acres?—The crofter tenants round about.

45,558. The tenants of Mail?—Yes, Mail and Beolka and Milltown and Midgate and Yural and Claphoull.

45,559. Were you appointed a delegate along with the other witnesses who have been examined?—Yes.

45,560. And you have the same line of evidence to give, I daresay?—Yes, just the same.

45,561. Do you agree with the evidence you have heard?—Yes.

45,562. Have you any special addition to make to it?—No special addition, but I have suffered a good deal,—Mr Bruce's servants told me I would suffer for what I told you before the Crofters Commission, and I have suffered a great lot.

45,563. What did you suffer?—You asked me where were the sheep pastured, and I told you the truth: I said some of them went through the fence sometimes; the Shetland sheep have the nature of going through the fence, as they want to get back to their own pasture. Very shortly after the Crofters Commission left Shetland, Henderson, the shepherd, came into our house one night and made a disturbance, and argued about fair rents and about the evidence I had given before the Commission, and said I should suffer for what I had said. The disturbance which he made so afflicted my mother that she was taken ill and had to get the doctor. He also poinded some of my sheep.

45,564. How many sheep did he poind?—He poinded six head, and the first amount was only 10s.

45,565. Did you pay that?—Yes.

45,566. That was for your sheep trespassing on Lieutenant Bruce's ground, I suppose?—Yes: and the second poind I paid to a lawyer was 26s. 6d. for our sheep going through the fence. There was no fence to keep them out, and they went back naturally, to the part where they had been reared. His assistant shepherd came to our house and told me he had poinded two of our sheep. My brother was going to the fishing, my mother was very ill, and my sister was dying of cancer of the liver, and I said it was impossible for me to go for the sheep. So the sheep were driven away, and what became of them I don't know, unless they were sold.

Lerwick, Shetland.

Laurence Laurenson.

45,567. How many sheep did you part with at that time?—We lost two that we never got any account of at all; we found three others, and one was driven to Lerwick and sold.

45,568. If you got this additional pasture we have heard about, would these local difficulties be got over?—Yes.

45,569. You would have enough room for grazing purposes and for growing wool for knitting?—Yes, we continued at that till last May, and I had to dispose of forty sheep at any price I could get. The ewes were dropping their lambs, and I went thirty miles to Delting to sell them.

45,570. Is there a great deal of strong feeling in the district with regard to this matter of the land that was taken in 1872?—Yes, that is the cause of the great distress we are in.

45,571. And that feeling has continued since the land was taken?—Ever since, but things have been worse since the Crofters Commission visit.

45,572. They got worse after that?—Far worse. There was some living before then, but none after.

45,573. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Is there less knitting going on there now since the scattald was taken away?—There is no knitting at all, because there is no wool to be got: and what wool there is is so coarse in quality that it won't be taken in the Lerwick shops. But if we had the fine Shetland wool that we used to have they would take it.

45,574. But they have a little stock left,—you do not surely mean to say that there is no knitting at all?—There is some knitting.

45,575. But a great deal less than there was formerly?—A great deal less.

45,576. Is there a very great difficulty in getting pure Shetland wool?—Yes, there is, because sometimes our ewes go through with his tups, or rams, or whatever you call them, and wool of the cross-bred sheep is not so good.

45,577. Is there anyone in your district who takes an interest in the knitting industry, and who tries to procure pure Shetland wool for you?—No. Those who need it just send to the shops.

45,578. The crofters have to buy wool; and do they buy much pure Shetland wool in your district?—They have not much Shetland wool at all; the animals are so poor from want of feeding, that they can raise no fleece to speak of. If we take it off when they are poor, the animals die.

45,579. From what district do they get the pure Shetland wool?—From North End, from Delting. I bought seven pounds from a woman at Delting.

45,580. I think it was said that 1000 acres were taken away, and 730 acres left on the scattald?—Yes.

45,581. Was it the better part of the scattald that was taken away?—Yes. What was left was just the bits where the peats were taken from. My father had to pay £20 for lifting that fence before we could get that bit that we got: he had to pay £20 for the lifting of that fence.

45,582. All the best of the scattald has been enclosed?—Yes, indeed, and our animals are not like animals since the scattald was taken.

45,583. The Chairman.—What is it you say about the fence and the £20?—It was for a small bit of hill that we got from Mr Bruce. He enclosed it first of all, and took it into his 1000 acres. My father and some other men went to him and asked for the small bit, and he condescended to give them a small bit; but before he would lift his fence at Scroo he had to give him £20.

45,584. The fence put up had to be removed?—Yes.

45,585. And what was the extent of the land you got?—Well, it is said to be 300 acres.

45,586. Is that in addition to the 730 acres?—No, it is along with the 730.

45,587. Had your father to bear part of the expense of shifting the fence?—Yes.

45,588. What was the amount of his expense?—It was £20 he had to pay for removing the fence, but there was £2 given down at the end of it, making £18.

45,589. The crofters among them had to subscribe £20?—Yes; but whether it was subscribed or not, my father had to be good for it.

45,590. And was your father's share £20?—No; he had to give £2; some gave 5s., others 10s., and others £1. We were better able to pay, so we paid more than others perhaps.

45,591. Had the 300 acres, which you got in the way you describe, been part of the land formerly in the occupation of the crofters?—Yes.

45,592. And is the 300 acres in your possession now?—Yes, that is all the scattald we have.

45,593. Is it part of the 730 acres?—Yes, and it is very bad scattald: there has not been a drop of water there these two summers. There is not a fountain of water there, and, in consequence, the animals cannot nourish their stock properly.

45,594. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Shetland Proprietors.—What is your total sheep stock?—The total of our sheep stock, when the hills were taken first of all, was sixty.

45,595. What have you now?—We have very few now. Last year we had a stock of sheep, but Mr Bruce's servants have killed our sheep: we find them dead day by day. I had forty ewes dropping their lambs and took them to Delting to sell them.

45,596. That is not an answer to my question: what sheep stock have you now?—We have none upon the 300 acres except one ewe. The lamb died, because the pasture was so bad that she had no milk for it. Then we have four ewes on our home grass.

45,597. What is the total account of your mother's sheep stock?—We have one in the 300 acres; and four in the home grass, and about a dozen or fourteen sheep going up to Lady Nicolson's march, which never tasted Mr Bruce's grass at all nor our own piece of scattald,—they won't stop on it.

45,598. Do you mean to tell this Court that you have not more than thirty sheep altogether?—We put thirty-eight to Northmavine. No, we have not more than twenty sheep.

45,599. Have you any in the Sandwick scattald?—We have one; one that we lost. John Manson found it this year, so we have one one-year old on the Sandwick scattald.

45,600. Do you mean to say then that you have not more than twenty sheep altogether?—One in the 300 acres, four in the home croft, fourteen or fifteen running about, and one in Sandwick scattald.

45,601. Well, say five and twenty altogether?—I am neither saying that we have five and twenty or six and twenty.

45,602. Is that all that you have?—I am not speaking of the lambs, but only of the sheep.

45,603. Are these your own or your mother's?—They belong to my mother. My brother and I had a few, but none of our sheep lived except those that went through the fence.

45,604. But what is the total sheep of the family, taking the whole of them, no matter where they are feeding?—I have two, and my brother has not one at all. We have twenty or twenty-one altogether, but more may be found, and if so we will know them, for they are all marked.

45,605. Can you tell us exactly where this 1000 acres of scattald you are speaking about is?—Yes, it is the South Cunningsburgh hills.

45,606. What is its west boundary?—The West Cliffs.

45,607. And the sea?—Yes.

45,608. And on the east?—The East Cliffs.

45,609. And the sea again?—Yes.

45,610. What is the breadth of it?—More than a mile.

45,611. Is there any difference between this scattald and the other scattald on the north and south sides of it?—Yes, there is a difference.

45,612. What difference?—It was always a better scattald; it was said to be the best scattald in Shetland. No other scattald kept so good sheep as it did.

45,613. Are you speaking of the present time?—I am speaking of the present time and every other time.

45,614. Seeing this scattald was enclosed twenty years ago, is it any better than the other scattald round about?—Yes, it is better now, because it is scarcely half stocked; some parts have scarcely an animal on during the whole twelve months.

45,615. Before 1872 you say that the whole of the animals were feeding promiscuously?—Yes.

45,616. Then, it was just the same as the neighbouring ground?—No, this scattald was always the best: there were no bogs or broken-down bits, but what the crofters got was a broken-down place full of bogs.

45,617. But has the enclosed 1000 acres improved during these twenty years?—What is to hinder it from improving, when there has been no sheep on parts of it for twenty years?

45,618. Well, it has improved?—It was good enough before: there was no better in Shetland that ever I saw.

45,619. Is it overstocking that has prevented the rest of your scattald from improving in the same way?—We have no scattald to improve; we have nothing but what we take our peats from. There is nothing to overstock on; it could not keep a few cows in proper condition.

45,620. Are there more sheep on the scattald than it can feed?—It cannot feed the sixth of what is on it; the animals that are on it are not like sheep.

45,621. Then you say it is largely overstocked?—Yes, far too largely. [The Chairman.—Your case is that you do overstock, and that you cannot help yourselves?—It is six times overstocked because they must do it].

45,622. Would you be able to pay a rent for this land if you got it?—Yes; that we would.

45,623. Would you be able to take over the sheep stock that is on it?—The wool grown on these sheep is of no profit to us; they will not take it at the shops.

45,624. You would not take over the stock? (No answer).

45,625. Is it the case that you were convicted in this Court of any offence?—Yes, I have been may be a score of times since the Crofters Commission sat here; Mr Bruce has often hauled me up.

45,626. Were you convicted at the instance of the Procurator-Fiscal for any offence?—Yes, I have been.

45,627. What were you convicted of?—There were four of our ponies pounded, and I paid it to Mr Robertson here,—I and Andrew Smith and another man. I was bidden to go along on my way home and get our ponies. I went and rapped at the door; the assistant shepherd, Joseph Moare, came, and I said 'I 'want our ponies,' and he said 'You will not get them.' He and I came out and we were talking together: we were in very good spirits and we spoke about other things. He said it was looking to be bad weather, and I said yes, but I said whether it was bad weather or good weather it was better than we deserved: and there was not a word more said about the ponies.

45,628. I must repeat my question, which you have not answered. What were you convicted of?—Henderson came up when we were together. He was drunk and quarrelled with Andrew Smith. He struck Andrew Smith, and through trying to take Henderson's hands out of Andrew Smith's throat I was convicted of breach of the peace.

45,629. Are you a fisherman?—I was a fisherman once, but my mother is now between eighty and ninety years of age, and she will not let me go more to sea as she has no person to look after her, and could not bear the idea of my leaving her.

45,630. You said that Mr Bruce had said something to you: did he say anything to you personally?—When did I say that?

45,631. You said that Mr Bruce said you should suffer for what you had told the Crofters Commission?

Lerwick, Shetland. Laurence Laurenson.

—I said Mr Bruce's servants; and they say so to this very day,—that I would suffer for what I said to Sheriff Brand.

Laurence Tulloch.

LAURENCE TULLOCH, Labourer, Blett, Cunningsburgh (44)—examined.

45,632. The Chairman.—Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—I am not a crofter, I am a cottar.

45,633. And do you pay a rent for your house?—No, I stop with my father-in-law, but I want a piece of ground. I have a statement here.

45,633A. Please read it to us.

To Royal Commission (Highlands and Islands, 1892). Statement of Laurence Tulloch, Blett, Cunningsburgh.

'My father, Thomas Tulloch, was forced to leave the 'croft of Catpund in 1875 to make room for a sheep 'run which Mr John Bruce of Sumburgh took in for 'his own use.

'My father's father and grandfather had occupied 'the croft.

'The rent was nearly doubled from 1852 to 1875.

'My father kept from four to six cows, and had 'freedom for sheep and ponies.

'I remember four other crofts near my father's which 'are now included in Mr Bruce's sheep run.

'The taking of the hill pasture from the crofters 'has been a very great loss to them. When the fishing 'fails they have nothing to fall back upon. The people 'greatly desire to get back the hill pasture.

'There are other parts in the neighbourhood which 'were once occupied by crofters. I refer to the large 'islands of Mousa, now without an inhabitant, Burrland 'and Pikigarth. I think these should be restored to 'the crofters.

'Many would gladly occupy them.'

(Signed) LAURENCE TULLOCH.

45,634. You have no land at present?—No.

45,635. And you want to obtain a holding?—Yes.

45,636. Could you pay the rent of a new holding if you got one?—Yes.

45,637. And put stock upon it?—Yes.

45,638. And build a house?—I would have to.

45,639. And what you invite us to do is to inspect the ground, and consider whether there is land in the neighbourhood that would be available for such a purpose?—Yes.

45,640. What rent does your father-in-law pay?—£4. My father was evicted out of a croft in the Cliffs, which now forms part of John Bruce's sheep run.

45,641. What is your father-in-law's name?—Laurence Halcrow of Blett.

45,642. Was his case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—No.

45,643. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Shetland Proprietors.—Is it the case that you had a croft already?—Yes, I had a holding, and I was rack-rented out of it.

45,644. How long were you in it?—Four years.

45,645. What was your rent?—£6, I think.

45,646. How far did you fall behind with your rent in these four years?—The year I left, I was £3, I think, in arrear, and I paid all that up.

45,647. Had you any other croft after that?—Yes, but I could not stop there.

45,648. Why could you not stop there?—It was inconvenient for the fishing.

45,649. On what estate was that?—On the Symbister Estate.

45,650. What rent had you to pay for it?—I think it was some £3.

45,651. Are you a fisherman?—Yes.

45,652. You say your father was removed: where did he go to?—To a small house.

45,653. Where?—In the Cliffs,—in the same place or close by, on the same property. Lerwick, Shetland.

45,654. What rent had he to pay for it?—I think it was £1, or £1, 5s. Laurence Tulloch.

45,655. Where were you at that time?—I was away sailing at the south.

JOHN MALCOLMSON, Crofter, Flanderstown, Cunningsburgh (61)—examined. John Malcolmson.

45,656. The Chairman.—Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

45,657. The area of the croft is 1 acre 3 roods 31 poles arable, 18 acres 1 rood 34 poles outrun, and one share in the common of 730 acres: the old rent was £2, 2s. and the new rent £1, 7s. Were you appointed as a delegate along with those other witnesses?—Yes.

45,658. And do you wish to give the same evidence?—Yes.

45,658A. Do you concur with the evidence you have heard?—I do, in everything, only there are a few things that have not been said.

45,659. What is it you wish to say?—I was accompanying the officer when he came time after time to the house.

45,660. You mean to clear off the sheep?—Yes. He said first that Mr Bruce was going to take the hills. He came again and told us he was going to fence the hills,—to put on the north fence. The next time he came, when the fence was put on from sea to sea, from south-east to north-west, he told me himself that the fence was going to be re-crossed three times,—put in three parts,—and we would have to give him the number of our sheep and pay for them and the ponies and cattle, but they would never be removed, but at Martinmas we would pay so much per head,—4d. for a sheep, 6d. for a cow, and 1s. for a horse. We only gave in a small quantity, and some men never gave them any. I did not give in the wintering of my sheep. The men are all dead now but myself,—Adam Jarmson and Halcrow and me.

45,661. What was the name of the man who made these statements to you?—Francis Smith, Mr Bruce's ground officer.

45,662. Is he there now?—I do not know whether he is living or dead.

45,663. He is not there, at all events?—He is not transacting any business, so far as I know.

ROBERT COGLE, Fisherman, Quee (41)—examined. Robert Cogle.

45,664. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, I am not a crofter; I am a fisherman. I did not come here to speak of my own case or anybody's case in particular; I was chosen as a delegate by several people, both in Cunningsburgh and elsewhere, to appear before this Commission to make a general statement on the land question.

45,665. Well, we shall be glad to hear your statement.—'Some parts of it may not exactly come within the 'scope of your inquiry, but I shall try to confine myself 'to the more salient points. First of all, I will ask the 'question, what is the root of all evils connected with 'the land question? If the above question was put to 'me, I should answer without hesitation "the feudal 'system." Some, however, on hearing this will doubtless exclaim "Why! the feudal system was abolished 'long ago." Now, it is quite true that feudalism, in its 'primitive form, does not now exist; but that it does 'display itself at the present time it is impossible to 'contradict. It is necessary to bear in mind that the 'theory of every person in the country having an 'inherent right to live on the soil was recognised, so to 'speak, simply because it suited the political aspirations 'of the nobility to do so. The price, however, paid by 'the lower classes was one at which most of them 'would shudder in this 19th century: and yet some 'would have us revert to the old system,—they are 'doing so at the present time to my knowledge. They 'would even make us believe that it would suit the 'interests of occupiers of land to do so. The reports of 'some of the resolutions moved at the meetings of the 'Highland Land League, regarding the restoration of the 'ancient rights of the clans to the soil are ample proof 'of this, although some of its leaders advocate another 'kind of feudalism, to which I shall refer farther on. 'This state of matters existed for several centuries, 'during which the aristocracy endeavoured from time 'to time to shake off their condition of vassalage to the 'sovereign; but they never fully accomplished it until 'the year 1660 when, by the payment of certain sums 'of money and the promise of more to follow, also by 'representing that the means of national defence could 'be obtained by pecuniary remuneration, they managed 'to make themselves absolute masters of their domains. 'A change of policy was now inaugurated by which the 'landlords, for so we must now term them, instead of 'endeavouring to retain the masses on the soil adopted 'the maxim that power consisted of wealth alone: con-'sequently they substituted feu-duties, casualties, and 'the system of exacting rent. These took the place of 'conscription, or services in time of war, like the tallage 'and scutage of mediæval times in England. Land for 'agricultural purposes was let to the highest bidders; 'the number of occupiers was reduced; protection 'duties were levied on foreign produce, in order to 'enable the farmers at home to pay higher rents. And 'when the Corn Laws were repealed, small farmers 'and crofters were evicted to make room for graziers 'and sheep farmers. But the latest and worst develop-'ment of modern feudalism has been the laying down 'of large tracts of land to deer forests and letting 'these to sportsmen, who, like the Yankee millionaire 'Winans, have more money than they know what to do 'with.

'Matters having reached a crisis, legislation at length 'took place with a view to reform the land laws, such 'as the establishment of the Land Court in Ireland, the 'Crofters Act in Scotland, and latterly, the Small 'Holdings Act; but these, though productive of some 'good, have been more or less a failure. And why? 'Simply because they were all based on feudalism, or 'dual ownership in land, and consequently confirmed 'the very evils they were intended to remove. Until 'our legislators are fully cognisant of the fact that the 'produce of the soil taken at its normal value, and in 'the face of foreign competition, cannot pay for dual 'ownership, all attempts at land law reform must 'prove abortive. Without wishing to anticipate the 'concluding portion of my article, I may remark that 'the Ashbourne Act in Ireland is the only step in the 'right direction which the legislature has taken yet; 'and though defective, it has given great satisfaction 'wherever it has operated.

'Now, I have an article on the proposed land 'nationalisation scheme, but I will pass that over, as I 'wish to call your attention specially to a system we 'have in Shetland, with which some of you gentlemen 'composing this Commission may not perhaps have 'any acquaintance,—the ancient Udal system. [The 'Chairman.—Oh, yes, we have a slight acquaintance 'with it]. Well, perhaps others may not, and in any 'case my remarks on this head are not lengthy.

'In the former numbers I have tried to demonstrate 'the fallacy of the system of too many parties having 'an interest in the soil, and, I propose now to call 'attention to the Udal or Allodial system of owner-'ship in land,—a system which is undoubtedly more 'ancient than the feudal, and which had its origin in 'Scandinavian countries. To begin with I shall give 'the following brief description of it from the pen of 'a writer who possesses a thorough knowledge of the 'subject in its technical peculiarities, Mr Gilbert 'Goudie, Edinburgh, a Shetlander, and a member of 'the Society of Antiquaries. [The Chairman.—I 'think we may pass that quotation over; we can read 'the passage for ourselves in Mr Gilbert Goudie's 'work]. The above quotation is a multum in parvo 'view of the Udal system; and the difference between 'it and any other form of land tenure is too obvious 'to be ignored. The Udaller held his lands a Deo et 'sole alone. "He was a peasant, for he tilled his own '"land, and claimed no distinction among his free '"neighbours; but he was also noble, for there was '"no hereditary order superior to his own. The King '"might wed the Udaller's daughter, or match his own '"daughter to the Udal-born without disparagement, for '"he himself was but the Udal-born of a larger '"Udal." (Balfour's Oppressions of the Islands of 'Orkney and Zetland, Intro. p. xxxi.). The only 'burden to which Udal property was originally 'subject was the skatt,—a tax contributed by the 'Udal proprietors for national defence, and other 'incidental purposes; but when land was not cultivated 'it was not paid. Since the Orkney and Shetland 'Islands became subject to Scotland and latterly to 'Great Britain, the rights of Udal proprietors have 'been greatly impaired by innovations of various 'kinds; but, notwithstanding the efforts made by Earl 'Patrick Stewart and others to crush the system, 'there are still a number of occupiers in these islands 'who are owners of their crofts under the old system. 'Their position when contrasted with that of crofter 'tenants is somewhat as follows:—A. A crofter tenant 'is occupier of say 10 acres of arable land and outrun, 'together with a corresponding right of grazing in the 'scattald or hill pasture. He pays a rent of £5 per 'annum and the half of the local taxes, which may be 'called £1 more,—total £6. B. A Udal proprietor 'is occupier of his own croft, also of 10 acres of arable 'land and outrun, together with a corresponding 'right of a grazing in the scattald. His croft is also 'entered in the Valuation Roll as £5 per annum, but 'although he has to pay the whole of the local taxes, 'and the imperial and ecclesiastical charges as well, 'the sum total will only amount to about £2, 10s. per 'annum. That is where the difference comes in. Now, 'if such a system were adopted throughout Great 'Britain, and all the land utilised which is at present 'devoted to sporting purposes, it would ameliorate the 'condition of the artisan classes and others perhaps to 'as great an extent as land nationalisation. The occu-'piers of agricultural subjects could then be in a posi-'tion to compete in the market with foreign producers; 'consequently, the continual drain of money to pay for 'our supply of food from other countries would be 'greatly diminished. Another evil of considerable 'magnitude, viz., absentee landlordism, would be era-'dicated: although that does not prevail so much here, 'it has been a great curse, I believe, in Ireland. Money 'screwed from rack-rented tenants would no longer 'find its way to the gambling dens of Monte Carlo or 'elsewhere, and the general public would reap a special 'benefit, both directly and indirectly. Feu-duties, 'casualties, and rack-rents would then become relics 'of a byegone age. The number of cultivators of the 'soil would speedily increase, while the urban popula-'tion would not be augmented by abnormal causes 'which have had their origin in feudalism and land-'lordism: and in a very short time, even full-blown 'socialists would begin to see that private interests in 'land would become a blessing instead of a curse, as 'they have so frequently alleged.

'Some will doubtless exclaim—"Why, the Udal '"system of ownership in land may be very good; but '"how can it be attained to without a complete revolution '"in our social status?" Well, I do not think there 'would be any very serious difficulty in accomplishing 'the change, as one step has already been taken in this 'direction, and under a Conservative administration 'also. I refer to the passing of the Ashbourne Act for 'Ireland; a scheme which has been found to operate 'in a most beneficial manner in the localities to which 'it has been extended. And Mr Gladstone, in 1886, 'proposed a more gigantic measure, which he declared 'would not involve any additional burden on the tax-'payers. Be that as it may, the experiment is 'certainly worth the trial—as the land itself would be 'security for any credit involved. The present class 'of landlords would be compensated for their vested 'interests, and the payment being extended to a 'certain number of years, say thirty, the instalments 'would not be oppressive on the purchasers, who would 'look forward with expectation, instead of having to 'undergo the Sisiphus-like performance of paying rent 'ad infinitum.

Lerwick, Shetland. Robert Cogle.

'One frivolous objection urged by some against Land 'Purchase is, "that consolidation would set in anew." 'That is what socialists all say. As I have already re- 'marked, the Roman agrarian law might form a very 'good precedent for the prevention of such a sequel. 'In former times under the Udal system the land be- 'longing to an Udal proprietor was divided among his 'children; and although I do not altogether approve of 'such a procedure, yet it might be advantageously used 'in any case where the subject was of considerable 'extent.

'It has also been alleged, "that any scheme of land '"purchase would be of no use without a compulsory '"clause, as no landlord would be willing to sell unless '"it suited his interests to do so." There may be some 'force in this argument; but it is equally certain that 'there has been no dearth of land in the market, owing 'to sequestration and various other causes. There 'follows a quotation from Mr Labouchere's paper:—

'"During last year (1892) forty-seven estates in '"Scotland were offered for sale at Edinburgh, the '"aggregate reserves amounting to £1,414,895. Of '"these properties, only thirteen have been sold, which '"altogether realised £217,525, so that any capitalist '"who desires to invest in Scottish land will find no '"difficulty in doing so."—Truth. Now, I may say 'that since the Crofters Act passed, here in Shetland 'there has been more land in the market during the 'seven or eight years than there was perhaps in the 'fifty years before that.

'It is probable, however, that capitalists are 'beginning to discover that land cannot pay in a dual 'sense. "Facts are chiels that winna ding;" and 'truth is generally some time in making progress, but 'in the end it must prevail. Now, if any scheme 'could be devised in order to enable the occupiers of 'land actually in the market to purchase their holdings, 'as an experiment, and if the parties concerned would 'avail themselves of it to such an extent as to make the 'supply insufficent to meet the demand, the question 'of compulsory sale could then be taken into consider- 'ation. But, as all legislation is experimental at first, 'the optional principle should be given a fair trial.

'In concluding these articles I may be allowed to 'say that I have tried to view this vexed and all 'absorbing question from various standpoints. I have 'pointed out in a manner which should convince every 'candid and unprejudiced person that all the existing 'evils connected with the tenure of land have had their 'origin in feudalism. I have also tried to point out 'the absurdity and injustice of land nationalisation, 'and that the interests of the occupiers would be as 'much embarrassed under it as they have been under 'feudal oppression. I have given a brief description of 'the Udal system, and, I think, there can be no question 'as to the benefits it would confer on occupiers of land, 'were it adopted in Britain. I may here remark, that 'in Scandinavian countries, where the greater part of 'the land is held under Udal tenure, we seldom or 'never hear of any agrarian agitation; nor is there to 'be seen such enormous wealth on the one hand, and 'such abject poverty on the other, as is daily wit- 'nessed throughout the precincts of this great empire 'on which "the sun never sets." Lastly, I have re- 'ferred to land purchase as a judicious method of 'accomplishing the end in view; and though I do not 'for a moment pretend that such a scheme would usher 'in the millenium or the golden age; yet the time 'would ultimately arrive when the metaphor from Holy 'Writ concerning every man's "sitting down under '"his own vine and fig tree" might be fulfilled in a 'somewhat literal sense. Indeed, it would appear 'from I Kings, Chap. XXI., that the tenure of land in 'those days was of a very absolute description; and that 'it bore a striking resemblance to the Udal system of 'ancient Scandinavia. It was evidently impossible for 'even the king at that period to obtain the legitimate 'property of any subject, except by fraudulent or 'violent methods, and when those were resorted to, they 'did not fail to call down the vengeance of Heaven on 'the perpetrators of such injustice. Esto perpetua.'

Lerwick, Shetland. Robert Cogle.

(Signed) ROBERT COGLE.

QUEE, CUNNINGSBURGH,
SHETLAND.
24*th July* 1894.

45,666. Did you write that out yourself?—I did, My Lord, except the quotations.

45,667. Who wrote them for you?—I got them from other parties. There are only two or three quotations. Of course, I have not read all the quotations which I have inserted in my paper,—there is one from Henry George, which I have endeavoured to refute; and I have also a quotation from Gilbert Goudie, and another from Balfour's Oppressions of Orkney and Shetland: but I wrote all the rest myself, and it expresses my own views.

45,668. Then, you are appearing here not as a delegate but to express your own views?—I am appearing as a delegate, because I have explained my views to a good many people, who appeared to fall in with them, and they asked me to attend before you.

45,669. Were you appointed a delegate at a public meeting?—I was, and also by the people privately. I was appointed elsewhere, and also at a recent meeting.

45,670. Is there a general desire in the district you represent to acquire holdings by purchase?—I could not say; but a good many people are beginning to think that it might be of some benefit. Some years ago they did not seem to look on it favourably, about the time of the passing of the Crofters Act, and for a few years subsequent to that time; but they are beginning to see that the outcome of the Crofters Act is not all that was expected at one time.

45,671. And do they think they would be better if they could purchase their holdings?—A good many of them do, if they could purchase them under some such scheme as the Ashbourne Act, as it is well known some of the people are purchasing their holdings by paying yearly instalments of even less than the rents they were paying before,—even where those rents had been fixed by the Land Court.

45,672. Is it the feeling of the majority of the people you represent that they should have opportunities to purchase holdings, or is that feeling only confined to a certain number?—I could not say as to that, but a good many people are seeming to look upon it more favour- ably than they did a few years ago, at any rate.

45,673 Are their minds not made up on the subject, then?—Not all. Some, I know, would prefer to go on under the present system; but others would be favour- able to land purchase.

45,674. Which are the larger number,—those who would prefer to go on under the present system, or those who would go in for land purchase?—I could hardly say at the present time; it takes a little time to get people to make up their minds.

45,675. Your ideas, I suppose, are just gradually find- ing their way?—Yes.

45,676. Perhaps they have not yet been thoroughly considered by the people?—No.

45,677–78. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You seem to have given a good deal of attention to the subject of land tenure. You are a fisherman, I think, professionally?—Yes.

45,679. Would you advise any fisherman to purchase a croft, if he had facilities for doing so, as well as con- tinue the fishing?—Well, he could please his own mind about it. If a fisherman wanted a croft say at a certain rent, and if he found he could purchase it outright by paying an annual instalment of about the same amount as the rent for thirty years, why should he not do the one as well as the other?

45,680. Can a man follow the fishing thoroughly and at the same time do justice to a croft?—It depends on the size of the croft. Here in Shetland, and, I believe, also in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, the greater part of the population try to do both, so far as I can learn.

45,681. Yes, but do you think that is a good system?—They seem to think it is, as it gives them two strings to their bow; some years the fishing may prove a failure, and other years the crop may prove a failure, and when the one fails the other may not. I believe that is the idea that most have.

45,682. Mr Munro.—I suppose you consider that it would be a good thing for a fisherman to have a bit of land to fall back upon when the fishing could not be followed with advantage?—Yes.

45,683. You point to a general scheme of land purchase as a remedy for the existing state of matters. Now, have you ever considered the difficulty that purchasers might have in paying up principal and interest, under a land purchase scheme?—Well, I don't pretend to be an expert in financial matters; but so far as that goes, people who have more knowledge of the matter than I have favour schemes of that kind.

45,684. I suppose that if the people bought the land they would be likely to take more pains in cultivating it than they do as tenants?—It is natural to suppose so; we would all suppose so. If they did not, they would be foolish; I would say that much.

45,685. Rev. Mr Macallum.—I think you said you were appointed a delegate at a meeting held last night?—Yes.

45,686. Do you think the people who were at the meeting agree with your views?—Some of them do, and others did not seem to have made up their minds. Some of them were undoubtedly of the opinion that land could not pay two parties, and that if something in the way of land purchase could be got to enable them to become the owners of their holdings, it should be tried.

45,687. But even in your own scheme, do not you propose to have the two parties? Do you not propose to buy out the landlord in the first place?—Oh, certainly; I do not think it would be right to rob the landlord any more than any other person.

45,688. But you say you would prefer a scheme of land purchase because you would get rid of the dual ownership in land. But then you see, even in your own scheme, you have to pay the landlord, and you have to pay the cultivator?—I don't refer to that exactly. I refer to a person occupying and cultivating his own holding, the same as crofters do at present.

45,689. But supposing you got them settled in your way, would they not have to pay yearly instalments to pay up the purchase price?—Undoubtedly, they would, for a certain term of years. I don't know how long they pay under the Ashbourne Act in Ireland, but at the end of a certain time it becomes their own, as I understand.

45,690. Do you prefer this scheme because you think that under it these yearly instalments would be smaller than the fair rent that was fixed?—I understand they are so in Ireland under the Ashbourne Act; but, even if they were a little more the purchaser would look forward with expectation to a time when they would cease, whereas under the present landlord and tenant system he has nothing of the kind to look to, but just a weary struggling on, or a Sisiphus-like punishment until the end of time.

45,691. But don't you think it reasonable to suppose that the instalment would be larger than the fair rent?—I could not say positively about that.

45,692. Do you think it is a fair rent at all if it is higher than the yearly instalments would be for paying out the landlord altogether?—I could not say; I do not pretend to be a judge of what is a fair rent. My own opinion of what is a fair rent would be this: if a cultivator, taking the produce of the soil at its normal value, could obtain enough to pay him a living wage (the 'living wage' theory has great force nowadays), and also to recompense him for his outlays expended in connection with the management or working of his holding or croft, then the surplus, if any surplus is left, the landlord ought certainly to get. But if there is no surplus left, how can it pay two parties?

45,693. You have not made clear how you get rid of the two parties. But the point is this: do you think it is a fair rent if it is higher than the yearly instalments that would have to be paid under your purchase scheme?—I could not say as to that. At any rate, a purchaser would look forward to a time when the payments would cease.

45,694. [Question repeated].—I don't quite follow your question: I have already said I don't know exactly what fair rent may be.

45,695. You know that the Crofters Commission have to fix a fair rent where required. Under your scheme there would have to be yearly instalments made to pay out the proprietor. Now, do you think it is a fair rent that is fixed by the Crofters Commission if it is higher than the instalments that would be payable under your scheme?—I could not say.

45,696. Don't you see it would necessarily be unfair?—Fair or unfair, if the rent has to be paid from outside sources, as unquestionably is the case, it would be far better to pay it in the shape of purchase money. [The Chairman.—You are not following the question exactly].

45,697. I only want to get your opinion as to the fairness of this rent. Would the rent really be fair if it were higher than the instalments payable under a land purchase scheme approved by you?—No, I don't think it would.

45,698. So that under the Crofters Act the rent that is paid must surely be less than the rent that would be paid under your system?—Oh, I don't know as to that.

45,699. You have admitted that already?—I don't know as to that: at any rate, I would say this—

45,700. You need not say anything more. Then, you have admitted too that the rates under your system would be more than doubled?—Do I say so?

45,701. The question is, would they not have to pay both tenant's and landlord's rates?—Oh, yes, I am quite well aware of that; I have thought over that subject.

45,702. The rates would be doubled?—Yes, certainly.

45,703. And besides that, there are also other taxes, such as ecclesiastical assessments?—Oh, I know all about these too.

45,704. So that the holder would have to pay more than double?—For a certain period only.

45,705. For all time?—Yes, for all time, of course: the occupier, if he is owner, has to pay the whole of the taxes.

45,706. Don't you find the rates are particularly high in Shetland?—The poor rates in some parishes are very high.

45,707. Are they not abnormally high as compared with Scotland?—I don't know.

45,708. Can you tell us what the rate is at present?—I do not have any data at hand to show, but in some years they are more than in others. But they are generally regarded as very high.

45,709. And are not the school rates particularly high?—They are not so high.

45,710. Are they not over 3s. in some parishes?—Oh, no.

45,711. I refer, of course, to the double rate?—Not in the parish where I live.

45,712. We have had information that they are as high as 3s?—I could hardly think that, but it may be so: I would not dispute it.

45,713. You see all these burdens would fall very heavily under your scheme?—I am quite well aware of that, but I look forward to a time when the payment of rent would cease.

45,714. But, in the meantime, there would be this higher rent to pay every year,—that is to say, the instalment would be higher than the fair rent every year,—and more than double rates; and with all these demands to meet in the present hard times, do you think the crofters could endure that?—If the crofters have to pay their rents from outside sources, as is the case with the great majority of crofters in Shetland, even where the fair rents have been fixed by the Com mission, they have to pay them by means of the fishing, or the Naval Reserve money, or from money earned by sailing south, or money remitted by friends abroad, —if the rents have to be obtained from these outside sources and not from the crofts themselves, it is much better for those rents to go on for a certain period towards the purchase of the holding and cease at the end of that time, even allowing the rates to be double.

45,715. But these instalments must certainly be higher than the fair rent, and extend over a long period of years,—that is perfectly clear. And would there not be some difficulty in tying the crofters too much to the land? Would there not be a difficulty in disposing of these crofts again if they wished to begin some other occupation? Is it not much easier for them to leave the croft and get compensation than under your system it would be to dispose of the croft?—Some of them had to fight through the Sheriff Court for compensation for improvements.

45,716. But they are entitled to it?—I know they are, but they have had to fight for it in the Sheriff Court all the same.

45,717. The Chairman.—As to the desire for land purchase under some such scheme as you point at, is that a general desire in the island, or is it confined to a few in your district?—Perhaps there may not be a general desire as yet, but, I think, the desire is gaining ground. I have no hesitation in saying that, though I would not take it upon me to say that there is a general desire.

45,718. Did you read that paper to the meeting?—Yes, not to yesterday's meeting, but to a meeting last year.

45,719. You have not read it to the crofters whom you represent since last year?—No.

45,720. And you did not read it last night?—No.

John Nicolson.

JOHN NICOLSON, Sandwick (45)—examined.

45,721. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, the croft was taken from me.

45,722. When was it taken from you?—In 1891.

45,723. Who is your landlord?—Mr Bruce.

45,724. Have you a statement to submit?—Yes.

45,725. Just read it, please.

'Statement of John Nicolson of Sandwick.

'I was forced to leave my holding three years ago. 'Mr John Bruce warned me out for no fault whatever 'but to make room for two tenants (women) who had 'occupied holdings at Burraland. I greatly desire 'another holding. I am able and willing to stock a 'holding of a moderate size. I have a family growing 'up. There is plenty of ground in Sandwick for new 'holdings. Recently, six crofters were removed from 'Burraland, which is now a farm in the hands of 'Lieutenant Bruce. It is an excellent place for one or 'two new holdings. There is also the island of Mousa 'once occupied by several crofters: there is not one 'crofter on it now. It is a fine island. I am certain if 'these places were offered for new holdings many would 'gladly seek them and soon stock them. I know 'several men like myself anxious for holdings, but 'none can be got. Some whom I know would greatly 'prefer to remain in Shetland rather than go to the 'sailing or to other lands, if they could get small 'holdings.'

(Signed) JOHN NICOLSON.

45,726. You say there is plenty of ground in Sandwick. What ground is that?—Burraland and Mousa.

45,727. Is that grazing presently in the occupation of Mr Bruce?—Yes.

45,728. Sheep grazing?—Cattle and sheep, and ponies.

45,729. Well, we will see that land when we visit the district.

Lerwick, Shetland.

James Robertson.

JAMES ROBERTSON, Willil, Levenwick (62)—examined.

45,730. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

45,731. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

45,732. I see from the Crofters Commission Report that the area of your croft is 6 acres 22 poles arable, 9 acres 3 roods 3 poles outrun, and one share in the scattald of Wardhill, 398 acres divided into 58 shares, of which 24 were dealt with. The old rent was £7, and the fair rent is £4, 12s. Have you a written statement?—Yes. 'I and other crofters in Levenwick 'had a right to the pasture of Virdifield Hill. It was 'taken from us by Mr John Bruce. He asked us to 'sign away our right. We were told if we refused to 'do this that part of our arable ground would be taken 'from us. On account of this we gave up our right. 'The Crofters Commission assigned to us a part of 'Hallalee Hill, but if we put on any stock there they are 'poinded when once within the gate. Our case is a very 'hard one. We cannot get grass for our animals for 'love or money. We want a part of Virdifield Hill, 'which is at present let as a sheep farm to Robert Gunn. 'There is any amount of grass there. It takes me to my 'knees almost, and our animals starving.

'For myself and other tenants on the Sumburgh 'Estate at Levenwick.

(Signed) 'JAMES ROBERTSON.'

45,733–34. What is the extent of Virdifield?—I could not say.

45,735. Is it fenced in by Mr Bruce?—Yes.

45,736. And it now forms part of his grazings?—Yes.

45,737. Was that land of Virdifield at any time in possession of the crofters?—Yes, from time immemorial. I had two yards there, one bigger and one lesser planta-cruives, and I have had a yard sometimes with cabbage, sometimes with corn, and sometimes rye-grass. But now I have got none of that, it was all swept away.

45,738. When was the place swept away?—Mr Bruce put in a shepherd who poinded the sheep.

45,739. When was it that these yards or planta-cruives were taken from you?—Two years ago.

45,740. And has there been some irritation in the district in consequence?—Yes, I heard nought else.

45,741. You say the Crofters Commission assigned a part of Hallalee Hill, but if you put on any stock there they were poinded when once inside the gate. Was that land given in enlargement of holdings?—We were holding the hill at the passing of the Act, and we thought we were entitled to hold it still, but when the Crofters Commission came—

45,742. But it was not assigned to you by the Crofters Commission, was it?—Well, I could not say.

45,743. There was no application for enlargement by taking land from Hallalee Hill. You are not made to pay rent for it now, are you?—Yes; we pay rent for it.

45,744. Were you appointed a delegate at a public meeting?—Yes.

45,745. When was it held?—It was held about a week ago.

45,746. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Shetland Proprietors.—How many tenants were there altogether at that meeting?—There were only two besides myself, at Levenwick. There are only three in all there.

45,747. You said that somebody made threats to take away your arable land, who was that?—I said Mr Bruce told us that if we did not sign to clear from the hill, part of the arable land of our holdings would be taken from us.

45,748. Is it not the case that Mr Bruce said that you were to get arable land in lieu of the pasture?—No, no such thing.

45,749. Did Mr Bruce not divide up a piece of land and give you a part of it?—No. There were three tenants there: Mr Bruce divided the land and he gave my brother a part, and he gave some to a schoolmaster, Malcolm Goudie, and he gave my brother a piece off the other end: and he divided it betwixt other two neighbours, Magnus Smith and me, and we had no more land.

45,750. You got land at that time from Mr Bruce?—We got the land divided, but we had no more land.

45,751. Did you get that simultaneously with lessening of the pasture?—Yes, but we have no more land than before, but rather less.

45,752. But at the time your pasture was lessened you got more arable land?—No, I did not get more.

45,753. More than you had before?—No, I did not.

45,754. Did not you say you got a share of it along with other people?—Long before. It went by merks, the town was by three merks. I took a man, an educated man too, to measure my arable land here when I put it in to the Commission. He found my acreage to be 3½ acres arable and 4½ outrun, and a good part of that was rocks; I could only keep three sheep on it. Surely, I have need of wool as well as others.

45,755. The Chairman.—Is this Mr Gunn a farmer?—He is a farmer, a servant to Quendale.

45,756. And he has this ground from Mr Bruce?—Yes.

45,757. Has there been any litigation about Virdifield,—any dispute in the Court here?—Yes, there have been disputes about it, and they went to Mr Lennox, I think, and he told them that he thought they would have a right to it, as they held it at the passing of the Act.

45,758. But was there any decision by the Sheriff upon the matter?—Not so far as I know.

JOHN BRUCE of Sumburgh (57)—examined.

45,758A. I should like to be allowed to give my evidence at this stage. There have been some statements made by the witnesses just examined, which would lead one to suppose that I said one thing and did another. I do not exactly understand the charges, but I take this opportunity of giving an unqualified denial to all such statements.

Then, with regard to the farms which the Cunningsburgh tenants called the farm of Sumburgh, and stated to be one sheep run or one holding, you will find them accurately described in the Valuation Roll. They are four or five separate holdings, occupied by different people. I may state that on my property I have no farm which comes up to the £100 level, and only four above the £30 level. The whole of the remainder of my estate is in the hands of the crofter class.

There was a statement made with regard to the Island of Mousa, to the effect that Mousa was at one time occupied by crofters. That may have been so, but it is so very long ago that I cannot tell you anything about it. I don't think there are any remains of crofters' houses on it, and if crofters were ever there it must have been 100 or 150 years ago.

Then, with regard to this sheep run in Cunningsburgh called the Cliffs, which formerly formed part of my estate and which seems to be very much coveted by some of my crofters, I would say that this enclosure lies in the middle of a long range of pasture extending from Scousburgh in the south to Quarff in the north. It is owned by different proprietors, but there was no fencing, and no restrictions as to the number of stock that any of the tenants liked to put on the ground, and the consequence was that in many cases a crofter who paid a large rent had a very small stock on that pasture, while a crofter who paid very little rent, or a cottar who paid no rent at all, had perhaps the largest stock in the district. The result of this was excessive over-stocking.

A great deal has been said about the superior quality of that scattald and also of Virdifield. Of course, when a scattald has been enclosed and drained and lightly stocked, it rapidly improves. As far as I know, there is no difference in the quality of the ground on the one side of the fence and on the other; it is simply a difference of treatment. As to those tenants who at present wish more scattald, it would do them no possible good if this fence were thrown back, unless some different system of management were to be pursued. At present their scattald is overstocked, and, in my opinion, they would very soon overstock any addition they might get, and the land would go back to its old state. I think before they ask for an enlargement of scattald, it would only be reasonable to require that they should take advantage of the means at their disposal to have the scattald they at present hold regulated.

45,759. Mr Gordon.—You heard what the first witnesses said, not about evictions, but clearances of the crofts and the sheep being put off the ground. Could you point out on the map the ground that was cleared?—Yes. I may say that no tenant was turned out of the ground: they were removed in every case with their own consent. No doubt, I may, in some cases, have brought a certain amount of pressure to bear upon them, but eventually they were removed with their own consent, and in almost every case where a man was fit to take a better holding he got one. Where he was not fit to get a better holding, he was otherwise provided for. [Refers to map and points out area referred to]. Blumire and Shumire were miserable places where no man could live, and the tenants were removed to better places. Vadsgarth was the only other place enclosed at the time. It was held by my own ground officer, and he gave it up when no longer able to hold it, and retired on a pension from the estate. The pasture is larger than the crofters say, but it does not carry the stock they spoke of.

45,760. Do you agree with these witnesses that giving them back this scattald would improve the condition of the crofters in that township?—I don't think it would improve them one iota.

45,761. All the crofters speak to the advantage which they obtain in this country from the few sheep they keep, and it is a fact that at the present moment the wool of the sheep is extremely dear?—Well, in the few cases where a man can get a large stock on an undivided scattald, he might make something of it; but where a man can only have a few sheep, in my opinion, the thing is not an advantage but a drawback to him. He spends far more time and trouble looking after the sheep than the returns can pay him; and from the fact of his having these few sheep, he is constantly wandering over the scattald looking after them. That, in my opinion, leads him into habits of indolence, and gives him a disinclination for steady employment. You will generally find that these men with a few sheep are poor men; the best off crofters I have have no scattald at all.

45,762-63. They do not, as a rule, adopt any system in the management of the pasture, I presume?—No, I have made two or three attempts in my time to get a club farm started, but they never succeeded.

45,764. Why not?—Well, individualism is very strong here,—each man likes to have his own, and he thinks always that luck will favour him and he will be able to get a big stock. It is a constant war between one neighbour and another who shall get up the larger stock; and a sharp man very often goes out at night with his dog and clears other people's stock off the best of the ground and puts his own on it. A great deal of that goes on.

45,765. If your ideas were carried out and a club stock established, are you not of opinion that the condition of the crofters would be improved?—By having shares in a club farm?

45,766-67. Yes, for sheep and ponies, with a certain amount of what might be called 'intown' pasture along with the arable land, for the keeping of cattle?—If the club farm paid as a speculation,—if they had a good shepherd to manage it, and it paid, of course, they would get a good income from it as from any other investment in which they might put their money. But, in most cases I fear the club farm would not pay. If a fair rent is paid for the land, a club

Lerwick, Shetland.

John Bruce.

farm has a great disadvantage as compared with an ordinary farmer. In the latter case there is one skilled individual at the head of the affair, who was probably bred to his business and will manage it in such a way as to make it as remunerative as possible. In the case of a club farm you may have twenty to fifty owners; they may appoint a director, but in all probability they will dispute his authority or management. They will also constantly dispute with each other about the proper management of the stock, and the consequences are that it will fail where an individual may succeed.

45,768. But that would mean that a club stock system was not being properly followed, if individuals were allowed to interfere with the manager?—Yes.

45,769. Now, I find, as a general rule, in going over the islands that wherever a proprietor or a large tenant holds stock, they are not the stock of the island, but an imported stock, such as black-faced ewes or grey-faced lambs?—Yes.

45,770. Is it your opinion that the ordinary Shetland sheep cannot be kept with the same profit as the grey-faced lamb?—Well, there is a difficulty about the ordinary Shetland sheep. I have no doubt if you could command the top price that is always paid for really fine Shetland wool and could keep the Shetland sheep as we keep blackfaces and cheviots, the Shetland sheep would pay remarkably well for the wool. I am not well up in the subject of wool, but my idea is that the Shetland sheep when well treated deteriorates in wool; if you wish to get really fine Shetland wool you must starve the sheep by overstocking the pasture; and you must be prepared to lose fifteen to twenty or twenty-five per cent. of your sheep every winter from actual starvation in order that the remainder may grow the finest wool. If, on the other hand, you tried these sheep on a properly managed farm and did them well so that you had not more than the average mortality, and had a fair crop of lambs from them, my belief is that you would find your Shetland wool would rapidly deteriorate in quality. At least, that is my experience. I got splendid crops of lambs, and they fed very well, but the wool got bad in quality, and sold only for the price of cheviot wool.

45,771–72. Would not the deterioration in the wool be to some extent made up by the size of the lambs and the price you would get for the wedder lambs?—Of course, it would.

45,773. And no doubt good feeding would lengthen the wool and increase the quantity?—Yes, but you have a lighter sheep, and I think any sheep farmer will tell you that side by side the Shetland sheep as a mutton-producing sheep cannot compare with the black-faced sheep.

45,774. That is quite true; but taken otherwise, the wool of a Shetland ewe is worth double that of a black-faced?—Yes, fully that, and if you can keep up the quality, even more than double.

45,775. It would be needless, I fancy, to suppose that the crofters in Shetland would go in for black-faced ewes,—even if they were more profitable to the grazier they would be less profitable to the Shetland crofters as a wool-producing subject?—Shetland crofters have, I think, in some cases gone in for black-faces, or more frequently for cheviots. Some of my crofters go in for cheviots.

45,776–77. The only sheep I have seen on the crofters' pasture are Shetland sheep?—Yes, that is the rule; but where they go in for different breeds is where a man has a small place,—not common but to himself.

45,778. But still you are not clear that the improvement in the sheep would lessen the actual profit from the croft: it might lessen the quality of the wool but it would increase the quality of the sheep and the quantity of the wool?—The moment you do away with the quality of the wool you do away with the inducement to keep sheep of the Shetland breed.

45,779. Yes, but still it might be greatly increased in quantity and little deteriorated in value?—The Shetland wool if allowed to deteriorate becomes very like cheviot wool. They sometimes cross the Shetland sheep with the cheviots and you get a very good sheep after a few years,—one-eighth of Shetland and seven-eighths of cheviots makes a remarkably good sheep.

Lerwick, Shetland.

John Bruce.

45,780. And how would the value of the wool compare at present with cheviot wool?—I have sold wool from sheep half Shetland and half black-face as grey-faced wool for about the same price as grey-faced wool.

45,781. That would not be any profit?—No.

45,782. But, how would this crop of the Shetland and the cheviot sheep stand as regards the value of the wool?—It would be cheviot wool.

45,783. And would it be improved cheviot wool?—I doubt it, though at first it might be a little finer.

45,784. Mr Munro.—You say that if the crofters got the scattald restored to them of which they have been deprived, in your opinion, it would not benefit them. May I ask you what you found upon in coming to that conclusion?—In the present state of matters there is no regulation in the scattald, and supposing, for the sake of argument, that there are 8000 to 9000 acres in this stretch of hill which they have at present, the addition of 1000 acres to that hill would not make any appreciable difference. I don't think it made any difference to them when I took it away, and I don't think it would make much difference if they got it back: it would just be a little more of this same scattald.

45,785. But you heard the crofters complain bitterly of having been deprived of it?—Because outside the fence the ground is as bare as the back of your hand, and inside the fence it has been enclosed and drained for a good many years and is now in a beautiful state. Of course, it is very much better now than when they had it; but if they got their stock in there it would very soon deteriorate. If on the other hand it were divided into parts and each man got one part, it would no longer be scattald.

45,786. Don't you think the crofters are pretty fair judges of their own interests, when they say they would like the scattald to be restored?—I don't think they are.

45,787. Do you not think that they, at least, think they could use it to some advantage if they got it?—I don't think they would be contented; they would always want a little more. It is quite natural that they should; any farmer who sees fine fields adjoining his farm will tell you it would be an advantage for him to get them if he could get them cheap enough.

45,788. But they would not want their scattald restored to them unless they really and sincerely thought it could be turned to some advantage?—They must have the idea that it would enable them to get larger stocks, and to a certain extent it would, but the advantage would be small, and confined to a few of the most active among them.

45,789. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Can you tell us how many crofters share in this scattald of 730 acres that we heard about?—Roughly speaking, the number is about 50, but the Valuation Roll will give the accurate number.

45,790. Mr Maccallum.—The crofters in Shetland depend, I suppose, mostly on the fishing?—As a rule, most of them do.

45,791. And you would also agree that the knitting industry is also a most important industry, the knitting industry for the women?—Oh, yes.

45,792. They depend much more on these two things than on the actual agricultural produce of the land?—Well, the great bulk of Shetland crofts are poor and small. Where you have a really good croft the crofter either becomes a very bad fisherman, or gives the fishing up altogether.

45,793. No doubt you will see that it is of great importance to encourage these two industries, the knitting and the fishing?—Oh, yes.

45,794. Now, the material that they use for the knitting must be this pure Shetland wool?—Yes, or I believe a large number of finer wools are used for the finer Shetland work, merinoes.

45,795. But the particular worth of the Shetland hosiery depends upon its being made out of the pure native stuff?—Well, that is the general idea.

45,796. And if purchasers thought that other wools were used, the manufacture would at once fall in value?—I daresay it would, but I am not a wool expert.

45,797. Now, previous to 1872, I suppose that this scattald was stocked with Shetland sheep?—Yes.

45,798. These provided the raw material for this industry?—Yes.

45,799. So the taking away of that scattald meant a considerable interference with the important industry of knitting?—It meant the lessening of the production of Shetland wool, to a small extent.

45,800. Was not the half of the scattald taken away if 730 acres remain and 1000 were taken away?—If you refer simply to that scattald; but there is a collection of scattalds, as I was trying to explain on the map, extending over a district of some ten miles which are practically all one scattald and over which the crofters' sheep feed promiscuously. What was taken away was only a proportion of these large areas.

45,801. However, it is more than these fifty crofters have now?—Nobody can tell what they have.

45,802. According to the Crofters' Commission blue-book?—According to that blue-book they ought to have 730 acres, but de facto they pasture over some 4000 or 5000 acres along with tenants from other properties, without any regulation whatever.

45,803. There is this further point: this was stocked with black-faced ewes, was it?—Yes.

45,804. And the sheep from the crofters' scattald go in there and get mixed up with your stock,—is not that so?—No, not much. After the passing of the Crofters Act, as one of the witnesses pointed out, there was a good deal of friction. Some person put these tenants up to the idea that if they only persisted in putting their sheep into this scattald they would acquire a right to it, or something of that kind, and the consequence was, that their sheep had to be poinded, and there was a good deal of friction for some time about that. But before that there was really no friction, and it has passed away again now.

45,805. But has not there been some crossing of the native sheep with the black-faced?—Not by coming to my townships; but there has been crossing by some of the crofters buying a cross-bred sheep and slipping him into the hill, by the way of improving his own stock as he calls it.

45,806. But not by the stock on these farms that came to the neighbourhood of the crofting townships?—No.

45,807. They say so themselves, I think, or words to that effect, that their stock has been more or less spoiled in the quality of the wool, by getting mixed with farmers' sheep?—I don't think that is so in this district. The sheep are not what you would call very good Shetland sheep in that district,—they are a little bit crossed. Different sheep have been bought from time to time by the crofters and slipped into the hill, so that the sheep are now somewhat changed.

45,808. These men say that the industry of knitting has gone down in the particular district on account of the withdrawal of the scattald; are you aware of that?—I think that is fallacious. The girl on a croft can knit a certain amount of wool, and she never stops for want of material to knit with.

45,809. They also say they are obliged to purchase the wool?—If they had it of their own, they would not require to purchase it.

45,810. If they had this scattald, they would not have to purchase it?—It is a question of pounds, shillings, and pence: they would either have the wool or else buy it, and it might be more profitable to buy it than to raise it.

45,811. Could you give us any idea of the value of a Shetland fleece of ordinary average value?—If you go to the very fine sheep,—I really don't know much about the matter, but my idea is that the clip seldom exceeds 1½ lbs., which would be worth 3s. a lb. or so, so that the actual value of the fleece of the pure Shetland sheep would be equal in value to that of the cheviot fleece.

45,812. And when it is spun and knitted what is its value?—I think the knitters pay something like 1s. 6d. an ounce. This morning I saw a shawl said to be the finest ever made in Shetland, the owner of which wants £36 for it. It is a full-sized lady's shawl, and weighs something like 2 ounces.

45,813. Your principal objection to their taking the use of this scattald is that in the meantime there are no proper regulations as to grazings?—My principal objection is that if they pay a fair rent for it, they are incapable of managing it so as to make their rent out of it.

45,814. Are they not quite as capable of putting the regulations provided by Act of Parliament into force as people elsewhere?—They ought to be: the men don't want to do it.

45,815. Do you think it would be an advantage that they should put these regulations into force?—I think before they ask for more, they ought to be obliged to put these regulations into force, and let people see if they can manage a common stock. My opinion of common grazing is that it is almost impossible to manage it in any way so as to make a profit to the holders.

45,816. But these regulations have been put into force in other parts, and why should they not be here?—They have had no experience of the working of it here.

45,817. You say that you give an unqualified denial to the statements made by the crofters here, with regard to your dealings with them?—Where they say that I said one thing and did another, or that I acted in any underhand manner, I give such statements a most unqualified denial. It is impossible at this distance of time for me to remember all the little conversations that may have taken place, and in many cases the words of my servants are put into my mouth,—I don't know whether they were spoken or not.

45,818. But there is no doubt, I suppose, that there was an increase of rent in 1872?—There was a revaluation, yes, and in very many cases an increase of rent.

45,819. And a great reduction has been given by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

45,820. And at the same time that this increase of rent took effect, there was the enclosure of this scattald?—I am not prepared to give you the dates, but it was somewhere about the same time. It was all part of one scheme.

45,821. The withdrawal of the scattald and the raising of the rent?—The withdrawal of the scattald and the re-valuation of the property.

45,822. You call it re-valuation?—Accompanied by a re-division in most cases. The former system, as I daresay you are aware in Shetland, was the old 'runrig' system, where a township was held by two or three, and each man had a patch of the good and a patch of the bad all over. Generally speaking, that was abolished about that time, and the farms were squared into lots so that a re-valuation was absolutely necessary.

45,823. Do you think there is any truth in what was stated to us with so much emphasis and so repeatedly, that the crofters were misled into signing the paper they did sign about the withdrawal of the scattald?—Not a word of truth.

45,824. You think they were not misled?—Most emphatically not.

45,825. But they are a truthful people, are they not?—The people who spoke here about that, with one exception, did not speak from personal knowledge; they spoke merely from hearsay. They did not sign the paper.

45,826. Some of them surely spoke from personal knowledge?—There was one old man who did.

45,827. Don't you think he must have been misled?—I do not.

45,828. He could not make a deliberate misstatement about it?—I believe he made a deliberate misstatement.

45,829. And still you believe that they are a truthful people?—That is not the Norse character, I am afraid; it is not one of our characteristics.

45,830. To be truthful?—No. We have a great many very good qualities in the Norse character, but

Lerwick, Shetland.

John Bruce.

truthfulness is the very last I would include among them.

45,831. Do you include yourself in saying so?—I am speaking of the Norse blood, of which I have a share. I think anybody will admit that the Norse character is certainly not a truthful one.

45,832. And you are a Norseman yourself?—I come from the same stock originally: we all do.

45,833. There is no doubt in your own mind about the genuineness of the desire of the people to get back this scattald?—Oh, there is no doubt about it.

45,834. They made an application to the Crofters Commission for it?—Yes.

45,835. And they were not successful in that application?—No.

45,836. Can you tell us how it came about that they failed?—As far as I understand the Crofters Act only allowed enlargement from farms that were of a greater yearly value than £100 a year. I met the application by a statement that this was not worth £100 a year. But I don't think the case was ever tried on its merits,—there was some technical difficulty in the way: it was thrown over, I understand, on account of some technical error.

45,837. Now, is it the case that since that application was made the scattald has been sold by you to your brother?—Yes.

45,838. So that that is an effective bar to the crofters getting it?—Under the existing clause.

45,839. You have put an effective bar between them and the scattald by selling it to Colonel Bruce?—I am not a lawyer, but I believe so as far as the present law is concerned.

45,840. The Chairman.—There were two applications I understand to the Crofters Commission, and the first application I believe was withdrawn as incompetent?—Yes.

45,841. Then came the second application, when the plea was raised, I presume by you, that the true landlord had not been called owing to a change of ownership?—Yes.

45,842. And that application has not, I think, been disposed of finally?—I think your lordship is correct: I simply stated that I was not defender.

45,843. Who would have been the proper defender?—My brother, Colonel Bruce.

45,844. And had there been a transference of the property to him?—Yes.

45,845. For valuable consideration?—Yes, the title was purchased.

45,846. And that is the position of the matter at present. Now, a number of the crofters have said that they were asked to sign a certain paper. Is that the fact?—To give up the hill?

45,847. Yes?—It must be the fact: they all agree about it. I do not remember about that paper, but it is highly likely that I would send round the ground officer with a paper explaining what I intended.

45,848–9. Do you not recollect, as a matter of fact, whether you did or did not send round the paper?—I have heard them all say so, and, I think, it is most likely I did. I looked for the paper they spoke of, and I could not find it. That rather staggered me; but at the same time I think I must have sent round the paper.

45,850. You would observe from their evidence that they concurred,—not one or two, but I think four or five,—in saying that they were asked to sign it?—The matter was brought up before the Crofters Commission. I think there is not the slightest doubt that I did send round the paper.

45,851. Since you have looked for the paper and cannot find it, can you tell us what is in it?—I cannot; but it would be simply explaining what I proposed, and asking their concurrence.

45,852. Can you throw any light on this point,—whether you instructed the officer who went round with the paper to say to the crofters that if they signed the paper their stock would not be taken off the hill?—No, the one had nothing to do with the other. After the place was enclosed, I made an offer to give it as a club farm. I do not think the people are telling what they actually believe to be untrue, but, I believe, they are confounding in their own minds what was said on one occasion with what was said on another.

45,853. Are you able to say whether when the officer went round with the paper, he had any instructions to say anything to them with reference to the taking of the stock?—He would have no verbal instructions from me to say anything to them except what was down on the paper.

45,854. You observe they all say that when they were asked to sign the paper, they were told at the same time that their stock would not be taken off the hill?—Well, they apparently had a meeting last night, and it is down there in that document written by Mr Clark. Probably, some man said so at the meeting, and they all concurred, and now, of course, they all swear to it, but I don't lay much stress on that. I don't suppose these men know very well what was said.

45,855. You think that whether they intend to do so or not they are misrepresenting you?—Well, I doubt the statement; at the same time I am not in a position to disprove it.

45,856. If the statement is incorrect, then whether they mean it or not they are misleading us?—Yes, but I don't assert that; I don't say that my ground officer may not have made a foolish statement.

45,857. May not he have made such a statement gathering your views from what passed in conversation between you and them?—I don't think it is likely; but he may have made a statement which they or some one of them may have understood in this way: and now it has been bandied about from mouth to mouth until it has assumed its present form.

45,858. In point of fact, was there stock at the time when that paper was signed kept on the hill?—Probably.

45,859. For how long?—Two or three months. The place would be enclosed before any stock was removed. The fences were put up, and I then told them my intentions.

45,860. Do you remember this, that when the stock was being removed, a great deal of irritation arose and some pretty strong measures had to be taken by the shepherd and his dogs to get the stock taken off?—No, that is quite a mistake: there was no such irritation.

45,861. Were they quite willing to remove the stock?—Well, there was perfect peace,—there was no difficulty between the shepherds and them.

45,862. You heard one witness describe rather graphically how his sheep were torn at the throat by the shepherds' dogs,—had you any information about that?—No.

45,863. Have you any recollection of any resistance of any kind, or protest of any kind by the crofters, on the proposal of the local managers to remove the sheep?—No: the objection on their part was met by my giving them that 300 acres, and they were quite content, or expressed themselves as being quite content.

45,864. They accepted the situation with perfect goodwill?—Yes.

45,865. Then, if they did so, how comes it that we had such an exhibition of irritation in the witness-box to-day?—That is the result of the agitation since the Crofters Act was passed.

45,866. And bad advice from some one?—That is what I think; that is my opinion.

45,867. And is not, you think, founded upon anything that took place when the sheep were removed?—No, I think not. Of course, I don't say that there might not have been a certain amount of bitter feeling, but it was not given expression to.

45,868. How do you know there was bitter feeling?—I do not say there was: there might have been.

45,869. Do you believe there was bitter feeling?—No, I don't think so.

45,870. Why do you say there might have been?—If you assert that there was, I cannot deny it: there might have been more feeling than was expressed, but so far as it was expressed there was none.

45,871. You have no reason to suppose from anything you saw or any exhibition that took place, that any irritation existed?—Exactly.

45,872. Are your relations with them just now cordial and friendly?—With most of them.

45,873. Not all?—There are half-a-dozen men who appeared here whom it would be difficult to please: there are always a few discontents.

45,874. Do these men represent the feeling of others?—No, they do not.

45,875. Then, if they say they represent the feeling of others they are mistaken?—They may have been appointed delegates.

45,876. And if so, they represent the feelings of others,—may we not take that as correct?—They may have been empowered by a number of others to make a certain statement.

45,877. But, I suppose, you concede that in so far as they are representative witnesses they correctly represent the views of those who appointed them?—No they do not. These are extreme views, and the persons who express them give their own views, which are not representative but simply tolerated by the people they represent.

45,878. You think they carry the expression of their views in the witness-box much farther than the meeting they were authorised to represent?—Much farther than any of their constituents would state them. Most of the witnesses you have examined to-day have been before the Sheriff here on criminal charges.

45,879. I think the question was only put by Mr Small with regard to two of them, and in each of these two cases the man was convicted of breach of the peace?—I simply mention that as an indication of the character of the witnesses.

45,880. You said, I think, that crofters on your estate who are best off are those who have no pasture at all?—Yes.

45,881. Is it your view, speaking with all the knowledge and experience you have as a Shetland landlord, that the crofters in Shetland who have pasture would be better if they had none?—Oh, well, that depends on various circumstances.

45,881A. But stating it generally, are you of opinion that the Shetland crofters who have pasture would be much better if they had none at all?—They would be much better,—a man who has a share in an undivided pasture would be much better if he had his share divided out to himself and enclosed, so that he could get the full command of it.

45,882. But, I understood you to say that the Shetland crofter who has pasture is apt to fritter away time in looking after a few sheep which might be more profitably employed?—Yes. In some cases, where a man has good pasture and has a couple of hundred sheep on the hill, it pays him to devote his time and attention to them; but a man who has only four or five sheep had far better stay at home and let the sheep attend to themselves.

45,883. You placed a great deal of weight upon the fact that before these witnesses could be heard properly for restoration of this pasture, they should be called upon to manage in a better way the pasture they have?—Yes.

45,884. Is this your view then, that suppose a proper system of management were adopted for the pasture you have, such a system of management as would meet with your approbation (and you are well qualified to judge), would you be willing to consider favourably a proposal for assigning that pasture?—It would amount to this; would I let to a number of small tenants a place instead of letting it to one single tenant. Most certainly I would, if, in my opinion, these small tenants were able to manage it profitably and pay me a rent,—if I had a confidence in their management.

45,885. You have no objections in essence to let a number of crofters—not an excessive number—have the management of this pasture under proper regulations?—I would have none.

45,886. You say there are about fifty crofters grazing on 730 acres?—Yes.

45,887. I suppose you would concede that that area of pasture is considerably too small for such a number of crofters?—Yes, as compared with some other places, and subject to my expressed opinion, that common grazings are as a rule most unprofitable and unsatisfactory, but you know that in our end of the country the pasture is very small for the arable land. If you come down to Dunrossness proper, you will find that I have fifty-two or fifty-three crofters there in a scattald of 380 acres. We cannot compare with places in the north of Shetland, where the arable land is comparatively small and the hills very large. In our district the hills are very small compared with the arable ground.

45,887A. But, I suppose, you would be in favour, if the thing could be carried out properly, and without injuring anyone that those men who have only 730 acres should have some moderate extension of grazing?—It would depend on the way in which they got it,—the scheme under which they got it.

45,888. But suppose they got it under a scheme of which you entirely approve?—Oh, then, I would have no objection whatever.

45,889. And you would be in favour of such a thing being done?—Certainly, if I saw a prospect of any material increase in the prosperity of the people.

45,890. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Shetland Proprietors.—Have you anything to say about John Nicolson, Sandwick, and the acres of arable land he got?—John Nicolson said he was removed, and he spoke the truth.

45,891. Yes, but with regard to the land that he now asks for?—That was Burraland. There was a place called Burraland from which there were four tenants removed, and John Nicolson asked for it. The tenants had been working this place on the old Shetland system, until they had worked the place completely out, and they could not make a living on it: they all removed of their own accord, being indeed very anxious to get away from it. No tenant would have taken it in this state for the land was done, so I put a fence round it and drained it, and sowed in grass seeds, and put in manure, and it is improving now gradually as a grass park. As to this man Nicholson, his grievence is true enough. He was a waiter in the south, who married a wife and came home to live with his father. He wanted the farm, and I gave him this farm, after the passing of the Act. It was not one of my own farms, but one of my brother George's. He was rather a disagreeable tenant, always making difficulties and disturbances, and generally was not an agreeable man to have in the place, and I told him I would not keep him, so I turned him out. Not, perhaps, that I would have turned him out under ordinary circumstances but I wanted the place for two people who came out of Burraland.

45,892. With regard to this pasture of 1000 acres, to prevent any misapprehension I should like to ask you whether before it was enclosed that pasture was confined to the tenants who have these 730 acres now?—No, it was open to any tenant from Quarff to Scoresburgh.

45,893. What is your opinion generally with regard to the expediency of fishermen having crofts?—Well, you know, in Shetland a man cannot fish all the year round as he does in the south, and I think, as a rule, it is a good thing for a fisherman to have a little croft. My own idea is that a fisherman, who is really a good fisherman and attends to his work, should not have more than three to five acres at the outside.

45,894. Of arable land?—No, altogether. I am talking of a man who practises spade husbandry. There ought to be two classes of crofters I think. When the crofter is able to keep a horse and plough with his neighbour, and where he has a good arable croft he is generally an independent man and does very well. Such a man generally drops the fishing, or only follows it occasionally. But all that a man who regularly goes to the fishing wants is a good milk cow and a pig and poultry, and you will find that in his case, three to five acres of common quality is quite sufficient.

45,895. Three acres and a cow?—Yes, three acres and a cow. Our acres, as you know, are sometimes very poor. That would give him from one to one and a half acres of arable land, which would be quite enough for him to cultivate with a spade.

45,896. Then, with regard to the method of cropping, have you anything to say about the average Shetlander's cropping?—The average rule with crofter farmers is that they are deteriorating the land very rapidly, except where they bring in enormous quantities of new soil, and in that case they are generally ruining some other place, by scalping the land. In Dunrossness we have rotation of cropping, both on part of my estate and on part of Mr Grierson of Quendale's estate; and although that was originally introduced, and in a measure forced upon the crofters, yet they now see the advantage of it, and would not give it up on any account. Fencing is not required because no animals are allowed at large during any season of the year. These crofters are all well-to-do, and if one of these crofts became vacant there would be a very great demand for it.

45,897. That is not general, though, is it?—No; except in Unst, I don't know any other place where the same thing exists, but it ought to be general throughout the islands.

45,898. Have you had any difficulties since the passing of the Crofters Act in regard to the up-keep of houses and the improving of houses by crofters?—The crofters in very many cases are improving their houses.

45,899. And building new houses?—And building new houses, in very many cases. But that was going on before the passing of the Act. I have no doubt that in some cases crofters are building houses now who would not have done so if it had not been for the passing of the Act; but, on the other hand, I am afraid that is more than counterbalanced by stopping the improvements which were mutually going on between the landlord and the tenants, where the landlord was improving or helping the crofters to improve the houses. I could not say that the rate of progress on the whole has been very much altered one way or another.

45,900. Have you anything to say about the repair of fences?—I have this to say, that it is very difficult to get crofters to keep up fences. In many places where fences were kept up by the landlord prior to the passing of the Act they are now going down to destruction, and it is almost impossible to convince crofters that the liability to keep up these fences falls upon them.

CHARLES THOMSON, Quoyhouse Unst (46)—examined.

45,901. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

45,902. Was your case dealt with by the Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The croft is on the Buness estate belonging to Mrs Ursula Edmonstone; extent 7 acres, 1 rood, 26 poles arable, 18 acres, 12 poles outrun, no scattald, except one-third of 27 acres: old rent £6, 5s., fair rent £4, 8s.]

45,903. What is it you wish to say?—I would like to say before you proceed further, that there seems to have been some misunderstanding among the crofters in Unst as to your proceedings. They expected that there would be a sitting held at Baltasound.

45,904. So there would, if names had been sent into us, but we do not hold meetings unless we get the names of people who are to be examined?—So I merely spoke to a few of your party whom I happened to meet, and there was a meeting among us afterwards, when it was arranged that two of us to whom it would be most convenient should come to Lerwick here. I understand the Commissioners wrote me but I never received the letter.

45,905. Did you not see the advertisement in the Shetland newspapers?—No, I did not see it.

45,906. We advertised it over the length and breadth of the Shetland Isles, in the Shetland newspapers. There were local paragraphs from time to time, and there were advertisements for two consecutive weeks in the Shetland Times and in the Shetland News, making intimation that we were to hold public sittings in the county of Shetland, and that parties desiring to give evidence were to send their names to the Secretary; but we never got any names?—I wish to say that there is no convenience in our place for myself or any of the others: our great complaint is the want of scattald among some of us.

45,907. I understand you have no scattald at all?—In the township where I live there is no scattald worth mentioning. A sheep farm goes round three sides of it, and the fourth side borders on the water, so that we have no liberty at all.

45,908. The bit of land you are most concerned about is the Ness of Quoyhouse?—Yes. That anciently belonged to the township of Quoyhouse, which consists of three crofts lying together, but that was taken in by the sheep farm.

45,909. What sheep farm?—The sheep farm of Cliff.

45,910. Well, we know something about that land, for we have been over it recently. Your croft lies at the top of Loch Cliff?—Yes.

45,911. What you desire to represent is that you are without scattald. You were appointed at a meeting, and the meeting wished to submit to us through you that they would like an extension of grazings?—Yes, what I chiefly want would be a portion of scattald somewhere adjoining our farm, because it is extremely difficult to get the rent without having some portion of scattald to put cows on. I speak for my two neighbours and myself.

45,912. Are there only four crofters in Quoyhouse?—Only three, but there is none with pasture. It would apply to more than that still, because the scattald is of very little account.

45,913. Could you pay rent for additional scattald if you got it?—Yes, we would be prepared to pay for that piece among us three.

45,914. That is the township of Quoyhouse?—The Ness of Quoyhouse.

45,915. Do you yourself carry on any trade?—Yes, I am a joiner to trade.

45,916. Mr Gordon.—The piece of scattald that you refer to is part of the farm of Cliff at present?—Yes.

45,917. Who is the tenant of Cliff?—Hugh Inkster. Our peat is in the same place too, and we are much inconvenienced for want of peat.

45,918. Is there any peat on that bit?—The peat right for the three houses was there.

45,919. At present you have to take your peats across the water?—Yes.

45,920. From the crofters' land?—From the west side of Loch Cliff there.

45,921. But is it from the crofters' land, or from the farm?—It is from a piece of scattald.

45,922. We saw some men there boating over peats when we were there?—Well, it is just there.

45,923. Would these be some of your township men?—Yes, they were my next neighbours.

45,924. We noticed one taking peats across the water?—Oh, yes, that is one on the outside: he lives above the loch near the road. He transports all his peats from there.

45,925. Did that scattald land ever belong to your township?—Yes, it belonged exclusively to the township of Quoyhouse; it never belonged to Cliff.

45,926. Cliff was a township of itself?—Yes, and the scattald of Cliff lies along the Decks of Cliff.

45,927. And there is pretty good land there?—It is said to be the best in the island. And the young fellows would be glad if they could get a bit of land to carry on crofting.

45,928. You are not prepared to speak to Cliff in general but to that part called Ness?—No. My wife's father was there a good while, and had to leave when it was laid down.

45,929. Mr Alexander Bain, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for Mrs Edmonstone of Buness.—Your case was dealt with when the Crofters Commission was down there?—Yes.

45,930. And at that time your arrears were some Lerwick, Shetland. Charles Thomson.

£13 odds?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The arrears were £13, 14s. 2d., of which the sum of £9, 14s. 2d. was cancelled, and £4 ordered to be paid in two equal instalments.]

45,931. The Chairman.—Have the arrears been paid?—Yes: there is some of it in the agent's hands: it has not been just quite settled, but it is all right so far as that goes.

45,932. You are still in arrear?—A little, not much.

45,933. How much?—I cannot say.

45,934. How many rents have you paid since 1892?—I have paid all but one, and that one I am keeping. I spoke to the landlord about it the other day.

45,935. Mr Bain.—Did you pay last year's rent?—No, that is the rent that is due.

45,936. Did you pay the £4 that the Crofters Commission ordered you to pay?—I wrought on the estate of Buness, and my wages have still to be settled. The matter has only to be squared up.

45,937. The Crofters Commission fixed your rent due at November 1892 at £4, 8s. so that in 1892 there was £4, 8s. due, and in 1893 £4, 8s. more: was either of these two sums paid?—I paid the 1892 rent.

45,938. Can you tell us who occupies the Ness of Quoyhouse, the place that you want?—It is all taken in along with the sheep farm of Cliff.

45,939. Occupied by Mr Hugh Inkster?—Yes.

45,940. Is he a crofter?—He is a big farmer.

45,941. Can you tell us what his rent is?—I could not tell you that.

45,942. Is he a tenant on the Buness estate?—No.

David Stickle, Pettester, Baltasound (30)—examined.

David Stickle.

45,943. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter or a cottar?—I live with my father who is a crofter.

45,944. What is his name?—Andrew Stickle.

45,945. Was his case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area is 2 acres, 2 roods arable, 3 acres outrun, and a sixth share of 387 acres of scattald. The old rent was £4, 15s. and the fair rent is £2, 10s.: the arrears amounted to £15, 12s. 11d., whereof there were cancelled £13, 2s. 11d. and ordered to be paid £2, 10s.]

45,946. Has your father paid up his arrears?—Yes.

45,947. And has he been paying the fair rent?—Yes.

45,948. Do you carry on any business?—I am a fisherman.

45,949. And what do you wish to represent to us?—Through not having the privilege of a meeting of the Commission in Baltasound, there are a few crofters who wish to express that they are in great distress owing to the scattald having been taken from the crofters and put into the sheep farms. They would be glad to get it back at a Fair Rent.

45,950. Were you appointed as a delegate at a meeting?—Yes.

45,951. How many attended the meeting?—There were not a great many at the meeting: they came off to the steamboat, and we expected the Burrafirth men and the Westing men the same night that your yacht left.

45,952. How many would there be altogether?—About 20.

45,953. What scattald were you deprived of?—The scattald belonged to the Westing people.

45,954. Is it close to Pettester?—No, it is a long way from Pettester,—on the same side but further south.

45,955. What farm is it now incorporated with?—The sheep farm of Collister.

45,956. How far is that farm from Pettester?—About 4 miles to the south-west.

45,957. And is there a road to it?—No.

45,958. Has Mr Sandison, the merchant, got that farm?—Yes. [Mr Small.—It is the late Major Cameron's property].

45,959. I suppose you don't know anything of the taking away of these scattalds of your own knowledge?—No, but my father was put off the croft belonging to Buness, 22 years ago at Mailand.

Lerwick, Shetland. David Stickle.

45,960. And who has it now?—Mr Edmonstone.

45,961. But you are not making any claim about it?—No.

45,962. Do you wish to get a new holding yourself?—Yes.

45,963. Where?—I am sure I could not exactly say at the present time. Of course, there are a good many who want a holding though not perhaps just at once: they would consider for the future where it would be chosen.

45,964. Where are the places that would make holdings?—They could get very good crofts in the whole of the sheep pasture.

45,965. What sheep pasture do you mean?—I mean Cliff for one, and Burrafirth, which is not quite so good as Cliff, but you could get some there. Then at Collister and South Belmont.

45,966. We have been looking at the whole of these places. Do you carry on any business?—No, I am just a fisherman.

45,967. Mr Gordon.—Suppose that the township of Pettester wants pasture, why should you go all the way down to Collister to get it?—We do not want it from there at all; it is the tenants belonging to the west side who want it.

45,968. Are there any tenants in Collister just now?—No.

45,969. Are there any in Houlland?—No.

45,970. Does the pasture of Houlland come close up to the township of Pettester?—Yes, it does.

45,971. And would you suggest the farm of Houlland or any part of it as a suitable extension of grazings for the township of Pettester?—Oh, yes, some of it.

45,972. Which part of it?—The south part and the west part: that is according to the way the fence runs.

45,973. There is a fence between the township and you?—Yes.

45,974. Was there an old crofting township to the south of you, between you and the scattald lands of the crofters at Baliasta?—Yes.

45,975. There are one or two small crofts there yet, I think, along with the shepherd's house?—One.

45,976. Are there any crofts at all on the west side?—Yes, there is one.

45,977. Is there a croft at Dale of Woodwick?—There has been a separate croft, but there is none there now.

45,978. Is there a shepherd's house there now?—No.

45,979. Are there ruins there?—There were three houses formerly, and two of them are in ruins, but one still stands.

45,980. There is one place which, I think, neither you nor the other witnesses mentioned, immediately to the north of Springfield, presently occupied by the Earl of Zetland. Perhaps you don't know anything about that?—I know the place.

45,981. That is Muckle Hoe. Do you know that hill?—Yes.

45,982. Who occupies that besides the Earl?—There is a small piece to the westward of it,—I am sure I cannot exactly say who is the proprietor, but a man occupies it for pony breeding.

45,983. This farm of Cliff, to which you and the previous witnesses referred, is not near the arable holdings of the man who is tenant of the farm?—No.

45,984. It is some miles distant, is it?—About a couple of miles.

45,985. Mr James Begg, Solicitor, Lerwick, Agent for crofters.—I suppose most of the district from which you come is laid down for sheep farms?—Yes.

45,986. What was formerly in the occupation of crofters is now mostly under sheep?—Yes, on the south and on the north, and on the east is all Cliff.

45,987. It is not only the scattald land that has been enclosed?—No, both scattald and crofts.

45,988. Land which was formerly used for the purpose of raising crops?—Yes.

45,989. Is that land suitable for crop raising?—Oh, yes, both for crop and stock.

45,990. Is it more suitable for cropping than for stock-raising?—In some places it is, but in others it is good for both purposes.

45,991. Are you prepared to stock a croft if you should get one?—Yes.

45,992. Without assistance?—Yes.

45,993. Would you be prepared to build a steading on it?—Oh, yes, and so would a good many more on the island.

45,994. Is there much distress in your district owing to the crofts being taken away?—Yes, there is some in our district, and a great deal more in other parishes in Unst.

45,995. What do the people do who have been turned out of their crofts?—A good many have gone to the Colonies.

45,996. A great many had to leave the island?—Yes.

45,997. Is it possible to prosecute the fishing well now-a-days?—Some years, of course, the fishing does very well, but in other years very little; that is what makes a good many go in for a croft as well as the fishing, because in a bad year you have the croft to fall back upon.

45,998. Is it difficult to find crews for the boats?—Sometimes it is, and sometimes not.

45,999. Supposing new crofts were given, would it improve the fishing?—To a great extent, for I believe there are a great many young fellows in the south country who would come back and stop if they could get the chance.

46,000. How do the rents paid by the big farmers there compare with the rents paid by the crofters?—The rents paid by the big farmers are generally lower than those paid by the crofters.

46,001. From what you know of the matter, would you consider it more advantageous for the proprietors to have their lands laid down in crofts than in big farms?—That is my opinion, but, of course, others may think differently.

46,002. But if all the crofters were in a position like yourself and there was a prospect of their paying their rents regularly, would it be to the advantage of the proprietor to have the land laid out in crofts rather than in sheep farms?—Oh, yes, I think so.

46,003. Mr Gordon.—Suppose the farm of Cliff was again put under crofters, how many crofters do you think it could accommodate comfortably?—I would say there is a fair amount for three just now.

46,004. And what rent do you suppose the three could pay for the whole farm?—I don't know. The rent of that is somewhere about £70, but, I think, the proprietor only charges the occupier some £62: he gave him a reduction of £10, I think.

46,005. And do you think you would find three crofters willing to give £62 for the whole farm?—Some would do it.

46,006. Would you be one of the three who would?—If I fancied a croft there, I would.

46,007. Your best harbour I fancy is Baltasound?—That is the only harbour there is for big boats.

46,008. That is the harbour where the whole of your part of the island would gather before going out to fish?—Yes.

46,009. Now, is Baltasound a convenient place for you to get at from Pettester?—Well, it is in summer time, but not very convenient in winter, for it is a very bad road.

46,010. Are you acquainted with the farm of Mailand?—Yes.

46,011. Would that be a convenient situation for crofters as regards the harbour?—Oh, yes, very convenient.

46,012. Is there anything more convenient in the neighbourhood?—I could not say.

46,013. Is that the nearest land at present let to a farmer with the exception of Ordale and Hamar?—Yes.

46,014. There is a considerable extent of old arable land on that farm?—Yes.

46,015. Have you any knowledge as to how the people left that place,—whether they were evicted or left of their own accord?—They were forced to leave it.

46,016. Was it within your memory?—Yes, I can just remember it.

46,017. It is rather an exposed place, is it not?—Yes a little from the south-west.

46,018. But that, in your opinion, is about the most convenient ground for a fishing crofting population or township?—Yes.

46,019. I don't think Collister, which I have been over, would be a very suitable place for fishermen?—I could not say except for small boats.

46,020. You have no road or access between Collister and Baltasound?—No road.

46,021. There is a kind of track from Westing to Baltasound?—Yes.

46,022. But not a cart road?—No.

46,023. But is there not a cart road from Westing to Uyeasound?—Yes.

46,024. Do the fishermen of Westing go to Baltasound?—No, to Uyeasound.

46,025. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know the Haa and Skaw in the north end of Unst?—Yes.

46,026. How are these places occupied just now?—Skaw is occupied by sheep, I think, and ponies and cattle, but there are two crofters there.

46,027. Were there more crofters in that place formerly?—Oh, yes.

46,028. Are these men crofters under the Act, or do they hold from the tenant?—I could not say.

46,029. There are old crofters' houses there, I suppose?—Yes, there are some of the ruins still standing.

46,030. How many old crofters' houses are there?—I could not say exactly how many.

46,031. Is there a considerable area of arable ground there left out of cultivation?—Yes, there is a good deal.

46,032. And if crofts were formed there, would they be conveniently situated for fishing? Is it a good place for fishing?—Yes, for small boats, but not for big boats.

46,033. Is there any land suitable for forming new crofters' holdings about Baltasound, which is the principal harbour?—There is none about Baltasound nearer than Mr Craig's holding.

46,034. That is the farm of Ordale?—Yes.

46,035. Is there a considerable portion of that farm left out of cultavation, the arable ground of it?—Oh, yes.

46,036. Is the greater part of the arable land left out of cultivation?—A good part of it, at all events.

46,037. Would you consider that that farm of Ordale is mainly a pastoral farm?—It is partly both.

46,038. No doubt if holdings were formed there, they would be very convenient for the fishing?—Very convenient.

46,039. Is there any other land there that might be suitably formed into crofters' holdings at Baltasound, say on the north side?—No, there is no other place except Hamar on the north side.

46,040. Is there not a good deal of ground there?—There is a lot of arable ground; I could not say how much there is, but it might be the size of two small crofts or so.

46,041. There is no part of it cultivated?—No.

46,042. Mr Bain.—You tell us that the Cliff farm would make three nice crofts. Can you give us the names of three crofters who would take that farm at a rent of £62, and take over the stock presently on it?—I would not specify the names of three: I could specify the names of three who would take the farm, but I did not say they would take over the stock. I don't know that they should be forced to take over the stock.

46,043. Did any man send you here as a delegate to say that he would take a third share of Cliff farm?—No, not at all.

46,044. You say you remember the evictions from Mailland?—Yes.

46,045. How long ago is that?—About twenty-one years ago.

46,046. And how old are you?—Thirty.

46,047. So you would then be about nine years of age?—Yes.

46,048. Do you remember the circumstances connected with these evictions?—No, but I can remember the people being put out.

46,049. And you don't know why?—Yes, because it was going to be laid down for sheep farming.

46,050. Did the crofters get other crofts beside them?—Yes.

46,051. They all got other crofts?—Yes, but not all under the same proprietor.

46,052. But they all got crofts round about?—Yes.

ZACHARY MACAULAY HAMILTON, Baltasound (39)—examined.

46,053. The Chairman.—How shall we describe you, Mr Hamilton?—I am factor for the estate of Garth and Bressay, also a farmer and fishcurer.

46,054. What is the name of your farm?—Garth.

46,055. Have you more than one farm?—There are three places—Garth, Swinister, and Scatsta.

46,056. Is Scatsta an island?—No, it lies on the east side of Sullom Voe.

46,057. Mr Small, Solicitor, Lerwick.—Take the Garth estate of which you are factor: what is the total acreage of the estate?—The total acreage of the estate is a little over 24,000 acres.

46,058. How much of that is in the hands of crofters?—About 15,000 acres.

46,059. And can you give us the rentals of the crofting and the non-crofting portions respectively?—The non-crofting rental is a little over £700, and the crofting rental is a shade over £800.

46,060. Is it the case that you spent a good deal of money on the non-crofting part of the estate, in fencing and draining?—Yes, we have.

46,061. And, in your opinion, could it be subdivided for occupation by crofters without detriment to the occupation of the large holdings?—No, I do not think it could.

46,062. You have heard it stated that some of these tenants in the neighbourhood were evicted,—is that the case?—Not in Garth estate to my knowledge.

46,063. Are there any vacant crofts on the estate at present?—There are several crofts that I could not get re-let to crofters which I have had to let as grazing to any one who would take them.

46,064. Did you advertise them?—I advertised them, and could not get crofters to take them.

46,065. Then, would you say that there is or there is not a demand for crofts?—I say that there is a demand for crofts if the crofters can get the kind of crofts they want, and where they want them, and how they want them, and as they wish them. But as to crofts that are presently occupied by tenants and become vacant, if there is the slightest drawback such as the want of peats, or distance from fishing, you simply cannot get a crofter to take such a croft even at the judicial rent.

46,066. What is your opinion as to a man being both a crofter and a fisherman?—I think no man can serve two masters. I don't think it is at all a good thing to combine the two occupations.

46,067. You think he would make more of his croft if he were not fishing?—Far more.

46,068. And make more of his fishing if he were not crofting?—Certainly.

46,069. In your opinion, should a fisherman have any land besides his house?—I think he should have a little bit of land sufficient to keep one cow perhaps and raise potatoes; I think that would be an advantage.

46,070. At about what rent would you expect he should have that?—Say from £3 to £3, 10s.

46,071. On the other hand take the case of a crofter who is not a fisherman; how much land do you think he should have in order to make a livelihood?—I should say he ought to have at least ten acres arable land, and twenty to thirty of scattald.

46,072. What stock would he be able to keep on that?—If it is anything like good land, he should be able to keep say five cattle, twenty sheep, and two Shetland ponies.

46,073. Is there any regular rotation of crops carried on by the crofters?—On some parts of the estate there is; in Delting for instance.

46,074. In Unst?—One or two places in Unst.

46,075. Is it the rule or the exception?—It is the exception.

46,076. What is the ordinary rule of crofters' cultivation?—A white crop and potatoes, time about.

46,077. Biennial?—Yes.

46,078. What effect has that upon the land?—It reduces it very much.

46,079. Do you think the average crofter's holding is capable of producing much better results than at present if it was better wrought?—I think so, decidedly.

46,080. Is there much scalping on the scattald?—Not so much now as there used to be, though there is too much yet.

46,081. For using as manure?—Yes.

46,082. And that deteriorates the pasture I suppose?—Yes.

46,083. What is your experience in regard to the keeping in repair of the buildings, the houses and offices on crofts, by the crofters?—The crofters have hardly yet realised that under the Crofters Act they are bound to keep all their buildings in repair. It is very difficult to get them to realise that.

46,084. And as the result of that?—As the result of that a few of the more intelligent ones, and perhaps better-off ones, have done a lot in the way of improving their houses; but a number are simply letting their houses go to ruin. When the house becomes uninhabitable they leave, and you cannot get another crofter to take it. I had a case last year of a crofter who had his judicial rent fixed. He left and I could not get a crofter to take his place, though I offered it at a fair rent, and, in fact, at less.

46,085. Are you aware of vacant crofts on any other estates besides those you represent?—Yes, I believe there are vacant crofts in the valley of Tingwall, one of the best agricultural parts of Shetland.

46,086. The Chairman.—Is it your opinion that according to the present crofting system in Shetland, a township is the better of having a scattald or common grazing?—I think it would be better if each individual crofter had his scattald for himself. If the scattald is held in common it is generally abused, one trying to take advantage of the other.

46,087. Do you make that as a remark applicable to the whole of Shetland?—Yes.

46,088. The stronger oppresses the weaker?—Yes.

46,089. The young man of forty takes the benefit of the grazing which belongs to the widow?—Quite so; that really is the case.

46,090. Is that found in every large scattald?—I am afraid so.

46,091. Would the Grazings Act meet the difficulty?—To a certain extent it would.

46,092. But given proper regulations for the management of the scattald and due attention to the interests of each individual, are you in favour of every township in Shetland having a common grazing?—I am in favour of every crofter having scattald, but I am not in favour of a common grazing.

46,093. But you would have every crofter to have a scattald?—I would have every crofter to have a certain amount of scattald.

46,094. And for 10 acres arable, you would assign, I think you said, 20 to 30 acres of scattald?—Yes. Of course it depends on the quality of the ground a good deal.

46,095. You are aware I daresay that a large number of the townships at present have no scattald?—In some places in Shetland, but there are not very many which have no scattald.

46,096. Well, I have been endeavouring to get a list made up of the townships in Shetland which have no scattald, and it is as follows,—you will correct me if I am wrong in regard to any particular place :—Uregarth, Stove, Kews, Watergarth, Northdale, Coldback, West Scraefield, Haroldswick, Huyea, Northwick, Mucklepund, Braehead, Banks, Baliasta, Gue, Scraefield, Alma, Burrabrake, Cullivoe, Cunnister, Gutcher, Raga, Bankhead, Delting, Heglibister, Tingwall, Linga Isle, Tingwall, Saundersfield, Mailland, Noness, Boatshouse, Scarvister, Aithsness, Coldback (Delting), Toft, Fleck, Wiltro, Scatness (no scattald : have share in Horse Island), Fladdabister, Starkigarth. [Witness].—Coldback has a large scattald, if you refer to Coldback in Unst.

Lerwick, Shetland.

Zachary Macaulay Hamilton.

46,097. What scattald has it a share in?—It skirts on both sides of the road from the dykes of Mailland to the dykes of Uyeasound.

46,098. There are four crofters there who have no scattald?—They may say they have no scattald but they occupy it.

46,099. How do they occupy it?—By putting animals on it: John Harper and Agnes Moar are the names of those who have scattald, and they scat on the scattald outside the dyke and right to the dykes of Uyeasound.

46,100. The Chairman.—John Harper and Agnes Moar are entered in the Crofters Commission Report for 1892, as having no scattald.

46,101. Mr Gordon.—They do put their cattle on that little bit between the public road and the march of Ordale, but that is simply a piece of waste ground with ten times as much stone as soil?—The whole scattald is of that description.

46,102. Then, you come to the hill of Ordale, which is bare on that side but good when you get over; do you say that is their scattald?—As a matter of fact, if you are dealing with questions of right, they have really no right to scattald, but, as a matter of fact, they do use it.

46,103. The Chairman.—They have no scattald which forms part of their holdings under the Act of Parliament?—No.

46,104. And any privilege of grazing they exercise at present they might be excluded from at any moment?—They might.

46,105. Then, they have no scattald?—At Cullivoe, No. 18 on your list, the tenants have over 3000 acres. I gave them that since the Crofters Commission was here.

46,106. They had it not at the date of the visit of the Crofters Commission?—No.

46,107. And they have it not now under the Act?—Well, it is by an agreement under the Act.

46,108. Have you given it to them as part of their holdings under the Act?—No. Then Cunnister (No. 19) has scattald.

46,109. Where?—In the scattald of Cunnister in Garth. I think there are 21 or 22 acres. Some of the tenants in Gutcher (No. 21) have scattald.

46,110. Under the Act of Parliament?—Yes. There are different estates there cut up into little bits. At Boatshouse again (No. 28), if that is Boatshouse in Whalsey, it has a fifth share of the scattald.

46,111. What scattald?—I don't know the extent.

,112. Is that the bit of land we heard about the other day?—Yes. Then No. 32, Toft, has scattald.

46,113. Subject to the exceptions you have named, this is a list of thirty-seven townships without scattald?—Well, I ought to say that there are a number of names in the list that I don't know about. [The Secretary.—With regard to Cunnister the entry in the Crofters Commission Report for 1892 is Thomas Moar, 4 acres 3 roods 23 poles arable, and 8 acres 1 rood 24 poles outrun, held in common with seven others; also ¼ of a common of 31 acres].

46,114. Is that 31 acres scattald or township grazing?—It is practically scattald.

46,115. It is not outrun?—No.

46,116. Now, if you had the doing of it, would you give to each of the crofters living in these townships, a separate piece of scattald land proportionate to the arable of his holding?—I would, if it were available.

46,117. And so far as they have not that at present they have some ground of complaint?—I think so, but I think it is as well to mention that many of these townships are the property of one proprietor, whereas the scattald lands about is the property of another, so that it is a somewhat difficult matter to adjust.

Lerwick, Shetland.

Zachary Macaulay Hamilton.

46,118. How many crofts have you under your supervision at present for which you have been unable to find tenants?—Since I began to manage the Garth estate in 1885, ten crofts have become vacant by the tenants leaving voluntarily. These crofts varied in rent from £20 to £2, 10s., and after keeping some of them in my own hands for a year or eighteen months I have succeeded in letting them, some at a rise and some at a reduction, with the exception of one in Unst, which I could not get let as a croft.

46,119. You have only one unlet crofter's holding?—Yes, I let it as a grazing, and there have been other crofts let as grazings in the same way.

46,120. Is there not also an unlet croft at Coldback?—Yes, there is; it was kept in the proprietor's hands for some time, and then let to Mr Sandison.

46,121. How many pieces of land that were at one time separate holdings are at present in the hands of Mr Sandison?—I really could not say.

46,122. A good number?—A good number.

46,123. He has added holding to holding?—Well, he has added them, but he has also been induced by the proprietor to take them.

46,124. I don't mean that these holdings are contiguous,—most of them do not march with each other, I suppose?—Most of them do not.

46,125. But putting together all the land he has got, he is now the holder of a very large area?—Undoubtedly.

46,126. Paying rent to different proprietors?—Paying rent to different proprietors.

46,127. Do you know his total rent for land?—I do not.

46,128. He is the largest merchant in his locality?—Yes.

46,129. I think he is both a fishcurer and a general merchant?—Yes.

46,130. Are the three farms which you hold from different landlords?—No, they are all on the Garth estate and they all march together with the exception of a little bit on one of them.

46,131. May I ask what is the total rent you pay for this year?—The total rent under the lease is £365, but I got a reduction of £50 some years ago which has been continued since.

46,132. Do you hold under a nineteen years' lease?—Yes.

46,133. From what date is it running?—From 1878.

46,134. For all three places?—Yes.

46,135. And you work them all, I suppose, as one farm?—All as one farm.

46,136. Are these grazing farms or arable farms?—Entirely grazing.

46,137. May I ask whether you hold any other land in the Shetland Islands except these farms?—Not now. Of course, there are the islands in Yellsound belonging to these farms, which have always gone with them.

46,138. What islands are these?—The island of Linga and the island of Little Roe. I hold them as part of the farm.

46,139. I suppose they are good for wintering?—Fairly good.

46,140. You have no land in Bressay?—No.

46,141. But you are factor for Bressay?—Yes.

46,142. Mr Gordon.—Our attention was particularly directed to some of these crofters at Coldback. Would you have any difficulty in getting a tenant for that croft that Mr Sandison occupied?—I would; I could not get a tenant for it.

46,143. Would it not have been advisable as a matter of estate management to give it as an extension of grazings to these four people?—They would not take it; I have offered it repeatedly.

46,144. The information I got is different. They complained very bitterly of this man coming in between them and the burn that is at the bottom of their crofts?—Yes, but this croft does not lie contiguous to their land.

46,145. It lies contiguous in this way that although the croft is situated on the north side of the township, it contains or includes land which passes along the west side or bottom of their four crofts?—That is so.

46,146. Therefore it lies contiguous to their crofts,—they have a strip which runs from hill to water except where this bit interferes with it?—Yes, that is so.

46,147. I would think it would be a sore matter for these crofters if in going down with their peats or for their water to the well they must pass through Mr Sandison's land?—We would be most happy to give it to them, but they won't take it. They tell you they want it, but they won't give a fair rent for it.

46,148. Would they give the rent the Crofters Commission might put upon it?—I don't know what the Crofters Commission might put upon it.

46,149. Would you be content to give it to them at that rent?—I don't know. I consider a fair rent is just what you can get for it.

46,150. It is rather an invidious thing for them to see this foreign gentleman, who has plenty of money without it, coming and cutting the grass immediately below their pieces of arable land. It is a piece of nice bog grass?—If they give the same rent for it as Mr Sandison is paying they would get it at once.

46,151. But Mr Sandison, who is a monied man, may be able to give a little more money than they could? Then, if you travel a mile further south you come to other two crofts?—Yes, at Watlee.

46,152. He would participate in this little bit of scattald?—Yes.

46,153. It is not 100 acres altogether, is it,—I should say about 80 acres?—I cannot say without the plans.

46,154. The portion of ground to which the scattald of Coldback referred would not exceed 80 acres in extent, and it is very poor stuff?—There is really none of the scattald there worth much.

46,155. But this is rather a good crofting place, both Watlee and the northmost part of the township?—Very fair.

46,156. And I fancy taken together they are possibly the best of the little township?—I don't know that: of course they look well now, having been laid so long in grazing. The grass looks very much better.

46,157. I merely make these remarks because of your own statement about that croft not being lettable: I should have fancied they would let very well?—You cannot get tenants for them. I am satisfied that if I were to advertise these three crofts just now I would not get half a dozen applicants, and in all probability these applications would be from men of straw, who would be absolutely unable to pay for them.

46,158. Yes, but a little of what is called consolidation might be beneficial there,—to give it to the people who are really on the ground now as outrun, if they would pay a reasonable rent for it?—I have no objection whatever to give that croft to the people in Coldback provided they give the same rent that I am getting.

46,159. Well, that may be quite a fair view: I did not look upon it with that object, but I did look upon it as being a subject which they represented as rather interfering with the other crofts in the township?—But supposing I were to let it to another crofter, it would interfere with them just the same as it does at present.

46,160. That is why I suggest that the people who are there already could occupy it to more profit than a stranger coming in?—Yes.

46,161. Mr Munro.—You have stated your opinion very decidedly that a crofter cannot cultivate his croft properly and be a successful fisherman at the same time?—That is my belief.

46,162. Now, do you say so as a matter of opinion, or as the result of your observation from coming in contact with those whom we may call crofter fishermen?—As the result of my observation for the last ten years, since the fishing came to be followed in big boats. Formerly the crofter fishermen who prosecuted the fishing had their boats at home, and only went away in fine weather: they could work away at their crofts, and did so, and, as a matter of fact, their crofts provided them with bread for the whole season. Then about the year 1878 or 1879 they began to use these big boats, which can only lie in a safe harbour, perhaps at a distance of three, four, six, or seven miles from home. On 1st March they go away to these big boats and leave their poor wretches of wives and daughters to cultivate the crofts. The result is that the work is not half done, and I see a very marked difference in the produce of the crofts now.

46,163. I may tell you that hitherto we have had very considerable conflict of testimony on this point. Some agree with what you now say, and some disagree. Now, have you ever known a single case of a crofter fisherman who cultivated his croft successfully?—Yes, I have known of a crofter fisherman who had an acre and a half, if you call that a croft; he occupied it successfully.

46,164. But not anything beyond that?—No.

46,165. You consider it an advantage, however, for a fisherman to have a small piece of land?—Certainly, say from two to three acres but not more.

46,166. Now, on this point of rotation of cropping, you have stated that at present the crofters cultivate their land in such a way as to prove disadvantageous to the land itself?—And to themselves also. I state that as a general rule, to which no doubt there are some notable exceptions.

46,167. Is that not largely owing to the restricted area of the crofts?—No, I think it is largely owing to the crofts being mixed up very much one with another. They are mixed up to such an extent that really they cannot manage to keep the stock off them. Down in Dunrossness where they keep the stock out all winter they work their land in rotation and it is very much more profitable. In Delting, where there are a few crofters, they work the land in rotation, and they would not now revert to the old system.

46,168. And you think that if they got larger crofts, they would still pursue the old system?—I am afraid they would. The Shetlanders are very conservative in their way of working, although perhaps not in their politics.

46,169. The Chairman.—Is it the habit of the Shetland crofters to trust more to the fishing for their livelihood than to the holding?—Undoubtedly.

46,170. And do you say that any Shetland crofter would be willing to take what we might call a self-sustaining holding, or would he rather have a holding where he has to trust to the sea as well as to the land?—A very few might take a self-supporting holding, but the majority would prefer a small holding and go to the fishing.

46,171. They are all bred fishermen?—As a rule, they are.

46,172. They take to the sea at a very early age?—Yes.

46,173. You said a good deal about your inability to find tenants for some holdings under your management. Do you know of any such holding on other estates with which you are not immediately concerned?—I believe there are such, judging from the local papers. I have seen a number of crofts in Yell and other places advertised.

46,174. How many altogether?—Last winter I believe six or eight in Yell were constantly advertised.

46,175. That is not more than half a score or a score altogether out of thousands of holdings?—Well, of course, they are only advertised when they become vacant.

46,176. But you don't know of more than a score of crofts for which six occupants cannot be got at present?—No, not at present.

46,177. Mr Maccallum.—How do these crofts become vacant?—By the tenants giving them up.

46,178. What do these tenants betake themselves to?—In the case of the last croft that I referred to, the crofter made a moonlight flitting after his judicial rent had been fixed. He thought perhaps that the Crofters Commission had not been quite fair to him.

46,179. Was that Tulloch in Bressay?—No, a man in Unst. As I say he made a moonlight flitting and departed; I believe he took a room and is now prosecuting the fishing alone, and I am told he says he was never better off in his life than he is now.

46,180. He has become a fisherman?—He was a crofting fisherman before, but he now devotes himself entirely to the fishing.

46,181. Was his croft a large one?—It was valued by the Crofters Commission at £3, 18s., I think, if my memory serves me. His name is David Williamson, Snabrough, Unst.

46,182. Had the croft a good scattald?—The scattald is not very much, but, of course, he had just the same right as his neighbours.

46,183. But it is a small scattald?—It is not a large scattald. [The Secretary.—I find from the Report of the Crofters Commission for 1892 that the scattald is 8000 acres. The old rent of the croft was £5, 15s., and the fair rent £3, 18s.: there were arrears amounting to £19, 8s. 7d., of which £13, 8s. 7d. were cancelled, and £6 ordered to be paid. The extent of the scattald is 8000 acres, common to several proprietors in proportion to their merklands. The total number of merks is 834, of which 535 belong to Major Cameron; and of these 535, 227½ merks are allocated to non-applicants and 307½ to applicants, including withdrawn and dismissed cases. The share of scattald effeiring to 307½ merks is divided into 72 shares, of which 57 were dealt with by the Crofters Commission].

46,184. Is that the croft you had a difficulty in letting?—Yes, I could not get it let.

46,185. Did you offer it to the other crofters of the township?—They would not have it.

46,186. But did you offer it?—I did not; I advertised it, and if they had wanted it they could have had it.

46,187. But you did not suggest it to them?—No.

46,188. So that you don't know what their minds might be?—I have no means of ascertaining their minds unless they communicate with me.

46,189. With regard to the other crofts that are becoming vacant, can you tell us generally why these are being given up by the crofters?—One great drawback is the want of peats. Where there is a difficulty in getting peats there is always a difficulty in getting crofters.

46,190. It is not because they think the working of the croft would interfere with their fishing,—they have some other objection, such as the want of peat?—Quite so, or probably the house has become deteriorated, and they do not want to be at the expense of repairing it.

46,191. So you do not find that crofters are giving up their crofts from the fear of the working of them interfering with the fishing?—Oh, I don't think so.

46,192. And do you think it is the opinion of the people generally, that they are the better of having a croft even for the prosecution of the fishing?—I think so, provided it is within a reasonable distance of the fishing and of a harbour.

46,193. You do not doubt at all that there is a good deal of arable ground presently in sheep farms that might be occupied profitably by crofters?—Do you mean with profit to the crofters or with profit to the proprietor?

46,194. I mean where they could make a comfortable living and pay a fair rent, in the same way as crofters do in other parts where they succeed. Don't you find arable land in the neighbourhood for instance of good harbours, presently occupied as sheep farms?—There may be.

46,195. Then, there has also been going on a good deal of taking away of the scattald from the crofters?—In some cases.

46,196. And the people generally have not benefited by the process which has been going on?—The people generally have not, but, I think, the amount of scattald taken from the crofters generally is not more in proportion to the arable land laid down along with it than what presently exists for the crofters' arable land. I mean to say that the arable land which is at present laid down has a right to a certain amount of scattald, and the scattald which is enclosed is not more than its right entitles it to.

Lerwick, Shetland.

Zachary Macaulay Hamilton.

46,197. But the laying down of land for sheep farms has proved rather detrimental to the crofters, don't you think?—I don't think it has proved detrimental to the existing crofters: it may have proved detrimental to a few individual crofters, who happened to be on this or that particular place when it was laid down.

46,198. The introduction of the black-faced sheep has been rather against them, has it not?—I don't think so.

46,199. Why not?—Formerly, before black-faced sheep were introduced, you could buy Shetland wool at 10d. a lb., but now that the production is limited the price has risen to 2s. 6d. a lb. That has increased the income of the crofters very materially.

46,200. But don't you find that there are a great number of people working at that industry who cannot get the material and who have to buy it?—Yes.

46,201. Then, is it not against them to have to buy it at a high rate?—Oh, certainly it is against them to buy it, if they ever could produce it themselves; but I don't think they would ever produce the quantity they use. A certain amount always had to be bought.

46,202. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you think then that if the production of Shetland wool was considerably increased it would affect the price of it?—Undoubtedly.

46,203. That is they would not get such a high price for it as they get now?—They certainly would not.

46,204. The Chairman.—Can you give me any idea of the extent of the hosiery trade in Shetland,—the turnover?—I am sorry I cannot.

46,205. Perhaps there is no means of ascertaining it?—It is a very extensive trade.

46,206. And that trade is carried on to a large extent not for cash but for supplies,—a sort of system of barter?—It used to be, but it is more for cash now.

46,207. Not entirely?—Not entirely, but very generally except in some out of the way place.

46,208. Is it not a very common thing for merchants here and in Baltasound to make advances against hosiery to be manufactured?—I am not aware of the system they work upon.

46,209. But there is an enormous export of clothing from Shetland to the south every year?—Enormous.

46,210. And it is an article very largely purchased by people in Scotland?—Very largely.

46,211. Mr James Begg, Solicitor, Lerwick.—You said that you considered that the fisherman should not have a croft. Do you consider that the native Shetlander is a good fisherman?—I do, first class.

46,212. Do you consider that he is a bold fisherman?—I do.

46,213. Is it your experience that he is always ready to go out in any sort of weather when a Scottish fisherman would go out?—When he is not a crofter but a fisherman pure and simple that is the case; but when he is a mongrel, or one who combines the two occupations, he is not so ready.

46,214. Then, you think the fact of his having a croft spoils his fishing?—I do, decidedly.

46,215. Do you not think it would be better for the people of Shetland if they paid more attention to their crofts than to fishing?—No. In the nature of things Shetland is not a good agricultural country: it is only one year out of ten that you get a safe crop, while it is only one year out of ten that you get a failure in the fishing. Therefore, by all means, let the crofting go to the wall if the two are to compete.

46,216. Does that apply to the rearing of stock?—Not to grazing; that is quite a different matter.

46,217. Suppose there were crofts laid down for grazing purposes, and let to crofters, would that not pay them instead of raising crops?—It would pay them undoubtedly: the crofters take crofts for grazing now, those of them who are in a position to do so. Many of them do it.

46,218. Has the fishing of late years been prosecuted successfully by the Shetlanders?—Yes, fairly well. Of course, it is not always the same.

46,219. How does this year compare with former years?—This year shows a very great improvement. I believe the amount of fish caught this year would compare favourably with what was caught eight or ten years ago. Perhaps they have not realised so much for it, as prices are not quite so high, but still the average price is very good.

46,220. In regard to the selling of the Shetland wool, you said the price used to be 10d. a lb. and now it is 2s. 6d.?—Yes.

46,221. Is it not the case that a great deal of the traffic in wool among the knitters is done upon the truck system?—Not so far as I am aware, but I really don't know anything about the particulars.

JAMES CULLEN GRIERSON, Younger of Quendale (31)—examined.

46,222. The Chairman.—I understand you wish to give us some information?—Yes; I should explain that my father intended to be present but he found himself unable to attend.

46,223. And you appear on his behalf?—I manage my father's property, and am factor for Mr Scott of Melby, and Mr Macqueen of Burravoe, also Ayres of Sellivoe, and Mrs Spence of Burra.

46,224. In these properties that you have to deal with, including both your father's and others that you are factor for, could you tell us where there are any vacant crofts?—On the Melby estate where there are about two hundred crofters, I have eleven crofts vacant at present: and on Mr Macqueen's property at Burravoe there are eight vacant crofts out of about sixty tenants.

46,225. You have been unable to get these let?—We have advertised the former but have not got tenants; and the latter were advertised some time ago, but not lately.

46,226. You are factor for Mrs Spence of Burra Isle?—Yes.

46,227. On her estate there are a number of tenants who are simply fishermen, and have no holdings?—There are one hundred and thirty-five tenants in the island, of whom thirty-five are fishermen cottars. Their holdings are upon this footing: they take a lease of a twelfth of an acre of ground on the shore of Hamnavoe, which is a very good harbour. They get a lease for their own life and the life of their wife, and they erect dwellings for themselves at a cost of £70, or £80, or £100. They pay their rents regularly, and do nothing but prosecute the fishing.

46,228. Are there any arrears due by them?—Not a penny.

46,229. Compared with these, do the men who belong to the crofter fishermen class pay their rent as well?—I find the crofter fishermen class are considerably in arrear; and not only that, but the land is not at all so well worked as it should be. The crofter fisherman has to have his land worked by the women when he is away at the fishing, with the result that the crops are not anything like so good as they might be. I think that came out in your examination at Burra.

46,230. Mr Munro.—Had you any application for those vacant crofts?—I have three applications at present for them from the island of Whalsey, for the ones in Burravoe.

46,231. And how are you unable to come to terms with them?—We have not come to terms yet.

46,232. Is there any specific reason for not coming to terms?—On account of the estate changing hands, and then there is the question of the repairs to be done to the houses.

46,233. But would you be willing to let those crofts at a fair rent?—Oh, yes, we are willing to let them at the Commission rent. We do not hope to get any more than that, but if we do that, they will have to repair the houses themselves. I would like to make a statement about one point which has not come up to-day, and that is that the Crofters Grazings Act seems to be on this island a complete failure. We have, as your lordship is aware, made several attempts to get the stock regulated, but the difficulty is this: we have a finding of the Sheriff-Substitute who finds that it is only the crofters who are entitled to regulate their own stock, and that any non-crofting tenant on a scattald along with crofting tenants is entitled to put on any stock he chooses.

46,234. The Chairman.—And there is a good deal of occupation of scattalds by men who are crofters and others who are not crofters?—Yes. For instance, take Aithsting; out of 152 tenants, 40 are non-crofting tenants on lease, or tenants at will.

46,235. And you say that they effectually prevent the carrying out of the regulations under the Act?—Yes, because they say you cannot compel us to carry only a certain stock on the scattald. So that, as a matter of fact, the rent as between man and man comes to be unfair: a man paying £4 or £5 of rent has not nearly so much stock as one paying very much less. Then, again, if you have an overstocked scattald it is impossible to get up a head of sheep.

46,236. Mr Shaw Stewart.—How long have some of these vacant crofts that you spoke of been on your hands?—There is one at Scarvister, in the parish of Walls, which has been vacant now for three years.

46,237. Mr Maccallum.—The failure of the Crofters Grazings Act is not because the crofters are unwilling to put it into force, but because of a difficulty in the Act itself?—Yes, as illustrated by the finding of the Sheriff-Substitute.

46,238. That it does not bind the non-crofting tenants?—That is so. In fact, it is quite the reverse: in the estates with which I have to do the crofters are anxious to regulate the stock.

46,239. The Chairman.—You would be under no difficulty in applying the Grazings Act to a scattald exclusively grazed by crofters?—Not the least.

46,240. And you say there is a desire on the part of the crofters to apply the Act?—On most estates. There is only one on which they are not anxious to apply the Act, and that is on account of that decision of the Sheriff: I advised them that it would be useless in that case.

46,241. You mentioned vacancies in the crofts at Melby, what was the cause of these vacancies?—The men went away, some to other estates, and two abroad.

46,242. The vacancies arose in the natural course of things?—Perfectly so; not one was ejected.

46,243. Had you taken proceedings to recover rent or arrears from those who have now left?—No, not against any of the eleven, or against the Burravoe men. The Burravoe vacancies occurred, curiously enough, immediately after the last Sitting of the Crofters Commission.

46,244. Is it not the fact that the Burra tenants are singularly migratory?—Yes, I am aware of that; they do not seem to consider it an advantage to remain stationary.

46,245. There were a number of cases where migration took place immediately after the passing of the Act?—Yes.

46,246. And the effect was that these people put themselves outside the operation of the Act?—Yes.

46,247. These migrations in Burra, I suppose, arise to a considerable extent from the idea of getting a very good spot for fishing?—I think that has something to do with it. But the feeling, especially among the younger men in Burra, is against taking a croft at all, but to take a stance for a house and prosecute the fishing.

46,248. But they do not think of a stance without a potato patch?—They have nothing but a yard at the back: they could grow potatoes there but it is only $\frac{1}{12}$th of an acre altogether.

46,249. They have no potato ground properly so called?—No, nothing like that.

46,250. Burra is particularly well situated for fishing?—Yes: they can follow the haddock fishing during October, November, December, and January,

Lerwick, Shetland.

James Cullen Grierson.

then the cod fishing comes on, then the early herring fishing and the late herring fishing.

46,251. They are particularly well situated then for following the fishing?—Yes, the same as the Scalloway men, only with this advantage that they are closer to the ground.

46,252. Mr Gordon.—Would you kindly explain how you came to give up the attempt to apply the Grazings Act in consequence of the cottars?—It is not the cottars, it is the non-crofting tenants,—those who hold under lease. It has been found here that the crofters only have power to regulate their own stock. The word used in the Act is 'crofter', and the Sheriff read into it the designation of the crofter as given in the Act of 1886, which, of course, excludes leaseholders.

46,253. But by-and-bye, when the lease under which these people occupy the land at present comes to expire, you can then arrange the matter?—The landlord could then bring pressure to bear upon them, and say if you won't adopt this Act I will not relet the places to you, but, in the meantime there is this difficulty.

46,254. It would be a terminable difficulty, however?—I presume it would.

46,255. The Chairman.—Are there a considerable number of tenants holding under lease in Shetland who would be crofters but for their leases?—I would not say a considerable number but there are a few.

46,256. How many do you think?—I think perhaps about two on my father's estate.

46,257. And how many in Melby?—I should say perhaps four or five.

46,258. And how many in Burravoe?—I believe only two.

46,259. Then are you able to speak of other estates in Shetland?—No, not on that point.

46,260. But these are persons who would be crofters but for their leases?—Oh, clearly. On all the estates which I manage there is only one farm of over £100.

46,261. Which is that?—My father's Home Farm of Quendale.

John Sandison.

JOHN SANDISON, farmer, Coldback, Unst (36)—examined.

46,262. The Chairman.—Are you tenant of Coldback Farm?—I am joint-tenant with my father.

46,263. And you hold a number of other lands?—Yes.

46,264. How many?—I really could not say from memory.

46,265. How many blocks of land do you and your father hold?—Scaw, Sandwick, Framgord, Easting, Collister, Houlland, Watley, Garden, and the Home Farm.

46,266. What total rent do you pay for these pieces of land?—We pay £65 for Outer and Inner Skaw; £100 for Houlland; £54 for Sandwick; £30 for Easting, for one part of it and £14 for another to the Earl of Zetland; £16 for Watley; £8 for Gardon; and £99 for the Home Farm, but that includes the business premises. If I recollect aright the valuation of the business premises is £50.

46,267. From how many landlords do you hold?—I forgot to mention Hammer in Baltasound which includes the crofting township of Clibberswick.

46,268. And do you draw the rents of the crofts?—Yes.

46,269. How many crofters are there?—Four.

46,270. How many landlords do you hold land from?—The Misses Spence, the Earl of Zetland, Major Cameron, and Miss Mouat.

46,271. And I understand that you and your father carry on business as fishcurers and merchants?—Yes.

46,272. And you are the owners of vessels?—Fishing boats.

46,273. How many fishing boats?—I cannot say exactly, but somewhere between fifteen and twenty.

46,274. You mean a considerable fleet for the herring fishing each year?—Yes, sixteen or seventeen I think.

46,275. I suppose the Valuation Roll contains a correct list of the holdings you have in the parish of Unst—Outer and Inner Skaw; Ronan; park 1 Sandwick, park 2 Sandwick; Stourhoull; Vatchless; Broomhill; two farms of Watley; hill pasture; house, Greenwalls, booths, &c.; farm late Bruce's; Mansfield farm; Garden farm; Hannigarth; Houlland, with grazing there and at Baliasta; farm and house, Collaster; grazing Coldback; Isle Hunie; blacksmith's farm, Uyeasound; grazing at Springfield; isle of Grunie?—Yes. Some of these are small crofts included in the Home Farm.

Lerwick, Shetland.

John Sandison.

46,276. Is Mansfield included in the Home Farm?—That is occupied by a crofter.

46,277. Does he pay rent to you?—Yes. We pay the proprietor £6 for Mansfield, and it is let to William Johnston at the same figure.

46,278. Then, how is the farm of Gardon held?—That is occupied by us exclusively.

46,279. And Hannigarth?—That is included in Sandwick.

46,280. Now, you say there has been some mistake made by one of the witnesses which you desire to correct?—I wish simply to say that the enclosed part of the croft occupied by us does not extend beneath the crofters' holdings, There is meadow land lying immediately below the doors of the houses in Coldback, and there is another piece of grass land, from 6 to 8 acres in extent further on towards Uyeasound. When we took the croft from Mr William Hamilton when he went to America, this meadow and grass land was in the occupation of Mrs Hughson: she has occupied it ever since, and we have never asked any rent for it.

46,281. You hold the whole of the land behind the croft?—We hold no land behind the croft.

46,282. Who does?—The crofters do.

46,283. Do you not graze on it?—No, we have nothing on it. Mr Hamilton was under a mis-apprehension; he thought the scattald of Coldback extended only to the road, but the best part of the scattald is on the west side of the burn on the side of Vallifield.

46,284. Mr Gordon.—But you have the land although you allow the widow to keep it?—Yes; it belongs to the croft, but we have never occupied it. We have always allowed her to continue to occupy it.

46,285. The Chairman.—And you are the landlord?—No, we are not the landlord because we never charge any rent.

46,286. But you could charge a rent?—I suppose we could.

46,287. And if she does not pay a rent it is simply because you choose to allow her to sit rent free?—Yes.

46,288. You could levy a rent upon her, and if she did not pay it you could put her out?—Yes, I suppose so.

46,289. Mr Gordon.—Who cuts the meadow grass?—The widow does.

46,290. And it is part of her let?—All the crofters have the draws of the meadow land running from the burn up to near their houses: this widow's house is on the Buness estate and has no land.

46,291. And you could if you liked resume possession of that house from the widow?—No; the house is not on our land.

[ADJOURNED.]

FIFTY-FIFTH SITTING.

KIRKWALL, ORKNEY, August 1, 1894.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
HENRY MUNRO, Esq.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

WILLIAM GEORGE LENNOX, Solicitor, Kirkwall (29)—examined.

Kirkwall, Orkney, William George Lennox.

46,292. The Chairman.—Do you act as agent for the crofters here?—As agent for the crofters who are to appear and give evidence to-day.

46,293. And do you wish to submit a statement yourself?—Yes.

46,294. Is it in writing?—No, I will speak from notes.

46,295. Please proceed.—I have been for the past five years in conjunction with the late Mr Thomson, Solicitor, Kirkwall, and by myself, a crofter agent both in Orkney and Shetland, and, as such, I am pretty intimately acquainted with the needs and requirements of the crofters. Before bringing forward the witnesses, of whom your honours have a list before you, I thought it might be a little helpful if I made a statement myself which would so far pave the way for their own evidence.

First of all, I should like to say that as regards the object of your inquiry, the county of Orkney is not in quite the same position as the other crofting counties in Scotland, inasmuch as the main portion of the county is laid down to arable land: there are very few tracts of it which are in sheep grazing, or grouse moor, or deer forest just now. The character of the soil of Orkney is quite different from that of Shetland, or the other crofting counties: it is considerably flatter, and, therefore, more easily cultivated. Still, there are a few strips of land, with regard to which I propose to lead evidence to-day, and these, of course, will fall under the scope of your honour's inquiry. By far the larger number of the big farms in Orkney are mainly arable: but although that is the case I should like to show you that the crofters have suffered in the making of these farms. In most cases these farms have been made out of crofters' holdings, and more particularly in connection with the difficulty of procuring enlargement of existing holdings, I would like to bring these under your notice.

The size of the existing crofts in the county is such that the tenants are compelled to have recourse to certain outlets by way of making an income that will make ends meet upon their crofts. First of all, by enlargement of their existing holdings. Now, the conditions which at present hedge the getting of enlargements under the Crofters Act for those holdings, are such that in a great many cases it is almost impossible for the crofters in the various crofting townships to get the additional land they desire. In the first place, there must, under the existing law, be not less than five applicants for any enlargement. Now, in a great many cases it is very difficult to get five applicants together who will apply for enlargement. From another point of view also, the existing law seems to impose a certain restriction on individual enterprise in that respect. I fail to see why, when a crofter wishes for an enlargement of holding, he has to get the support of four of his fellow-crofters before he can make a valid application. If the land is there and suitable for the purpose of extension why should not a single crofter be at liberty to apply for enlargement? Under the present state of things, the whole district must feel some need before anything can be done in that direction, and a single crofter is hampered until he gets the consent of his whole district. Then, again, under the existing law the whole of the five crofters must be on the same estate, and the enlargement applied for must be on the same estate. That is felt to be another hardship. Take the case of a township of crofters living on the fringe of an estate, and seeing good land on a suitable farm on a neighbouring estate and practically closer to their doors than any other land on their own landlord's estate. Under the existing state of matters these men cannot apply for that land lying contiguous to them. I hold that there is no reason why some new law should not be made on the subject to enable them to get such land. They have a fair rent fixed for their old holdings, and if they got a fair rent fixed for the new portion taken from the other estate, the two rents could easily be allocated between the two proprietors.

Then, again, the crofters and the land applied for must be in the same parish, under the present state of things. Of course, my former remarks about the same estate would apply here equally: where the crofters are on the fringe, or borders of a parish, why should they not be entitled to apply for enlargement of their holdings from the land of a neighbouring parish close by, perhaps better suited for their purpose and more contiguous to their holdings than any land in their own parish?

Then, also under the present law, if there is any land to be taken off a farm for enlargement of crofters' holdings that land must not, when taken off, injure, in any way, the letting value of that farm.

46,296. Materially?—Materially injure it. But, My Lord, there are various degrees of material injury to those farms. There is the injury to the letting value caused by the tenant perhaps being thrown out of his shift through the giving of the land for the purpose of enlargement. Well, that is a trifling injury, comparatively speaking, and there might be some provision made in the way of compensation to the sitting tenant whereby that difficulty might be surmounted. The farm tenant could be compensated for any loss or injury he might sustain through having to alter his rotation for the purposes of his lessened farm.

46,297–98. Who is to make the compensation?—Well, you have a Court, the Crofters Commission, which is a skilled Court, for that very purpose.

46,299. I do not mean who is to fix the compensation, but who is to pay it?—I would propose that that should be done by perhaps adding a little for a few years to the fair rent to be paid by the crofters for the enlargement.

46,300. Then, the compensation would be paid by the crofters?—By the crofters, and perhaps a small proportion by the landlord also. There are a great many farms in Orkney that were under lease at the date of the passing of the Act, and are under the annual value of £100 sterling. In a good many cases the land is rather poor but of great extent, and the letting value does not come up to the limit prescribed by the Crofters Act. In the parish of Deerness for example, there is no farm but what is under the £100 limit, and the crofters in consequence—

46,301–03. May I interpose this question: Is it within your knowledge that in that district a few years ago, many of those farms which are now rented at or under £100 were above £100?—Yes: the farm of Braebister for instance was above £100 a few years ago, and it is now under £100. Well, such cases as that preclude the whole of the crofting class of Deerness from obtaining anything in the way of enlargement, and I would suggest that a further amendment should be added to the enlargement clause reducing the limit from £100 to say £70 or £80. The ground upon which I go is this. The existing limit of rent for a crofter is £30, and if you take say twice that rent, or a little more than twice that rent, making about £70, you get what I consider a fair limit for an average farm to stand at after the enlargement had been taken off it,—that is to say you would then in a measure equalise the holdings throughout the same parish.

There is one more case in connection with the question of enlargement of holdings, and that is the case where a crofter dies and his croft falls vacant. Under the present law the landlord has to take the first step towards getting this croft added to the existing holdings.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

William George Lennox.

46,304–05. That is under Section 16?—Under Section 16. The crofters must wait in silence until the landlord chooses to take this step. When he does take that step they have a power of check upon him, but otherwise they have not, and I would suggest that the crofters have an equal power with the landlord of applying to have the holding divided among the neighbouring crofters. Then, I would like to pass on to the reasons for the congestion and distress among the crofting class of Orkney at the present time. Of course, the need for enlargement is one cause, but for a long period back the Orkney crofters have relied to a great extent on stock-raising to make their crofts pay. In such small portions of land as they hold, they cannot hope to make ends meet by mere crop-raising, so they must look principally to stock-raising. Now, during the previous generation or two, on account of the large number of evictions and clearing off of crofters to make room for the big farms a great many of the crofters of Orkney have been forced to emigrate, in common, of course, with small holders in other crofting counties in Scotland. These crofters and crofters' sons have gone to the Colonies, especially to Canada and America, and they, among others, are sending across stock from Canada and America to the home markets. Some of the crofters evicted from the crofts here are thus competing in the home market with their brothers and cousins at home, and that is one reason why the price of stock has fallen so much of late. It is only by getting enlargements of holdings that the crofters at home can hope to compete with the foreign stock in the condition in which it is sold. Again, the crofters are, in a great many instances, very hardly pressed for summer grazing, and, I propose to lead some evidence to-day about the desirability of obtaining various strips of land for the purpose of common grazing among the crofters. At one time the county was in the same position as Shetland is at the present time; it was full of common grazings, which were regulated by the same customs which obtain in Shetland just now. But nowadays these common grazings are either put into the large farms and cultivated or else they are laid down for sporting purposes.

Another outlet for the crofting industry was and and is the export of eggs. Now, it is a well known fact that this summer, on account of the excessive supply obtained from the continent, the egg industry does not pay the keep of the hens. Two months ago, Orkney eggs were selling in London at 3d. a dozen; that was the market price, and is due to the fact that there was then a tremendous influx of eggs from Holland. Even just now in the merchants' shops in Orkney the eggs are selling retail at 4½d. and 5d. a dozen. They used to bring twice as much, 8d. a dozen. One more outlet the crofting population of the county has, and that is in fishing, not so much in herring fishing as is the case in Shetland, but rather in the direction of white fishing, winter and spring fishing. Now, My Lord, the Orcadians are essentially a law-abiding community, and they are also a very religious community; they are great observers of the Sabbath day, while the trawlers that come from Aberdeen and the east coast take advantage of that trait in their character, and the Sunday is, in a great many cases, desecrated continually through the whole county within the three-mile limit by trawlers, who take advantage of the crofters' absence to trawl within the limit. The trawling question has been a very serious and vexed one here for several years. Most of the fishing banks from which the crofters were in the habit of making a good livelihood are practically ruined by these trawlers. We have no stationary gunboats here: the gunboat sent to protect the fishing is stationed at Lerwick, 120 miles away, and I am safe to say that there is three times as much trawling done in Orkney as in Shetland.

46,306–07. That is hardly a matter before this Commission; there is no remit to inquire into the matter of trawling at all?—No, but I mention it as throwing a side light upon the difficulties in the way of the crofter fishermen. Then, as regards the island of Rousay, I have one or two special observations to make. Up to about 50 or 60 years ago the whole of the hills in the centre of the island, extending to about 10,000 acres, were common pasture for the crofters. Since then the farm of Westness has absorbed something over 2000 acres of hill land; and the hill of Kierfa and the Knitchin Hill have been taken away, the former partly in 1860–61 and partly in 1865, and it is now part of the farm of Langskail. Knitchin Hill was taken away in 1880. The farm of Westness has been to a great extent formed out of crofts. On the west side of it 20 crofts have been swept away, and on the Quandale portion the same number; in all 40 crofts. The principal drawback to a crofting life in Rousay just now is that the proprietor has laid an embargo upon all use and wont quarries and all stones of all descriptions on the island. The crofters are finding that their houses naturally are falling into delapidation by the wear and tear of time, and they are anxious to escape the penalties of the Act by keeping their houses in a good state of repair. They cannot do that under the present system of estate management unless they go to other islands and import their stones at great expense and inconvenience to themselves. The whole island almost, with the exception of the glebe, is in the hands of one landlord, and he refuses to allow any quarrying whatever. The people cannot repair their houses; they cannot even drain their land, having no stones for drainage purposes. Two of them, four years ago, attempted to take stones from an old use and wont quarry, and were promptly served with an interdict and threatened with criminal proceedings for theft.

46,308–09. Where is that quarry?—In the district of Sourin, close by the holdings at Swartafiold. I may say that I am peculiarly conversant with this affair, because I myself was personally employed in investigating this case. One of the crofters there had the stones quarried before he was interdicted, and the landlord refused to allow him to remove the stones he had quarried, even although he offered to pay surface damage and a small royalty. Fortunately, the incumbent of the parish church there has allowed the crofters to quarry on his glebe to a small extent; but it is not a very good place for quarrying, and they find that if they go abroad they cannot get proper flags at an easy distance, and they have to buy slates, which are much more expensive, for roofing. Then, again, the nearest place where they can quarry, free of expense, is a small island near Egilshay, from which they have to bring stones by boat. Now, it is, I think, very hard for these crofters, who are compelled by the Crofters Act to keep up their houses and prevent them from falling into delapidation. To cultivate their land properly, they require proper drains and they are refused by the landlord to open quarries on their own crofts, or even to take stones from their own crofts.

46,310. All this has been a matter of proceeding before the Sheriff, and the Sheriff has given a judgment upon it?—Yes, that is the law on the subject, but I wish to point out that crofters in Rousay are in a peculiarly hard position, and one that calls for some amelioration.

46,311. But the question we have to deal with is a question of available land?—Exactly, and that is why I want to show to your lordship that on account of their hard conditions it is all the more necessary to try and give them some more land to improve their condition in life.

46,312. Well, if you can point us to any available land in the island of Rousay we will consider it?—I will do so.

46,313. Mr Gordon.—Could you tell us the name of the small island to which you referred some time ago, —is it the small island opposite Sourin, between it and Egilshay?—It is on the north-east end of Egilshay. I propose to lead evidence with regard to Rousay about the farm of Westness, also about the Knitchin Hill.

46,314. The Chairman.—You said that there was very little land in the Orkney islands, in comparison with what might be found on the Mainland, of the nature of grouse moors, and there were no deer forests; also that the main portions of the land were arable?—Yes.

46,315. But you said there were a few strips of land open for our consideration?—Yes.

46,316. Now, what are these strips of land?—They are mainly laid down to sheep grazing just now.

46,317. But where are they situated,—in what islands, and in what parts of these islands?—In the islands of Rousay and Sanday.

46,318. In Rousay, upon what farms?—The farms of Westness and Langskail.

46,319. Any other?—There is no other that I can think of, but perhaps the witnesses that I am going to bring forward about those various islands will be better qualified to give Your Lordship proper details on these points.

46,320. Then, you yourself do not profess to enter specifically into that matter?—No, I do not profess to enter on it particularly.

46,321. I understand you to indicate the view that the crofters of the Orkney Islands stand more in need of enlargement of holdings than of new holdings?—Yes, that is so.

46,322. Then, would you be in favour of extending the powers for enlargement of holdings by taking portions of arable land?—Certainly.

46,323. Is it your view, from your knowledge of these islands, that the main direction in which extension of ground for crofters may be obtained in these islands is by enlargement from arable land?—Yes, that is so.

46,324. Rather than by enlargement from grazings?—Yes, certainly.

46,325. You also suggest that a single crofter should be authorised or empowered to apply for enlargement?—Certainly.

46,326. Are the crofters in Orkney in townships, or are they scattered over the country?—They are scattered very much.

46,327. Not many townships?—No, not the same as in Shetland: they are not gathered together into townships.

46,328. I am not sure if I gather your exact meaning with regard to compensation. You say that that should be taken into account in fixing the Fair Rent?—Yes.

46,329. And that a portion of the compensation might also be borne by the landlord?—Yes.

46,330. Now, how exactly would you allocate that, or have you considered the matter?—Yes, to a certain extent. In the case where the land that they get for enlargement has not formerly been occupied by crofters, I would propose that the crofters should bear the whole compensation: but, where it has been formerly occupied by crofters, and where the landlord or his predecessor had been responsible for putting these crofters away, he should bear say half of the compensation.

46,331. In short, that compensation payable by crofters for land which had not been previously occupied by crofters should be a sort of purchase?—Well, not so much purchase.

46,332. Or a perpetual rent charge?—No, My Lord. Fix a Fair Rent for a period of seven years, add a sufficient figure to cover the compensation that the landlord would require to pay to the tenant for the depreciation.

46,333. You would have the whole thing paid up in seven years?—Yes.

46,334. Of course, the effect of that might be for the seven years greatly to increase the crofters' annual burden?—Yes, but at the end of the seven years they would get a new Fair Rent fixed.

46,335. Then, as I understand, you would relax the provision which makes it necessary that the land applied for should be on the same estate?—Yes.

46,336. You would allow applications for enlargement by crofters on one estate for land on another estate?—Yes.

46,337. You said something also with regard to parishes?—Yes.

46,338. What provision of the Act do you refer to there?—That they must be in the same parish as the land applied for.

46,339. Where is that in the Act?—I think you will find it in the Crofters Act.

46,340. Very well. Now, I asked you a question before with regard to the downfall of rents. I understand you to say that the rents have, during recent years, fallen very considerably, as from above £100 to below the £100 limit?—Oh, yes, they have fallen in even greater proportion than the Fair Rents fixed by the Crofters Commission.

46,341. So that farms which some years ago would have been available to the Crofters Commission for consideration are not now so by reason of the fall in the rent?—That is so.

46,342. Due to natural causes?—Due to natural causes, certainly.

46,343. Now, you mentioned congestion and distress as existing in the Orkney Islands. Where is the congestion?—All over.

46,344. There is congestion undoubtedly in one or two places, but is there general congestion?—Yes, general congestion. There are one or two parishes which are perhaps not so bad as others, e.g., the parish of Harray, where most of the land is owned by the people themselves; but otherwise congestion is pretty general.

46,345. What are the most congested portions?—I should say the island of Rousay for one.

46,346. What is the population of Rousay?—I can hardly tell Your Lordship that.

46,347. What is the area of Rousay under crofters?—I could not tell you that either, but nine-tenths of the tenantry in Rousay are crofters.

46,348. If you wish to make clear that there is congestion, it would be better to give us some details of the area under crofters as compared with the population. What is the average size of holdings in Rousay?—From eight to ten acres I should say.

46,349. Arable?—Yes.

46,350. And have they common grazing?—There is a small portion of common grazing, but not much. The majority of the crofters have no common grazing.

46,351. They have just their individual holdings?—Yes. Then, the island of Eday, I should say, is also very much congested, and the holdings are very small. There are only two large farms on the island, and the rest is all occupied by crofters.

46,352. What is the population of Eday?—Seven or eight hundred I think, but I am not quite sure. The crofts in Eday are very small on the average.

46,353. But is there not a peat industry there, on one end of the island?—Yes, that is so.

46,354. Which greatly assists them in paying their rents?—The crofters of that particular part of the island.

46,355. The population of Rousay, Egilshay, and Veira in 1891, was, I see, 988?—Yes.

46,356. So that it will probably be about a thousand now?—Well, the tendency of the population in Orkney is not to increase. The total has perhaps increased slightly within the last decade, but not appreciably.

46,357. Is it a fact that in Orkney the younger men as they grow up, venture forth to the world to seek their fortunes in life, and do not settle down upon their father's holdings?—In a great many cases.

46,358. The majority?—Yes, I should say the majority.

46,359. Is there much sub-division of holdings in Orkney,—the son getting a patch of his father's ground?—There are a great many cases where two families live on the same croft,—the old people, and the family of the married son or daughter.

46,360. There are many cases of that sort?—Yes, there are a great many cases of that sort.

46,361. Where do you find these mostly?—All over the county; I could not particularly specify one spot where it is the case more than another.

Kirkwall, Orkney, — William George Lennox.

46,362. But, I suppose, it is the case that the Orkney crofters, speaking generally, have relations scattered all over the world?—All over the world.

46,363. That is to say they are not afraid or reluctant to venture from home in order to seek their fortunes?—No, not at all; they are a remarkably enterprising race.

46,364. Mr Munro.—So far as I can gather from your remarks here to-day, I think you rather point to some change in the existing state of the law?—Yes, that is so.

46,365. And, I suppose, more particularly the Crofters Act?—More particularly the Crofters Act.

46,366. I suppose you are quite well aware that that does not quite come within the scope of our inquiry here?—Yes, I was quite aware of that, but I thought that perhaps it could come in by a sort of side wind, by showing how it is that Orkney does not come within the scope of the inquiry so much as the other crofting counties, and the reasons why it does not.

46,367. I do not complain of your having taken this opportunity of ventilating your grievances; but did it never occur to you to address any remonstrance or appeal to the proper quarter?—It has been done often.

46,368. Without any result?—Without any result.

46,369. Now, you talked of the enlargement of crofters' holdings, and, I think, you pointed in the direction of getting these holdings enlarged from the existing arable farms?—Yes.

46,370. But you know that does not fall within the limits of our inquiry either; we have no power to deal with arable farms?—Yes, that is so.

46,371. You mentioned that a large portion of the existing arable land of Orkney has been reclaimed from moor and hill pasturage?—Yes.

46,372. Now, is it within your knowledge that a large portion of the land so reclaimed does not pay?—I understand there is a general complaint that no farming pays just now.

46,373. But you do not know whether, as a matter of fact, the land recently reclaimed has paid the farmer or not?—I can only state this much, that usually when hill ground has been reclaimed, the first year or two is the best of it.

46,374. Now, about these 15,000 acres of common pasture, which you say were taken from the crofters 50 or 60 years ago, how is that land used now? Is it converted into arable land, or is it still pasture?—In the case of the various bits of land that I am to talk about to-day, it has been used as pasture; in the other cases it is all arable. Perhaps there are a few bits that I have not been able to obtain evidence about, but otherwise it is all arable.

46,375. I suppose, as a matter of fact, we may take it that there is not a large area of land in the Orkney Islands available for crofter cultivation in terms of the remit made to this Commission?—No, there is very little, taking the whole area.

46,376. Mr Maccallum.—You mentioned that there are large farms which have been formed out of crofters' holdings?—Yes.

46,377. Where are these large farms? You have mentioned Westness as one case, but are there other large farms that you can point to?—It would be difficult to point out any large farm in Orkney that has not, to some extent, been made out of crofters' holdings: that has been the almost universal case at one time or another. Some farms are older in formation than others, but at one time or another it stands to reason that they have all been in small holdings. The condition of tenure in those islands at one time was such as to preclude large holdings being formed at all.

46,378. Can you tell us the character of the land in these large farms as compared with the land held by the small holders? Are the large farms inferior, or superior?—They are superior in some cases; but there are cases where crofters have been evicted and their holdings added to farms, and those crofters instead of emigrating have gone outside the old hill dykes, and have taken in crofts from the hill. Certainly, the large farms are superior to those crofts; but the crofts in the old arable land, I think, are just about as good as farms; it is six of one and half-a-dozen of the other.

Kirkwall, Orkney, — William George Lennox.

46,379. In Rousay when the crofters were removed, what sort of lands did they get?—They got foreign lands; they went abroad, in most cases.

46,379A. Are you aware whether some of them settled on parts of the island?—I believe that a few went outside the hill dyke and settled there.

46,380. How are the crofters in Rousay situated, with regard to fishing facilities; are they located on the coast?—Yes. The crofting settlements in Rousay, in fact, all the arable land in Rousay, is just round the coast. There is a range of hills in the centre of the island.

46,381. But are not the crofters situated pretty well inland, and on the higher grounds?—There are some higher, but a great many of them are down near the seashore. There are a good few crofts inland also; but in an island of such a small extent as Rousay, it is always easy to get to the shore from almost any part of it.

46,382. You say there is a desire for extension of holdings on the part of the crofters; are there many people, do you think, who desire new holdings?—There may be one here and there, but not very many.

46,383. In such a place as Kirkwall here, are you aware whether there are people who desire to get holdings in the country,—people who may have come from the country originally, and who wish to go back?—I am not aware of that.

46,384. But you have no doubt that there is a very strong desire to get an extension?—Yes, that is really the strong desire in the county.

46,385. In the meantime you think they cannot compete with the large farms in stock-raising on account of the limited extent of ground they hold?—Yes, that is the condition of things.

46,386. And that is their chief stay, the stock?—Yes, the stock. They are not nearly such great herring fishers for instance as the Shetlanders are. The difference between the two counties has been very well put by the late Mr Thomson, who said that an Orkney crofter was a crofter with a boat; a Shetland crofter was a fisherman with a croft. That emphasises the difference in the conditions of the two counties.

46,387. Now, have the proprietors themselves done anything in the way of satisfying this strong desire on the part of the crofters in Orkney? Have any of the proprietors given land to extend the present holdings?—Not that I am aware of. Unless they were actually to take land from their larger tenants, I don't know that they have much land available for that purpose.

46,388. But surely some of the farms may fall out of lease, which might be suitable for extension of holdings?—Yes, but in no case that I have heard of has that been done. [The Chairman.—Voluntarily?—Voluntarily].

46,389. You told us with regard to the crofters on the island of Rousay, that they were under the disadvantage that they could not get stones for repairing their houses or for drainage?—Yes.

46,390. And they are prevented—for what reason?—I cannot tell the reason; I could only guess at it. General Burroughs himself would be able to tell you the reason.

46,391. But it is not for any profit that he could expect to make out of these stones?—Certainly not.

46,392. Does it not seem to be purely a desire to defeat the Crofters Act?—That is what every person who has observed the matter at all takes out of it.

46,393. Do you think with regard to proprietors generally that such a spirit prevails, a spirit of opposition and enmity towards the smaller holdings?—No, I am glad to say that in Orkney, with the exception of General Burroughs, the proprietors, as a rule, are very reasonable and willing to meet the crofters half way. There are one or two exceptions here and there,—a very few,—but that is the rule.

46,394. Have they tried to give free scope to the spirit of the Act, with regard, for instance, to enlargements, do you think? Have they done what might reasonably be expected of them in the matter?—Well, of course, one can hardly say, because in a case of that sort, no matter how desirous a landlord is to meet the spirit of the Act, where the taking away of the land from his farm affects his pocket he is bound to be influenced to some slight extent. I myself have had actual personal experience of only two enlargements, and in both cases they were opposed bitterly. These were from the island of Eday, but the opposition in that case was natural,—I don't blame the proprietor.

46,395. What is your opinion with regard to the rent paid by the small holders: are the small holdings as profitable to the proprietor, do you think, as large holdings?—I quite think so; especially under the present state of matters, where under the Crofters Act he is under no expense for estate management, as crofters have to keep up their own holdings. So far as my inquiries have gone, the crofters actually pay more per acre than the big farmers do, or as much.

46,396. Is there any difficulty in letting large farms in Orkney?—A great difficulty.

46,397. And have the rents been considerably reduced?—Yes, very considerably. I may mention one instance; there are some six or eight farms in the island of Rousay that have been advertised in the papers, for I am afraid to say how long, to let: Westness, Manor House, and Garden (that is the shooting of course); Helziegitha 92 acres; Quoys 59 acres; Broland 54 acres; Castlehall 95 acres; Bu of Vieray 94 acres; and there are other small farms.

46,398. But only one of these would be considered a large farm?—That is so.

46,399. Considering then that the great desire of the crofters is for enlargement, would you not expect that moderately sized holdings would let very readily?—Yes.

46,400. And can you give us any evidence as to the alacrity with which moderately sized farms are taken?—Yes, I can do so, fortunately. There are two holdings, close by Kirkwall, that are in the market just now, of from 70 to 90 acres: one is 70 and the other is 78 acres I think. Those are a very fair average size. I myself do not act for the landlord in either case, but I have had at least half a dozen applicants for each farm coming to me to try and make terms for them for the place. These were men of the crofter class who are anxious to get bigger holdings.

46,401. They applied to you, who are not acting for the proprietor at all?—To try and pave the way for them to get bigger holdings.

46,402. For each of these farms?—For each of these farms.

46,403. Have these two farms been let now?—I am in negotiations for one just now, for a crofter; the other is not let; the man is wanting rather too much rent.

46,404. Do you find that the rent, in cases of moderately sized farms, is reduced in some cases?—Yes. In one case the rent was £70, and the offers that I made did not exceed £55. In the other case the rent was £95, and the highest offer was £85. That is just this present year.

46,405. In granting extensions from large farms, you think that the damage to the farm ought to be borne to some extent by the crofter?—That is where the same land has not first of all been taken from the crofters. I think it is only right in that event.

46,406. No doubt there would be an interference in such a case as that with the rotation of crops; but might not the letting value of the remainder of the farm be increased by taking a portion of it?—Yes, it is quite possible it might; it might be made more compact.

46,407. And looking also to the fact that large farms do not let very readily, the rent might be more secure?—Yes.

46,408. Mr Gordon.—What you have said has been rather a criticism on the Crofters Act than any suggestion as to the work of this Commission?—Yes; I would leave the witnesses whom I intend to bring forward to speak for themselves.

46,409. You say that there is a considerable amount of congestion in the crofter holdings?—Yes.

46,410. And you propose that that congestion should be relieved by taking extensions from the large farms?—Yes.

46,411. You have not, however, touched upon a point which is of great importance, and that is, that in this extension of holdings there is no power at present to construct new holdings upon the land taken?—No, there is no power.

46,412. How would you propose to get over that difficulty?—So far as Orkney is concerned, I don't think it is a difficulty, because there is very little wish for new holdings throughout the county.

46,413. Then, in taking land from a large farm and adding it to a croft, you can only do so conveniently where the crofters abut upon the farm?—Yes.

46,414. Then, your improvement or benefit to the crofters would be confined solely to those crofts which are in immediate contact with the farm?—Or within easy reach of it.

46,415. Now, in that way you could only benefit a very small proportion of the crofting township?—Yes, I quite see that the necessity which your honour is pointing out would arise perhaps in the course of a few years when crofters having larger crofts would again require outlet for their surplus population.

46,416. But you think that that difficulty does not exist in the meantime?—Not so much just now; it may exist, but to a very small extent.

46,417. Well, I am bound to say that in some cases I saw it exist to a very great extent, and where the extensions granted were some two miles and more from the crofters who were occupying the land?—Perhaps I have not understood you very well. Did your honour mean to make these extensions that are two miles from the existing crofts into new crofts?

46,418. I think that would have been the proper thing to do, relieving the congestion by removing some of the existing crofts?—Then, how would you have done with the families on the existing ground?

46,419. Some would go to new crofts, and the crofts left would have been enlarged by the accession of the relieved crofters?—Well, I must say that has not had my attention at all, so I am not in a position to say anything about it.

46,419A. Then, I would respectfully suggest that you should direct your attention to it?—Yes, I will, thank you.

46,420. Now, with regard to the subject of this Commission, what have you to suggest for our consideration in respect of the lands which are at present occupied as grazings?—Part of the grazings I refer to used formerly to be arable land, and could be made into new crofts.

46,421. You mentioned, I think, one case of that character which is in the island of Rousay?—Yes.

46,422. Well, we have seen the island of Rousay. Now, can you tell us any other place on the mainland of Orkney?—Yes, in the parish of Holm.

46,423. Is that on the mainland?—Yes, the east portion.

46,424. And what particular place in the parish of Holm do you point to?—The farm of Greenwall. The grazings I refer to are called the Skews.

46,425. How is that land at present occupied?—By the tenant of the farm of Greenwall, as partly arable, and partly pasture; but mainly pasture, I think.

46,426. What is the rental of that farm?—I am sorry I cannot tell you.

46,427. Is it occupied as a sheep grazing?—As a sheep grazing, but the tenant has cultivated about 20 acres of it. There are 150 acres altogether, of which about 20 are arable and 130 pasture.

46,428. That is not a large extent of ground to be attached to a farm?—That is only a small portion of the farm; that is practically the only hill grazing that he has there, but it used to be in the occupation of the

Kirkwall, Orkney.

William George Lennox.

crofters, and it is the only piece of ground that is of any use.

46,429. Do you know the place yourself?—I have been there once; but I am speaking more from information received. As I mentioned to His Lordship, I think it would perhaps be better if you would allow the witnesses whom I am to bring forward to speak as to the nature of those pieces of land, because I do not profess to know much about them in detail.

46,430. Are you able to speak generally with regard to the conditions of occupancy of these islands?—Yes.

46,431. How is the pastoral land on the mainland at present occupied?—In which portion of it.

46,432. Away towards the north and north-west?—I don't know much about Harray, or Sandwick, or the parishes there.

46,433. Do you suggest that much benefit would be conferred on the crofters in this island by the addition of the hill ground in the centre block of the main island?—It would be a benefit; it would give them summer grazing.

46,434. Are you aware whether they at present occupy that, or rather have liberty to occupy it?—I have no evidence whatever from the centre of the island.

46,435. We went carefully over the ground yesterday and the only evidence we have is that any man surrounding that land could put on stock without limit, but that they did not consider it worth their pains to do so?—I have no evidence from the centre of the island at all, but only from the various districts mentioned in the list of witnesses that I furnished.

46,436. The information we received yesterday was of an undeviating character as to the usefulness of a large part of the central block of land here,—the hill ground or uncultivated ground. We saw for ourselves the nature of the ground; it is all black moorland, of a practically worthless character for grazing except in small spots. We had evidence in half-a-dozen cases that there was no restriction as to the pasture of these lands by the crofters or farmers, and, as a matter of fact, it appears that they do not, to any great extent, take advantage of the opportunity to send their stock to the hill?—Quite so, but perhaps your honour will recollect that, as I said already, I do not think the present powers of inquiry of this Commission could do much good to the county; it is mainly through enlargement.

46,437. Then, as I have already pointed out, your statements have reference more to an improvement in the Crofters Act than to any assistance that you can give to this Commission at present?—Quite so, except in scattered portions of the county.

46,438. The Chairman.—You were asked by Mr Gordon a question as to the matter of contiguity of holdings in giving enlargements?—Yes.

46,439. You are aware that the words of Section 13 (1) of the Crofters' Act are, that land is not to be deemed available 'unless it lies contiguous or near to land 'already in the occupancy of the crofters,' and that the Commission have construed these words according to the circumstances of each particular case?—Yes.

46,440. Now, I observe that Mr Johnston, in his Treatise on the Act, says that '"Near" is an elastic 'word, and it is impossible to lay down any hard and 'fast rule without regard to local conditions; but it is 'thought that three miles is a reasonable limit. In one 'case the Commissioners held that nine miles was be-'yond the limit, and apparently they deemed it a 'relevant consideration that there were intervening 'townships.' You are aware that in dealing with enlargements of holdings the Crofters Commission have had regard to the particular circumstances of each case?—That is so.

46,441. Now, is it the fact that in the case of Orkney holdings, the portions of land are discontiguous,—that is to say, a man has a holding consisting of mouldy land in one part and sandy land in another?—That is so: and not only that, but from the mere fact that most of the holdings are not in townships but lie scattered about, you cannot get a sufficient number of crofters together to take the land from a big farm contiguous to the whole of them.

46,442. And, therefore, the Act has to be construed with reference to the circumstances of the locality?—Certainly.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

William George Lennox.

46,443. Mr Munro.—You mentioned that as the leases of the larger farms fell out, there was considerable difficulty experienced in reletting them?—I believe there is generally a certain amount of difficulty.

46,444. Which I take it is owing to the fact that they did not pay?—That they did not pay.

46,445. You suggested, I think, that such farms should be cut up and given to crofters in smallish holdings?—Certainly.

46,446. What grounds have you for believing that the crofters would cultivate these small holdings to greater advantage than the larger class of holders do at present?—I don't know that they would cultivate them to greater advantage, but it would support the resident population far better.

46,447. But the question is, would it pay the crofters better than it pays the large farmer?—It would pay them better than it does just now. When one of these farms fell in, the difficulty of reletting, except at a greatly reduced rent, showed that the former tenant had been sitting practically at a rack-rent, and could not make much out of it. But if crofters get that farm, they get their rent fixed by a competent Commission at a fair agricultural value, and certainly that would enable them to make more out of it.

46,448. Don't you think the proprietors would be disposed to let these farms to the present class of farmers at a fair rent?—Well, in the case of the more moderately sized farms, such as those of 70 or 80 acres, it is a mere matter of competition among crofters who have got on so far, and want to enlarge the size of their holdings: and you can hardly judge these in the light of a Fair Rent.

46,449. Have you any practical acquaintance with the cultivation of land yourself?—None with regard to the cultivation of land.

46,450. So that what you stated is a mere matter of opinion?—A mere matter of opinion, and professional experience as to the prices got for these farms.

46,451. Mr Gordon.—Kindly tell me the names of the farms that are advertised?—Westness.

46,452. That has £540 of rent. What is the next?—Helziegitha, with 92 acres or thereby, of which 35 acres are arable. The remainder are of the medium size, Quoys, Broland, Castlehall in Vieray. The average may thus be tabulated:—

Name of Farm	Total Acreage	Arable Acreage
Westness,	2904	281
Helziegitha,	92	35
Quoys,	59	38
Broland,	54	32
Castlehall, Vieray,	95	53
Bu of Vieray,	94	51

46,453. I would like to point out to you that the present rent of Broland is only £33; of Quoys £40; Helziegitha £56; Bu of Viera £60. Now, these, to my mind, are all small places?—Yes, they are all small places.

46,454. And they do not come under the category of those which you mentioned as being large farms?—No.

46,455. Again, you said in reply to Mr Maccallum that large farms were difficult to let, but that they could be more easily let if they were smaller?—Yes.

46,456. But these farms are not above the category of what might be considered easily let subjects?—These are easily let subjects; most of them are in that category.

46,457. Therefore, it does not follow that they affect, in any way, the question as to the unlettable character of the big farms?—Only the farm of Westness.

46,458. If you had confined yourself to the farm of Westness you would have been more correct?—Yes, but the others in that particular district are more affected by the condition of things under a certain landlord.

46,459. There may be other conditions which prevent their letting, but it is not because they are big farms?—Not because they are big farms at all.

46,460. Mr Macallum.—Are you aware that there is any difficulty in letting these moderately big farms even in Rousay?—Well, as I have already stated, all those farms have been advertised to let in the papers for some considerable time.

46,461. And the small ones are still advertised?—I don't know whether the advertisement appears this week or not: the paper is just published to-day. [Mr Shaw Stewart.—Can you tell us roughly how long they have been advertised,—six months?—Oh, no].

46,462. Mr Duncan J. Robertson, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for General Burroughs.—Is there not a notice in the advertisement limiting the time during which offers can be received until 31st August?—Yes, until 31st August.

46,463. How then can you speak about there being a difficulty in letting them?—I am speaking, of course, from what I have heard from the island itself as to very few offers being made.

46,464. Mr William P. Drever, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for Orkney estates.—Do you know, as a matter of fact, if there is any real permanent difficulty in letting the farms in Orkney?—Not a permanent difficulty; but in some cases there is perhaps a good deal of delay.

46,465. You have never known of a non-crofting farm remaining unlet for a year?—Not personally.

46,466. Apart from the farms that you have mentioned, do you know of any difficulty in letting farms of that size in Orkney?—There has been this difficulty always, that from the previous let to the next let there has usually been considerable difficulty in getting anything like the old rent. There has been a drop in the rent in almost every case, and there may have been a little delay in trying to get as near the old rent as possible.

46,467. It is conceded that there has been a drop in the rents all over.—That is what I have referred to as delay in getting the farms let sometimes.

46,468. But apart from that, do you not know that non-crofting farms in Orkney are well let and easily let?—When I spoke of delay in letting, I did not, for a moment, mean that the farms stood vacant for any time, but that the first time they were known to be in the market was often months before it was known that a competent or proper rent would be got.

46,469. Yes, but you see in this case the time within which offers may be received has not yet expired: is that not why the advertisements still appear in the newspapers?—Quite so, but there is a long time allowed to give in offers.

46,470. You stated, and, I think, the remark was of universal application, that there was congestion and distress among the crofters and crofts in Orkney?—Yes; at least pretty general.

46,471. That is to say, there is a confluence of crofts and crofters pressing upon each other and causing distress, is that your meaning?—I mean that there is too much population for the land available for them to settle on.

46,472. Could you tell me any township or any place in Orkney where there is this pressing congestion and this distress?—It is almost general, with the exception of one or two cases.

46,473. If it is general you can easily make it special: I know of none.—With the exception of one or two parishes. Take Rousay; take Eday.

46,474. But could you condescend on particulars, because I suppose it is facts that the Court wants?—I base my statement upon the fact that during the five years that I have been in business in the interest of the crofters here and in Shetland, it has been a pretty general rule for me to have a great deal of my business time taken up by people of the crofting class coming in to try and get relief from their difficulties.

46,475. But, Mr Lennox, if the distress and congestion is so general as you say it is, it will be quite easy for you to name some of the districts you refer to, in order that the Commission may have data to go upon. As I say, I know none.—Well, Mr Drever, perhaps your time has not been taken up to the same extent as mine in trying to arrange for some of those poor crofters getting relief from their difficulties.

46,476. May I put it to you in this way, that you are unable to condescend on any particular cases of congestion and distress from your own knowledge?—From my own knowledge I can condescend upon practically the whole island, with the exception of one or two parishes.

46,477. I think you should lay your finger on the particular cases, for the benefit of the Commission; I thought you rather avoided answering the Chairman when he sought to get particulars from you?—Perhaps I might make matters plainer by saying that I have not gone into any definite statistics on the matter. I speak of my own impression and belief, derived from what I have seen in my own business.

46,478. But it is not a matter of belief or faith here; it is a matter of sight?—Well, sight also.

46,479. Can you tell us what district or what crofters are congested and in distress?—Yes, I should say that seven-tenths of the crofters of Rousay, e.g., might be a great deal better in circumstances.

46,480. So might we all, but that is hardly the question.—I mean that if they had an outlet for their crofts such as I have been suggesting, they would be in better circumstances.

46,481. But let us see how you arrive at that opinion. You make a general statement about congestion and distress; are you making that general statement upon your own personal knowledge, or upon the conversations you have had with the crofters?—If I make such a statement, it must be from what the crofters have told me.

46,482. You don't know yourself?—I have not been in that position myself.

46,483. You don't know from your own personal knowledge whether there is congestion resulting in distress in Orkney?—It all depends upon what you mean by personal knowledge. If you mean by personal knowledge what the crofters have complained to me about, and have come to get relief from, then I can speak from personal knowledge.

46,484. In that case you can condescend upon particulars, and state them to the Court?—If you will allow me to bring up my business books, I will be most happy to mention cases.

46,485. That is not fair to us, and it is not fair to the Commission: but I will assume that you do not know,—that is to say, without your business books?—You are quite at liberty to assume anything you like.

46,486. There was also a statement you made,—I think it was put forward as an assumption by you, that all the large farms in Orkney have been carved out or made up of crofts. Is that within your knowledge?—It is a matter of history.

46,487. Would you give the Commission some instances where that is the case?—I gave the Commission the general case that I did not know a farm that had not at one time been made out of crofts.

46,488. It may be the case with some, but it is not the universal case. Is it not the case that a great many of the larger farms throughout Orkney have been large farms from time immemorial,—for hundreds of years, and retain their Norse names to this day?—I might point out to the Commission that that can hardly be the case, and is actually not the case, because the land here was at one time held by Udal tenure, which of itself was opposed to anything like large holdings.

46,489. Do you know of any case of any farm or any number of large farms which have been made from crofts?—Yes.

46,490. Where?—The farm of Westness in Rousay; the farm of Greentoft in Eday; the farm of Carrick in Eday; the farm of Greenwall in Holm; and a dozen others if I had time to think of them.

46,491. Take the farm of Greenwall, is that a farm that has been made entirely out of crofts? There may have been one or two merged in it, but is it not an old farm?—So far as I know there were at least seven or eight crofts merged in it; and these were the best part of the farm.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

William George Lennox.

46,492. I don't know that it is quite pertinent to this inquiry, but there is a matter to which you referred, viz., the question of eggs. Do you know that there is at present a glut in the market as regards that commodity?—That is what I said.

46,493. Do you know what the annual product of eggs in the county of Orkney has been for a number of years, comparing it with the rental, for instance?—I cannot tell you.

46,494. Do you know that the rental and the product of eggs have been about the same for a number of years,—practically the same?—I quite believe it.

46,495. What class in the county produces the greater number of eggs,—crofters or large farmers?—The crofters.

Peter Yorston.

PETER YORSTON, Old Man, Sourin, Rousay (46) —examined.

46,496. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter in Rousay?—Yes.

46,497. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

46,497A. What part of the island are you in?—Sourin.

46,498. Your croft appears to extend to 20 acres arable, and 22 acres outrun, with some grazing right on the adjoining hills: the old rent was £10, 10s. and the Commissioners fixed the new rent at £7, 10s., and cancelled £4, 5s. of arrears out of £10, 5s.?—Yes.

46,499. What is it you wish to say to us?—About the privilege of hill grazing, and about the disadvantage of the want of stones. We cannot get one stone to build.

46,500. First of all, as to the privilege of hill grazing, what hill do you refer to?—Knitchin Hill; that is the one nearest to us.

46,501. Is Knitchin Hill now part of a farm?—Yes, part of the farm of Trumland.

46,502. Was it within your recollection occupied by crofters?—Oh, yes, by myself among others.

46,503. When did you cease to have it?—In 1880.

46,504. How many acres did the grazing which you had over Knitchin extend to?—I could not say, but I suppose some hundreds.

46,505. Was it common to you and the other crofters in the locality?—Yes.

46,506. And it was taken from you in 1880 and put into this farm?—Yes.

46,507. What rent were you paying when it was taken away?—About £8, if I remember rightly. After the hill was taken from me I got another part.

46,508. The croft of Easter Quoy was added to the croft of Old Man after you lost the hill?—Yes.

46,509. And the rent was adjusted at £10, 10s., and now stands at £7, 10s.?—Yes.

46,510. And am I to understand that you represent to us that you have been seriously incommoded by this deprivation of grazing?—Yes.

46,511. And that you would like to get an extension of grazing if it could be obtained?—Yes.

46,512. From this very farm?—Yes. At Kierfa Hill I had a right of grazing.

46,513. Did you use it?—No.

46,514. Was that because of its distance from you?—Just so.

46,515. Your grazing was mainly confined to this place called Knitchen?—Yes.

46,516. Were you appointed a delegate?—Yes, along with another.

46,517. At a meeting of Rousay crofters?—Yes.

46,518. Do you wish to make any statement applicable to the island as a whole?—Yes. It is the wish of the crofters to reclaim possession of the hills, especially Knitchin, Kierfa, and Lower Leyan,—the last is the best place of all.

46,519. What farm does it now go with?—The farm of Langskail. It was taken about the year 1860 or 1861, and Kierfa in 1866.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Peter Yorston.

46,520. And prior to these dates you have mentioned, all these three grazings were, I understand from you, in the occupation of crofters?—Yes.

46,521. And they all now form part of farms?—Yes.

46,522. Did the crofters from whom these grazings were taken get any other grazings in lieu, or did they simply lose them?—We simply lost them, and some lost them altogether.

46,523. Did others get something in return?—They just had the leave of the peat moss for cutting; otherwise it was all taken from them.

46,524. They had a right reserved of cutting peats from the land taken?—Not to take the peat moss inside the fence, on the Knitchinside. [Mr Lennox.—He means that on the Knitchinside there was a bit of the peat moss left outside the ring fence which was put round this farm].

46,525. I suppose you have plenty of peats?—Plenty of peats. But as to stones, we cannot use a single stone; we cannot repair our houses, we cannot keep them up. If we take one stone we are threatened with proceedings for theft.

46,526. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Supposing you had these hills, what use could you make of them?—We could keep our beasts on them in the summer season.

46,527. Simply summer grazing?—Yes.

46,528. There is no land worth any better use,—no arable land?—There are small bits, but not very much, on the southern side.

46,529. Would you pay a rent for these hills if you got the grazing of them?—We would not be very willing to do that; we want to have them free.

46,530. You want to have the grazing for nothing?—Possibly, as we used to have it.

46,531. Mr Gordon.—Are these grazings all attached to one farm?—No; Kintchin goes with Trumland.

46,532. Is there part of it attached to the Home Farm?—Trumland is the Home Farm: but last Martinmas the Home Farm was taken by a tacksman.

46,533. The arable lands of Trumland house, together with this hill ground to which you have made reference, have been taken by a farmer?—Yes.

46,534. How close does the hill ground taken from the crofts come to your arable land?—I suppose about twenty minutes' walk.

46,535. That would be a mile through the hill. Is the ring fence put round the crofts about a mile from the arable land?—From some of them, but from others not so far.

46,536. There is a ring fence put between your crofts and this hill ground?—Yes.

46,537. You would not propose to keep sheep on the hill?—Well, we would have a better chance of paying our rent if we got sheep. It used to keep sheep.

46,538. You could keep a few sheep?—Yes.

46,539. Is the low ground fenced off from the Home Farm of Trumland at present?—Yes.

46,540. There is a ring fence round the whole ground?—Yes.

46,541. So that it is at present enclosed off the arable land of the crofts, and from the arable land of Trumland house?—Yes.

46,542. It is mostly black ground, I think, on that hill?—There are some good parts too.

46,543. Where did you say the best hill was?—Lower Leyan, in connection with the farm of Langskail.

46,544. That is upon the north shore?—Yes. That is the best place in the island.

46,545. It is a steep bank hanging down by the north shore?—Yes.

46,546. Is it dry ground?—Yes.

46,547. What crofts would be benefited by that,—not your croft?—No, but on the other side again.

46,548. The crofts at Feelyhall and Brendale.—Yes, and farther north along that point.

46,549. Have the crofters at that point got the pasture there, at Faraclett Head?—No, only the farm of Faraclett.

46,550. There are not many crofters out there?—There are a few between the point and the mill.

46,551. At Swandale?—Yes, that is the farm; but it is more between the point and the mill along the shore that the four or five crofts are.

46,552. You did not speak of that ground. I think you would suggest that this land on the north shore would be suitable for the crofts adjoining it, and this ground which is now part of the farm and of Trumland house, for the crofts at Sourin and to the south side?—Yes, to the south side again.

46,553. Along the Rousay Sound?—Yes.

46,554. What is the extent of the hill pasture you have at present?—I am sure I could not say exactly: we pasture all along, over peat moss and moor and moss banks, just where the people cut peats.

46,555. The pasture which has been left with you has been a good deal destroyed by peat cutting?—Yes, that is so.

46,556. Mr Lennox suggested something about a small island, on the north-west corner of Egilshay, as being a good island for stones?—Some have gone there for stones, for we could get none in the island; but it is far from good.

46,557. Where could you get quarries in the island?—About 20 yards from my door.

46,558. Are you the man who quarried the stones?—Yes.

46,559. And you were prevented?—Yes, I was.

46,560. What kind of stone is there 20 yards from you?—Just hard building stone.

46,561. Thick beds of flagstone?—Yes, about the best for building. The stone is so good that on the last house General Burroughs put up, he came to our place for all the particular stones.

46,562. What is the general thickness of the stones?—About 8 inches on an average. But the flags again are a great distance from us; it takes us five or six hours to get a load.

46,563. Are they on the north-west corner of the island?—Yes.

46,564. Is there any flagstone upon the pasture lands of Westness?—Yes, that is the principal place.

46,565. We saw some flags for quarrying near that march, but a little farther to the north?—Yes, near an old schoolhouse. That is the main place.

46,566. Mr Maccallum.—You say that you were appointed a delegate to bring under our notice land suitable for crofter occupation. Now, have you been considering whether any part of Westness is suitable for occupation by crofters?—Yes: if the ground available were laid down, there are plenty that would apply for new holdings where the arable patches were, and where the old houses are still to be seen. I have heard a great many say that if the land was available and if they could get it on reasonable terms, they would settle there.

46,567. I notice that in the advertisement of this farm, it is said that there are 281 acres arable. Do you know how many acres in that farm are under regular rotation of crop?—I think it is something about 280.

46,568. But I want to know how many acres are under regular rotation of crop?—I think it will be about what is advertised for letting.

46,569. That means the cultivated part?—Yes.

46,570. Then, besides these 281 acres, there is a very large extent that was formerly cultivated by crofters?—Yes. What they call the west side was put in with that farm: they were occupying some of that at Quandale.

46,571. In Quandale there is no part of it cultivated at all?—There is a dyke going up and down, which I think separates Quandale and the west side.

46,572. Are there people living on the island of Rousay itself who would be willing to take holdings on Quandale for instance?—I would think so, because they say if it was available they would take it and pay a rent for it.

46,573. Do you know how many crofters were there before?—About 40, if not more; there were none less as far as I can learn.

46,574. And do you know the reason of their removal?—To get it laid down in sheep pasture.

46,575. Do you consider that the land there is as good as the land that is occupied by crofters now?—There are pieces as good, and better, for they have been so long rested; and there is a good deal the same.

46,576. Were the people removed from that place because of the unsuitableness of the land, do you think?—Oh, no; it was for their own purposes.

46,577. Simply to lay it down for sheep farms?—Yes.

46,578. The Chairman.—Do a number of the crofters in Rousay depend to some extent upon the fishing for their livelihood?—Yes, the places are so small: and now the fishing is done, too.

46,579. Does the fishing industry prevail throughout the island?—Yes.

46,580. Where are the holdings of the men who live to a certain extent by fishing; are they on the seashore, or inland?—Some of them are very high, and far from the shore.

46,581. How far?—Some are almost an hour's walk from the shore.

46,582. Not convenient to the fishing?—No.

46,583. How is it that men who live to a great extent by fishing are put an hour's walk back from the shore?—Because they cannot get crofts nearer the sea: the bigger places are near the sea.

46,584. And do the bigger ones have the better land?—The better land and the better places are along the shore.

46,585. The fisherman is divorced from the sea by the intervention of the larger occupant on the good land?—Yes, in some cases, but not in all: there are others near enough the shore.

46,586. Are there a considerable number a great distance from the shore?—Yes, a great many.

46,587. Is it the fact that there are still to be seen, in the island of Rousay, the remains of crofters' houses?—Oh, yes, plenty on the west side, on the Quandale side.

46,588. Did these removals take place in the occupancy of the present proprietor, or previously?—Previously; in the time of his grand-uncle.

46,589. Has there been a general desire on the part of crofters since the passing of the Act to erect new and improved dwelling-houses?—No, not so far as I am aware; but we are bound to keep up the old ones, and I cannot get one stone either for repairs or for any drainage that may be necessary. We are bound to drain and keep the land in working order, and there are no stones to be got.

46,590. Have there been any new dwelling-houses erected since the Act was passed?—I think John Inkster's was the only one.

46,591. Take the farm of Langskail; are there any small holdings on that farm the occupants of which pay rent to the principal tenant?—Yes, I think so.

46,592. How many?—I am unable to say.

46,593. But do you know, as a matter of fact, there are some?—I think there are some five or six, but I am not sure of the exact number.

46,594. Is there any cottar population in Rousay?—I don't think so.

46,595. Are there many cases in Rousay of more then one fire,—more than one dwelling-house, on a holding?—There are chance cases.

46,596. That is uncommon?—Uncommon.

46,597. Then, there is not much pressure of one man upon another?—No.

46,598. And, I suppose, there is no great distress in Rousay, although there is a want of land?—Distress enough, the times are so bad.

46,599. But the times are not worse there than generally?—They are worse than they used to be.

46,600. But not worse than they have been in other islands?—They cannot be.

46,601. Can you give me any idea how many crans of herring have been got in Rousay this year?—No:

Kirkwall, Orkney. Peter Yorston.

there are only two boats going. There used to be twenty boats in Vieray and Rousay, and now there are only two.

46,602. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for crofters.—Are there no crofts in Rousay with more than one family living in the one house?—There are some.

46,603. And are those the families who would take advantage of any new crofts?—I think so, at once. They cannot have any stock.

46,604. Is it a fact that the main portion of the fishing that is got at Rousay is white fish and not herring?—All white fish; and it is all done away with; there are no fish to be got on account of the trawlers coming so near the shores.

46,605. The profits from the white fishing have fallen away very much?—Yes.

46,606. Mr Duncan J. Robertson, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for General Burroughs.—You say that you are here as a delegate. Do you represent the whole of the crofters of Rousay?—Yes.

46,607. Was there a meeting of the whole crofters held?—They were not all present, but there were a good many present.

46,608. Can you give me an idea how many you represent?—I suppose from a dozen to twenty, but we did not count them.

46,609. And how many are there in the island altogether?—I don't know exactly.

46,610. Would there be 80 or 90?—Oh, no.

46,611. You don't know how many there are?—No, I never counted them.

46,612. Are you aware if either Feelyhall or Brendale wish any extension of holdings?—I don't know if there is any chance of it; there is no land available there.

46,613. Do these people want any extension of grazing, or anything of that sort?—I think so; they used to have it.

46,614. Are you authorised to speak for these people?—Yes.

46,615. Both for Feelyhall and Brendale?—Any one that is present. We could not all meet there, but we knew that they used to have this privilege.

46,616. But I am speaking of these two that were mentioned. Do you know if either of these two is a crofter under the Act?—They are neither of them crofters.

46,617. Did they attend the meeting of crofters?—They are not crofters.

46,618. Then, you do not represent them?—None who are not crofters.

46,619. We have been told that there are congested districts in Rousay; Mr Lennox says that seven-tenths of Rousay is congested, and I would like to get some instances?—I think we are all more or less that.

46,620. Tell me a case in particular?—Perhaps we cannot make up our mind.

46,621. But congested means where you have not room enough?—In Broland there are two families.

46,622. Is Broland a croft?—No, it is not a croft.

46,623. Is it not the case that Broland finds his farm too big, and for that reason is leaving it?—I don't know; but there is Knarston.

46,624. Is it not the case that the two families at Broland consist of a very old man and his son?—Yes.

46,625. The case of Knarston, I think, is a case where the two crofters were joint-tenants, and when the Crofters Commission came here they had the croft divided, and a part given to each crofter?—Well, there is a married son there also.

46,626. Are you aware that prior to the passing of the Crofters Act there was a rule made on the estate that there was not to be more than one family in each house?—I was not aware.

46,627. Are you not aware that that is in the estate regulations, and was always enforced?—I don't think that I can consider that.

46,628. Did you not yourself apply for another croft some years ago when it fell vacant, and add it to your own?—Yes, and I would be the better of getting a farm, for the place I have is too little.

Kirkwall, Orkney, Peter Yorston.

46,629. You would like, I suppose, to accumulate a few more crofts, and increase the size of your place?—It would need to be of better quality.

46,630. You never think of offering for larger farms if they fall vacant?—It is not many crofters that can go in for large farms.

46,631. But farms of about £30 or so. Do you never offer for any of these when they are vacant?—No.

46,632. Are you aware that most of the people who have come to inquire after farms in Rousay of recent years, have come from other islands, and that there have been very few inquiries amongst the crofters?—I think they are few enough for this reason that they are of no use. They give them to strangers far cheaper than to those who belong to the island.

46,633. Do you know if the crofters have ever offered?—I don't know about any man but myself.

46,634. You are here as a delegate?—Yes.

46,635. But yet you don't know about any man but yourself?—They did not tell me that.

46,636. You told me there were many chance cases in which crofters would be glad to get new holdings if these were available?—Chiefly extension of grazing.

46,637. I refer to your statement about two or three families on one croft?—There are two delegates here who can speak to that; I think they would go if they got a better place.

46,638. I am speaking of places where there are two families, and where you say they would take another croft if they could get it?—I have heard plenty say that if ground was available they would take it; but it has never been available.

46,639. Last year there were three crofts all vacant: did any crofters, to your knowledge, come forward and try to get them?—I don't know: but it was people who had no crofts that got them.

46,640. Are you not aware that no crofters asked for them?—I don't know what applications may have been put in to you, I never heard of any.

46,641. You spoke of Quandale grazings. Do you remember the time when there were crofters in Quandale?—I don't remember, but we know the date; it was in 1848,—about forty-five years ago.

46,642. It was before your recollection?—Simply from information.

46,643. Merely from report?—Yes. There is a man in Kirkwall to-day who could tell about it.

46,644. Is the information you got from people who remember it?—Yes, it is information from old people who remember it themselves. We spoke to one man in Kirkwall to-day, who is a son of the man who was evicted, and he remembers it right well,—John Mackinlay is his name.

46,645–46. When these people first came to Quandale, how did they make a living principally? Do you know if they were kelp-burners?—I don't know.

46,647. Do you know that they are very much exposed to sea-gust?—In some years they must be.

46,648. Do you know what took place between the landlord and the tenants at the time of the removal?—Nothing, but what we have heard, but it was the intention to lay it down to sheep.

46,649. You don't know whether they were in arrear of rent?—I never heard of any arrears of rent. I thought it was done by the landlord for his own purpose.

46,650. Do you know if there were any evictions by process of law?—The first two.

46,651. Were they removed by sheriff-officers?—They came to the first two tenants in the biggish place, and offered them a year's rent back if they would leave; but the little ones were swept away at once.

46,652. Do you know if houses were built for them in other places?—They settled on the common, and some on the heather; they brought in a little land, which they got cheap at first, but then they were rented on the good land.

46,653. Is there a suitable place for fishing at Quan-

dale?—Not at Quandale, but on the west side,—that is the nearest port between Quandale and Westness.

46,654. How far would that be from Quandale?—Not very far.

46,655. An hour's walk?—I could not say; I have never gone to the fishing there at all.

46,656. Half-an-hour's walk?—Perhaps it might be.

46,657. You have also said that if Quandale was divided, you know a good many people who would take land there?—It is most likely they would.

46,658. Are these people in a position to put up buildings?—How can they do that without getting stones? There would be something done for that as well as for the matter of stones, I hope. The Government may aid us to get stones.

46,659. If they got the stones have they the means of building houses?—I don't know; but they will see how they get the chance of the stones.

46,660. Mr Maccallum.—It was suggested with egard to Quandale that the people who got it were imply kelp-burners. Is it a fact that you can easily see the marks of old cultivation on the land there?—Yes, they have cultivated it to a great extent.

46,661. They must have occupied themselves in cultivating the land?—Yes.

46,662. Did the people who were there reclaim a great deal of the land in Quendale?—I think they reclaimed most of it, but it was generally in small patches.

46,663. The value of the land has been greatly increased by the former cultivation?—Yes.

46,664. It was also suggested in your cross-examination that there were not applications for middle-sized holdings by the crofters of Rousay,—that is, for lands in that island. Could that be accounted for by the strained relations between the crofters and the proprietor, and their not having confidence in the regulations that might be drawn up between themselves and him?—Do you mean before the Act came into force?

46,665. No; in the meantime. It is suggested that there are middle-sized holdings to let, and that the crofters do not apply for them. But if they do not apply for these farms, may not that be due to the opposition which the proprietor always shows to the smaller tenants?—I think so.

46,666. Is it your opinion that if they were offered the land under the same conditions as those under which it was held by the crofters, they would apply for the land of Westness and Quandale?—I believe so.

46,667. Mr Gordon.—Were the crofts to which Mr Robertson referred, crofts under the Act, or crofts that had been formerly under a lease,—I speak of the three crofts that were offered last year?—There were two of them crofts under the Act, Redlums and Sandready.

46,668. How did they become vacant?—In the case of Redlums an old woman went south; and, I suppose, in the case of Sandready, I suppose, the tenant was in arrear.

46,669. These crofts were not sub-divided among the neighbouring crofters?—No.

46,670. How are they occupied now?—By new tenants.

46,671. Where did they come from?—From Rousay.

46,672. The Chairman.—Mr Robertson, could you favour us with a copy of the estate regulations? [Mr Robertson].—Certainly.

MALCOLM CORSIE, Faro, Rousay (44)—examined.

46,673. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

46,674. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area, according to the Crofters Commission Report, is 3 acres arable and 7 acres outrun; present rent £4, fair rent £2, arrears £5, of which £3 were cancelled, and £2 ordered to be paid. There are also grazing rights on the adjoining hill].

46,675. Can you give us a notion of the extent of your grazing?—No, I cannot say.

46,676. How many share in it?—I can hardly tell you on the spur of the moment. Kirkwall, Orkney.

46,677. Do those who have the right put any stock they choose upon it?—Yes. Malcolm Corsie.

46,678. What stock have you?—I have only a cow and a stirk.

46,679. Have you any sheep?—No sheep.

46,680. And no horse?—No horse.

46,681. Are there many horses in Rousay?—Yes, a good many.

46,682. A good many of the crofters have horses?—Yes, some have a pair of horses and others have one.

46,683. Were you appointed as a delegate to appear here?—Yes.

46,684. Was it at the same meeting at which Yorston was appointed?—Yes.

46,685. And do you represent all the crofters in Rousay or only certain portions of the island?—All the crofters.

46,686. Do you agree with the evidence which Yorston gave with regard to the extension of grazings from Knitchin, Westness, and Langskail?—Yes.

46,687. Is the desire in Rousay rather for extension of grazings than for new holdings?—Mostly for extension of grazings.

46,688. Is there a substantial desire for new holdings?—I think there would be if they saw that they could live by them and make ends meet. There are lots of them who would take new holdings.

46,689. How many?—Several of them.

46,690. Half a dozen of them?—I think they would come to that; perhaps more, if they saw the thing was likely to do well.

46,691. Do you mean by new holdings, holdings by which they could live, or live in conjunction with fishing?—I suppose it could only be held in conjunction with fishing.

46,692. Do most of the crofters in Rousay supplement what they get from crofts by fishing?—Most of them.

46,693. Do many go to the herring fishing?—Not many: only two boats.

46,694. And there used to be 20?—About that number, 40 years ago.

46,695. But not for 40 years?—Yes, there were 10 or 12 about 20 years ago, but they are always going down and down.

46,696. How is that?—I think it is on account of the inability to supply the boats.

46,697. Do you agree with the evidence given by Yorston that a good many of the fishermen are rather distant from the shore?—Well, some of them are a good bit from the shore, but not too far to prosecute the fishing if it were profitable.

46,698. But they would be more conveniently situated if they had holdings upon the shore?—Oh, yes, much more convenient.

46,699. It is of the utmost consequence for a fisherman to be as near the shore as he can with his holding?—Yes.

46,700. Do you know of any tenants in Langskail who pay rent to the principal tenant?—Yes, I think there are five.

46,701. Can you give us their names?—Hugh Craigie, James Craigie, Mrs Robert Pearson, Sarah Marwick,—I don't remember the other.

46,702. What rents did they pay?—The rents are fixed by the Crofters Commission.

46,703. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Where are the best boat harbours for fishing boats in the island of Rousay?—On the east side, and all along the south side.

46,704. But, tell me the names of the principal places where boats are launched?—On the east side; the places where they keep the fishing boats now are Ham near Scockness.

46,705. Where else?—Nowhere else: there are only two, but the little boats are scattered throughout the island wherever the fishermen reside.

46,706. Are there any other good places besides the one you have named for herring boats?—Yes, two or three places.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Malcolm Corsie.

46,707. Why are they not so used now: is it because there are no houses near those places?—I don't think it is so much for that, but I think it is for want of ability to purchase them.

46,708. It is not from any difficulty in getting land where they could build houses for prosecuting the fishing?—No, I don't think that.

46,709. Did you hear Mr Lennox's evidence?—Yes.

46,710. Did you hear him use the words congestion and distress?—Yes.

46,711. And when asked where it was, he said it was in Rousay. Do you agree with that?—Yes.

46,712. Where is the greatest congestion or the greatest distress?—I suppose it is general over all the place.

46,713. Can they not pay their rents? Are they in arrear of rent?—No, they are not.

46,714. How do you see the distress; what signs of distress can you give me?—I see that they are pretty hard up, and cannot make ends meet in many cases.

46,715. But I should like a little more definite information. Could you not give me any definite signs of distress? Have they difficulty in getting food or clothing?—They have to get credit sometimes from the millers and tradesmen for their food.

46,716. Mr Gordon.—Do you mean by this congestion that the crofts are rather small?—Yes.

46,717. Could you suggest any part of Rousay where fishermen's crofts could be constructed in a situation more convenient for the sea than those which now exist?—I don't know; the north side and the east side, I think, are most convenient for the fishing: there are several there.

46,718. There is a harbour on the north shore there, in Saviskill Bay?—It is not a very good harbour; you could keep small fishing boats there but not large ones.

46,719. You are presently in the occupation of what appears to be the best harbour,—that is at the Ham near Scockness?—Yes.

46,720. There is no harbour of any consequence on the south shore, I think?—No.

46,721. The small bay near the old church there is about the best?—Yes, there is an anchorage there that is laid down in the chart.

46,722. But it would not be always very accessible if there was a good strong northerly gale?—No, not very accessible.

46,723. Therefore, it would not be very advisable to suggest the formation of fishermen's holdings at that point?—No.

46,724. The principal harbour in the island is already in the occupation of crofters and small farmers?—Yes.

46,725. Where is your croft; is it in Sourin?—Yes.

46,726. Do you consider it would be a benefit to get that pasture to which the last witness spoke?—Yes, I consider it would be a benefit.

46,727. How would you use it if you got it?—By pasturing cattle in the summer-time, and a few sheep.

46,728. How many sheep could be on the hill which was lately annexed for the Home Farm?—It could not keep very many; it is of no use except in summer.

46,729. It would be more use for you as an outrun for your young cattle?—Yes, in the summer-time.

46,730. What is the distance of the ring fence from your croft?—About a mile.

46,731. But giving up the fishing seems to be the greatest objection. Are the people in your township so poor that they cannot afford to join together and get a boat?—I think that is the main reason.

46,732. Did they take advantage of the grant which was formerly given to get boats?—Not in Rousay.

46,733. The fishing has been specially productive this year in the Shetland Islands?—Yes, the herring fishing.

46,734. And you are better situated here for the fishing than they are in Shetland: you have more regular communication for the disposal of your fish?—Yes.

46,735. And you are nearer the better fishing ground, the Pentland Firth: you have made no suggestion with regard to a grant for boats?—No, we made no application: there were very few in Orkney, only two or three cases.

46,736. Mr Munro.—You stated that the chief desire of yourself and the other crofters was to obtain an extension of the grazings?—Yes.

46,737. Did it never occur to you to make application to the proprietor to obtain such an extension?—No.

46,738. Do you know any crofters who ever did?—I don't know if any of them ever did.

46,739. Why not?—I don't know the reason: I suppose they thought it would be useless.

46,740. So that I may take it that your only hope lies in some change in the law under which the proprietor would be compelled to grant what you want. Is that so?—Yes.

46,741. The Chairman.—Do you know whether any crofters in Rousay have applied to the landlord for permission to quarry?—Yes, there have been some cases.

46,742. How many?—I think three or four.

46,743. I mean who have applied in writing?—Yes.

46,744. Do you not know of any case where such permission was granted?—Not to a crofter.

46,745. Has such permission been granted to a person who was not under the Act?—Yes, to every one of them.

46,746. I see the estate regulations, of which Mr Robertson has been kind enough to give us a copy applicable to the estates of Rousay and Vieray, bear this in Article 14 "No tenant shall be entitled to quarry 'stones or flags on the estate without written permission 'from the proprietor or his factor," and you say such permission has been asked but been refused to crofters?—Yes.

46,747. But granted to others?—Yes.

46,748. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for the crofters.—With regard to the question of congestion and distress in Rousay, you were asked whether the crofters were in arrear of rent and you said they were not in arrears?—There were none in arrear last year except one man.

46,749. What is the reason why they are not in arrear?—Because they are not allowed to get into arrear: they have to strain every point to get the rent.

46,750. Why is that?—Because the landlord exacts his rent. The man who could not pay his arrears last year is bankrupt.

46,751. And is the result of that that you are much in debt to your tradesmen and merchants?—Yes, several are a good deal in debt to millers, shoemakers, and tradesmen of all kinds.

46,752. And also to merchants for shop goods?—Yes, there is plenty of that.

46,753. You were asked by one of the Commissioners why you never made application to the proprietor for an extension of your grazings from those grazing lands?—Yes.

46,754. Why did you not make application; would it have been granted to you?—Because we thought it was of no use.

46,755. Is there a very bitter feeling between the proprietor and the crofters?—There is said to be so, and supposed to be so.

46,756. Do you crofters feel it at all?—Oh, yes, we feel it.

46,757. You were asked also why you did not take advantage of the Government boats provided for herring fishing. Was that done very much in Orkney?—Not very much.

46,758. Why was that?—I don't know the reason; it was done in three or four cases; I know one in Stronsay and one in Westray.

46,759. Were these cases a success?—I think they have all been a success.

46,760. Why did the Rousay men not take advantage of it?—I could not say the reason exactly: I suppose it was for want of thinking about it in time.

DONALD SUTHERLAND, Saltness, Longhope (48).

46,761. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

46,762. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—According to the Crofters Commission Report the area of the croft extends to three acres arable and one acre outrun, with grazing rights for cattle on the adjoining hill pasture; old rent £1, fair rent £1; arrears 18s., ordered to be paid].

46,763. Do you appear here as a delegate?—No.

46,764. Just as an individual crofter?—Yes.

46,765. What is it you wish to lay before us?—The want of more pasture.

46,766. Who is your proprietor?—Mr Heddle.

46,767. And had you a litigation with him or the tenant of the farm about the grazing?—Yes.

46,768. And you were interdicted?—Yes.

46,769. You wish more pasture: can you tell us what extent of pasture you have at present?—No, I am not sure how much there is.

46,770. What stock have you got?—I have one cow, a ewe, and two lambs at present.

46,771. Is that the whole?—That is the whole; I was deprived of all the rest.

46,772. When?—By an action of interdict.

46,773. Had you any legal right over what you were deprived of, or was it merely a privilege of grazing?—The tenant and I had agreed upon it.

46,774. But, I suppose, the tenant had exclusive right to the land from which you had been interdicted?—Yes, he held it under lease.

46,775. And you had no right of grazing on it; you had only a privilege or tolerance; is that the way of it?—Yes, I think so.

46,776. And what you now represent is that you desire to have an extension of grazing?—Yes.

46,777. Is this what you want to be at, that you would like to get as a legal right the power of grazing over the lands from which you have been interdicted?—Yes.

46,778. Was anyone else interdicted along with you, or were you the only person?—I was the only person, but there were five crofters also.

46,779. Were they interdicted?—No, but they were threatened with proceedings.

46,780. And they took their stock off, I suppose?—Yes, they drew off.

46,781. You held on, and then came the interdict?—I drew off at the same time, but went on again.

46,782. And were interdicted?—Yes.

46,783. Mr Gordon.—How long have you been in that croft?—I have been in it all my life.

46,784. There is a new fence between your crofts and this pasture?—Yes.

46,785. When was that fence put up?—In 1881.

46,786. Previous to that time your sheep and cattle used to go to the hill as they chose?—Yes.

46,787. This action for interdict was taken against you in consequence of your sheep or cattle getting through this fence?—Yes.

46,788. And you resisted the action?—Yes.

46,789. How far is the fence from your arable land?—About three chains.

46,790. It starts from the back of your croft, and extends in a north-easterly direction, winding out from the arable land to the crofts as it proceeds northwards?—It starts from the north-west end of my croft.

46,791. And proceeds in a north-westerly direction?—Yes, for about twenty-five or thirty-six chains, and then turns to the north-east.

46,792. But it is considerably nearer your croft than to the crofts further east?—Yes.

46,793. It starts from your croft and goes north or north-east and widens as it gets a little farther from the arable land of the crofts?—Yes.

46,794. And what you invite us to consider is the advisability of this land beyond the fence which you, at one time, had a right of pasturing over being restored to you?—Yes.

46,795. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Are there any other witnesses from Longhope with you to-day?—One.

46,796. Are we to hear him after you?—No.

46,797. But I understand you to say you were only speaking for yourself, or are you delegated from the crofters round you to speak to us on their behalf?—I was asked to mention the names of those that want more hill if they can get it.

46,798. Did you hold a meeting, or was it just in conversation?—Just in conversation.

46,799. Mr Heddle of Melsetter.—You have stated that before the fence was put up you had a certain privilege over an extent of hill beyond that fence; is that so?—I had the privilege from John Corrigall, the tenant of Melsetter Farm.

46,800. I am not aware whether that is so, but the tenant of Melsetter Farm, of course, had no right to sublet or give such a privilege. What I wish to ascertain is not in regard to Melsetter Farm, but as to whether you and the crofters alongside of you have had any right for many years past to pasture cattle upon ground outside of where the fence is at present?—The fence was broken down, and the cattle went in.

46,801. That is not a question of right. I have asked you a simple question, and please to answer it. Have you a right to the westward and beyond the fence that is now on the ground?—I had a late and ancient right.

46,802. You are aware that there is a ditch which runs from the Melsetter Farm and intersects or cuts the fence, passing for the most part inside of it on the eastward or crofter side. Do you know the ditch I refer to?—Yes, I know it.

46,803. Are you not aware that that ditch was the cattle boundary previous to the erection of the fence?—No, I am not aware of that; the cattle never kept that boundary.

46,804. But you are aware that it was the boundary?—I never heard anything about it till the present moment.

46,805. You have known of cattle being poinded for going beyond that boundary?—No, I don't know anything of that.

46,806. At the time when the fence was erected, were you not aware that it was stated that it was believed there was a sufficient extent of pasture on the crofter side for a good many years to come?—It would be very small, and not much worth.

46,807. And are you not aware that it was also stated that if more arable ground was broken up the fence would be moved farther west so as to give additional pasture?—No, I am not aware of that either.

46,808. I stated that myself. Now, as to your stock, you keep a cow and two ewes at present; what stock does your neighbour, Donald Thomson, farther west, keep?—All that can go on the land.

46,809. And William Ireland, what stock does he keep?—One cow.

46,810. James Stout, what stock has he?—One cow.

46,811. These are all who are pasturing to the westward of you upon that hill: there is no one else west of you, is there?—No.

46,812. Then, to the eastward of you; the first person to the east of you is James Stout, is it not?—Yes.

46,813. What stock does he keep?—A cow and a calf and a ewe and a lamb at the present time.

46,814. Next to him is Christina Stout; she keeps no stock, I think?—No.

46,815. Next to that is James Smith; what stock has he got?—One cow.

46,816. And he had an ox till recently, I think?—Yes.

46,817. Next to him is Widow Thomson?—Yes.

46,818. What stock does she keep?—A cow, a quey, and a calf.

46,819. She sometimes keeps an ox, I think, but when that is the case she is hardly able to keep the quey. Next comes Widow Sutherland; what stock has she?—One cow and one ewe.

46,820. And next is Andrew Sinclair; he also keeps some sheep, I think?—He has two ewes and two lambs.

46,821. Then comes Isaac Wilson?—He has one stirk.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Donald Sutherland.

46,822. And John Johnson: what does he have?—A cow and a year-old.

46,823. Then comes the minister's feu, the minister having liberty to graze a cow, and that is all in the district?—Yes.

46,824. The Chairman.—You have given us those who exercise grazing rights over the pasture that this man has? [Mr Heddle].—Yes, that is so.

46,825. What is the extent of that pasture? [Mr Heddle].—I have not measured it, not knowing there was to be an inquiry, but it is very easily ascertained from any plan, or on the ground. I may say at once that there was never any intention of stinting people here in the matter of pasture, and I have no doubt whatever that if it should be found that additional pasture is required, the fence will be moved back. I stated that when the fence was put up, several people in the district were aware of it, and I think what presses upon this man is rather that the fence happens to run in at an angle to his ground than anything else. But when the fence was broken down, some of them began to run their cattle through it; of course, it was natural enough that they should wish to continue to do so.

46,826. (Examination resumed).—This fence was put up in 1881? [Witness].—Yes.

46,827. Prior to the erection of that fence, did those persons who had stock in the neighbourhood graze generally over the neighbouring pasture?—Yes, before the fence went up.

46,828. And you have felt a good deal of restriction from the erection of that fence?—Yes.

46,829. What you wish us to consider therefore is the possibility and propriety of your grazing being extended across where the fence now stands?—Yes.

46,830. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You have given us the number of stock held by yourself and by your neighbours just now. Did they have more stock previous to the erection of the fence?—Yes, a great many more sheep.

46,831. And they put away their sheep when the fence was put up,—is that what you mean?—I cannot say exactly as to that. My mother had about twelve sheep.

46,832. What became of them?—They were away before the fence was put up.

46,833. Is there room on the ground over which you have grazing at present for more stock than the list you have just given us?—It is all cut up with peat banks and swamps.

46,834. There is no room then for any more stock than is on at present?—No, there is no room for any more.

46,835. Mr Gordon.—The crofters that you have mentioned are all rather poor, are they not?—Very poor.

46,836. Is it your opinion that the circumstances of these people would be improved if they had grazing beyond the fence, on which they could keep say ten or twelve sheep each?—Certainly. [Mr Heddle].—May I be allowed to make one remark as to this piece of ground? When the Crofters Commission was sitting in Walls, Your Lordship may remember that some of the southside people were very anxious to have peat ground in a certain locality. This peat ground is in the very pasture now alluded to, and the reason why I then opposed the granting of that particular peat ground was to prevent these people's pasture from being cut up. I wished then to go farther west, beyond the fence for peats. That was the whole question at the time, and yet some of them are getting in and are cutting up these people's pasture.

David Esson.

DAVID ESSON, Chalkhoull, Holm (48)—examined.

46,837. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

46,838. Was your croft dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area of the croft is 15 acres arable and 2 roods outrun, with no common pasture; the old rent was £6, 12s. 9d., and the new rent £6; arrears £3, 6s. 4d., of which £1, 6s. 4d. were cancelled and £2 ordered to be paid].

Kirkwall, Orkney.

David Esson.

46,839. Are you here as a delegate or as an individual witness?—As an individual witness.

46,840. What is it you wish to put before us?—I wish to give evidence that the grazing ground that used to be occupied by the crofters in our locality was taken away in 1857.

46,841. What grazing was that?—The whole hill grazing of the Holm estate was withdrawn at that time from those who were pasturing upon it.

46,842. What is the name of the hill?—The portion that I allude to in our neighbourhood was called the Skews.

46,843. Is it now part of a farm, or what has been done with it?—It is in the occupancy of the farm of Greenwall.

46,844. Who is the tenant of Greenwall?—Mr James Heddle.

46,845. When did that take place?—It was not put into the farm of Greenwall at the time I allude to, in 1857.

46,846. When was it put into the farm of Greenwall?—I am not exactly sure.

46,847. And do you wish to represent to us that it would be a great benefit to you and other crofters in the neighbourhood to get back to that grazing?—Oh, yes, it would be a great benefit.

46,848. But is that what you wish to say?—Yes.

46,849. I see you have a croft of 15 acres arable?—Yes.

46,850. How many horses have you?—One.

46,851. Do you plough the land? Do you borrow a horse from a neighbour?—Yes, he and I work yoke about to suit ourselves.

46,852. Your land is not worked with the spade, but with the plough?—All ploughed.

46,853. Do you carry on a regular rotation?—A regular rotation.

46,854. Is it a six shift rotation?—No, five shift.

46,855. What stock have you?—Two cows, two year-olds, and two calves.

46,856. Any sheep?—No. That is not the stock that I have at the present time, but that is my regular stock.

46,857. What is your present stock?—I have three cows in the meantime, and one year-old, and two calves. One of the cows went wrong, so that I had to buy another in her place.

46,858. You live entirely by your croft, I suppose?—No.

46,859. What do you live by?—By the fishing, in the meantime; both in Shetland and at home now as well.

46,860. You depend on the fishing as well as on the croft?—I have a large family, and it takes all I can do to make it do.

46,861. You live partly by the croft and partly by the fishing?—Yes.

46,862. Have you any sons who go to the fishing?—I have one son who takes service in winter, and he comes home to work the croft; he is only sixteen or seventeen years of age. I have to take him home to work on the place when I am away at the fishing.

46,863. But, as I understand, you do not wish any addition to your croft, but only extension of grazing?—I filled up an application for enlargement.

46,864. Enlargement of holding by taking arable land?—Yes, off the farm of Greenwall.

46,865. How much arable land have you applied for?—Something about 40 acres, I think.

46,866. And how many applicants are there?—Five.

46,867. Has the application been disposed of yet?—It is under appeal. Part of what was applied for was granted by the Crofters Commission, but the landlord appealed against their decision.

46,868. Who is the landlord?—Mr Sutherland, Græme.

46,869. But, besides that, as I understand you, you are here to-day wishing to put before us a deficiency of grazing, and to say that you would like to have an extension of grazing?—It would be a great benefit to our cattle a change of pasture, apart from the forced grass, if we had a little outside pasture to put them to occasionally. [The Secretary.—I see from the Report issued by the Crofters Commission, that 27 acres arable were assigned to five crofters by an order, dated 11th July 1893: that decision is under appeal, and I understand the appeal is to be heard to-morrow]. Part of the ground I am referring to, Mr Heddle has cultivated,—part of the ground in the Skews.

46,870. It is under crop, is it?—Yes. It is all under grass at present, but some of it was under crop last year: from 15 to 20 acres have been cultivated.

46,871. What is the extent of it altogether?—About 150 acres. It is the best grazing ground in the east end of the parish.

46,872. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do I understand you aright that the land you point to as suitable for extension of grazing is now under rotation?—Under regular rotation of crops: I am speaking of the hill ground, not of the ground in our application to the Commissioners.

46,873. You point to the hill ground as suitable for additional grazing?—Yes.

46,874. And there is cultivated land between you and the hill ground, is there not?—Yes.

46,875. How would you have access to the hill ground?—There is no road to it.

46,876. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for Crofters.—About this matter of the Skews, you say there are 150 acres under the name of the Skews, and that it is the best grazing ground in the east of Holm?—Yes.

46,877. That used formerly to be in the occupation and possession of the crofters, and you say that about 20 acres have been cultivated by Mr Heddle?—Yes.

46,878. Up till last year?—A part of it.

46,879. Would any of the rest of this ground called the Skews, be suitable ground for making into new crofts?—Yes.

46,880. Is the ground of such a nature as would make good arable land?—Yes, a part of it is, but part of it would not be practicable to cultivate.

46,881. But you could make new crofts out of it with arable and outrun for each croft?—Yes.

46,882. Are there any crofts in Holm where there are two families in the one croft?—There may be; but, as a rule, it is where an old man is failing and not able to work the place, and has his son along with him. I don't say that there may not be a chance case that I am not aware of.

46,883. Are there any cottars in Holm, or people who hold houses, for instance, in the village of St Mary's, who would like to get new crofts?—Yes, there are plenty of them who would like the ground that was laid down there. There were two fairly good farms in the immediate vicinity of the village.

46,884. But I am speaking about the Skews?—Oh, they are far from it.

46,885. Are there any of those people who would take advantage of new crofts in the Skews?—I don't know.

46,886. The Chairman.—You are not here to represent their views?—No, but there are several who are very anxious to have part of the ground at the village, the two farms that were taken down. The grass is now rouped every year, and sometimes a turnip-dealer from the south country has it. The ground used to be two farms and is now two grass parks.

46,887. Where is that land?—Close by the village of St Mary's.

46,888. What is the extent of it?—One farm, I think, is something like £30 odds of rent, or between £20 and £30.

46,889. And the other one?—Between £20 and £30.

46,890. Is the land rouped to drovers?—It is rouped to the highest bidder.

46,891. Who has it just now?—One of them is a small landlord.

46,892. What is his name?—Mr Charles Muir. He has one part of it, but there are some small bits besides; a merchant has another part, and the ground-officer who used to have the farm of Cowl has a part along with a croft.

46,893. Are you here to give evidence about that?—No, My Lord.

46,894. You are just mentioning what you happen to know?—Some of them were speaking about it. Had they known they would have been very anxious to be here to-day. I said you got the chance, and it is a pity you did not take it.

46,895. But you are not interested in that case yourself?—No, not in that case.

PETER PRATT, Drury, Holm (55)—examined.

46,896. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

46,897. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The croft has 2 roods of arable but no outrun and no common pasture; old rent 10s. and fair rent 10s.]

46,898. Are you here for yourself individually or as a delegate?—I am along with other three from the same place.

46,899. Were you appointed at a meeting?—I got a call from head-quarters here, for you to appear.

46,900. You appear simply on your own behalf, I presume?—Yes.

46,901. What is it you wish to tell us: have you a desire to get more land?—Yes, I am wanting that, certainly.

46,902. Are you a fisherman?—No, I am a tradesman.

46,903. What trade do you carry on?—A blacksmith chiefly.

46,904. Do you live by your trade and not by your croft?—Chiefly by my trade; the croft would not keep me. To-morrow is the day when the thing is to be decided.

46,905. Who is your landlord?—Mr Sutherland Græme.

46,906. Have you any stock?—Just a small pony.

46,907. Is there anything you wish to say to us in the matter of getting more land?—Nothing particular on this occasion. There is an appeal against us by the landlord.

46,908. You have come here mainly on account of the appeal?—Yes.

46,909. But that is to be heard to-morrow, before the Crofters Commission. We have nothing to do with that to-day.—Of course, I am willing to tell you about the grazing of the district.

46,910. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for Crofters.—Do you know the Skews?—I know them fine.

46,911. Is that a piece of ground that is mostly all grazing?—Most of it is grazing except a small portion that is cultivated just now.

46,912. How many acres are cultivated?—I believe about 15 to 20.

46,913. Did you hear Mr Esson's evidence about the Skews?—Yes.

46,914. Do you agree with it?—Yes, I do agree with it.

46,915. Do you know the farm of Greenwall?—Yes, I have known it for the last 35 years.

46,916. Is any part of it made out of old crofts?—A good piece of it.

46,917. How many crofts were thrown into the farm?—I could not be perfectly sure of the number myself.

46,918. Give me a rough idea; would there be six?—There were several,—six or eight.

46,919. Are these crofts now about the best part of the farm?—I could not say the best part, but pretty good at any rate.

46,920. Is there a general desire throughout the parish of Holm that the holdings should be enlarged?—All who have small places want that.

46,921. Would you yourself be anxious for an en-

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Peter Pratt.

largement of your existing holding?—Yes, I have been trying to get it enlarged for the last six years.

46,922. Are you one of the applicants for enlargement of holding?—Yes.

46,923. From this same farm of Greenwall?—Yes.

46,924. And your case is to be heard to-morrow on appeal?—Yes.

James Gorn.

JAMES GORN, Towerhill, Holm (62).—examined.

46,925. The Chairman.—Your croft appears to extend to 15 acres arable, and 1 acre outrun; no common pasture; the old rent was £8 and the fair rent £6, 5s., and there were no arrears when the rent was fixed by the Commission?—That is so.

46,926. Are you here as a delegate?—No, just as an individual.

46,927. Do you carry on a trade apart from your croft?—No.

46,928. Have you a horse or two horses?—One horse.

46,929. And do you plough your 15 acres in spring with a neighbour's horse?—Yes.

46,930. No doubt you lend him your horse in return?—Yes.

46,931. Do you desire more land?—I am an applicant for more land.

46,932. And that application falls to be disposed of elsewhere?—Yes.

46,933. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for Crofters.—You have heard the evidence of Mr Esson about the Skews?—I am well acquainted with the Skews.

46,934. Did you hear what he said about the Skews?—Yes, it is correct, so far as I understand.

46,935. Would it be possible to make any new holdings out of the Skews?—Quite possible: there have been holdings made out of much worse land.

46,936. Are there any people in the parish who would take advantage of such new holdings?—I am not aware.

46,937. Do you know the farm of Greenwall?—Yes.

46,938. Is a good portion of it made out of old crofts?—Yes, a good portion of it.

46,939. How many crofts were destroyed to make part of this farm?—Seven or eight that I know of.

46,940. Can you give the names of them?—Yes, I think I can name the most of them. There were Lower Bu', Crook, Drury, Drawhill, Barriedale,—I think there was a croft there they called the lighthouse; the croft is certainly there, and I could show the site of it.

46,941. What about Netherbow?—It was a pretty large croft; it kept a pair of horses.

46,942. Is it in the farm of Greenwall?—Yes.

46,943. Would enlargement of holdings do much good to the district if it could be got easily?—Oh, yes.

46,944. Do the crofters in the district live in sufficient proximity to each other to make it easy for them to apply for enlargement five at a time?—There are three of us who march directly with Greenwall farm.

46,945. Would it be easier for a single crofter in Holm to apply for enlargement for himself than to band with four others and apply for enlargement?—I think so.

46,946. Do the crofts lie in such a way that it is difficult to get five together?—There is not another district in the parish where you would get five together but the one I am in.

46,947. So that the other districts are handicapped by want of sufficient numbers to come and get an enlargement of holdings under the present law; is that so?—Decidedly.

46,948. Can you remember when these crofts you named were merged with the farm of Greenwall?—I cannot give the dates, but I remember it all.

46,949. Can you remember when this grazing was taken away from the parish?—I remember, but I am not sure of the date.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

James Gorn.

46,950. Was it a common grazing?—Yes.

46,951. With a hill dyke round it?—Yes, it is all down now, but there was a hill dyke round.

46,952. And the whole grazing was for the benefit of the neighbourhood there?—Yes.

46,953. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you know any other parts of the islands besides this district where you live?—I am not acquainted with the islands; I never had any business with them, and I do not know them well.

JAMES CUMMING, Sutherland, Burray (37).—examined.

James Cumming.

46,954. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

46,955. Did you apply to the Crofters Commission to have a fair rent fixed?—Yes.

46,956. Who is your landlord?—The Earl of Zetland. [The Secretary.—The area of the croft is 24 acres arable, 1 acre 3 roods 20 poles outrun; no common pasture. The old rent was £15, and the fair rent £10, 10s. Arrears were £62, 10s., whereof £32, 10s. were cancelled, and £30 ordered to be paid in three instalments of £10 each.]

46,957. Are you here as a delegate?—No.

46,958. Just as an individual?—Yes.

46,959. What is it you wish to lay before us?—About a piece of pasture at the end of our land that we were deprived of 45 or 46 years ago.

46,960. Who was in your holding at that time?—My grandfather.

46,961. Do you know the extent of the pasture of which he was deprived?—It might be 6 or 8 acres.

46,962. And is that included in the farm now?—No; it is in with the farm of Westermill.

46,963. Who is the farmer?—Donald Rosie.

46,964. Do you know what rent he pays?—Something like £40, I think.

46,965. You wish to express the desire to get back that grazing?—Yes.

46,966. Were others deprived of grazing at the same time?—Not that I am aware of.

46,967. Was the grazing that you refer to occupied solely by your grandfather?—No, there were two crofters at that time—my grandfather and another crofter—occupied it between them.

46,968. What is his name?—Donald Duncan.

46,969. What you and he desire is to get back that grazing?—Yes.

46,970. Did you apply for enlargement of holdings to the Crofters Commission?—No, not for enlargement of holdings.

46,971. Have you two horses?—Yes.

46,972. And has Duncan a pair of horses also?—Yes.

46,973. Have you a sheep stock?—Yes.

46,974. How many sheep have you?—I have five ewes and ten lambs.

46,975. And has Duncan much the same number?—Something similar.

46,976. You have some cattle also, I suppose?—Yes, three cows and four year-olds and two calves, along with two horses and a foal.

46,977. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is this grazing which you speak of at Blinkbonny?—I don't know that place.

46,978. Do you know Windhall to the north-west of it, or how does the grazing lie from your place?—It lies west.

46,979. Is it the hill ground?—No, it is a links or rabbit warren at the south of the island.

46,980. Is it between the U.P. Church and the sea?—It is between the U.P. Church and the end of our holdings.

46,981. Then it is in the immediate neighbourhood of the manse?—Yes, it lies between the manse and the end of our land.

46,982. Running along from the manse to your holdings?—Yes, or rather between the school and the end of our ground.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Donald Duncan.

DONALD DUNCAN, Sutherland, Burray (55)—examined.

46,983. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

46,984. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area of the croft is 24 acres 2 roods arable, and 1 acre 2 roods outrun; no common pasture; old rent £15, fair rent £10, 10s., arrears £42, 10s., whereof cancelled £32, 10s., and ordered to be paid £10].

46,985. You heard the evidence given by Cumming, I suppose?—Yes, I remember when the land was taken away. I was a boy of about twelve years of age when the land was squared. At that time Mr Gold was factor.

46,986. And was your father the crofter at the time?—My father had half of the farm at that time, but now each one has his own ground. We had the use of that piece of links for grazing.

46,987. And you wish to put the same view before us as Mr Cumming did about it?—Yes.

46,988. Mr Gordon.—Why did you not apply to the Crofters Commission for this ground as an extension of holding?—We did not think there was any use at that time, for there was no provision made for that. [Mr Lennox.—Perhaps I might point out that the evidence has already shown that the rent of Westermill is only £40]. [Witness.—It is only £33 or £34].

James Cormack.

JAMES CORMACK, Stonecutter, Kirkwall, for Eday (39)—examined.

46,989. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No, I am not.

46,990. Are you a merchant? [Mr Lennox.—He is a stone cutter, a tradesman in Kirkwall, who has been asked by the Eday crofters to represent them because they cannot get in here. He is a residenter in the town, but a native of Eday].

46,991. You were born in Eday?—Yes.

46,992. To what part of the island do you belong?—South End.

46,993. Was your father a crofter there?—Yes.

46,994. And you now carry on business here?—Yes.

46,995. Were you appointed a delegate by the crofters of Eday?—Yes, I was asked by letter to represent them.

46,996. Mr Lennox, Agent for Crofters.—You know the South End of Eday very well?—Yes, I do.

46,997. Is there any land there at present laid down to sheep pasture that the crofters would like to have?—I would think so.

46,998. What land is that?—Part of the farm of Greentoft.

46,999. Would you describe to the Commissioners what part of that farm you refer to?—It is on the west side.

47,000. Is there a large stretch of country there in pasture?—Yes.

47,001. Has there been an application already made for enlargement off Greentoft?—Yes.

47,002. Which was refused by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

47,003. On the ground that it would materially injure the letting value of the farm?—Yes.

47,004. That is from the arable land?—Yes.

47,005. But is any of the pasture land suitable for making crofts out of?—Well, it has been crofts before.

47,006. Were there many crofts on that part?—There were four crofts with houses, and one occupied by a crofter on the other side of the island which there was never a house upon. That made five crofts on the west side, which are now under grazing.

47,007. Is it good enough ground to make into crofts again?—I believe it is just as good as the rest along that side of the island.

47,008. And, of course, it has been improved by lying out so long?—Oh, yes.

47,009. How long is it since those crofts were put into the farm?—I could not say definitely, but I would think about 30 years, or a little over.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

James Cormack.

47,010. Are there any crofts on the south end of Eday where two families live on the one croft,—perhaps the old folk and a married son?—I don't think there are many such.

47,011. Are there any cottars?—No cottars.

47,012. Are there any people there at all who would desire new holdings?—Yes, I believe there are.

47,013. What class of people are they?—For instance, crofters' sons.

47,014. Would they be able to build and stock and fence the new holdings themselves, or would they require assistance for it?—As regards the building, I think they would require help; but, I think, they would be quite able to stock and fence.

47,015. Is there any portion of these grazings that used to be crofters' grazings?—Yes.

47,016. Did the hills there used to be common?—Yes.

47,017. Are they common now?—No.

47,018. What farm do they form part of?—The farms of Greentoft, Skail, and Carrick.

47,019. These are the whole hills of the island?—Yes.

47,020. From the south end to the north end?—Yes, except small portions which are still granted to the crofters.

47,021. But the main part of the hills forms part of these three farms?—Yes.

47,022. And the crofters are not allowed access on them?—No.

47,023. Did they use to graze on them?—Yes.

47,024. All over?—Yes.

47,025. In your recollection?—I just recollect it when I was a boy.

47,026. Mr Duncan J. Robertson, Agent for General Burroughs.—I should like to know if there are many crofters at the back of the letter instructing you to appear?—It is just as a general witness that I was asked to appear.

47,027. Was the letter signed by a number?—By James Tulloch, the inspector of poor, who is a crofter himself.

47,028. Have you got the letter?—No.

47,029. Did the letter say there was a meeting held, or anything like that?—No, it did not. [Mr Lennox.—I may say that I was in correspondence with this same James Tulloch, and he advised me that this witness was to appear because the Eday people were too busy to come themselves].

47,030. He was one of the men who applied for an enlargement off Greentoft Farm?—Yes, he was one of the men.

John Hay.

JOHN HAY, Waterhall, Sanday (66)—examined.

47,031. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter in Sanday?—Yes.

47,032. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

47,033. What estate are you on?—The Earl of Zetland's. [The Secretary.—The area of the croft is 7 acres arable and 3 acres 2 roods 9 poles outrun, no common grazing; old rent £2; new rent £2; arrears of rent £3 ordered to be paid].

47,034. Were you appointed a delegate at a meeting of crofters?—Yes.

47,035. Was any other delegate appointed along with yourself?—Yes, Mr David Brown, but he has given it up. There was a meeting called lately, and a neighbour of mine, Mr William Peace, was appointed in his place.

47,036. What views do you wish to lay before us as a delegate?—About the evictions, and an estimate of the quantity of ground that is in what we might call sheep runs.

47,037. There is land that was formerly held by crofters, from which they have been removed and which has now been put into farms?—Yes.

47,038. What farms are these?—I have begun at the south end at Stove; there were 17 houses there and a sheep run of 600 acres on Spurness, little or none of which has ever been ploughed.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

John Hay.

47,039. The 17 holdings are now incorporated in the farm?—Yes, and if you wish the names of the houses, here they are.

47,040. Just give us the names?—Hangy, Hillhead, Kirkabost, Pier, Gorn, New Gorn, Fastlang, Curse-be-there, Nettletier, Cott, Drush, Hanfinie, Holland's Brae, Grindlay, Garry, Yarrow, Trunesty.

47,041. These are now all in the farm of Stove?—Yes, or mostly all: maybe some of them are past what is now cultivated, but they are within the farm.

47,042. What is the next farm you wish to speak of?—Warsetter.

47,043. Does it include land that once formed part of crofts?—Yes.

47,044. How many?—Fifteen. I can give an estimate of the acreage on the sheep run.

47,045. What estimate do you make?—About 60 acres I think.

47,046. Formerly crofts and now part of the farm?—Well, there was not much of the 60 acres in the crofts, but the crofts were consolidated with the farm.

47,047. Are there any other farms in Sanday that you wish to menton?—Yes: I come now to Backaskaill, where there were eight holdings.

47,048. Can you give us their names?—Tangbrae, Grittle, Leland, Fea, Castlenoble, Hynegruny, Snooanfinie, Lochaber.

47,049. These were all crofters' holdings?—Yes.

47,050. Have you any other farms to tell us about?—Yes, there are some yet; there is West Brough, where six crofts were once situated.

47,051. Have you the names of them?—Yes,—London, Laygar, Parlygo, Leys, Gersty, Cockleha'.

47,052. Are you giving these names from your own knowledge, or from what other people told you?—The whole except Stove from my own knowledge.

47,053. And your own recollection?—Yes. I got the names of the crofts on Stove from an old man, Peter Tulloch, and another.

47,054. Can you give us the names of those in Warsetter?—Yes. Valdabrae, Quarryhouse, Bellrock, Redhouse, Sandytea, Hardha', Sandquoy, Erafea, Sandyhole, Windywa', Wellhouse, Nybster. The last was a considerable farm, paying, I think, £40 of rent.

47,055. Are you giving these names from your own recollection?—Yes, I remember every one of these holdings that I read off the list. I remember seeing the remains of Quoyhouse, because I worked on the same farm, but it has not been inhabited in my time. I knew people who were in it. Then, on Burness there were five crofts,—Parkhouse, Gosaley, Cuvan, Outwall, and East Thrave; and on Traill's estate nine crofts, viz., Basley, Hell, Distyha', Hammerbrake, Waterslap, Dogtuo, Portingale, Howar, Linkshouse, and Geramount.

47,056. Is the desire of the crofters, whom you represent, for new holdings, or for extension of grazings, or for extension of arable land?—I suppose arable land would be the best, because there are some fifty in the place who applied to the Commissioners lately and got none. If we cannot all get the best maybe we will take the worst, but there are some like Valdibrae, he was evicted here two years ago; this is the second crop in the earth since he was evicted. I have a few lines here, if Your Lordship would be pleased to listen to this, we might let you hear something.

47,057. Certainly?—From among these evicted crofters I remember 14 or 15 large fishing boats manned; now, there is only one large fishing boat belonging to the island. There are, however, a number of small fishing boats in the place whose crews are ill-off for want of houses, milk, and so on, and who have not a single foot of ground. A number of these crofters also are ill-off for pasture for their beasts, requiring the greater part of their holding for grain, especially those denied enlargement of holdings, of whom there were about 50. Those too who were lately evicted are greatly in need of some land, some of these families having to dwell in huts scarcely large enough for one person.

47,058. How many are dwelling in huts?—I know one at least; he is before my mind just now. He is the man I spoke of as having been evicted two years ago from Valdibrae.

47,059. He would be behind with his rent, perhaps?—I don't think so; I believe he paid the last copper, as far as I know, but I do not affirm that that is the case.

47,060. How did he come to be removed?—The case was before Your Lordship, and he was somehow declared to be a cottar, and not a crofter.

47,061. Are there many cottars in Sanday?—No.

47,062. Would you say that the island has too many people, considering the land in their occupation?—I think not, seeing it takes the farmers all their time to get enough hands to single their turnips this very season; and the Sanday folks are not so lazy that they would not earn a shilling when they can get the chance.

47,063. But, I understand you to say there is a strong desire among the crofters to get additional arable, or additional grazing as it can be obtained?—Yes, I myself applied before, and did not get it owing to a break among ourselves, and some technical difficulty.

47,064. Are the Sanday crofters well-doing men?—I think so.

47,065. And if they got more land, they would be ready to pay a fair rent for it?—Yes, I certainly think so.

47,066. Do they pay their rents regularly as a rule?—Yes, I believe they do; and I think their cattle fetch on an average nearly as much as the big farmer's cattle.

47,067. They are very good animals?—This year I sold two oxen myself, for which I got £26; and the year before that I sold one for £16.

47,068. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did I understand you to say that there is plenty of employment on the farms for those who wish to work?—I should think it took the farmers all their time this season to get their turnips singled.

47,069. Then, there is plenty of employment for the crofters on the island on these farms if they like to take it?—I think so.

47,070. You also said they were well-doing men throughout the island?—I think, as a rule, they are.

47,071. There is no distress among the crofters there?—I don't know; I would fancy it would take all their thrift to make ends meet.

47,072. But you said the men in the island were well-doing?—I meant that to apply to their laboriousness, they are not idlers; that is what I wished you to understand.

47,073. It generally means that a man is fairly comfortable if you say that he is well-doing?—Well, I think there are a good many who have enough to do to make ends meet.

47,074. Do they want more land in the island because they have a little money laid by and want to extend their farming operations, or is it because they are so ill-off for land, and wish to make a better living by getting more land to cultivate?—I have already stated that I think they work hard, but at the same time they want a bit of land.

47,075. They work hard, and there is plenty of employment on the farm?—Not all the year round, but in the turnip-singling time. They cannot live all the year round on the result of four or five weeks' work.

47,076. But there is more work on the farms besides singling, is there not?—Yes: maybe one or two might get employment at pulling up the turnips in the winter, but that, as a rule, is not for everybody. I told you about the number of men there used to be for the boats, but these men have gone, some to America, and some to Australia, and others have left the island. I could give the names if necessary.

47,077. Were those boats employed in the herring fishing, or in white fishing?—Chiefly herring fishing.

but some in the white fishing. I was about eight years old at the time when I remember seeing 14 or 15 boats at Kettlestoft prosecuting the herring fishing. Some of them went to the white fishing then, and others went later on, but now there is only one big boat. There are a number of small boats, but these fishermen have not a foot of ground. Some that have ground are crofters who have a boat and fish for themselves; but when I say fishermen, I mean men who make fishing their whole employment.

47,078. Is the white fishing as good as it was?—Sometimes, and sometimes not. About New Year time there were a good many haddocks caught, and some cod fish, but that period did not last very long, and then there was a talk about great prices to be had in the south.

47,079. Mr Munro.—When the big farmers employ the crofters, how do they pay them; is it in money, or in kind, or by giving them the use of land?—There is no such thing as the use of land, except it might be for a harvest hand getting perhaps a couple of drills of potatoes.

47,080. How do they generally pay them,—is it in money?—Yes, in money.

47,081. At so much per day?—Yes.

47,082. How much?—I think 1s. 3d. a day is the most that turnip-cleaners get.

47,083. For a man?—No, for a woman.

47,084. But how much does a man make?—I should say perhaps 2s.,—I don't know if it be so much as that.

47,085. You would prefer having an extension of land, so that you might occupy your time in cultivating your own croft?—Yes: if I had a big farm it would pay me so much.

47,086. You would prefer to be independent of any employment on a big farm?—Yes.

47,087. Mr Gordon.—What part of the farm of Stove were the crofters upon?—Chiefly on the north end.

47,088. Is that the land for which the adjoining crofters applied for an extension of their holdings?—I think so.

47,089. And they did not get it?—No, they did not get it.

47,090. You mentioned the farm of Warsetter; was it there that the crofters got an extension of holdings?—Some of them; some when they were denied it where they asked it, did not take it.

47,091. There is a pretty large portion of that farm, extending apparently to over 200 acres, given off as an extension of holding to certain crofters?—Yes.

47,092. Did any of the Braeswick crofters take that land?—Some did, others would not take it.

47,093. What is the distance between Braeswick and the portion of Warsetter that was given to them?—Only a dyke.

47,094. I think you are talking of Stove: what is the distance from Warsetter?—I could not say; it is more than a mile, but perhaps not two.

47,095. Would it have been a more convenient arrangement had they got the land to which you refer as having been formerly crofting land on the north end of Stove?—Any one would naturally think so; there was only the dyke there separating them.

47,096. You say there was other land on the farm of Warsetter, where there had been crofts, and which you think would still be available for new holdings?—Yes.

47,097. Does that land lie near a place called Nebister?—Yes: Nebister is one of those I named.

47,098. It is one of the old crofts now forming part of the farm of Warsetter?—Yes.

47,099. And does the land you refer to extend down to South Howar?—South Howar is to the west of that.

47,100. There are some crofts at present between Nebister and the farm of Stove, between the public road and the sea?—Yes.

47,101. Now, do these crofts extend down to the sea-side, or are they cut off by the pasture of Stove, or the pasture of Warsetter?—They do not come to the sea-side.

47,102. Do the farms of Stove and Warsetter meet at the sea-side?—Down at the east I think they do. There is a bent links there.

47,103. Now, going on to the farm of Backaskaill; you said there had been some crofts there at one time?—Yes.

47,104. Was that to the north end of the farm, and upon the west side of the public road?—Some at the south and some at the north.

47,105. Were any of them in the neighbourhood of the Bea Loch?—Not just at the Bea Loch.

47,106. Is not the land very poor on both sides of the public road, but especially on the west side next to the north march?—It is only poor, I think, because of the sea-gust. There is a small bit that is very poor.

47,107. There cannot be much sea-gust there: but I saw the land, and examined it carefully, and I consider it is very poor, and in rather bad order?—It was brought in from the heather.

47,108. Do you suggest that a crofter could make a living off land like that?—I would be doubtful.

47,109. I am afraid it is a poor subject. Do you know the south end of Stove,—what might be called the west peninsula?—That is Spurness.

47,110. What sort of land is that?—Middling bad land; some of it fairly good if properly cultivated.

47,111. Do you suppose that a crofter would be inclined to take a holding on such land as that?—There might be some who would be willing to be isolated there.

47,112. Is the Bay of Stove a moderately safe harbour, to which a boat could run in an ordinary gale?—I think so; its entrance is to the south.

47,113. Then, I am afraid it is not a very safe harbour?—From the east would not be so bad.

47,114. Are there any good harbours in the neighbourhood of Stove?—No, there is no good harbour that you could ride in every day.

47,115. Is the harbour of Braeswick a safe harbour?—Not except in easterly or southerly winds.

47,116. I am afraid there are not very good harbours on any part of that island?—The small boats are hauled up.

47,117. Where in the island of Sanday is there a good harbour for herring boats?—Kettletoft used to be a general place; that is where the pier is.

47,118. It would be a little sheltered by the islet of Elsness?—Yes.

47,119. Would you suggest to this Commission the advisability of constructing fishermen's holdings of two or three acres?—I think so; I think there are some who want these holdings; there are some who have not even so much as would keep a cow.

47,120. How many fishermen in Sanday have no holdings, but just a house?—I could not say how many, but I could name some.

47,121. There are a good number?—There are, and some have no other occupation.

47,122. Are there many men in the island of Sanday who would naturally take to the sea as their sole means of livelihood if they had convenient houses near a harbour?—I believe so: they are doing it at present though under difficulties.

47,123. And if these difficulties were removed, you think more would take to it?—Yes.

47,124. Your impression seems to be that upon the farm of Warsetter and the farm of Stove the most suitable ground exists for new holdings?—Yes, I think so. There is land, what you might call sheep-runs, upon most of the farms I have spoken about: West Brough has a good piece of land, about 60 or 70 acres in extent. There is no part of it ploughed, and it is quite isolated from the steading.

47,125. With reference to the land which was given off the farm of Warsetter as an extension of holdings to the Braeswick crofters, would it, in your opinion, have been a greater improvement had they removed some of the Braeswick crofters altogether and planted them on the extension, leaving the crofts for the remainder of the Braeswick people?—I suppose it might.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

John Hay.

47,126. I would like to get a more definite reply, whether or not you think it would have been better to create some new holdings altogether on the extension from Warsetter, and leave more room for the crofters remaining at Braeswick?—It would be more convenient certainly to have the house on the land, and enough land to support the family.

47,127. The Chairman.—I think it right to point out to you that the grounds on which the application for enlargement from Stove farm were objected to were:—(1) that the land applied for was not contiguous or near to the holdings of at least three of the applicants; (2) that the land applied for consisted of the most valuable portion of the farm for growing grain crops, and if granted would cut off the greater portion of the rich loam and clay soil actually necessary for the occupation of the farm; and (lastly) that there was a large and extensive steading, a considerable portion of which would be rendered useless if the land were assigned as applied for, and the letting value of the remainder would thereby be materially damaged. Now, the Crofters Commission, in dealing with these objections, sustained the objection that the ground applied for could not be given off without material damage to the letting value of the remainder of the farm. Was an appeal taken against that judgment?—I do not think so; not to my knowledge.

47,128. There was no appeal taken either by the crofters or by the landlord?—No.

47,129. So that the judgment was acquiesced in?—Most of the crofters fell in with that decision, except three or four.

47,130. Mr Gordon.—Is the farm of Stove all under cultivation at present, or is a good part of it laid down to grass?—Six hundred acres is the amount I spoke of, which is just a plain like a links.

47,131. Is there a full stock of cattle on the farm?—I think so; the man is able to keep them.

47,132. But, is the steading fully occupied?—I don't know, but I would think so.

47,133. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for Crofters.—Is it not the case that this last year farmers could not get at their turnips quickly enough, and were glad of an excuse for hands?—Yes.

47,134. But that does not happen every year at the singling?—Perhaps not so much as this year.

47,135. There was more demand in Sanday this year for labour for singling than usual?—Yes, the weather was such that the turnips came on quicker than they could manage. I also desire to mention the farm of Howe from which there were several removals. The names of the places cleared are:—Inglay, Knockhall, Springwell, Banks, Quire, Duncansbrig, Cockleha', Stumpo, Stainskift, Parkhouse, Tribysquoy, Hillside, Quarryholes, and Mounthooly.

William Peace.

WILLIAM PEACE, Barrowfield, Sanday (62)—examined

47,136. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes, I am a crofter, but the Crofters Commission would not take my case up because I was never rented.

47,137. Do you concur in the evidence given by Mr Hay?—Yes. I believe some of the people did not get enlargement of holdings, but there are any amount of applications for new holdings in Sanday, in the parish of Cross.

47,138. How many persons are desirous of obtaining new holdings in that quarter?—You all recollect the Bill that came out lately for small holdings and allotments. Well, there were 34 applications for small holdings sent to the County Council, and they threw the matter over.

47,139. There were 34 persons who wanted to get land in the form of small holdings?—Yes.

47,140. What size of holdings had they in view?—I suppose some thought of 40 or 50 acres, others 10 to 15; I would take 40 or 50 acres myself.

47,141. Can you give us a copy of the application that was made to the County Council?—No. Kirkwall, Orkney.

47,142. Was it in writing?—It was. William Peace.

47,143. And signed by the 34 crofters?—Signed by the 34 crofters.

47,144. I should like to see it. Have these applicants got land at present?—No, I was one of them.

47,145. For the most part those who made application to the County Council were individuals who were without land?—Wholly without land.

47,146. You state yourself as an exception?—I was one of them.

47,147. Are these men who applied to the County Council, fishermen?—No, they are generally farm servants. The applicants also include tradesmen, fishermen, and labourers.

47,148. Where do they live?—They all live in the parish.

47,149. But have they houses of their own, or do they lodge with others?—Some live with other people, and others live on the farms they work on.

47,150. Would they have been prepared to take such holdings and pay a fair rent for them?—I think they were very anxious to do so, but I don't know whether they just wholly understand it or not.

47,151. In the application to the County Council, did they mention where the land was that they desired to get holdings upon?—Yes, I think so, but I am not sure.

47,152. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is there any considerable area of land in the island suitable for new holdings, which is not now under cultivation?—Yes, any amount. There is the 600 acres in Stove, which is now under sheep; there has only been 100 acres of that cultivated during the last 30 years.

47,153. Where else is there such land?—At Warsetter there are 60 or 70 acres.

47,154. And where else?—About 130 acres in Backaskaill that has not been cultivated, and about 70 acres in the Ness of Brough.

47,155. But, do you consider all that land could be profitably occupied by crofters?—I do; I am willing to take a bit of any that I can get.

47,156. Would you go to Spurness?—Fast, in a minute.

47,157. How would you cultivate it?—I would put it in oats and bere and potatoes and turnips.

47,158. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know whether the applications to the County Council were for allotments of land connected with the houses presently occupied by the people, or for small holdings, on which the applicants would be prepared to build new houses?—A few of the people down about the pier were for allotments, but a great number were for crofts. The people near the pier wished to get allotments from the farm of Howe, from which fourteen crofters were evicted a few years ago.

47,159. Would they be prepared to build houses on these crofts?—I don't know; I cannot say as to that because it was never mentioned among us.

47,160. But they wanted the land, and most of them are people who have no land at present. Now, did they look for crofts being formed out of large farms, on which they were prepared to build houses?—Yes; they wish the crofts formed out of the large farms, and they are prepared to build the houses.

47,161. You would be prepared to build a house on a new croft that might be formed out of these large farms?—Of course, there was provision in that bill for help to erect houses and get stock, for such as could not do it without assistance.

47,162. Did you think there was provision in the Small Holdings Act for stocking and building?—Yes.

47,163. Is there not just simply help for purchasing the land?—No, I don't believe any of them were for purchasing: they were for renting it.

47,164. They would prefer to rent it, would they?—I think they would all prefer to rent it at a fair rent.

47,165. Do you know what answer was sent to the applicants from the County Council?—I could not say, but there is a County Councillor from the parish present.

47,166. What answer did you get personally?—We got none.

47,167. When was the application sent in?—About a twelvemonth ago, I suppose.

47,168. And no reply has come from the County Council?—No, they just threw it out because there was no ground available; that was all the notice we got.

47,169. But did you get that notice?—No, there was no reply from the County Council to the application.

47,170. The Chairman.—Mr Robertson has been kind enough to hand up the application to the County Council, which is as follows:—

'To the Honourable the County Council of Orkney.

'Gentlemen,—We, the undersigned, residing in the 'parish of Cross, in the island of Sanday, having know-'ledge of the many beneficial Acts of Parliament now in 'force, but more especially one that has recently come 'into operation, and entitled The Small Holdings Bill, 'and, furthermore, that your honourable body has been 'largely entrusted with the administration of the same, 'we do hereby make known to you that there is a 'demand in the foregoing mentioned district for land, 'and that you may not let this communication lie on 'the table, but put into operation the powers conferred 'on you by Act of Parliament, and acquaint yourselves 'that this is a reasonable demand, and that you will 'duly do this is our expectation and hope.'

47,171. The application is dated Sanday, 16th January, 1893, and is signed by 33 persons. I suppose your name is among the rest?—Yes, it is.

47,172. You said, I think, that there was no answer given to this, verbally, or in writing?—None that I know of.

47,173. Have you ever heard what was the outcome of it,—whether it was ever submitted to the County Council and considered by them?—It was submitted to the County Council.

47,174. Do you know what they did?—They said they had no land available, and they did nothing with it.

47,175. But the applicants got no answer?—No. I believe not.

47,176. Was there any inquiry held in the island by the County Council as to the demand?—None whatever.

47,177. Did any Committee of the County Council have an interview with a Committee of the applicants concerning this application?—Not that I know of. There is one thing that I would be very glad to say, if Your Lordship would allow me, and that is that I am being kept out from the Crofters Act, and every privilege connected with it, even from voting. I have been at Mr Gould often to rent me but he will not, just in order to keep me from getting the benefits of the Act.

REV. MATTHEW ARMOUR, F.C. Manse, Sanday (74) —examined.

47,178. The Chairman.—You are Free Church Minister of the island of Sanday?—Yes.

47,179. May I ask how long you have been there?—For forty-six years.

47,180. Are you a native of Sanday?—No, I am a native of Paisley.

47,181. But from your long residence in the island you know a great deal about the crofting population of Sanday?—I have been observing everything going on during that time, and, of course, must have accumulated a good deal of information.

47,182. I understand you wish to make a statement to us?—I was asked by the Lady Parish people last night to represent them, so that you may not think they are indifferent to your visit, and to give you any information in my power on the subject of your inquiry.

47,183. How many crofters are in Lady?—I cannot say. With the exception of about a dozen of big farms all the tenants of lands are crofters.

47,184. What are the views that you desire specially to lay before us with regard to the parish of Lady?—They are very much on the line of Mr Hay's evidence.

47,185. That is to say, there is a desire for additional land?—Oh, decidedly.

47,186. Is that for new holdings, or for extension of grazing, or extension of arable?—Especially where people are cultivating only sand, they are desirous of getting arable land, because, as you have heard or found when you were in the island, they have to sell their animals annually so as not to lose them all. These people are, of course, very anxious to get arable land.

47,187. The land that they have is mainly sand?—Yes.

47,188. And they desire to have what is called in Orkney mouldy land?—Quite so.

47,189. And would be prepared, I suppose, to pay a fair rent for it?—Oh, certainly.

47,190. Where could that land most conveniently be obtained?—I suppose from the neighbouring farms, where they have arable land.

47,191. There are farms from which such land could be got?—I should think so. I got a paper last night stating the number of evictions on the several large farms within the last 70 years, and these evictions are testified to by the oldest and perhaps most venerable man in Orkney: I refer to George Muir of Hillhead. There are, I suppose, about 40 evictions mentioned by him, 25 of which took place on two farms, Newark and Clett. There are other evictions in connection with Hamarabreck testified to by Mr Hay, and also evictions in addition to the 40 on the farm of Howe in my own recollection. I remember when that farm was studded with houses; those that have calculated say that some 17 were sent adrift so as to bring the farm to its present size.

47,192. The land of which these crofts were made up was turned into a grazing farm?—No, turned into arable. My recollection of these large farms in Sanday is this, that once they were very contracted, and they came to be of their present size just by eviction. Around my house in a circle when I came there, there was no cultivation at all: it was supposed, I believe, even by the big farmers that it was incapable of yielding crops. It was a sheep run here and there and everywhere for the little farms.

47,193. And what is the state of it now?—It is all cultivated with the exception of a very little which is under the original heather; and it produces good crops. I think that is the universal fact,—that the farms in Sanday from the one end to the other were originally very small.

47,194. And gradually increased by the crofts being incorporated?—By taking in the crofts.

47,195. What was the state of the common land when you remember first; was it overrun by the crofters' stock as they chose?—There was nothing done with it then.

47,196. When were those commons appropriated or enclosed?—I cannot give you the date, but I know exactly the history of the whole affair, and it was not very creditable or clean; that is the impression that I have.

47,197. Is it your opinion that this enclosure or appropriation of commons had a depressing effect upon the crofters, and narrowed them very much?—At that time there was very little life in the crofters; there was very little life in the big farmers. There was a gradual revival of interest in cultivation, until it came to this late stage. I believe the reason why the land was neglected was that kelp-making was absorbing all their attention.

47,198. And was very profitable at that time?—Very profitable: I believe if they could now get the £20 a ton that it is said they got at one time, they would be very glad to increase the number of people and bring them back to their old houses.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Rev. Matthew Armour.

47,199. At that time the occupation of houses was with a view to the kelp industry and not to the cultivation of land, I suppose?—The large farmers had no interest in the cultivation of land. It is not an old story at all, the introduction of the turnip crop. I am told by one who had a hand in introducing the turnip crop that it was very difficult to get them to believe that laying them flat and relieving them was at all the proper way. They thought that they should be hoed up like potatoes, and it was very difficult to make them alter their opinion.

47,200. They understand it now, I daresay, much better?—Oh, yes, as well as any people in Scotland.

47,201. They know a good deal about rotation?—Certainly.

47,202. And they manage their crofts upon the whole very well, I daresay?—Admirably. It used to be the idea that big farmers were required in order to teach the little ones how to cultivate their land; but they don't need any such training as that: they are now as well up in cultivating the land as the big farmers themselves. If you go into a small patch, say a garden, you will find that it is better cultivated than a large district of land, and that, of course, is in favour of increasing the land that they have got,—instituting new small farms.

47,203. Would you be in favour of forming farms of a self-sustaining kind, or fishermen's holdings?—Family farms, keeping the family at home, and not enforcing emigration.

47,204. You would have a farm large enough to enable a man to live in decency with his wife and family without outside labour?—Yes, exactly. There is nothing in the shape of fishing now at all.

47,205. There is no fishing industry?—No, only one or two that are obliged to go, and these are the persons who want to get clear of the sea and settle on the land in moderate-sized farms. I am interested in family farms, as it would prevent some of the emigration, and also for the sake of the lairds, who would get increased rents for the land.

47,206. Mr Maccallum.—We have had abundant evidence of the desire on the part of the crofters to get an enlargement. Now can you tell us whether the proprietors have done anything at all to accommodate the crofters in that way? Have they been giving extensions to them?—I think they have been greatly opposed to touching the big farms,—a very mistaken notion, and one which has had the result of impoverishing themselves.

47,207. And that in face of the fact that the crofters cultivate their holdings quite as well as the big farms?—Better, because they take more pains.

47,208. You think that they take more out of the land than the large farmers besides the family that is kept on the holding itself? They keep more people on the holding and they are able to produce more out of the land?—Considering the quality, which is always inferior because they made the soil in most cases when they were driven from where they had soil.

47,209. So you think that what is required is some Act to be passed that would entitle these people to get holdings out of the large farms?—Exactly.

47,210. You think that the proprietors will not meet the needs of the people?—I think that they are wrong,—that they are standing in their own light.

47,211. We have also had evidence to-day that there is a desire for the formation of new holdings; we have had before us the application that was sent to the County Council?—Yes.

47,212. Can you tell us anything about the consideration which was given to that application by the County Council?—I, of course, was present, and overheard the discussion of it, and, I think, I am right in saying that it was this: the decision they arrived at when the Committee gave in their report was that that Act was not applicable to Orkney. I think that was the brief way of deciding the whole matter, but, of course, Mr Robertson's Minute of Council will be able to say exactly whether I am correct or not. That is my impression.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Rev. Matthew Armour.

47,213. You are a member of the County Council?—Yes.

47,214. And you think they came to the decision that the Act did not apply to Orkney?—The Act, of course, as you all know, has nothing compulsory in it, and consequently to enter upon negotiations to get it applied would be just something endless; it is no use until you get the Act corrected.

47,215. But did the Committee that was appointed by the County Council hold any inquiry in the island itself as to the desire of the people?—I apprehend not: it was just laid aside.

47,216. The Act was thought to be unworkable and unsuited?—I should suppose our friends did not wish an Act of that sort; they had no sympathy with anything of that sort.

47,217. Mr Munro.—Speaking on the question of evictions, have any evictions taken place in Sanday during your 46 years' ministry there?—Oh, many; the whole of Howe was cleared out. I used to visit the people, and they were sent adrift everywhere.

47,218. Can you tell us what the circumstances and condition of the people were before the evictions took place?—They were excellent people, venerated by all.

47,219. And in fairly comfortable circumstances?—Contented, only wishing to work hard, early and late, so as to provide for their families.

47,220. Can you tell us anything of the circumstances under which they were evicted?—This craze for big farms, nothing else; clear them out. I may mention that the tenant at the time was evicted because he would not take part in evicting the people he so highly respected. A tenant was got who was willing to do the work.

47,221. And no consideration was paid to the claims of the crofters themselves when they were evicted?—I don't think they ever got a farthing,

47,222. Do you happen to know whether they ever got any compensation for the buildings which they had on their holdings when they were evicted?—I think not.

47,223. Where were they sent to?—They landed in several places, some about Firth that were evicted from Howe; and in other places, wherever they could get an opening.

47,224. And some of them, I suppose, were sent to the sandy soil of which you have spoken?—None of these were sent to any soil of that sort, or any soil whatever.

47,225. They were evicted, and left to provide for themselves?—Just to march; they had to go out of the island, generally. Old people perhaps remained, one or two, but they never got any holdings.

47,226. During your 46 years' residence on the island you must be very familiar with the wants and wishes of the people as regards obtaining more land?—Certainly.

47,227. Is there a very strong desire amongst them that they should get an extension of their holdings?—Yes, a very strong desire. The extension given us lately by the Crofters Commission has worked beautifully.

47,228. Which farm was that?—In connection with Elsness: it put a different spirit and a different heart into the people, and I see them improving in every shape.

47,229. Have you any hope whatever that the landlords, if they were approached and asked for more land, would grant the wishes of the people?—They have an idea, as was brought out in the case of Stove farm, that extensions would injure the letting value of the remainder, which, to my mind, is a simple piece of nonsense.

47,230. The landlords have that idea?—Yes, and that has been too much given in to as something substantial. I believe it is nothing of the sort.

47,231. But my question is, do you think that the landlords would or would not give more land to the crofters if they were approached for that purpose?—

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Rev. Matthew Armour.

My impression, speaking honestly, because I always try to do so, is that they have no heart to do anything of the sort: they have no heart to negotiate in any quiet calm reasonable way. At least that has been the case hitherto: they may be more ready now, after the visit of this Commission.

47,231A. The landlords have no heart to consider the claims of the crofters for more land?—I do not think they would ever think of such a thing.

47,232. So that your only hope lies in the direction of amending the laws?—Exactly so.

47,233. And compelling them to give more land to the crofters?—Yes. As the Bishop of Ripon said the other day,—and he is a very competent judge and a very able man—from all he sees and from all he knows as the key to the prosperity of rural parts and parishes, the people must have the land restored to them that was taken from them. Instead of inundating towns with paupers, as has been the custom, send the people back to their former places where they lived contentedly and comfortably.

47,234. Is there any sort of bitter feeling amongst the crofters that at present they are being unjustly treated by the landlords?—I don't believe there is any bitter feeling in a single crofter, if he is properly handled; but, of course, he is a man, and if you injure him he is exasperated, as you would be.

47,235. You know something of the operation of the Crofters Act in this island?—Yes, I do.

47,236. Have they derived some benefit from it?—A great benefit.

47,237. They have improved their houses, I suppose, under it?—Give them time, and they will make these little houses of theirs beautiful places.

47,237A. If they got an extension of holdings, would they be able to pursue a better system of cropping than the present?—The system is as perfect as the best requirements.

47,238. Even under the present disadvantageous conditions of occupancy?—Quite. If they did not crop properly they would be liable to be put out; it would be a contravention of the Act, you know.

47,239. Mr Gordon.—You are aware that this Commission is only authorised to report on what are practically lands under grazing. Now, a good part of the land to which you have referred is, I think, under cultivation?—Well, there is a good deal of available grazing on the farm of Brough and other places.

47,240. For instance, that farm of Howe,—there is not much grazing land upon it; and there is not very much, I think, upon the other portions of Clett and Newark; they are mostly arable, are they not?—But it is only lately that they were arable; the Plain of Fidge was just a square never ploughed at all.

47,241. Is that upon the farm of Newark?—Between Newark and Cleat.

47,242. It was formerly pasture land?—Why, it was just an open unoccupied level plain, with a few sheep in summer-time.

47,243. It is sandy ground, is it not?—Yes.

47,244. Is there any land upon the farm of Howe that you think could be profitably cultivated, which is not under cultivation at this moment?—There is part of it not under cultivation, meantime.

47,245. Is it not rather wet?—Not particularly wet: it could be drained a bit.

47,246. It would require drainage?—In some parts.

47,247. Have you anything to suggest with regard to that piece of pasture land lying to the south of Nebister, partly in Warseter Farm and partly in Stove?—You refer to the links?

47,248. Yes: they are not suitable for cultivation, are they?—It is wonderful what you could do if you were allowed. I don't think it is being used to advantage; it is only a temptation to any that would like to have a rabbit there.

47,249. But it is rather a poor subject for arable land?—It is wonderful how it would improve if you levelled it.

47,250. The difficulty in Sanday, I think, is to find land that comes under our cognisance, of any consequence?—Possibly; your Commission may be more applicable to the Highland glens where the clearances were carried out.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Rev. Matthew Armour.

47,251. Was there any proposal or application made to the Crofters Commission for extension of holdings in connection with the farms of Cleat and Newark?—I can scarcely remember; yes, I believe there was an application from the North Hill people for land from Cleat.

47,252. Does the farm of Cleat bound with the land of the North Hill crofters?—Yes.

47,253. On the west side?—Yes. You would notice no doubt in leaving Calf Sound with your steamer and coming round to Kettletoft, that it is just desert; you saw no population round there, and why? Just because it has not been put to the use that your Commission is wishing to put such neglected land to.

47,254. I suppose the largest extent of land, which was at one time arable and is now under grass, is upon the farm of Stove?—Mr Francis Mackenzie did a great deal in paving the way for cultivating all round that neglected land.

47,255. As a matter of fact, he did cultivate it, I think?—Yes, he ploughed it and drained it and left it in a far better condition; indeed, it was a perfect wilderness before Mr Mackenzie put out his wealth on it.

47,256. And, do you consider that any portion of the south end of the farm would be suitable for new holdings?—I think so; it would be nice to see houses there.

47,257. It would be nice enough for outsiders, but, do you think it would be suitable for crofters?—They, as judges, say it would.

47,258. The great drawback in that end of the island altogether is the want of harbours. You cannot combine fishing and farming at all?—I don't approve of combining these two at all.

47,259. You prefer a tillage population?—Certainly.

47,260. The Chairman.—You are quite correct in stating that there was an application to the Crofters Commission for enlargement from the farm of Cleat, and also an application for enlargement from the farm of Newark; but in each of these cases the application was refused because the land was held under lease entered into prior to the commencement of the Crofters Act and then still current?—That was a great hindrance in other cases.

47,261. And on that account and from the provisions of the Act, the application was refused?—Yes: you could not do otherwise; they understood that.

47,262. There was one other application, which was granted, the park of Hobbister, do you remember it?—Yes.

47,263. In your opinion, has that been of advantage to the people who got the land?—Of great advantage. Every such thing is an advantage

JAMES LESLIE, Crofter, Westray (44)—examined. Ja

47,264. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

47,265. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes, I am here as a delegate for some grazing on the hill.

47,266. What estate are you on?—The Earl of Zetland's.

47,267. What part of the island is your holding upon?—The south side of the island. [The Secretary.—The croft extends to 38 acres 2 roods arable, and 11 acres 2 roods outrun, no common pasture; old rent £20, new rent £13, 10s.; arrears £50, of which £18 were cancelled and £32 ordered to be paid].

47,268. Were you appointed a delegate at a meeting in Westray?—Yes.

47,269. Do you represent the whole of the Westray crofters?—No, only the west side district and a portion of the south end of Fittyhill.

47,270. You were going to speak about grazing?—Yes, there are fourteen crofters desiring to have liberty to graze on the south end of Fittyhill.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

James Leslie.

47,271. What is the name of the farm?—Mr Brims, Solicitor, Thurso, is the trustee on the estate of Kirbost.

47,272. Is it occupied by a farmer?—It is let to William Scott, Tuquoy, at present.

47,273. Scott has this as an outlying grazing?—Yes.

47,274. And the crofters whom you represent desire to have a right of grazing over that land called Fittyhill?—Yes.

47,275. They have no such right at present?—No.

47,276. It is exclusively occupied, I suppose, by stock belonging to Scott?—Yes.

47,277. Was that land formerly in possession of crofters?—Yes.

47,278. Do you remember that yourself?—Yes.

47,279. When did he lease it?—Thirty-one or thirty-two years ago: I kept stock upon it myself.

47,280. Does it lie convenient to those crofters whom you represent?—Yes, it lies along their march.

47,281. What is the name of their land?—Skaehill and Fittyhill; the whole of it is occupied by Scott.

47,282. Have these crofters that you appear for any grazing at present?—No, they keep inside the hill dyke.

47,283. Have they sheep stock?—Yes.

47,284. Do they want to have more?—They want to have more, and liberty of cattle.

47,285. What stock have you yourself?—I have three ewes and five lambs.

47,286. Any cattle?—I have eight cattle, and two horses and a foal.

47,287. How many cows have you?—Three.

47,288. And the rest of your cattle are young animals?—Yes.

47,289. Mr Gordon.—That is not a very good hill, is it?—The south end is not so bad for grazing.

47,290. The east side appeared to me to be the best. Were any of your neighbours offered that hill before it was let to Mr Scott?—The people to the south of the hill were offered it before Mr Scott got it.

47,291. Are these the people who sent you here as a delegate?—Not altogether; there are three besides.

47,292. Why did they not take it?—I don't know.

47,293. Were you one of those who were offered it?—No.

47,294. Did you ever apply for it?—No.

47,295. Why did you not apply for it?—Because I had not a chance at that time; it was only the Kirbist Estate who had the chance.

47,296. You are not on that estate?—No.

47,297. Is Tuquoy on that estate?—No, it is an estate by itself.

47,298. And the crofters who are now anxious to get this hill are situated between the hill and the farm of Tuquoy?—They are just down at the Fittyhill, at the south end of it.

47,299. What is the present rent of the hill?—I don't know. [Mr Drever.—I think this hill was offered the first time the Crofters Commission was here by the factor to the crofters, but they would not take it].

47,300. Mr Gordon.—Did they offer the whole of the hill, or only a part of it? [Mr Drever].—I don't know; I was not interested.

47,301. I am afraid it was only the rocky side that was offered to them? [Mr Drever].—I think not.

47,302. That is the information I got on the ground. However, I believe the crofters were offered the whole ground, not through the Crofters Commission but in another way, and they did not take it? [Witness].—They got the offer of the Kirbist part, but not the whole. The other part belongs to the Earl of Zetland.

47,303. Whereabouts does the march between Kirbist and the Earl of Zetland come in?—Right at the top of the hill.

47,304. There is a farm called Gossiby, is that on the Zetland Estate?—No, it is on Kirbist.

47,305. What is the nearest farm on the Zetland Estate to the ground of Fittyhill?—The farm of Powdykes.

47,306. On what estate is the small farm of Madbea?—It is further down.

47,307. It is to the north of Powdykes?—No, to the east.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

James Leslie.

47,308. What estate is it upon?—Upon the Earl of Zetland's.

47,309. And Tirlot?—On Tuquoy's Estate.

47,310. Then, the march between the two estates must be between Tirlot and Madbea?—Yes.

47,311. And the march runs straight up to the summit of the hill from that point?—Yes, right up to the summit.

47,312. But the ground which you and the other parties whom you represent apply for is on both sides of that march?—Both sides.

47,313. How would you propose to use it?—It is used at present.

47,314. For cattle by Mr Scott?—No, it is used for sheep, he has about 200 ewes and lambs, and there are a few cattle, I suppose, sometimes.

47,315. Would the crofters or the small tenants round the south end propose to use it as a sheep grazing?—For sheep and cattle and horses.

47,316. You would use it just in proportion to your holdings, or would you use it as a club?—As a club, I suppose.

47,317. Have you any experience of club-farming there at all?—No. They used to have the hill together and use it in the same way.

47,318. Each man would put on his own stock?—Yes.

William Pratt.

WILLIAM PRATT, Brachead, St. Andrews (64)—examined

47,319. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

47,320. Was your croft dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

47,321. Whereabouts is your holding?—In the parish of St. Andrews, on the mainland, to the north-east of Holm.

47,322. I see you have 34 acres arable and 2 roods of outrun, but no common grazing; the old rent was £9 and the new rent £6, 10s.; of arrears amounting to £22, £15, 10s. were cancelled and £6, 10s. ordered to be paid. Are you here as a delegate, or to represent your own individual views?—My own views.

47,323. What is it you wish to say?—It is about the hill grazing at the Moss of the Skews, or the Greenclay, or the Stirlingbraes, these are different names for the same place.

47,324. Was that land formerly in occupation of crofters?—Yes.

47,325. Do you remember that?—I do; it is just down there where the Holm people were explaining.

47,326. Mr Lennox, Solicitor, Kirkwall, Agent for the Crofters.—Did you hear what David Esson and the other Holm man said about the Skews?—I did.

47,327. Do you agree with them?—Altogether.

47,328. Is it about the Skews that you were wanting to speak?—Yes.

47,329. And for the same purpose?—Yes, for pasture. I paid Mr Heddle for a number of years, and now since the Crofters Act was passed I never paid him anything and he did not ask anything.

47,330. The Chairman.—What you desire to represent, I think, you agree, has been fully set before us by the previous witness, Esson?—It is just the same; I think we have a claim.

47,331. For more grazing?—For grazing, if it would be agreeable.

Duncan John Robertson.

DUNCAN JOHN ROBERTSON, Solicitor, Kirkwall (34)—examined.

47,332. The Chairman.—You are agent for some estates, I think?—I am factor and agent for General Burroughs, and it is with regard to the Rousay Estate that I wish to make a short statement: I have no instructions to appear for any other estate before this Commission.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Duncan John Robertson.

47,333. Is your statement in writing?—No, I merely wish to answer something which has been said here to-day about the crofts in Quandale. These form the only piece of ground now in the farm of Westness which was formerly in crofts. Originally, the crofters were brought there in the days of kelp-making as kelp-workers; and so long as kelp paid they worked there and were a very contented people. After the kelp ceased to pay and kelp-making was given up in Rousay, in the time of the present proprietor's predecessor, (his granduncle, to whom he succeeded), these men fell into arrear of rent. They could not pay up, and when asked the reason they said that now the kelp had failed, their land was so much damaged by sea-gust that it was impossible for them to make their rents out of it. The proprietor then offered them other holdings; he built cottages in Frotoft. A number of them were removed there, and others to Sourin. In fact, all of them who so desired got holdings in other parts of the island. I would also like to say that I have acted as agent for General Burroughs for six years and as his factor for over four, and have seen a good deal of the people on the island, and I have never seen any sign or symptom of that congestion, or great distress, or poverty to which allusion has been made. The tenants pay their rents with more punctuality and with less arrears than in any other estate that I have to do with. There have been no evictions since I have had anything to do with the estate. One man was last year made bankrupt because he could not pay his rent, but we gave him a smaller croft on the island. The proprietor was selling off some of the stock on his Home Farm, and this man sent some of his own stock over there to be sold to meet the rent that was due; and we put the man on another croft. He is one of the few men on the island who go to the herring-fishing.

There is another matter to which I can speak as County Clerk, and that is with regard to the application from Sanday. When the County Council first dealt with the Small Holdings Act,—I forget the exact wording of the Act, but, I think, it is that every County Council should appoint a Committee to inquire whether the Act is suitable to the circumstances of their special county. [Mr Maccallum.—Is it not to inquire whether there is a sufficient demand for land]. To warrant it being applied to the county, I think. There was a remit made by the County Council to a Committee to report as to whether the Act should be made applicable to this county. The remit was made at a full meeting of the Council,—I cannot give you the names of the members who composed it, but it was a considerable Committee and a representative Committee; and the only application that came in was this one from Sanday. They waited for, I think, six months so as to give full time to let other people apply. There were gentlemen on the Committee who were well acquainted with the circumstances of the island, and seeing that there were no other applications they thought it was unnecessary to make any inquiry, and they reported accordingly. At the meeting of the Council to which Mr Armour referred the report of the Committee was almost unanimously adopted, I think Mr Armour alone dissenting.

47,334-35. Is it your view that it rests with the County Council to say whether that Act should apply to the County of Orkney or not?—I read the Act so.

47,336. Which section?—I have not the Act before me; I have not had occasion to look into the matter for some time.

47,337. In coming to that result, the Committee of the County Council proceeded upon a particular section of the Act, did they not?—So far as I remember, they did, but it was more than a year ago, so that I cannot tell you very particularly the grounds of their decision.

47,338. Did they not think it necessary before coming to that conclusion to have some interview with the applicants, and see exactly what they were wishing?—No, they thought it was not necessary, from what they knew of the applicants, and of the land in Sanday.

47,339. Did they send any reply to the application?—Yes, there was a reply sent,—I forget to whom, but it was acknowledged.

47,340. A reply in writing?—Yes, in writing.

47,341. That is not the impression which prevails?—Well, I may say that the petition came in without any letter, and it was uncertain to whom to address it; it was sent to one of the signatories.

47,342. The natural course would be to send it to the first signatory to the application?—I think that is what was done.

47,343. Mr Maccallum.—Was the decision of the County Council communicated to the first signatory to the application?—They were written to, at all events, I cannot recollect the details.

47,344. But, do you know, as a fact, whether the decision of the County Council was communicated to them?—I cannot say; I know it was sent to the local newspapers to be published.

47,345. If such a communication was sent, by whom did it fall to be sent?—I sent it.

47,346. Then, do you remember sending it?—I remember sending an answer, but whether it was before or after the decision of the Committee I could not say.

47,347. You could not communicate the decision before it was come to?—It may have been acknowledging receipt of the petition.

47,348. But you do not remember sending any final reply to the application?—I could not say whether I did or not; I think it is most likely that I did, but I am not positive.

47,349. The Chairman.—Can you show us the section of the Act if I hand you the Act of Parliament?—I think I probably could. (Peruses print). This is the Allotments Act; it was the Small Holdings Act that was dealt with. (Reads):—'If the Council of any county 'are of opinion that there is such a demand for small 'holdings in their county as justifies them in putting 'into operation this part of this Act, the Council may, 'subject to the provisions of this Act, acquire any suitable 'land for the purpose of providing small holdings for 'persons who desire to buy, and will themselves culti-'vate the holdings' or they have power to lease.

47,350. What section is that?—Section I.

47,351. And, is it on these words that you have read that the County Council came to the conclusion that the Act did not apply to Orkney, or that it should not apply to Orkney?—Yes,—that it was left to them to decide whether it was or not.

47,352. Don't you think there was a demand from Sanday such as would justify putting the Act into operation?—That is a matter for the Council to decide. I may say that I had a correspondence with Sir George Trevelyan on this very subject lately. About a month ago, he wrote me asking whether there was any inquiry, and I wrote answering him, telling him what had been done.

47,353. Mr Maccallum.—So they decided the matter without any inquiry?—Without any inquiry. There is a provision, I think, at the end of the Act as to inquiries. Then, there is another section in the Act on which they went in coming to their decision:—'Any County 'Council may, and every County Council not being a 'Council of a County borough, shall appoint a Com-'mittee to consider whether the circumstances of the 'County justify the Council in putting into operation 'this Part of this Act.' That is Section V., and that taken in conjunction with Section I. is what they proceeded on.

47,354. Did they come to the conclusion they did, without any communication with the applicants themselves?—Yes, they came to the conclusion that there was not a sufficient demand.

47,355. Without making any inquiry, or hearing any evidence?—They made no inquiry, because they were already pretty well acquainted with the circumstances.

47,356. But was it not the duty of that Committee to make inquiry?—That is what I cannot say.

47,357. The Chairman.—But Mr Armour, as I understand, is the representative of Sanday in the County Council?—Yes.

47,358. And his view was in favour of the application receiving some consideration and attention?—That was after the Committee had reported. His view was that the report should not be adopted.

47,359. But so far as he may be taken to represent the views of those in Sanday, his opinion was that the Act should be put in force?—I cannot say positively, but so far as my recollection goes I think there was minuted a protest by him against the otherwise unanimous decision of the Council.

47,360. So far as his views went he was in favour of the Act being adopted?—I think so, as far as I remember.

47,361. But the County Council was of opinion that there was no demand?—Yes, no sufficient demand. Then, there is the other provision 'Any one or more 'County electors may present a petition to the Council 'of their county alleging that there is a demand for 'small holdings in the county, and praying that this 'Part of this Act may be put in operation, and there-'upon the petition shall be referred to the Committee 'appointed under this section, who, on being satisfied 'that the petition is presented in good faith and on 'reasonable grounds, shall forthwith cause an inquiry 'into the circumstances to be made, and shall report 'the result to the Council.'

47,362. Mr Maccallum.—Was that taken into consideration by the Committee?—Yes, the Committee had the whole Act under consideration.

47,363. But they did not make the inquiry that is required?—They did not; they thought they had sufficient information already.

47,364. But that Act states that they are to make inquiry?—Well, of course, I am not here to defend them; I am merely telling you the steps they took.

47,365. But the Committee failed to make the inquiry contemplated in the Act?—I know that they made no inquiry beyond inquiring of their own members who knew the circumstances.

47,366. The Chairman.—There was a good deal said about the difficulty of getting stones in Rousay?—Yes.

47,367. I suppose we may take it that a strong feeling exists on that matter?—I believe there is a considerable feeling.

47,368. It is the fact, I suppose, that there are stones there suitable for building purposes in the island easily accessible to crofters if they got leave to take them?—I presume there are; in fact, I know there are.

47,369. How many crofters are interdicted at present?—I think there has been only one interdict. There were two actions taken at the same time, as a sort of test case.

47,370. Mr Munro.—Coming to the practical portion of our inquiry to-day, are you here to say that there is no land in the island of Rousay at present under grazing which crofters could profitably cultivate?—Well, I believe not. The Quandale land is the best in the island, and what was formerly under cultivation the crofters could not pay rent for, owing to its being so much exposed to sea-gust.

47,371. We have seen a considerable portion of the island ourselves. Do you think that none of it could be profitably occupied?—I can hardly judge; I am not a practical agriculturist.

47,372. Supposing you failed to find one tenant say for the farm of Westness or Quandale, would you not let that to crofters?—I cannot speak about what the proprietor might do. I have no doubt the proprietor might be willing to do that, but the difficulty would be to find the buildings, and also there would be the question what to do with the large buildings already erected.

47,373. But, supposing the crofters themselves could erect the necessary buildings and equip their little farms, would you then be prepared to allow them to have it?—Even then, the difficulty is that the proprietor may be called upon at any time to give compensation to the crofters for such buildings, and he may find himself swamped with that and other burdens. I have known several cases of that under the Crofters Act even. Two or three cases of compensation coming at once might swamp the proprietor altogether.

47,374. If the crofters applied to the proprietor, would he give them any land voluntarily?—No, I don't think he would; and for the reason I have stated, principally.

47,375. The reason that he might be called upon to give compensation for any buildings erected?—That it would cost a great deal of money, and that he would lose a great deal of money already laid down in making one large farm.

47,376. So that the only hope for the crofters on General Burroughs's estate is to acquire compulsory powers of getting access to the land?—I should say it is the same with almost every proprietor, unless he happened to be rich enough to lay out the money required. If he is sufficiently rich to erect buildings all over his property, it might possibly pay him in that case.

47,377. But we have heard it stated over and over again by crofters that they were perfectly prepared to erect their own buildings?—The Rousay crofters, I think, told you that they could not do so.

47,378. So that is the chief objection to dividing the land amongst the crofters?—I never proposed such a thing,—I have not spoken of it or suggested it to General Burroughs, but I know that would be a strong objection, an objection which would at once occur to himself.

47,379. Mr Gordon.—With reference to this Quandale district, you say that it was owing to the failure of the kelp industry that these people were unable to pay their rents?—Yes.

47,380. Is that shore a proper one for kelp?—It does not look a very good kelp shore, but I believe there was a very great deal of kelp manufactured there at one time.

47,381. Where would they get the ware?—I cannot tell you, but I know they did.

47,382. It appeared to me that there was not a single yard of that shore where a man could gather seaware with safety?—It does not look like it, but I know they did make kelp there.

47,383. I am bound to say that I do not see where they made kelp at Quandale?—But I can show you the kilns where they used to manufacture the kelp.

47,384. They could not take it up the face of the rocks?—In many cases they do.

47,385. Where?—In parts of Westray, on the west side.

47,386. But they require more than that, they require a sort of flat shore for drying it?—They dry it on the grass, not on the shore.

47,387. Do you know that part of the country well?—Fairly well; I have been there two or three times every year.

47,388. Do you know Orkney pretty well?—Yes.

47,389. Do you know in any other part of Orkney lands that are so suitable for crofters as Quandale?—I don't know that I should say it is suitable for crofters' holdings. I know no other large grazing farm which might be cut up so easily, but whether it would be suitable for holdings or not I cannot say.

47,390. But, as regards appearance, would you think it suitable?—I see the land lies there, and could be easily cut up.

47,391. It could be easily reclaimed?—I don't know as to that, at all.

47,392. There are a good many old buildings there too, which might possibly either be repaired or used as materials for reconstructing dwelling-houses?—There might be some stones, but they are mostly rotten or crumbling, I think; and they are nothing but stones.

47,393. You cannot say anything about the land, whether it is suitable?—No, I don't pretend to be a farmer or a judge of land.

47,394. The Chairman.—How many farms are on Rousay that are above the crofter limit of £30?—There are six in Veira, and nineteen in Rousay.

47,395. All these are under your management as factor?—Yes.

47,396. How many of these are in the proprietor's hands at present?—None. There was one in Veira, but it was let the other day.

47,397. Is the farm of Westness let?—There are some which fell vacant at Martinmas which are not let, but there are inquirers and offerers for them all.

47,398. There are none which have been on his hands for some time?—No, he has not had any in his hands except the Home Farm, which was only let last year for the first time.

47,399. And are all these let on written lease?—All these, I think, are let on written lease.

47,400. For terms of years?—For terms of years. There are three or four which fall out at Martinmas and which are advertised just now. With regard to that, I may say that there have been farms that would have suited crofters who desired extension of holdings in Rousay, vacant during the last two or three years, but in no case have crofters offered for them so far as I remember, and in these cases the tenants have come from other islands.

47,401. Were they offered to crofters?—They were advertised: they were not offered to anyone in particular, but offers were invited, and I have given every one equal advantage to inquire about them.

47,402. Has General Burroughs considered at all this question of the breaking up of moderately-sized farms and dividing them into holdings?—Not so far as I am aware.

47,403. Would he be prepared to consider favourably any proposal of that sort from responsible crofters?—I have never suggested it to him, or heard him talk of such a thing.

47,404. That has not been under consideration?—No. There is another thing that I might add: several crofts have fallen vacant, and in no case have any crofters asked to have them distributed among the neighbouring crofts. Last year none of the families who were living two in a house applied for any of the crofts that were vacant. There was one case where a crofter took a large farm. He had had his rent reduced by the Crofters Commission, and in about a month afterwards he applied for a farm of £90 of rent, and his old croft was let a few days after for a little more than the original rent, so that the reduction given by the Crofters Commission only lasted for a month, and then we had a higher rent from the next tenant.

47,405. That was by private bargain?—By private bargain.

47,406. Does your knowledge of Rousay only extend back for six years?—Well, I have been on the island before, but I have been intimately acquainted with it for only six years or so.

47,407. Is the usual term of lease 19 years?—Yes, but in the case of the smaller farms a good many of them have been let for seven years, the same period as the crofters' holding under the Act.

47,408. How long has the island been in the possession of General Burroughs and his predecessor?—I am afraid I cannot tell you that; his grand-uncle did not buy it in one property; he bought one part from the Earl of Zetland and another from Mr Baikie and another from Mr Traill.

47,409. And now he is proprietor of the whole?—Of almost the whole; there is a small property on the south side of the island.

47,410. Mr Maccallum.—You have had a good deal of experience in letting farms: do you find that there is any difficulty in letting those of moderate size?—No, there are plenty of people wanting them. During the last year or two there has been a little difference between the ideas of the proprietor and those of the tenants as to what the rents should be, but I have never failed to let a farm here.

47,411. Is there more inquiry for a moderately-sized farm than for a very large farm?—Yes, I think a farm with a rent of £70 to £100 lets best,—better even than the smaller holdings.

47,412. Then, with regard to this land at Quandale, you wish to put right, I think, the evidence we got in regard to that, and I think you say that your information is that the people who were settled there were sent in order to make kelp?—I don't know whether they were sent or whether they came there, but they were there as kelp-makers.

47,413. Is there anything peculiar in that? Did not crofters generally make kelp?—I believe so: I merely say that when the kelp failed, they said they could no longer pay their rents, because their lands were destroyed by sea-gust.

47,414. That applies to other places as well?—Yes, but it was on account of their complaining of the sea-gust that the land was thrown into pasture.

47,415. Did they throw their land into pasture?—No, but they were leaving for other parts of the island, and this was thrown into pasture because they complained that it could not pay as crofts.

47,416. Was a kelp rent put upon them,—a rent which they could not take out of the land, but which they were expected to take out of their labour?—I have not seen the land, I don't know what it was at the time.

47,417. But, was it not a usual thing to find people who worked at kelp-making being higher rented than others, on account of their having access to sea-ware?—I cannot speak as to that from my experience.

47,418. Did not the same distress occur everywhere when the kelp failed?—I suppose it must have.

47,419. Would it not be reasonable then to reduce their rents when the kelp failed?—The proprietor thought as they objected to the ground it was better to give them better ground.

47,420. Where do you get your information as to their complaining of the land?—Through the proprietor, General Burroughs, and his books; he gave me the information which he obtained from his former factor, who had been factor for his grand-uncle. As I say, this is, of course, merely from information, because I cannot speak of my own knowledge.

47,421. Have you definite information as to their asking to be removed?—Oh, no, I cannot say that at all; I merely say that they complained that they could not pay their rents.

47,422. But, was not that a general complaint all over when the kelp industry failed?—That is quite possible: but I know General Burrough's own belief is that this land would not be worth working, on account of the damage done by sea-gust.

47,423. That was his opinion?—And that it is better as pasture than in any other way.

47,424. Have you any definite information as to the number of crofters who were there?—No, I have not.

47,425. You are not in a position to contradict the evidence we have had in regard to the numbers?—No. I always understood there had been about a dozen, but there may have been more.

47,426. How did you always understand that?—Just by talking to the people there; but I have no accurate information; I never inquired.

47,427. So that, of course, you could not contradict the evidence on such very slight knowledge of the facts?—No, but, I think, my information is probably much the same as that of those witnesses.

47,428. They lived upon the island, and they know the old traditions, don't they, which you do not know?—I have made myself pretty well acquainted with the traditions of the island, and I know a great deal about it: I probably know more of the history of that island than of any other, for it so happened that I was brought up by a nurse from the island of Rousay, who, from my earliest infancy, told me stories about it.

47,429. Can you say that the people who were situated in Quandale were worse off than the people on the other parts of the island?—So I am informed.

47,430. What is the source of your information?—Mr Scarth, the late factor, who gave the information to General Burroughs.

47,431. But don't you find this that the land was specially suited for a sheep farm?—Yes, it is.

47,432. Might not that account for the putting away of the people?—I have no doubt that it did, partly.

Kirkwall, Orkney.

Duncan John Robertson.

47,433. The grazing is excellent, and there is a first-rate stock upon it just now?—Yes.

47,434. We were also told that there was congestion on the island, and you want to put us right as to that. Is it your opinion that there is no congestion?—That is certainly my opinion.

47,435. Does that mean that the holdings are large enough?—I should think they are: they find them large enough, for they do not try to get larger holdings when they are vacant.

47,436. But they have never been offered larger holdings?—There have been larger holdings vacant every year for which they made no application.

47,437. Do you think they could reasonably expect that they would get them?—I know they would be certain to get them on paying a fair rent. In the only case where one did offer, his offer was at once accepted.

47,438. If they were refused stones, do you think they would get land?—Yes, they would get other farms. General Burroughs does not conceal his wish to get them from under the Crofters Act, and in doing that he would have them under lease.

47,439. Do you think the size of a croft in Rousay is large enough for a crofter to live comfortably?—I know that the Rousay crofters not only were comfortable, but, at one time, in better years, they made a a great deal of money. They were said to be the wealthiest people in Orkney.

47,440. But are they as wealthy as that now?—I believe not; no farmers are.

47,441. So that you affirm now what you came to contradict?—In what way?

47,442. You say they are not now so wealthy?—No farmers are, but, though I may not be so wealthy as I was last year, it does not follow that I am congested or in distress.

47,443. But don't you think really that three, or four, or five acres is not sufficient to maintain a family comfortably?—There are only fifteen crofts in Rousay with an area of less than eight acres each; and only three with an area of less than six acres each. There are very few so small as that.

47,444. Several of those before us to-day had not much more. Are not several of them in the poorest parts of Rousay just now,—on very high ground, and on ground unsuitable for cultivation?—I am not sure that I know of any such.

47,445. We had evidence from several of them that they were placed very far from the coast, and that they had between half an hour and an hour's walk to go to the coast. Must not these be pretty high?—Yes, they are fairly high, some of them.

47,446. And the land is poor?—I believe so, yes.

47,447. And on this farm of Westness, which includes Quandale, there is a great extent of land which in any case is most excellent pasture?—Yes, there is capital pasture land, but they would be far further from the sea there, or at least from any place where they could launch a boat for the fishing.

47,448. That may be, but would it not be suitable for self-sustaining holdings, considering the quality of the ground, and the fact that there were people there before who you say had access to the shore when they were kelp-makers?—It might; I do not know. I am no judge of land, but I can only tell you what happened before.

47,449. As to the applications that were made for moderately-sized farms on Rousay, from what class of people did those come who came from other islands; were they men that are now taking smaller farms, or men who had small farms and wished to take larger ones?—Most of them, I think, are men taking larger farms, but I am not very well acquainted with the farms they left.

47,450. Then, with regard to the refusal of stones to the crofters, can you give us any reason why that was done?—No, I cannot speak as to General Burroughs's reasons: I merely carried out his instructions.

47,451. You are not able to give any reason?—I may have my own ideas, but I am not authorised to state any reasons, and I might mis-state them.

Kirkwall, Orkney. Duncan John Robertson.

47,452. But must it not be to the injury of the land and of the crofters to be refused stones for the drainage for instance of the land?—That is a matter for every one to form his own opinion on.

47,453. You could not expect people who are so treated to apply for land?—I really do not know: I think they know very well that they would get it. I have told every one I have spoken to.

47,454. But, do you expect people who are so treated to look to General Burroughs to get land? Would it be a reasonable expectation?—Considering what I have said to them, and that I have asked most of them to offer for larger farms and said they would have a good chance of getting them if they gave a fair rent, I think it would. I have frequently spoken to them in that way. If you take that one circumstance alone, perhaps it might be regarded as a reason for their not applying for land, but you must take all the circumstances into account.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTY-SIXTH SITTING.

KINGUSSIE, August 14, 1894. Kingussie.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Michael Hugh Shaw Stewart, Esq., M.P.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
George Gordon, Esq.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
John Macleod, Esq.
Henry Munro, Esq.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Donald Campbell, Merchant, Kingussie (57)—examined. Donald Campbell.

47,455. The Chairman.—You are a merchant in Kingussie?—Yes, My Lord. Before proceeding I would like to inform you that I never sent in my name as a party to come here and give evidence; it has been done by some one else without my sanction, so that I would like to know who it was that has given my name as a witness.

47,456. I cannot tell you that; your name is here among a number of others sent us, and if you desire to give evidence we shall be glad to hear it?—Well, I did not intend to appear, and I have nothing in particular prepared for it, but if there are any questions Your Lordship or any of the Commissioners would like to ask, I shall be pleased to answer them.

47,457. With what part of this district are you best acquainted?—I am best acquainted with the upper part of the district; that is to say above this. I know the country pretty well up and down, but I have spent more of my time in the upper portion of the district.

47,458. What is the name of the part you specially refer to?—From the village here, the farms of Ballachroan, Banchor, Biallid, Cluny, and the farms of Sir John Ramsden further up.

47,459. What are the names of these farms?—Strathmashie, Dalchully, Shirrabeg, Shirramore; the last mentioned has also the grazing of Aberarder just now, which belongs to Cluny Macpherson.

47,460. Are these all?—Well, I know the farm of Breackachy in Glentruim estate; also Crubanbeg and Crubanmore on the same estate.

47,461. Any other?—Etteridge I know pretty well; also the farm of Nuide, that is coming nearer here again,—going up the one side of the Spey, and coming down the other.

47,462. Any more?—The farm of Ruthven, just opposite us here; Ballindalloch on Sir George Macpherson-Grant's estate; the farm of Gordonhall next the river; also Invertromie and Killiehuntly.

47,463. Is that all?—I am not so well acquainted with the farms lower down,—I know them by name, but I do not know the hill pasture of them as well.

47,464. On what estate are the first four farms you named situated?—The first of them, Ballachroän, is on the estate of Mr Baillie of Dochfour. The next one, Banchor, is on the estate of Mr Macpherson of Belleville; Biallid is on the Cluny Macpherson estate, and so is Cluny itself.

47,465. Are these all the farms you are acquainted with on the Dochfour, Belleville, and Cluny estates?—I am also acquainted with the farm of Kerrow which adjoins Ballachroän.

47,466. On what estate is it situated?—On the Dochfour estate.

47,467. Any other farm on the Dochfour estate?—No.

47,468. Any other on the Belleville estate?—The farm of Chapelpark, and the small farm of Croft-Carnoch; it is more a croft than a farm.

47,469. Any other on the estate?—No, of course I know other farms lower down by name, but I do not know their hill pasture so well. I have been over them, but do not know them particularly.

47,470. Now, the next set of farms you mentioned, Strathmashie and the others, on what estate are they situated?—On the estate of Sir John Ramsden, all except Aberarder, which is on the estate of Cluny Macpherson.

47,471. Then you mentioned farms on the Glentruim estate?—Yes; there are Breackachy, Crubinbeg, and Crubinmore. Breackachy is tenanted at present by Mr Samuel M'Call Smith.

47,472-73. Is it to let at present?—I believe it is; I saw it advertised in the Inverness Courier the other day.

47,474. You also mentioned Etteridge; what estate is it upon?—It is on the Belleville estate.

47,475. You mentioned some others,—I am not sure if I caught the names accurately, but can you tell us what estates they are on?—Ruthven is on Invereshie estate, belonging to Sir George Macpherson-Grant of Ballindalloch.

47,476. And is Gordonhall on the same estate?—Yes.

47,477. And Killiehuntly?—That is also on the Invereshie estate.

47,478. Do you know any other farms that might be usefully mentioned on the Ballindalloch estate?—I know the farms by name, but I don't know so much about them.

47,479. You have mentioned a great number of farms: are they all grazing farms?—They are all grazing farms.

47,480. There are none of them that you would describe as arable farms?—There is a good deal of arable land that is not cultivated, but the farms are tenanted by tenants at the present time.

47,481. Would you describe them as grazing farms rather than as arable farms?—They are grazed more than cultivated in the meantime.

47,482. They are sheep farms?—That is so: the tenants of these farms depend more upon sheep farming than upon cultivation.

47,483. What has your special experience been in the past with regard to land?—I spent the best part of my days as a shepherd on these hills, and was some time a gamekeeper.

47,484. Where were you employed as a shepherd?—I was employed on the farm of Ballachroän and Kerrow, and parts of the farms of Sir John Ramsden.

47,485. And you are familiar with all these lands you have mentioned?—Yes, quite familiar.

47,486. For how long were you employed as a shepherd?—For about twenty years, more or less.

47,487. In different parts?—In different parts.

47,488. I think you also said you had been a gamekeeper?—Yes, for a short time; only on the moors up here.

47,489. For how long were you engaged as a gamekeeper?—For two years.

47,490. Are there tracts of land on those farms,—on some or all of them,—for our consideration as land capable of being profitably cultivated by crofters or other small tenants, or otherwise advantageously occupied by them?—I think so; it was the case in former times.

47,491. Do you refer to lands that were previously in the occupation of crofters?—Yes.

47,492. And is there evidence of that upon the ground to this day?—Yes, on the whole of the ground you will see the ruins or remains of houses.

47,493. Do you also see traces of former cultivation?—Yes, quite distinctly.

47,494. Are most of these lands at a comparatively low altitude, or are some of them very high?—Some of them are pretty high, but the old tenants were making a living on the highest of them.

47,495. Was your father one of these men?—No, but my grandfather had land in this neighbourhood here.

47,496. Are you able to remember the time when some of these houses that now stand tenantless or in ruins were occupied by crofters?—There are very few of them that I remember.

47,497. But do you remember some?—Yes, I remember some.

47,498. Where were they?—There were a few of them on the Belleville estate, in Glenbanchor.

47,499. What sort of living did these people make, in your recollection?—They seemed to live fairly well.

47,500. Had they crops of corn and potatoes every year?—They had crops of corn and potatoes and turnips.

47,501. What size of holdings had they?—I cannot say the number of acres; they were not very large holdings.

47,502. Were these people mainly the servants of neighbouring farmers or proprietors, or did they live by their holdings?—They lived by the holdings, and did some work where they could get it to do.

47,503. They made the croft their home, and lived partly by working it, and partly by outside work?—Just so: the members of the family who were grown up would go out to work and help the others.

47,504. Very much the same as crofters do in other quarters at the present day?—Just so; but I cannot say anything as to how they lived or anything of that sort.

47,505. You don't know anything of that?—No, I don't know anything of that. I may mention that the present proprietor of Belleville is considered to be one of the best proprietors in the district.

47,506. Have any of the farms that you mentioned been extended within your recollection?—Yes.

47,507. Where was the land got for extension?—By adding one farm to another, by adding one croft to another, and so forth.

47,508. By consolidation of crofts with farms, and of farms with farms?—Yes.

47,509. Has that taken place to any considerable extent?—To a great extent, especially in the upper part of the country.

47,510. Are there any cases of farms of which you are able to speak particularly, where more than one are in the tenancy of one farmer?—Yes, there are two pretty large farms just in the neighbourhood here that have been put into one. They are occupied by Mr Macgillivray of Ballachroän at the present time. He has the farm of Pitmain along with it, but it is now called the farm of Ballachroän. There are also the farm of Banchor, Milton of Banchor, Dail-'Chaoirinn, and the crofts of Glen-Banchor in the occupancy Mr Allan Macgillivray as one farm.

47,511. Perhaps you do not know whether they are held under one lease?—I think under one lease.

47,512. Are there any other instances of that kind?—Not in the immediate neighbourhood, I think. The farm of Kerrow has now got added to it a farm which used to be called Laggan; they were two distinct farms in my recollection but are now in one.

Kingussie.

Donald Campbell.

47,513. They are now held as one large grazing?—Yes.

47,514. What is the size of the largest farm you know?—I cannot say how many acres. Sir John Ramsden keeps the largest part of land in his own hands in this district.

47,515. I was about to ask you whether all the farms you named are let, or whether some of them are in the proprietor's hands?—All those I mentioned are in the proprietor's hands: there are some others which I did not mention, that are not.

47,516. But do you say that all the farms you mentioned are in the hands of the proprietors?—Yes, all Sir John Ramsden's farms.

47,517. But do you know any farms on any other estate which are in the hands of the proprietor?—There is the farm of Chapelpark itself, in the hands of Mr Macpherson of Belleville; and at Invereshie there are some fields belonging to Sir George Macpherson-Grant which he cultivates himself.

47,518. Have you mentioned any farms in the Strathdearn district?—No.

47,519. Do you know that district?—Yes, I know it pretty well.

47,520. Can you mention any farms that are there?—There is land there which has been recently converted into a deer forest which used to be a grazing for the crofters belonging to Strathnairn, Strathdearn, and Stratherrick.

47,521. Can you give me the names of the crofter townships?—No, I am not able to do that.

47,522. Can you give me any idea of the number of crofters?—There was a stock of about 10,000 sheep upon the ground which has been recently converted into a deer forest.

47,523. Did that stock belong to crofters?—The best part of it did.

47,524. The principal part of it?—Yes.

47,525. And the remainder to farmers and proprietors?—Yes.

47,526. Can you tell us roughly the extent of that land?—I cannot say the extent, but I should say it would be a fair day's journey for a man to go round it.

47,527. A good many thousand acres?—Yes, it will be that.

47,528. What is the name of the forest into which the land has been turned?—Coignafearn forest.

47,529. And who is the proprietor?—The Mackintosh is the proprietor.

47,530. Is that land you are now speaking of land suitable for occupation or only suitable for hill grazing?—Suitable for hill grazing; there is no arable land. There is a little arable land in Coignafearn, but it is in the lowest part of the forest, and above that there is nothing but grazing land.

47,531. Are any of the crofters who had that land at one time still in the neighbourhood?—Yes, they are in their crofts.

47,532. Can you give me the name of any one township?—Yes; the township of Tordarroch in Strathnairn.

47,533. Any other?—There is another place they call the Bechan.

47,534. Any others?—I forget them, it is so long since.

47,535. If we are able to get one or two of the names on the map we shall be able to localise the thing a little more satisfactorily. Are there any others that occur to your recollection?—There was Bochrubin, I think.

47,536. Are the crofters still there?—Yes, they are there; the townships are there, but not the parties who occupied them in my younger days.

47,537. But some of their successors are there, I suppose?—Yes.

47,538. How long is it since that land was afforested?—I don't think it would be more than ten years, but I cannot say exactly: it might be a year or two more.

47,539. What is the name of the forest?—Coignafearn forest.

47,540. Now, can you mention any other land besides this particular tract you have specified, that has been added to the forest?—No.

47,541. Are you able to call our attention to any other lands in the Strathdearn district, either sheep farms, or lands that have been afforested?—No: it is so long since I have been there that I forget the exact position of matters.

47,542. Were you employed there as a shepherd?—Yes, for a short time.

47,543. Are there any other districts besides those mentioned that you are able to speak of?—No, no others.

47,544. There are a number of forests round this quarter?—Yes.

47,545. Do you know anything about them beyond what you have told us?—No, not much more. All the forests that are hereabouts, with perhaps a little addition, have been in existence since before my time.

47,546. Most of the forests in this district are old forests?—Yes.

47,547. Some of them are very old forests?—I believe they are: Glenfeshie and Gaick are old forests.

47,548. And mentioned in old Acts of Parliament?—I would think so.

47,549. Are you cognisant of the desires of crofters in this neighbourhood with regard to acquiring more land?—The only answer I could give to that question is, that for any little farm or croft that is in the market there is a great number of applicants.

47,550. But otherwise you are not able to speak?—No, I am not here in the interests of any party; I have no grievance of my own, nor do I appear on behalf of any others, but simply to answer any questions I may be asked.

47,551. Mr Sutherland.—How do the crops in this neighbourhood ripen?—In a good year there is a good crop, and in bad years of course they are late. Last year we had a very good crop; but this year unless we get a change of weather very soon we shall have a very late crop. It depends on the weather very much; the soil is very good, but the climate is rather high.

47,552. What is the height of it do you know?—I think we are about 800 feet above sea level here.

47,553. And is there any cultivated land in this neighbourhood higher than you are here in Kingussie?—Yes.

47,554. How many feet higher?—I think Dalwhinnie is about 1000 feet above the sea.

47,555. Do crops grow at Dalwhinnie?—Yes.

47,556. Do the people there crop the land every year?—Every year.

47,557. And at the height of 1000 feet above sea level they find it profitable to crop the land?—Well, they always do it, at any rate.

47,558. Do you know how many miles Kingussie is from the sea?—I think about 40 miles.

47,559. How many miles will Dalwhinnie be?—About 50 miles; it is the farthest off point from the sea in Scotland: you have to go about 50 miles before you reach salt water, whichever way you go.

47,560. It is 1000 feet high, and 50 miles from the sea, and yet the people find it profitable to grow corn crops?—Well, I should think they would not trouble about cultivating it unless it was profitable to do so.

47,561. But some years, you say, the crops are not so good as in other years?—No.

47,562. That is the case everywhere, is it not?—I suppose so.

47,563. What can you tell us about the land we see in the neighbourhood here: has it all been cultivated since you can remember?—No, not all since I remember.

47,564. Some of it has been brought into cultivation within your memory?—There was more land out of cultivation in my memory than has been brought into cultivation in the immediate neighbourhood. There was a very energetic farmer here named Mr Cameron, who took in a lot of land about the village here; and it is now divided among the village.

47,565. But was part of that cultivated within your memory?—Yes, what is above the village. What is below the village has been in cultivation long before my time.

47,566. And is Kingussie an old place?—Oh, no, it is not much older than this century. There were a few houses before then, but I knew persons who saw corn growing on what is now the streets of Kingussie.

47,567. Was it a place of great importance before the railway was made, or do you remember it before then?—I do; I had a 'hurl' in the first train that passed here.

47,568. Was it a place of any considerable size before the railway was made?—There were almost as many inhabitants then as there are now, but the houses were quite different.

47,569. Where did the population come from that was here about the beginning of the century?—From the neighbouring district. About 30 years ago the population of the parish of Kingussie and Insh was about 700 more than it is now. They came from different parts of the country.

47,570. I think his Lordship asked you a question about the desire on the part of the people to get land, and you stated that all the evidence that you should give was that whenever there was a place vacant there were many competitors for it?—That is so.

47,571. Has there been any desire or any intention on the part of the proprietors to meet that demand in any way, I mean in making smaller farms?—I cannot say there has been much. Cluny Macpherson last year offered some land up in Laggan, but I don't suppose that they took any advantage of it.

47,572. Is that far from Kingussie?—About ten miles.

47,573. What do you think were the reasons that prevented the people from taking these holdings?—I really could not say: I did not take much interest in the matter, and I never made any inquiry as to what was the cause. What the terms were I cannot say.

47,574. Apart from that offer of Cluny Macpherson, did you ever hear of any large farm in this neighbourhood being broken down and offered in small holdings?—Mr Macpherson of Belleville has given a good part of the Banchor farm to the tenementers at Newtonmore, and when Mrs Cameron, the widow of the Mr Cameron to whom I referred a little ago, gave up the farm, Mr Baillie of Dochfour broke it up and gave it to the villagers as allotments.

47,575. But not for small farms?—No, it was only allotments to villagers.

47,576. You stated that you did not know how these people left the places where they were formerly settled, but do you think they left of their own free will?—I cannot go into that at all; I do not know anything about it.

47,577. What is your opinion regarding the prospect of success of small farms if they were made; do you think they would be readily taken up?—I would think so. I think it would be more profitable to the industry of the place for all concerned, such as joiners and blacksmiths and merchants and so forth, if there were more people on the land than there are at present.

47,578. That is from the point of view of those who would not themselves live on the land?—Yes, it would benefit the trade of the place.

47,579. Mr Gordon.—Where do you specially point to as land suitable for crofting?—Any land that is cultivated in the district just now would be suitable enough.

47,580. But land under cultivation does not come under the scope of our inquiry?—Well, the lands I mean which are sheep-runs at present, in large farms.

47,581. Which large farms do you specially refer to?—I do not refer to any one more than another; I think they are alike as far as that is concerned.

47,582. Have you any idea from which farm the last clearances were made?—It was in this Glenbanchor that I referred to; that was the last in this district.

47,583. But you say they have been given back to the people of Newtonmore?—Not the same land. The farm of Banchor was the farm of Banchor before the crofters left the land where they were, and their land was added to that farm. But what Mr Macpherson has been giving them lately was part of the original farm.

47,584. Where did you say the ruins were?—You will see them all up and down the country: you cannot go half a mile from the village without seeing them and you may go 20 miles from the village and see the ruins of croft and crofters' houses.

47,585. Do you refer to Speyside or to Lochaber?—To Speyside: I am not going so far as Lochaber.

47,586. What would be your idea of a model size of holding?—A holding would require to be a good medium size before it would pay or keep the occupier.

47,587. What do you call a medium size?—A pair horse holding, with perhaps half a dozen cows and two or three hundred sheep.

47,588. How many holdings of that size could you put into one of these farms?—It depends on the size of the farm.

47,589. How many could be put into Ballachroän?—I think there would be room for at least four or five in Ballachroän: I might say six or seven.

47,590. How many pair of horses does Ballachroän keep?—Three or four pair; but I have seen six or seven pair upon the two farms.

47,591. How many sheep are on it?—I cannot say exactly; when he had part of the grazing of Coignafearn, he had grazing that would summer about 2000 sheep, but I think between 1200 and 1500 will be about the number that his farm as at present would hold.

47,592. How much land does Ballachroän cultivate?—I cannot say.

47,593. I suppose he will cultivate all he can profitably cultivate?—There is a good deal more that could be profitably cultivated, I believe, if it was in the hands of parties who would cultivate it.

47,594. Is the low land in Ballachroän farm not subject to flooding?—Yes, the low land is, but not to the same extent as the lands about Kingussie.

47,595. How much would be cultivated below the road?—I cannot say; perhaps thirty or forty acres. It may be more, but I cannot say.

47,596. Thirty or forty acres would only make one croft?—But he has a lot of land above the road.

47,597. Yes, I know he has, but how much will be cultivated above the road?—I cannot say.

47,598. Have you ever been engaged in cultivation yourself, as a farmer?—No.

47,599. Then you are unable to speak with any practical knowledge?—No.

47,600. Is it a fact that most of the country you have spoken to is subject to frost, in every late year?—Yes, it is.

47,601. Now, except for gamekeeping is there really any work that a crofter could get to make up for his loss in a frosty year?—Not the crofter himself, unless he was a tradesman. There are some tradesmen, such as masons and joiners, who have crofts.

47,602. Do you think it would be advisable to fill all that country with small holders who would be entirely dependent on the produce of their crofts, in a country which is admittedly liable to losses from that cause?—All that I can say about that is, that it was the case in former times when cultivation was not so well attended to as it is now.

47,603. That is true enough, possibly, but there are much larger demands made upon the purse now than in the time when they were occupying the land?—Oh, possibly.

47,604. You could not point to any business or any occupation outside their crofts?—No, unless it would be on a large farm here and there where they might get work as they did in former times.

47,605. There is not so much cultivation now as there was formerly?—No, there is not.

47,606. To what do you ascribe that?—I suppose farmers found that pasturing paid better than cultivating the land.

Kingussie, Donald Campbell.

47,607. And do you think they are correct in that?—I don't know I am sure.

47,608. They find it so?—Possibly, or else they would cultivate more.

47,609. Mr Maccallum.—The kind of holding that you would approve of would be a self-supporting holding, I take it?—Well, so far, I think so.

47,610. You do not think these large farms should be divided into small crofts?—Not very small.

47,611. So that the people who occupy these holdings would have their time taken up with the cultivation and the shepherding required on the holdings?—Yes, mostly that. Of course, if there were large families, which is the case very often, some of the members could seek other employment and have the holding as a home during the winter.

47,612. And you are decidedly of opinion that it would be better for the country generally that these large holdings should be divided into moderately-sized farms?—Well, it is the general opinion of the people in the district that that is so.

47,613. When the land was held in comparatively small holdings there were more people in the district?—A great many more people in the district.

47,614. And even from the point of view of the proprietor, do you think it would benefit him to have the holdings smaller than they are at present?—I believe he would get as much rent for the land; but he would perhaps have a little more difficulty in collecting the rents sometimes.

47,615. You told us that a great number of the farms on the Ramsden estate are in the proprietor's hands?—Yes.

47,615A. How has that come about?—I cannot go into particulars about that: he has taken one after another off the tenants' hands and kept them himself. I know that he has been advertising them, and that they were not let.

47,616. Do you think it is because large farms cannot be easily let that they are kept in the proprietor's own hands?—I believe so; and there are such conditions in connection with some of these farms that it is not easy to get them let.

47,617. What conditions do you refer to?—One is that the stock has to be taken over at valuation, which I consider is ruinous for any man to go into.

47,618. That makes it difficult to get large farms let?—Yes, I think it has that tendency.

47,619. But, as a fact, you are aware that there is very small demand for sheep farms on a large scale?—There would be demand enough for them, but the rents that are asked for them are, I believe, more than people are inclined to give. Prices have been going back very much during the last few years.

47,620. The proprietors have to take a great number of the large farms into their own hands, and those which are let are let at a reduced rent, I suppose?—I believe that is the case.

47,621. At a greatly reduced rent?—I cannot say what percentage the reduction might be; as I said already, I do not take very much interest in that sort of thing now.

47,622. Do you find that there is any difficulty in letting middle-sized holdings?—I never found that there was.

47,623. Or that there is any necessity for reducing the rents of such farms?—Not so much, of course the proprietors have been reducing the rents of their own free will hereabouts, some of them.

47,624. That is in years when the crops were damaged, I suppose?—Yes, and when the prices went down so very much; they saw that they could not pay at the old rents.

47,625. Are you aware whether the proprietors have any difficulty in collecting the rents of these moderately-sized holdings?—So far as I am aware, they have not.

47,626. And are the people who occupy such holdings prosperous, or comparatively prosperous?—They seem to be: they look like it at all events. They always pay their debt when it is due, as far as I am concerned.

47,627. Such a way of holding the land is more profitable for other men outside, for merchants, such as yourself, and for tradesmen generally?—Certainly. Kingussie. Donald Campbell.

47,627A. And the proprietor does not lose by such occupation of the land?—Of course, the proprietors know that best themselves, but so far as I can see they do not.

47,628. Now, with regard to the land held as deer forest now, how were these lands used formerly?—They were used as shielings; the people used to go there with their sheep and cattle and put them on to the hills for summer grazing; they had bothies there.

47,629. The tenants on the low-lying ground were entitled to put their sheep there?—Yes, they held it in common, as it were.

47,630. Do you think it was a great disadvantage to the tenants when they lost the right of putting their sheep on these grazings?—I would certainly think so.

47,631. Do they themselves give expression to their feelings about that?—Yes; of course it is only the children or grandchildren of those who used to go to the hills that are now living, and they do not know so very much about it: they don't know the loss so much as those who actually used the hills.

47,632. But large flocks of sheep were undoubtedly summered on those hills that are now occupied as deer forests?—There were, certainly, sheep on Coignafearn forest.

47,633. That has been recently taken away?—Well, the crofters lost it long ago; it had been taken from them, and turned into large sheep-runs held by two or three parties; and when it was taken from them in turn, it was converted into a deer forest. Then, they found it was not paying them as a forest, so it was put under sheep again, and let to large sheep farmers.

47,634. Can you tell us how the tenants wintered the sheep which were summered on these high hills?—They wintered most of them on their own crofts.

47,635. They had no particular difficulty about that, had they?—No. Of course, if the croft was not large enough to winter them all, they would send off the the younger stock, the hoggs, to lower ground.

47,636. Mr Macleod.—The only question I would like to put to you is with regard to the practical question with which you are thoroughly acquainted, that is, as to whether sheep thrive well on those higher grounds that are presently devoted to deer. You know that there is a considerable difference of opinion as to whether these higher grounds are fitted for sheep grazing?—My opinion is that the higher lands, in this district at all events, are more capable of grazing sheep than of grazing deer.

47,637. What has caused you to form that opinion?—A sheep is a much hardier animal than a deer; a sheep would live where a deer would starve. That is my experience, and I have also consulted others who are keepers and shepherds, such as I was myself in my younger days, and it is always the same opinion that I found. I have known a sheep to live under a piece of snow for six weeks.

47,638. That is not an ordinary experience?—Oh, no, it is not an ordinary experience, but it shows you the hardiness of the animals.

47,639. I think you said there was a very considerable extent of land taken off the farm of Ballachroän and added to a deer forest?—No, I said there were two farms added together at Ballachroän, but there is no deer forest in connection with that at all.

47,640. Nor near there?—No; but the Glasha on The Mackintosh estate, was taken from the Ballachroän farm and added to the Monadh-liath deer forest.

47,641. Then, with regard to the farms that are held in Sir John Ramsden's own hands, are they held solely for sheep, or is it mixed sheep and deer farms?—The part that is a sheep grazing is entirely held as that, and there is a deer forest besides that.

47,642. Were there ever sheep on the deer forest portion, within your knowledge?—Yes, on the Strathmashie farm. That was a sheep farm in my knowledge, and now most of it is under deer.

47,643. What stock did it carry?—I cannnot say with certainty, but I should think it would be over 2000 sheep.

47,644. Is that the only land within your knowledge presently under deer, which was at one time under sheep?—Yes, on Sir John's estate. There is part of Loch-Erricht side that was a sheep-grazing once, which is now also under deer.

47,645. What stock do you think it would carry?—I would say about 1000.

47,646. Can you tell us what stock is carried on the farms that are presently in Sir John's hands?—No.

47,647. Have you no idea as to that?—No, I could not say, they were so extensive.

47,648. If you took them in detail, is it not possible you could give us the figures?—Roughly guessing it I would say there would not be much short of 20,000 sheep that he would have to take over when he took the farms off the hands of the tenants; I do not know what stock he may have on them now.

47,649. You cannot say whether it has been reduced or increased?—I was told it was reduced.

47,650. Mr Munro.—You made some reference to the former and the present condition of matters in the Strathnairn and Strathdearn districts?—Yes.

47,651. How far back does your memory carry you in reference to these districts?—Close upon 40 years.

47,652. Do you remember a time when they had a much larger population of small tenants than they have at present?—I was not so well acquainted with the lower part of the district as with the hill grazings of it; I knew the men when they came there about their sheep, and came to gather them and clip them and so forth, but I never have been much amongst the crofters of Strathdearn and Strathnairn.

47,653. But there are a considerable number of small tenants there still?—Yes.

47,653A. Within your memory, were there any evictions which were forcibly carried out?—I cannot say anything about that, because I do not know much of the district itself, although I knew the men who had the sheep grazing there.

47,654. A question was put here to-day which seemed to convey the suggestion that small tenants would have very great difficulties to contend with in the way of frost in cultivating small farms in this district here. Now, would not a similar condition of things apply to large tenants as well as to small ones?—Exactly the same, I would think it would be more so, because the small tenants, as a rule, pay more attention to the cultivation of their land than the larger ones.

47,655. The large farmers have just the same difficulties to contend with as the small tenants?—Yes, just the same.

47,656. The Chairman.—Do you consider this a good district for rearing stock, both of cattle and sheep?—Yes.

47,657. What class of sheep are mostly reared here?—Blackfaced sheep; it is more adapted for them.

47,658. Suppose that holdings intended to be self-sustaining were formed in this district and in some of the quarters you mentioned, with corresponding facilities for rearing stock, are you of opinion that such holders would be able to get along profitably enough?—I think so, if the times would keep anything better.

47,659. But allowing for the times, are you of opinion that they would be just as likely to do well as the large farmers?—That is my opinion.

47,660. You say that a great number of farms have fallen into the hands of proprietors: does it consist with your knowledge that that has been accompanied with a serious decline of rent in the case of those which are let,—that when they try to relet them, they have to offer them at a much reduced rent?—I think that is largely the reason why they have them in hand.

47,661. Have these farms been to your knowledge repeatedly offered in the market without finding tenants?—I know they were advertised but whether they could get tenants at a reasonable rent I cannot say. I know parties that offered for them and did not get them.

47,662. Mr Allan Macdonald, Commissioner for The Mackintosh.—I understood you to say that when Coignafearn was afforested twelve years ago, a number of crofters were removed?—I did not say that; I only said they lost the grazing.

47,663. You did not say that there were any removed?—No; I said I did not know anything about that.

47,664. How much grazing did they lose?—I cannot say; I told his Lordship it would take about a day's journey for a man to go round it.

47,665. Would you be surprised to learn that they only lost 1000 acres out of 10,000 acres of grazing that they had?—Taking it from Coignafearn house to the top of Cro-Clach as the river runs, it is about 20 miles.

47,666. Do you know that there are about 40,000 acres, speaking roughly, on what we call the Monadh-liath, of which the crofters had 10,000 acres, and that in order to make a forest it was necessary to strike off something under 1000 acres from that?—I am afraid you are speaking of what was done recently; I was referring to what was done 40 or 45 years ago.

47,667. Do you mean to say that the crofters who are now on the ground, or their predecessors, had the whole grazing of the Monadh-liath 40 or 50 years ago?—Yes, they had the whole of it, with the exception of what they call the Glasha; that is part of the present forest which the tenant of Ballachroän held at that time as a summer grazing for his sheep, where he kept about 2000 sheep. Then there was the farm of Coignafearn and Coignasgallan which were both together and which carried about 2000 sheep; and the rest was all under crofters.

47,668. You spoke of old crofting townships at Tordarroch and Bechan: can you tell me what was the size of the township of Tordarroch?—I only knew the township by name. I told my friends there already that I did not know the district where these crofters lived, although I knew the hill pastures that they had for summer grazings, and I knew the men who were there and who used to come to the clippings. They had a large fank built upon the Coignafearn estate which was available for all the crofters, and they would be clipping there for perhaps a month.

47,669. You cannot say whether there was more than one tenant at Tordarroch?—I cannot say, but I think there were more.

47,670. And in Beachan?—The crofters of Strathnairn and Stratherrick and Strathdearn had the grazing of these hills at the time I refer to.

47,671. Which hills do you refer to?—The whole Monadh-liath or Coignafearn.

47,672. I thought you told us a short time ago that it was the present crofters who had the whole of the Monadh-liath?—I said the predecessors.

47,673. Of course, the predecessors: but the predecessors of the people who are at present crofters on that ground. Do you know what is the present size of the farm of Tordarroch?—I do not know anything at all about the farms; I only knew the men who came for their summer grazing. There were about fifteen or sixteen shepherds attending the sheep that I referred to upon these hills, at the time I spoke of, so that you can understand there was a large number of sheep.

47,674. The Chairman.—Each of these shepherds would have one hirsel or perhaps two or more under his management?—Yes, and there was also a great number of what we call black or Highland cattle grazed upon the pasture at that time as well as the sheep; and horses too.

47,675. Did these cattle all belong to crofters?—Yes.

47,676. Mr Sutherland.—Was the deer forest of Coignafearn in existence before this land was added to it,—was it a deer forest before?—As I told you already, it was turned into a deer forest and let for a year or two, but the tenant who had it gave it up, and it was turned into a sheep grazing again. When it was again made into deer forest latterly, there was part of this hill pasture that Mr Macdonald refers to taken from the tenants of Coignashee and Coignafionntarnach.

Kingussie.
Donald Campbell.

47,677. In the Return of deer forests issued by order of Parliament it is stated about Coignafearn that it is about 30,000 acres in extent and that it was in course of formation in the year 1883?—That is the first time that I alluded to.

47,678. It was first of all a deer forest, then a sheep farm, and then made a deer forest a second time?—Yes.

47,679. And when it was made a deer forest the second time, the land was taken from the crofters and added to it; is that so?—They put up a wire fence between the sheep and the deer a few years ago,—four or five years ago perhaps, and when they were making the fence they took this part to which Mr Macdonald referred off this grazing. The fence went on the north side of the glen instead of the south side.

47,680. Do you know any person who would point out the ground to us?—Which ground?

47,681. The ground we are talking about, which was taken from the crofters?—Any of the crofters in Strathdearn would, I think, show you the ground.

47,682. Mr Maccallum.—Do you know what extent of hill pasture these crofters now have from whom that grazing was taken?—I cannot say; I have no knowledge of that at all.

47,683. Was it 1000 acres or so that was taken from them?—I cannot say.

47,684. Mr Allan Macdonald says it is about that?—I would believe it would be that, from the appearance of it.

47,685. And do you know the character of the ground?—It is very good for sheep grazing: it has all sorts of pasture, heather and grass and so on.

Donald Cattanach.

DONALD CATTANACH, Merchant, Newtonmore (55)—examined.

47,686. The Chairman.—What is your occupation?—I am a merchant in Newtonmore.

47,687. Are you here to speak as an individual, or have you been appointed as a delegate?—I speak as an individual.

47,688. What lands are you more particularly acquainted with?—I have a short sketch of all the land of Badenoch.

47,689. Just tell us what you desire to say about Badenoch?—It is 40 miles long, and about 30 or 35 broad; I think it contains about 1200 square miles, or over 1000 at any rate. This vast area of land is swallowed up by only about 100 farms, excluding those in the villages of Kingussie, Newtonmore, and Insh. There are four parishes in Badenoch, viz., Alvie, Insh, Kingussie, and Laggan. Alvie and Insh are swallowed up by seven or eight large farms.

47,690. Can you give us the names of these farms?—Yes, I think I can. In Alvie, there are Chapelpark, Dunachton, Kincraig, Dalraddy. I am not taking in the Home Farm of Invereshie. Kinrara has, I think, two or three farms.

47,691. Can you mention their names?—I think Kinrara and Dalnavert go together; they were together and may be so still. Now we come to Dell, that is the next large farm, and Killiehuntly. I think these are all the large farms in Insh and Alvie.

47,692. Take the parish of Kingussie; do you know the farms there?—I should state first that there are about 16 or 17 crofters in Insh and Alvie parishes, and as many that are coming under the Crofters Act, and about as many that are not, being above that.

47,693. Small farmers?—Yes, small farmers. Next, in the parish of Kingussie there are eight large farms, viz., Gordonhall, Ruthven, Nuide, Etteridge, Biallid, Banchor, Ballachroän, Kerrow.

47,694. What do you wish to say about these?—There are 16 crofters coming under the Act, and 5 or 6 small farmers, in the parish of Kingussie. Next taking the parish of Laggan, we find 7 large farms taking Sir John Ramsden as a tenant and proprietor.

47,695. Just give us the names of the seven farms?—Crubinbeg, Breackachy, Gaskbeg, Cromra, and Sir John Ramsden's: how many is that?

Kingussie.
Donald Cattanach.

47,696. That is only five.—Well, there are small farms coming in close to it, as Blargie and Coul, but these are not large farms.

47,697. Are there any more?—That is all: and there are the same number of crofters under the Act, about 16, and so many above the limits of the Act who are small farmers.

47,698. Now, you have mentioned the farms in these four parishes so far as you know: are these all grazing farms?—All grazing farms. There are no sheep on Gordonhall.

47,699. How is it occupied?—By cattle, and by wintering sheep.

47,700. Can you mention the names of any of these farms that are in the hands of the proprietor?—Now, I will let you know, my lord, another, by my grandfather and from my father; west from Laggan.

47,701. Where did your grandfather live?—He was born in Chapelpark, at a place called Rait. West from the Bridge of Laggan, there would be about the half of Laggan parish, or a little more. In his time I heard him say that he would gather half of a regiment, as brave as ever stood upon the plains of Waterloo. Now consider, my lord, there are only a few cottars, a few gamekeepers, a few shepherds, now inhabiting that vast plain.

47,702. Are there evidences to this day of lands which were occupied by these same tenants,—ruins of houses, and marks of cultivation on the ground?—Yes.

47,703. Quite perceptible?—In every place. Some of the farmers took away some ruins and put the places in cultivation.

47,704. But a good many ruins are still visible?—A good many ruins are to be seen yet.

47,705. And are the lands that were formerly held by small tenants now consolidated with the large farms you have mentioned?—Yes.

47,706. Are you of opinion that these crofts might be re-occupied profitably or advantageously?—By all means, when they were inhabited then. Consider their ignorance of cultivation in those days, then contrast it with the implements we have now and the knowledge we have now. At that time a plough was made by the carpenter, the stock of it being curved in the blacksmith's shop: but now we have everything ready to our hand just like steam-engines.

47,707. You think that with the increase of knowledge in agricultural matters, and the scientific implements now in use, it would be a much easier matter for a small holder to carry on a holding to profit or advantage than in these old days when they occupied these lands?—Yes.

47,708. Can you tell us whether any of the farms you named are in the hands of the proprietor, I think you mentioned Sir John Ramsden, and I understand he has a number of farms in his own hand?—There are four or five farms in Sir John Ramsden's hands that I know myself, in my own day: Gallovie, Strathmashie, Dalchully, Shirrabeg, and Shirramore: that is, when I was a shepherd myself.

47,709. For how many years were you occupied as a shepherd?—About five.

47,710. Where were you employed principally?—Up at Loch Erricht side, on Sir John Ramsden's property; and I was a shepherd in Etteridge also.

47,711. How long were you there?—I was there one year about thirty-five years ago.

47,712. Do you know anything about deer forests in this quarter?—I do.

47,713. Which of these forests do you know best?—Sir John Ramsden's and Glenfeshie.

47,714. What is the name of Sir John Ramsden's forest?—Ben-Alder; I think it is divided into two now: however, we count it as one forest, the forest of Ben-Alder.

47,715. Do you know that forest well?—I do.

47,716. Are there any lands there capable of profitable or advantageous occupation?—Yes.

47,717. In what part of the forest?—In Strath-

Kingussie — Donald Cattanach.

mashie it is a splendid hill pasture and arable. There is a place called Druimuidhe in the Gaelic language where there were a good few crofters in the time of my father and my grandfather, and another place called Mainistear higher up in the same forest.

47,718. Were there small townships there, or just individual crofters?—I cannot ascertain.

47,719. But you say that in the time of your father or grandfather these particular places were occupied by small tenants?—By small tenants; even at Loch Earba which is above Aidverikie house, a valley, there was a crofter with whom my grandfather once lodged. I mention this to show that there was then a crofter in mostly every corner.

47,720. But although these men lived there, are you of opinion that it is a suitable place for human beings to live now with a view to profitable occupation?—Yes, by having black cattle, Highland cattle, the same as they had then.

47,721. These people depended more upon their stock than upon any arable land?—They must, because there was very little arable land. They also took in Highland horses.

47,722. They kept horses in these days, did they?—Yes.

47,723. Is there any other part of that forest that you can bring under our notice as having been previously occupied by small tenants?—No

47,724. Passing now to another forest; what is the name of the other forest you mentioned which you know about?—Glenfeshie.

47,725. Do you know it well?—I do.

47,726. I see it is in two parts; one part belongs to Sir George Macpherson-Grant and another to Alfred D. Mackintosh of Mackintosh. Are there lands on either side of these parts which were formerly occupied by small tenants?—There were two or three, but there is not much arable there.

47,727. Is it in your judgment not a very promising place?—It is good natural grazing.

47,728. But not much arable?—Not much arable.

47,729. Is it a place where a man with his wife and family could pull through winter easily, or is it cold?—Well, the gamekeepers are there all the winter time, and why should not a crofter stand the gales of winter as well as a gamekeeper? In the time of my father, the Duchess of Bedford was there till about the New Year, in that place.

47,730. Are these the only forests you are able to speak about particularly, or are there any others?—At Gaick there is another forest.

47,731. That is one of Sir George Macpherson-Grant's forests?—Yes.

47,732. Are there lands there that we ought to consider?—Not arable.

47,733. Do you mean by not arable, not old arable?—No old arable that I am aware of. It is under deer.

47,734. And you do not know of any one ever having lived there, except a gamekeeper perhaps?—Well, no, except a gamekeeper or shepherd. I remember my father speaking about it before it was afforested; a grazier was going there in summer always, for four or five months.

47,735. That forest was a grazing within the recollection of your father?—Yes, as far as I remember.

47,736. Entirely used for sheep stock?—Not for sheep stock but for Highland cattle and ponies.

47,737. Were there no deer then?—Going back and fore but it was not preserved for deer then.

47,738. Can you tell us when it began to be preserved for deer,—how long ago?—It is a long time,—it must be close on eighty years: it is the oldest deer forest.

47,739. Is it an older forest than Glenfeshie?—Oh, yes, as far as I remember, it is.

47,740. Do you know of a desire among crofters in this quarter to get new holdings or extension of grazing?—Yes, and there is a desire among the proprietors to give them holdings. One proprietor said to myself that he would break up his farms at once if he had plenty money to put up small holdings.

47,741. I do not ask you for his name unless you choose to give it?—I don't care about mentioning it. Kingussie. Donald Cattanach.

47,742. Very well, I don't press you. But you say there is a willingness among some of the proprietors at least to encourage the formation of small holdings consisting partly of arable land and partly of hill grazing?—Yes.

47,743. If the thing could be carried out with a reasonable prospect of success both to landlord and tenant?—Yes. If we were to get a million or two of money, the same as five millions have been given to Ireland, the proprietor and tenant would be able again to go in with one another, and not fight against each other as they are just now.

47,744. But, do you think that the crofters who are desirous of getting new holdings could take such holdings and carry them on without extraneous assistance?—Oh, yes, there are some who could; I know that perfectly well.

47,745. Could they put up the buildings and stock the land and carry on the holding?—Yes, there are some who could.

47,746. A good number?—Well, perhaps there are more than I recollect just now, but I myself know a few.

47,747. Would you say that this willingness on the part of the landlord is common to a considerable number, or is confined to a few?—I cannot give you an answer there, whether to few or many.

47,748. Mr Munro.—From what you have told us, I take it that you are pretty familiar with the crofters of this district?—Yes.

47,749. Is there a strong desire on their part that some of these farms should be broken up and divided amongst them, and given to suitable applicants?—Yes.

47,750. Did it ever occur to the crofters to combine and make application to any of the landlords voluntarily to break up any of these farms?—No, I am not aware of that just now: they were asking a piece of land from the proprietor, whether to put under crofts or not I don't know. The cottars and feuars in Newtonmore and Kingussie also were asking more land to attach to our feus.

47,751. Did they make any specific application to any landlords to break up a farm and divide it amongst the crofters?—Not the crofters but the cottars.

47,752. Now, supposing that any of these farms were broken up, would they be readily taken by the crofters in the neighbourhood?—That is their view just now, and that is their tone; that is what is going through the country.

47,753. You mentioned some of the advantages under which a crofter would take a small farm to-day as compared with previous years. Now, are there any disadvantages under which he would labour in taking a croft to-day as compared with former times?—The climate is better, I think, in my day than it was in the time of my forefathers; I will give you an instance. There was a widow down in Strone, near the place where I am stopping, and the market that is now held in Kingussie used to be over there west from Ruthven. Well, at Martinmas the widow passed over the ice, and in the beginning of spring she passed over the same ice again,—that was three months continued frost. Now, I never saw that in my time nor anything like it. In average years this valley is as good as a valley in the south of Scotland,—in the Lothians or anywhere else, but, of course, you have to take the altitude above sea level. But taking it on an average, the arable soil for cultivating oats, barley, and hay is as good as you will find in any glen, valley, or hill in the Highlands.

47,754. That is not precisely the point I wish to be at?—Perhaps you were speaking about frost.

47,755. No, I am not speaking about frost: the altitude is to-day precisely as it was in former years; but you mentioned that a crofter would take a new holding to-day under advantages that did not exist in former times. Now, it is as well to look at both sides; and my question is, Are there no disadvantages under which he would labour as compared with former years?—I don't think so.

Kingussie. Donald Cattanach.

47,756. Is there nothing in the condition of living amongst crofters to-day as compared with say fifty years ago?—Oh, just the same.

47,757. Is it not the case that fifty years ago the crofters practically existed on what they produced themselves?—Yes, and it is the same to-day here: the crops are the same to-day as then, but then the oats were not so good as now; they were black oats that they were raising on the ground then. Now it is all kinds of oats that are coming in, and it would be far easier for them to-day than then, because they are up to cultivating the land better.

47,758. Then your opinion is that if the crofters got these farms divided among them, they could cultivate them to profit and advantage?—That is my opinion.

47,759. Mr Macleod.—Do you know Sir John Ramsden's estate at all?—I have a little knowledge about it.

47,760. Are there any small tenancies upon his estate?—Yes, crofters.

47,761. Are there many?—About eight or nine; I am not very sure of the net figure.

47,762. Where are they located?—At a place called Crathie, west from Blargie, west from Laggan-Bridge, this side of Shirramore.

47,763. Are these tenants in a fairly comfortable condition, judging from their outward appearance?—Yes, in one aspect; but some of them would like to have more land.

47,764. More arable land, or more pasture land?—More arable land.

47,765. Is there any available land lying contiguous to their present holdings?—Yes, not far from them.

47,766. How is it occupied at the present time?—There is a burn between them: there was a township there once, where my maternal grandfather lived.

47,767. How is that land occupied at present? Is it in the hands of the proprietor?—In the hands of Sir John Ramsden.

47,768. It is under sheep?—Under sheep.

47,769. Then, is there a tendency on that particular estate to extend the number of small holdings?—I cannot tell you; I don't know the mind of the proprietor.

47,770. That is not the proprietor to whom you referred as being anxious to encourage the formation of small holdings?—No, that is not the proprietor who spoke to me.

47,771. Then with regard to the applications that have been made upon the part of the feuars and others for allotments or small holdings, has there been any endeavour made to take advantage of the present law with regard to the acquisition of allotments and small holdings? Has there been any application made on the subject to the County Council or to the District Committee?—Yes.

47,772. What became of that application?—Oh, the Allotments Act was no use, it was not workable.

47,773. Was there any meeting held with regard to it? Was there a formal application made to the County Council?—Yes, there was; there was a meeting in this Court-House about it.

47,774. Have you any idea as to the number of people who made application?—I think it was twenty-four; it was over twenty.

47,775. What reply did the County Council give to the representation that was made to them; or is there any other one who could inform us?—The reply from the County Council was that that clause in the Act would never work; and that suppose they would get the acres, the acres would never pay; they would be too dear, owing to the expenses.

47,776. Connected with the acquisition of the land?—Yes, the expense was put on the district instead of the county: I believe the Act did not mention on whom the expense should fall. This was put to Sir George Trevelyan, the Secretary for Scotland. There was a majority of proprietors on the County Council; those on the side of the people were in the minority, and Sir George Trevelyan decided that the people were not wanting the land, because of the majority against it.

47,777. But what, as a matter of fact, was the result of that application?—The County Council said it would not pay.

47,778. That if they did acquire land for the purpose the expense would be too much?—Yes.

47,779. But you told us earlier in the day that the proprietors were willing to meet the people?—Yes.

47,780. Was any application made to them for small holdings or allotments, seeing that the County Council failed to do anything in the matter?—Yes, for allotments to the proprietor.

47,781. And what was the result?—The proprietor will take it into consideration; I believe the proprietor will give the allotments from the farm. The party was wanting one farm that is attached to the village of Newtonmore. Now, I believe the proprietor would give the farm at once if it was in his own hands. The party petitioned the proprietor, who said he would take the matter into consideration when the farm should fall into his hands.

47,782. So that so far as those feuars are concerned, there is a possibility of their being provided for if this farm be given?—Yes, to all appearance.

47,783. But apart from that, you say there is a demand by a number of crofters on Sir John Ramsden's and other estates in the locality, for an enlargement of the present holdings in the way of more arable and pasture lands?—Yes.

47,784. Then with regard to the buildings upon the small holdings in the district, have they, as a rule, been built by the proprietor, or by the tenant?—Our proprietor, Mr Macpherson of Belleville, gives the crofters fully half of the material for building: he gives fully half in the shape of wood and slates and lime and such like.

47,785. Have there been any judicial rents fixed in this district? Has the Crofters Commission fixed any rents?—No, none.

47,786. Has there been any reduction in the rents?—Yes, the proprietor reduced his crofters' rents.

47,787. Have you any notion what the reduction amounted to?—I am not very sure.

47,788. Was it a considerable reduction?—Yes.

47,789. Has there been any reduction in the rents of the large farms?—Yes.

47,790. Was the reduction in the case of the large farms larger than in the case of the small ones?—About the same; there is not much difference so far as I am aware.

47,791. Mr Maccallum.—You have given us very full and very clear evidence with regard to the character of the land in this district, and its former and present occupation, and I need not enter into the matter. But you told us that there was a strong desire on the part of the crofters to have the large farms broken up into moderately-sized holdings, and you told us also that the proprietors were willing to meet that desire. You say it is a very desirable thing that these holdings should be formed; now, what is it that prevents the formation of such holdings, when both sides are willing that they should be formed?—The proprietor was not rich enough to put up the steadings for the small holdings; that is what he told me.

47,792. Do you think that the case of that proprietor is exceptional, or would you say that there is a general willingness among the proprietors to break up these farms, if they could afford to do it?—I am not certain of that; I was looking at the matter in this way, that all the proprietors have a treaty of union, and if the one would go above the other he would be in a measure excommunicated.

47,793. If he would act differently from the rest, you think he would be excommunicated?—That is my opinion; I am taking a view of the whole area of land that is going among societies.

47,794. So that you think this treaty of union has something to do with preventing the forming of small holdings?—Certainly; Mr George Malcolm of Invergarry, is the Secretary, I understand, for the proprietors, for that amalgamation that was carried on; they had meetings and were going on in this way all along. I am not against that; they must keep up their own side as well as others.

47,795. But you think that that rather works against the forming of small holdings by breaking up large farms and deer forests?—Well, my own opinion is that most of the proprietors would break them up at once except for the sportsmen, who are enticing them too much altogether, for the sake of deer and such game.

47,796. Now, with regard to the action of the landlords in the County Council, did I follow you aright in saying that they acted against the opinions of those who were more directly the representatives of the people on the Council? Did they vote against putting the Small Holdings Act in force?—They go according to the Act; the Act was found unworkable; and then that clause in the Act about the expenses was not clear. To put the expense on a small district like this would be too much.

47,797. I thought you said that the popular representatives took one course, and the proprietors in the County Council took another?—No, not exactly that; but Sir George Trevelyan said that the people were not wanting allotments, seeing that they put in the proprietors in a majority.

47,798. This proprietor you say was not rich enough to put up the steadings that would be required. Is it the case then, with all the high rents that the proprietors are supposed to have got for deer forests, that they are in such a helpless condition as that, speaking generally?—Not as a general rule; my own opinion is that some of them would do it.

47,799. Do you think that this inability to put up steadings is very general, with all the advantages the proprietors are supposed to have got from the deer forests?—The proprietor who spoke to me has no deer forest.

47,800. But you are speaking of proprietors generally. I wish to know whether we are to take that as an individual case, or to consider it as typical?—I gave you that as my own opinion, that some of them would break up large farms; and I gave you my opinion that most likely they have a union in that society of their own, and that one dare not do more than another would do. That is merely my own opinion, however; I am not going to rest upon it.

47,801. Is there not a very general tendency to turn the land into sporting ground? Is not that the tendency that we see generally on the part of the proprietors?—That he was going to break up the land.

47,802. But is not that what we see the proprietors doing in the Highlands,—depriving the tenants of hill pasture and turning that into deer forests?—Yes, but you see the forest was first turned into grazings. First of all the crofters were cleared off by those officers that came from Waterloo, in this part mostly, even from Strathmashie to Dalavert. There was a captain, colonel, and officer in nearly every farm; there were ten at any rate in the big farms that I named to you. The land was cleared, and then put under sheep; and the sheep farms were afterwards made deer forests. Gaick, however, was never a sheep-run, but had black cattle and ponies.

47,803. But are there not forests that were made directly, without going through that process? Do you know the forest of Abernethy for instance,—was not that forest grazed by the tenants' sheep before it was turned into a forest?—I am not so well acquainted with Abernethy; it is not long since it was converted into a deer forest.

47,804. And you are not aware whether the small tenants had a right of putting their sheep on that forest, and that they were deprived of that right?—Is it by force you mean?

47,805. It does not matter by what process; but did not the proprietor get the land in some way or other from these tenants, and turn it into a deer forest?—Yes, that is quite right.

47,806. Do you think there is any desire on the part of the proprietors to give back the pasture to the tenants of the low-lying grounds?—In my opinion, not the majority of them.

47,807. With regard to the erection of steadings, do you think now that if the crofters got small holdings with security of tenure they would put up the necessary buildings themselves?—I know some of them would.

47,808. So that to a great extent you think the lands would be taken up without there being any help given them by Government or any other public source?—I am not certain of that in a far-away place like Sir John Ramsden's. Old arable land is very ill to cultivate, and a party going there, perhaps with small means, would not be very willing to go in. But there is one thing that I am always contending for: how is it that Scotland is not getting money as well as Ireland? That is a matter that you, My Lord, and the other gentlemen of the Commission should contend for also.

47,809. Would it not be better if these people could make a living on these farms independently, without help from the outside at all? If they got a fair rent, security of tenure, and a size of farm suitable for them, would it not be a much better thing for them to do without help?—Oh, yes, there are a good few who would take it that way and be able to go into it.

47,810. And you think such a scheme as that would be successful?—I do; that is my opinion.

47,811. Mr Gordon.—You were telling us about the former rents of the big farms: can you give us any reason in your own knowledge why the rents have fallen?—I think it is owing to the bad times, the markets going up and down, and so on.

47,812. Has the fall in rents led, in your opinion, to turning a part of the higher ground into deer forest?—Not at that time. I don't know about the deer forest at Monadh-liath on The Mackintosh's estate,—it is not long since, but the old forest that was made here was not on that account.

47,813. What was the object then; to bring in an increased rent?—My opinion was that the object was partly for sport. Ardverikie was then in the hands of Cluny Macpherson, and so was Ben-Alder; and before that time the farmer who was there had a good sheep stock on it.

47,814. On what farm?—On Ben-Alder.

47,815. Whose estate is that on?—On Sir John Ramsden's. As to the reason why Cluny Macpherson sold that estate to Sir John Ramsden I cannot say. I think it was the Marquis of Abercorn who made a deer forest here first of all.

47,816. About what time was that?—About fifty-six years ago.

47,817. That would be about the year 1838?—Yes.

47,818. These were very bad times for farmers, were they not? Possibly you do not remember them?—It was a very good time for sheep then.

47,819. I don't think times were very good then?—I cannot say that I remember particularly about them, but I remember the year 1838. They were coming on very well by degrees at that time.

47,820. They had very low prices from 1838 up to 1854, had they not?—Yes, but what was the rent then in comparison with afterwards.

47,821. What I want to get your opinion about is this: what was the immediate cause of the land having been recently afforested? Was it not the fact that sheep were not paying?—Most likely the sheep were not paying so well as the deer: there must be something at the root of it.

47,822. The farmers here, in the farms of Shirrabeg and Shirramore, had nothing to do with deer; they were simply sheep farmers, and did they not find that they were unable latterly to give the rents which they formerly paid?—Yes, I knew the tenant who was there.

47,823. He was unable to renew the farm at the old rent?—He was wanting the farm also at a reasonable rent.

47,824. He wanted the farm, but he could not afford to give that rent?—No.

47,825. Now, there must have been some reason for that: either that the expense of wintering had increased, or that the price of sheep had decreased? How is it then that all the farms in Sir John Ramsden's hands are under sheep?—Sheep must be paying well when that is the case.

Kingussie. Donald Cattanach.

47,826. Is it not because he cannot get the old rent? Now you told us about this regiment of people that at one time could have been raised on the west half of the parish, in your grandfather's time?—One half of a regiment.

47,827. Would it be possible, do you think, that these same people could occupy that land now to profit?—Their children.

47,828. I mean the same number of people?—I am not very sure if the same number would; I would not like the croft to be very small,—I am against that, but to divide the arable and the pasture.

47,829. But you say you were for thirty-five years a shepherd?—No, but I was a shepherd thirty-five years ago.

47,830. But you have a knowledge of sheep?—Yes, partly.

47,831. Is it possible in the meantime to farm one of these high farms with a wedder stock, profitably?—Yes, according to the rent.

47,832. But, even supposing you paid no rent I am not sure that you could farm it profitably?—Oh, I scarcely think that.

47,833. What would you pay for the wintering of 2000 sheep stock?—Five or six shillings per head, by sending them to the low country.

47,834. You would pay all that?—Yes. Now, for wedders you would get from 40s. to 45s. or 47s. and up as far as 50s. I think Lady Menzies was once getting that.

47,835. But what would she get now?—Now, take out the rent and take out the wintering and all the expenses and I think you would have 15s. or thereabouts over.

47,836. It may look well enough on paper, but I fancy it would hardly work so well. Take last year, for example; the same sheep that you spoke about as fetching 40s. to 50s. only fetched 35s. last year?—I cannot speak as to last year's prices; I pay very little attention to it now.

47,837. But you are speaking of facts that must happen, if we are to follow your advice. It is a very serious question if you put men down into a place where they cannot live?—But I gave it already as my opinion that they would be able to live. When they lived there before, why should they not do so now?

47,838. Because the expense of wintering is greater; that is one reason?—Well, let them keep less sheep, and put the lands under black cattle, which would stand all the winter gales, and horses also.

47,839. I am questioning you about the higher grounds. I quite admit that if you got them at a moderate rent it is possible to make them pay. But the higher lands that are at present under deer were formerly grazed by a wedder stock, which it is notorious to every man who knows about the sheep business would not now pay: they cannot occupy these grounds with sheep to profit?—I would like that you would give me that in writing before I could give an opinion on it.

47,840. You will have it in writing?—Well, that is my opinion: that they would pay.

47,841. I am sorry to say it is not mine. That is the great difficulty, the higher grounds?—The higher grounds are excellent pasture; you cannot get better pasture scarcely in the Highlands of Scotland, or even in the south of Scotland, taking the heather and the grass together. There are valleys in Sir John Ramsden's lands, west there even to the top of Ben-Alder, where you will find wild clover.

47,842. What height is that?—Well on to 4000 feet.

47,843. You know that no live animal could be kept up there in the winter time?—The flock that I was herding was kept just on the south side of the loch where Sir John Ramsden's deer forest is now.

47,844. But not at the height you spoke of?—Not at that height always, but sometimes if a fine winter day would come, even the cows would go up in the spring time. A man who went up after them was once caught in the snow-drift, and he was lost. The pasture is very good on all the hills, even on Carn-Dearg; and even on this side of Ben-Alder, I have seen a flock of sheep with a gamekeeper under Lord Bentinck beside where I was herding sheep then.

47,845. Mr Sutherland.—In everything that you have spoken to, you speak from your own experience?—Partly from my own experience, and partly from the traditions of my forefathers.

47,846. But with regard to the capability of these places for carrying sheep you are speaking of your own experience?—Yes.

47,847. What is the price at the present time of a wedder sheep in the market?—I don't know; I have not paid much attention to the matter for two or three years back.

47,848. Have you any idea approximately of what the price is? What would a good fat wedder sheep fetch in the market?—I cannot say.

47,849. Can you tell us what is the price in the market of a stag?—No, I was never in the market where I could see a stag.

47,850. So you don't know the difference in value between them?—I believe, however, that the carcases of deer have been put into the market from this country, for all that.

47,851. But you yourself never saw one in the market?—No, I did not.

47,852. I rather directed my question to the point of the difference in value between the product raised under one condition and that raised under the other; between the deer and the sheep?—Well, there is no doubt that the deer would pay the proprietor better than the sheep: he is perhaps getting a higher rent for sport.

47,853. So your answers to previous questions were directed entirely to the profit to the proprietor?—To the profit of the proprietor, I should think the deer would be more profitable to him, seeing he keeps deer in preference to sheep.

47,854. In other words, keeping it as a deer forest is more profitable to the proprietor than having it as a sheep-run?—In my opinion that is most likely, or else he would turn the lands back into sheep-runs.

47,855. You stated, I think, the area of Badenoch was about 1000 square miles?—From that to 1400 square miles.

47,856. And that that was inhabited at present by about 100 families, exclusive of the villages?—Yes; that is a rough estimate of the number.

47,857. What clan country is this?—Most of them are coming under my own clan.

47,858. Which clan?—The Mackintoshes, and the Macphersons are the most; the proprietors.

47,859. Were these two clans exclusively Badenoch ople?—Yes; the Macphersons and the Mackintoshes, from very far back.

7,860. And is that the territory that you say now is practically held by 100 families,—the land that these two clans occupied?—Yes.

47,861. The territory of the two Highland clans of Macpherson and Mackintosh is now distributed over 100 families, exclusive of the villages?—But at that time the most of Badenoch was under the Duke of Gordon.

47,862. It makes no difference under whom it was; I am talking of the distribution of the land among the people?—Yes, that district is now swallowed up with about 100 families, exclusive of some cottars and the two or three villages.

47,863. Then, about the forest of Gaick: you corroborated what Mr Campbell, the previous witness, said with regard to the deer forest of Gaick having been grazed by horses and cattle?—Yes.

47,864. Whose horses and cattle were they?—I was told by my grandfather that there was a grazier there once called George Strathdee, and, I think, his grandson is here still,—perhaps he is in this house here. He was grazing cattle then I was told; I saw the man myself.

47,865. It was called also a summer grazing?—Most likely.

47,866. Whose cattle grazed there in summer that did not in winter?—I am not very sure of that. What

Kingussie. Donald Cattanach.

I was told is that that man was then grazing black cattle,—not horses; I don't think he was going in for horses, but black Highland cattle. The same grazier was also in Strathcrrick and in Gaick.

47,867. I do not wish to detain you much longer, but I would like to ask you one question about the difficulty which you said would be encountered in making new holdings. I think you said it was a proprietor who suggested the difficulty to you. Now, has anything been done in this district by proprietors in the way of enlarging the grazings of crofters?—Yes, on the Belleville estate.

47,868. With that exception, do you know any other?—No, I do not remember at present.

47,869. You are aware, are you not, that the extension of grazings does not necessitate the erection of new buildings?—Grazings come in more handy than putting up new buildings.

47,870. Extension of grazings would not require new buildings at all?—No.

47,871. Then that objection to the enlargement of holdings could not exist?—No.

47,872. And yet you only know the one case,—was it on the estate of Belleville where such extensions have been given?—I don't remember just now.

47,873. Now, with regard to the money, you were saying that Highlanders ought to get the same as Irish tenants. Have you any idea who has to pay for that money?—Most likely perhaps I would pay some of it myself.

47,874. Are you aware that it is all left on the tenant?—It does not matter when it is coming back again; he would get his living out of it.

47,875. But where the money comes from the Government, or from a bank, or elsewhere, it is all the same to the tenant?—It is all the same to the tenant, the same as all the other things that are going back and forward in the world.

47,876. Had you it in your mind when you made the statement, that the whole thing had to be paid for by the tenant in the end?—Well, I have no objection to that at all; let them pay that, giving them plenty time to do it.

47,877. Then you think the tenant could give all the security that is necessary?—Oh, yes, they are all honest people in the Highlands, mostly.

47,878. But apart from their character would there be any other security?—Yes, most likely: the Government would require security, there is no mistake about that.

47,879. What security suggests itself to your mind that could be given for the land?—I don't know: perhaps they would not take my policy for the like of that.

47,880. But it is important to have your opinion on it?—Well, let them have the money from the Government and put it into a bank, and put a surveyor or an officer to look after it and to have control over these farms.

47,881. But does no material security of any kind suggest itself to your mind?—No.

47,882. Suppose buildings were put up?—There are some that would put them up themselves.

47,883. And do you think a great number of them would be able to do that, especially in this locality?—Perhaps not a great number, going so far back as Sir John Ramsden's lands; but round about here there are a great many that would take the farms here and put steadings on them too.

47,884. You stated before that there were a great number of advantages for profitable occupation now that were not available 80 years ago?—Yes, there is no doubt about that.

47,885. Is there for one thing a vast improvement in the facilities of communication,—the railway for instance?—In everything mostly. Just compare the state of matters now with what it was a hundred years ago, when it took a fortnight for a letter to come from London.

47,886. And if you wanted any material for building a house, there was nothing except what you made yourself?—It would just come from the Baltic Ocean or any ocean that is round about there; it would take a week at any rate.

47,887. If you wanted to build a house now, is it not the fact that in a very short time you can get from Edinburgh or Glasgow window frames, for example, that were made in America?—The whole of the house: I was making them myself.

47,888. And is that one reason why, in your opinion, it would be easier for them to make a livelihood than before?—Better in every respect; better for tradesmen and joiners and merchants and every class, helping each other in every way and putting money into circulation. Besides, it would be for six or seven families instead of one.

47,889. You said also that, in your opinion, the climate was improving. That leads me to ask about this being a frosty country?—Not to a very great extent; sometimes it spoils the crop. Two years ago it spoiled the crop, but that is the only occasion I remember, except one other year.

47,890. You are not free from frost, then?—Not altogether: but the frost was also in the low country, near the sea.

47,891. And in the south country?—Most likely.

47,892. Are you aware that the hop crop in the southern parts of England is frequently spoiled by frost?—I was not aware of it, but I am aware of it now.

47,893. In fact, there is no place in Scotland that is free from frost?—No.

47,894. It may be more severe here, but it is met with all over at the same time?—Even in the oldest historical ages we read of the people living in the woods without clothes or shelter of any kind.

47,895. So you think that this question of the severity of your climate does not enter very seriously into the question?—Not at all.

47,896. Is not this place a very fashionable health resort?—Yes.

47,897. Those whose frames become enervated in warmer climates come here to be set up, do they not?—It is the healthiest place in the known world, so far as the fresh air is concerned.

47,898. As a matter of fact, it is a great health resort, is it not?—Certainly, by all means.

47,899. What is the altitude of the cultivated land of Newtonmore?—I should say between 500 and 700 feet. [Mr Watson, Surveyor.—810 feet.]

47,900. Do you know the farm of Glenbanchor?—Yes.

47,901. Is there any land cultivated there?—Not now.

47,902. Did you ever see it cultivated there?—Yes.

47,903. Did it yield good crops?—As good as are in the country. I was there as a boy, and the recollection of the colour of the oats is still in my mind, it was such a pretty red; just in the centre of that glen.

47,904. Do they raise crops there now?—No, it is under sheep.

47,905. Was it on account of the frost, do you know, that they stopped cultivating it?—Oh, no, not on account of the frost.

47,906. Are you aware that it is over 1000 feet high?—Well, I would not take it to be more.

47,907. Are you aware that it is about 1000 feet?—No, I do not know; I should not think it is 1000 feet.

47,908. Did you ever see people on that farm?—Yes.

47,909. More people than are there now?—Yes, I have seen between thirty and forty scholars coming to our school from the glen.

47,910. And how many families are there to-day?—Two families; two shepherds.

47,911. When did the land cease to be in cultivation?—A few years ago.

47,912. And, in your opinion, would that be a suitable place for crofters?—A very suitable place.

47,913. How do you hold in Newtonmore; are you crofters?—No, feuars; the feuars have a few acres.

Kingussie. Donald Cattanach.

Kingussie. — Donald Cattanach.

47,914. Have you a feu of the land and of the house together, or have you got them separately?—Separately.

47,915. You have feus of the houses and you are given the land from year to year?—Yes, we are given the acres from year to year.

47,916. Are the feus perpetual, or building leases?—They are for ninety-nine years.

47,917. Did you build the houses yourself?—Yes.

47,918. Did you do that without any help?—Yes, without any help from any one.

47,919. You did not get Government aid for doing that?—No.

47,920. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Do you think it would pay a proprietor to divide a farm into small holdings?—Yes, I think so, why not?

47,921. Would he not have to build a house and steading for each holding?—That is just according to agreement: if he thinks that proper himself. It would not pay him for a while to put up steadings and everything; but after a while I should think it would pay him, unless he would go too high altogether, thinking he was going to make a fortune out of a few crofts.

47,922. How long would it take before he was repaid the money expended on the steading?—That would depend on the size of the steading and the size of the croft; but just to pay interest in the pounds, starting at 3½ or 4 per cent.

47,923. Supposing you were the laird of a moderately-sized farm outside this mysterious 'treaty of 'union' that you tell us of?—That was just my own opinion.

47,924. I had not heard of this union before, but we will suppose it exists, and that you were a proprietor who wished to break up your farm into four smaller holdings. What would the dwelling-houses and steadings cost you for each of the four?—Between £200 and £300.

47,925. Well, four of these would cost £800 taking it at your lower figure?—Yes.

47,926. Now, keeping your farm as one holding, what would the dwelling-house and steading cost,—it would not be so much, would it?—Oh, no, it would not be so much; it is only one steading, perhaps a little larger.

47,927. Still it would not cost £800?—No: well, perhaps about £800.

47,928. One steading?—Yes, one steading; the dwelling-house and steading would come to very close upon that figure,—I mean of the class of most of the farms hereabout.

47,929. I think you ought to put up a fairly good dwelling-house and a fairly good steading for a good deal less than that. What size of farm are you speaking of?—If 20 acres were put out, with pasture accordingly for sheep and cattle in a township, that would support a family.

47,930. What is the size of the large farm, with a dwelling-house and steading, that would cost £800?—Perhaps 100 acres arable might be in one of them, and 200 acres in another, and so forth.

47,931. But that size of farm would divide into more than four small holdings?—Well, the dwelling-houses that are put up to-day are very costly,—very picturesque and very expensive; but fifty years ago it was very different; why, now-a-days the dwelling-houses themselves cost £300 or £400.

47,932. On the small holdings?—On the big farms.

47,933. But how many holdings for crofters would one of these big farms make?—Just according to the size of it; at 20 acres the farm of Ballachroän West and Pitmain would accommodate between ten and twelve crofters.

47,934. That would mean the erection of ten or twelve dwelling-houses and steadings?—And perhaps more.

47,935. Take ten or twelve at £200 each,—that is over £2000?—Yes.

47,936. Which would be £1200 of additional expense to the proprietor at the outset, to say nothing of fencing or any other improvement?—Well, put the price on the crofters, and then in such and such a time according to agreement the price would be paid.

Kingussie. — Donald Cattanach.

47,937. But I want to know how is it going to be paid?—By the crofters paying a percentage in the £ of the cost of building until the cost was repaid.

47,938. Would you like to take a croft on these conditions, burdened with interest so that you would have to pay the cost of your dwelling-house as well as the rent of your croft?—Yes, if I was for a croft I would take it on that condition myself.

47,939. Have you had any practical experience of farming as well as shepherding?—Yes, I have some experience of farming; I would manage a farm if I were to go into it.

47,940. Just imagine yourself the proprietor of one of these large farms, and that you have made up your mind to break it up into ten small holdings; would you like to face the additional expense of this £2000 for the new dwelling-houses and steadings?—Yes.

47,941. Supposing that you had not much ready money in hand?—You are taking in the twelve crofters for that sum. Now, the proprietor and themselves might agree, and go in for that sum of money, and get it from the bank and pay interest or discount on it, until such time as the money was repaid.

47,942. Yes, but somebody would have to be paying the mason meanwhile for putting up the dwelling-house?—I am taking in the whole scope, that the proprietor and the crofters would go together and take it out from the bank.

47,943. You mean that the proprietor and the crofters are to find the money between them?—Yes, and to put up the buildings, and the crofter to repay the amount borrowed, through time.

47,944. But remember that the crofter, in addition to having to provide half of the cost of the house and the steading, would have to find money for the stocking of the farm?—Well, put all that on. I was told that some of our proprietors are dealing with their crofters in this way.

47,945. Do you not think it is a very serious item of expenditure that the landlord would have to meet, when he finds that by breaking up one farm into ten holdings it would cost him at least £2000?—He would not be losing a penny, for that £2000 would come back to him again when the crofter would pay it.

47,946. But are you quite sure that he would get back this £2000?—Quite sure; if not the proprietor would have the stock.

47,947. I do not think many men of business would care to go into a transaction of that sort?—That is most part of their business; over in America, where it is very usual to mortgage farms, you will find one-third of the farms under mortgage.

47,948. I am afraid these are hardly such profitable transactions as you appear to think?—Yes, if the proprietor and the crofters went together to break up the land. Look at old 'Ossian' Macpherson; he would not part with these crofters for anything; they were a guard round about him like soldiers, and when he was on his death-bed there were two of these crofters watching him every night. He wished to give them a life lease before he died, but they would not accept it to dishonour his son. If proprietors would come in that way now, they would just come to be like one family again. [Mr Sutherland.—Was that 'Ossian' Macpherson?—Yes. He knew the position and the state of the country; he was educated among the people, and lived in their midst.]

47,949. Is it the case that the landlord who wished to break up a large sized farm into ten holdings would have to face a very considerable additional expense in building the dwelling-houses and steadings that would be required for these ten holdings?—No.

47,950. But somebody would have to put them up?—Not in the least, I look at it in this light; at first the crofters would pay interest, not the proprietor at all, and through time the whole would be paid; then the whole would fall to the proprietor and to the crofter.

47,951. But you are looking too far ahead: I want you simply to look at the initial cost of the experiment. Somebody would have to find £2000 to set up these ten dwelling-houses and steadings, is that not the case?—Certainly.

47,952. Mr Macleod.—Do you know anything of a place called Aberarder?—Yes.

47,953. Can you give us any particulars about it; how is it occupied at the present time?—I am not very sure about that, because I was told that Aberarder was grazed, rented for grazing to Sir John Ramsden.

47,954. Perhaps you could tell us first who is the proprietor?—Cluny Macpherson; it is in the parish of Laggan.

47,955. Can you tell me the extent of it?—Not exactly, but I can give you an idea how many miles are on the road: it will be between five and six miles long.

47,956. What would be the average breadth then?—About the same.

47,957. And you understand it has been let as a grazing to Sir John Ramsden?—So I was told; but there are some here who could give you the exact information.

47,958. Can you tell me how it was occupied in your memory?—I remember one Sinton a farmer there, and I was told one Macpherson had it before his time. After Sinton it was one Purdie who had it.

47,959. Putting it shortly, has it always been occupied as a sheep farm within your recollection?—Yes.

47,960. How was it occupied before it was a sheep farm,—do you know that, or did you ever hear it from your father or grandfather?—Yes, part of it; there was a croft on this end called Dubh-loch Croom,—a good croft; and at Aberarder there was another; it was a kind of township as far as I can remember, between the west and the east, and Loch Crunachan and all these coming into it.

47,961. Have you any knowledge as to whether the small tenants that were in that place left it of their own will, or were forcibly removed?—In my opinion, they were forcibly removed: there is a man living here,—but he is blind now,—who saw them there; he was in their houses.

47,962. Is that man here to-day?—He is in the village here; you may send for him if you like,—William Mackintosh: his son told me that his memory is as strong as ever. He would give you full information about the people who were living there. In Shirramore there were sixteen crofters forced out.

47,963. We have just been told that Mr William Mackintosh cannot attend: what have you heard from him?—I was told by his son that when he was a boy he was in the house of one of the crofters who lived in Aberarder farm.

47,964. But what I want information about is whether these tenants left of their own free will?—I cannot say as to that.

47,965. The Chairman.—It appears from the Valuation Roll that the lodge and offices of Aberarder are let at a rent of £70, the shootings at a rent of £600, and the deer forest of Aberarder at a rent of £500. Now, there is just one thing I would like to ask and it is this: do you know whether the crofters of Badenoch possess any hill pasture at present?—Oh, yes, and good hill pasture too.

47,966. A considerable stretch of it?—Yes.

47,967. Have all the crofters in Badenoch hill pasture?—Not all of them; there are two or three over there in Glenfeshie whose hill pasture was cut away from them in Mackintosh of Mackintosh's deer forest some years ago: but they have an outlet to the foot of that hill pasture. But over on this side here, on Belleville's estate, they have very good hill pasture; and the same is the case with Sir John Ramsden's land west there in Crathie,—very good hill pasture.

47,968. Then, does there not exist any desire for additional hill grazing by the crofters in the area you have been speaking of?—Yes; some of them would require to have more arable.

47,969. They are desirous more for additional arable than for additional grazing?—Some of them, and others would rather have the pasture.

Kingussie. — Donald Cattanach.

DONALD MACPHERSON, Newtonmore (74)—examined.

Donald Macpherson.

47,970. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

47,971. How were you occupied when you were a younger man?—I was a shepherd.

47,972. Where were you engaged as a shepherd?—Over at Knappach.

47,973. Are there any particular lands you wish to bring under our notice?—Yes, the land at Glenbanchor, where my father had a croft.

47,974. Have you come here as an individual, or were you appointed a delegate?—I was sent for.

47,975. Do you remember crofters living at Glenbanchor?—Yes.

47,976. How many?—I remember nine living there.

47,977. Was there a township?—Yes.

47,978. On whose estate is it?—The estate of Belleville.

47,979. How is that land occupied now?—It is under sheep.

47,980. Is it part of a sheep farm?—Part of the farm of Banchor.

47,981. Is it in your opinion suitable for occupation by crofters now?—Well, it would not do in small crofts; it would not pay.

47,982. What size of holdings would require to be formed there in order to pay?—They would need to be a good size larger than they were before.

47,983. Much larger than the old crofts?—Yes.

47,984. Some arable land and hill grazing besides?—There was arable land and grazing too.

47,985. But could there be self-sustaining holdings formed there?—Oh, yes; but it is late, and it is high.

47,986. Then, is it your opinion that it is a suitable place or an unsuitable place for new holdings being formed?—There could be good sized holdings, and pasture along with them.

47,987. Then, would you be in favour of holdings being made there, or do you think it is not a very suitable place?—It would do for large holdings but not for small crofts as was before.

47,988. What rent do you have in your mind when you speak of a large size?—To have one in place of two of the crofts.

47,989. You would have a holding twice the size of the holdings you used to know?—Yes.

47,990. What size would that be?—Twenty acres or so.

47,991. Of arable land?—Yes.

47,992. Both for sheep and cattle?—For sheep and cattle.

47,993. What rent would you propose for such a holding?—I could not put a rent on it; it would be according to the times and the prices.

47,994. Is there any other piece of ground that you could bring under our notice for consideration besides this Glenbanchor?—There is plenty land through the country that is not taken in.

47,995. Just try and mention the particular places?—There are large farms all round.

47,996. We have heard a great deal since we began this meeting about these farms: do you corroborate the evidence that has been given to us about them?—Yes.

47,997. Is there any special matter you would like to call our attention to, or may we take you generally as agreeing with the evidence that has been given by the preceding witnesses?—Yes, I agree with what was said.

47,998. Do you want to add anything to it?—Nothing that I know; I would answer any questions.

47,999. If there is any particular piece of land that you know specially about and would like to direct our attention to, we should be glad to hear you; on the other hand, if we may take you as generally concurring with what has been said, we need not detain you?—I think it has been told plainly already that the large farms here have plenty of land and I need not go over that again.

Kingussie.

Donald Macpherson.

John Macdonald.

JOHN MACDONALD, Mason, Newtonmore (36)—examined.

48,000. The Chairman.—You are a mason at Newtonmore?—Yes.

48,001. Do you desire to speak about any particular lands?—A little about Glenbanchor, just what I know. My father was a crofter there at one time; he died when I was only nine years of age, and my mother strove hard to keep this poor place going for our living, but by the time I was seventeen years of age we were turned out. I was the oldest of the family; there were four of us, and we were turned out just when we were getting fit to work the place.

48,002. Who was your landlord?—Belleville. The rent was raised two years before we were evicted. We had been paying £20, and it was raised to £23, 10s.; the crofters never went against that, they paid it without remonstrance.

48,003. Were you in arrear of rent at that time?—No, quite free; there was not a penny of arrear on the place at all.

48,004. What was done with the holding?—It was put under a sheep farmer.

48,005. Then, were there any other removals in the vicinity of your place?—Five crofters in all were turned out.

48,006. Where did your family go to?—We came into Newtonmore, and some of us started a trade; a brother of mine has been shepherding, and two of us went to the mason trade.

48,007. All these holdings have been consolidated into a sheep farm?—Yes.

48,008. And carried on as a sheep farm since?—Yes.

48,009. Were they very suitable holdings when you remember them?—Oh, yes: some years I saw very good crops, and other years very middling.

48,010. I suppose each of the holdings consisted of arable land and outrun, and some hill grazing?—Yes.

48,011. Is it your opinion that such holdings, or rather large holdings, could now be formed there?—Yes: I think if it was made into three large holdings it would do very well.

48,012. Would occupants be got for these holdings who would undertake them without outside assistance?—It is my opinion that they could.

48,013. Were there good crops grown on your holding?—Yes, I saw very good crops.

48,014. Corn and potatoes?—Corn and potatoes and turnips.

48,015. And barley?—Yes; but in other years the crop was very poor.

48,016. Did your holding in your recollection suffer much from frost?—Oh, yes, some years. The year before we were evicted we repaired all our houses; by this time we had got over our troubles. Our houses were, of course, poor houses, thatched houses, but we put new wood into them, which we bought in Glentruim and carted for seven miles. We had just got that winter's use of it when we were turned out at the term, and never got a penny of compensation.

48,017. How had your holding been made: had you got arable land, or had it been reclaimed?—Oh, yes, we had arable land.

48,018. But had it been made arable by your family's exertions, or was it arable when you got it?—It was my grandfather who went there first.

48,019. Did he get a holding there, or did he make the holding?—He got a holding.

48,020. Did he extend the arable?—I don't think he did.

48,021. Did he get a building, a house?—There was a house there when he went.

48,022. I daresay he repaired it from time to time?—Yes.

48,023. Is there any other land that you know about?—No, all the rest was before my day, and I do not wish to speak except of what I know clearly. Kingussie.

John Macdonald.

48,024. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I understand you were seventeen years of age when your mother lost her croft?—Yes.

48,025. Did you go to the mason trade then?—Yes, I commenced the mason trade at once whenever we were clear of the place.

48,026. Then you have had no actual experience of farming since you were seventeen years of age?—Yes, I could work a farm right enough.

48,027. But have you, as a matter of fact, done any farming since you were seventeen?—Not any.

48,028. Mr Sutherland.—You are in Newtonmore now, are you?—Yes.

48,029. How did the crops that you had in Glenbanchor compare with the crops you have now in Newtonmore?—Some years they were quite as good as in Newtonmore, but in other years the frost, of course, is more felt in Glenbanchor.

48,030. When there is no frost in other places there is frost in Glenbanchor?—Yes, and I think it is stronger in Glenbanchor.

48,031. Probably, according to the altitude. Is the difference in height very great?—Yes, a good bit.

48,032. But you always had crops: you always turned it up?—Yes, of course, but there would be years when we would have to buy seed. But there was splendid pasture along with it.

48,033. What stock had you there?—150 sheep.

48,034. Each, or altogether?—I think we had the largest number there.

48,035. But you had 150 sheep stock of your own?—Yes, with 6 cows and a pair of horses.

48,036. Have you a feu at Newtonmore?—Yes.

48,037. Have you any land there?—Just a tenement, just a feu.

48,038. Did you build a house at Newtonmore when you went there?—Yes, ourselves.

48,039. Without getting any compensation for the old place?—Without any.

48,040. How long ago is that?—Eighteen years in May last.

48,041. And is it still in one holding now?—Yes, it is all under sheep yet.

48,042. When did it go out of cultivation?—We heard to-day that it was cultivated at one time and that it is not now. Was it allowed to go out of cultivation when the people were turned out?—Yes, it has not been cultivated since.

48,043. The cultivation ceased when the people left?—Yes, I believe there was only one offer for the place, and if it had not been for that offer we would have been in it to-day.

48,044. Had you a lease?—Yes, but the lease expired two years before the crofters were turned out.

48,045. And the leases were not renewed?—No, whenever the leases expired the rent was raised. In our case the increase was £3, 10s.

48,046. So that is an explanation of where part of the present population of Newtonmore came from?—Yes.

48,047. Where did the rest of them come from?—I cannot say.

48,048. Do you know any other holder of a feu in Newtonmore at present who was a crofter formerly in the country round about?—Yes, there are some in Newtonmore who were crofters in Strone and that district; but I don't think they were evicted; they left of their own accord.

48,049. You said you do not know any other land to which you wish to call our attention?—No; all that I know concerning any other part is that my paternal grandfather had a farm in Glenmore called Biglan. He was evicted out of that along with several others to make room for deer and he went to Glenbanchor.

48,050. When was Newtonmore made, do you know?—I cannot say.

48,051. On whose estate is it?—On Belleville's estate.

48,052. So that you were only shifted from one part of the Belleville estate to the other?—I do not know whose estate Glenmore is on.

Kingussie.
John Macdonald.

48,053. You erected that house at Newtonmore upon a feu?—Yes; we just bought the feu and built the house.

48,054. And does the land which you got, as we were told to-day, follow as a right to the feu,—has every feuar got a piece of land?—Just ¼ acre I suppose.

48,055. What is the price of the ¼ acre?—We pay just 10s.: that is at the rate of £2 an acre.

48,056. For the arable land you have?—For the feu: we have not got other arable land. We have two feus.

48,057. How many apartments are in your house?—There are two properties, two houses.

48,058. But are the houses built on feus at Newtonmore of much the same size?—There are different sizes, some a storey and a half, and others two, while some have only one storey.

48,059. Have they generally got slated roofs?—Yes, except three or four.

48,060. Are they as good houses as you would expect on a small farm, or as would be necessary on a small farm?—Yes, I think the smallest would suit very well on a small farm.

48,061. And did they build them without any assistance?—Yes.

48,062. Do you know any reason why they should not build them also on small farms if they got them,—equally good houses?—I think it could be done.

48,063. It was done in the past?—Yes.

48,064. Mr Maccallum.—You know Glenbanchor better than the rest of the land round about here, but you must have a general knowledge of the country. Do you think there are many other places fully better for occupation by crofters than Glenbanchor?—Yes, many that are far better.

48,065. I suppose you agree with the evidence that was given by the other witnesses, so far as your knowledge goes?—Oh, yes: of course, they are older and have more knowledge.

48,066. Now, when you find a place that is suitable for a small holding, do you think there would be any great difficulty in getting the buildings put up?—In a good few cases I know that plenty would build if they got a piece of land at a fair rent.

48,067. They would more readily do that if they had security of tenure, I suppose?—Oh, yes.

48,068. And a fair rent fixed by some impartial tribunal?—Yes.

48,069. Now since this land has gone out of cultivation, has it deteriorated in quality, do you think? Would Glenbanchor, for instance, keep as large a stock now as it did at the time when it was converted into a sheep farm?—Oh, yes, I think the ground is much better; it is the better of the rest. It is bound to be stronger now for crop and pasture and everything.

48,070. You think the arable land is quite as good?—Yes, and better.

48,071. But is it not your opinion that if land is out of cultivation for a long time the pasture deteriorates?—A few years would take it in right enough.

48,072. It might be better perhaps for re-cultivation; but being out of cultivation for a long time surely deteriorates the pasture?—Yes, for a few years. Of course, it would be seven years before it would be all under cultivation, the same as it was before.

48,073. Then, do you think there would be any loss at all to the proprietor in the process of breaking up the large farms into moderately-sized ones, or do you think he would be compensated by the increased value of the land and that it would be more easily let?—I don't think it would be a loss to the proprietor; I think we were paying more rent for Glenbanchor than the proprietor is getting for it now.

48,074. The lands would be very much more valuable in small holdings with suitable steadings on them, than as presently occupied?—That is my belief, at any rate.

48,075. The Chairman.—Do you remember how many acres arable were in your holding?—About 17 acres arable is what we had.

48,076. And you had an outrun?—Yes.

48,077. And had you hill grazing besides?—Yes.

Kingussie.
John Macdonald.

48,078. What was the extent of the hill grazing?—I could not say: it was in common.

48,079. It was held in common by your father and the other crofters in the immediate neighbourhood?—Yes.

48,080. But you do not remember its extent?—No.

48,081. Do you remember the total stock upon the grazing,—first cattle and then sheep?—I have not got it, but I could easily make it up.

48,082. Just make it up and let us have it in the course of the day.* Can you tell me what were the rents of the other holdings where the removals took place, when your rent was raised to £23, 10s.?—My uncle was paying exactly the same rent: it was raised from £17 to £23, 10s.

48,083. And what about the others?—There was another Macdonald who was paying £12 I think, and it was raised to £14, 10s.; and a cousin of his again, Alexander Macdonald, I think, was the name, who was paying £12 also, and it was raised to £14, 10s.

48,084. Anybody else?—There was another crofter, Macpherson by name; I think it was £19 he was paying, and it was raised to somewhere above £20.

48,085. Are these all the tenants who were in Glenbanchor?—No; there was another place called Dial'-chaoirinn which now goes under the name of Glenbanchor. The tenants were named Kennedy and they paid £40 of rent, which would make the rent in cash £126 when under crofters.

48,086. Your view is that the rent now paid is lower than what was got from these individuals when they had these separate holdings?—Oh, yes, much less. The present rent is £120.

48,087. Mr Maccallum.—What became of the other tenants who were evicted; did they get farms elsewhere on the estate?—Some of them got a croft, and most of them are dead now.

48,088. Did most of them get some other place on the estate?—One of them got another place; all the rest went into villages.

48,089. Mr Macleod.—Were you forcibly removed, or did you go away yourselves?—Of course, we were forcibly removed; we could not get the place; it was advertised.

48,090. But, I suppose, you went away yourselves when you saw you could not get it?—Oh, yes, we never went against them.

MALCOLM CATTANACH, Slater, Newtonmore (74)—examined.

Malcolm Cattanach.

48,091. The Chairman.—Are you a relative of Donald Cattanach?—Yes, he is a son of my half-brother.

48,092. Do you carry on a trade at Newtonmore?—Yes, I carry on the slating trade.

48,093. Had you been a shepherd in previous years?—No; I was born at Milton, on the estate of Mr Macpherson.

48,094. Have you a written statement?—Yes. Glenbanchor is the first farm that Mr Macgillivray has along with the Mains of Banchor. In Croft-Còinneach there were formerly three tenants; in Milton, where I was born and brought up till the age of twelve or thirteen when I came down to Newtonmore, there were four tenants; in Lurgan three tenants; in Dalchully three tenants; in Easterton of Glenbanchor four tenants, and in Westerton of Glenbanchor five tenants. Fifteen families once occupied this place now in the possession of Mr Macgillivray, and never has a plough been put on the land for fifteen or sixteen years.

48,095. What was the date when these changes took place?—A great many of them were before my time; I don't know the date of those in Glenbanchor, but I have bought corn at the sale of some of them.

48,096. How long ago is it since the last of them took place?—Ten or fifteen years, perhaps.

48,097. How many removals took place ten or fifteen years ago?—Dalchully three, Easterton four, Westerton five; these all took place ten or fifteen years ago.

* See page 1171.

Kingussie.
Malcolm Cattanach.

48,098. And do they now form part of the farm of Glenbanchor?—Yes, all these cottars were there cultivating the land, and I was counting that they were very contented when I was cutting the corn there. I have seen the cattle of those who were there at the time; it was one widow, I think she left of her own will.

48,099. And all that land is now consolidated with the farm?—It does not belong to the farm at all; it never belonged to Banchor. It was tenanted by these crofters.

48,100. What was done with it when the crofters were removed?—It fell into the hands of Mr Macgillivray.

48,101. And became part of his farm?—Yes, but it is under sheep.

48,102. Is it not worked along with his farm?—No.

48,103. Is it held under a separate lease?—A separate lease altogether. The sheep never followed Banchor.

48,104. What is it used for now?—Sometimes I go up there perhaps to fish, and I see about forty black cattle there in summer, when the sheep are up on the higher hills. He enclosed part of the hill with a fence to keep the tenants out; he has part of his hill pasture along with some tenants, and he encloses the lower part to protect him from the other tenants encroaching upon him. This lower ground that was cultivated is one of the best places in Badenoch for grass, and he always takes up these cattle,—forty, or perhaps a few more. He lets down the sheep, particularly the lambs, when it comes to this season of the year when he wishes to take the lambs from the sheep; they are brought down to this lower part of the hill.

48,105. Is it very suitable for that purpose?—Very suitable.

48,106. It is good ewe ground?—Yes, the lower part of it.

48,107. I gather from what you say that that land would be suitable for new holdings now?—Quite so. I was in Milton, and I remember perfectly being in the mill along with the miller and his son and some one who had grain in the mill at the time; and the miller then said that Banchor made more meal that year than Strianan.

48,108. What is the character of the soil?—Very deep and good.

48,109. When crops were grown there, were they good in fair weather?—Yes, and as to the pasture, there is not another land in all Badenoch that would beat it. The old fashion was to let it run out, to strengthen itself; and then Glenbanchor was as good as any other part of Badenoch, if not better.

48,110. You submit that land for our consideration now?—Yes.

48,111. It is land which you think we ought to inspect?—Yes. I would be very happy to get a part of it.

48,112. Would you be willing to take up a holding?—I would.

48,113. How many acres arable would you desire to have in your holding?—I have five sons, of whom three are unmarried, and I would like very much to get a place for them. Three of them carry on the slating, but there is so much competition in the slating that I would like, if Providence will, that I should see them in a better position.

48,114. And could you take a holding without assistance?—I could.

48,115. How many acres arable would you apportion to each individual holding?—Three or four years ago another son of mine and other two offered to take Banchor and pay a forehand rent: I believe we offered £15 more than Mr Macgillivray, but still he got it. That was £110, and I would willingly take a place of say the half of that rent.

48,116. What size would that be?—I think Banchor is about one hundred and twenty acres arable or so: I would be very glad to take sixty or seventy acres if I could get it.

48,117. At what rent?—Just at a fair rent. I have been working to all the landlords in Badenoch, and I have a warm heart to each of them, particularly to those that I count to be Highlanders.

Kingussie.
Malcolm Cattanach.

48,118. Now, would you have any hesitation in taking such holdings, or allowing your sons to take such holdings, notwithstanding the low prices that have prevailed of late?—If we could get a lease, or I would rather say if it could fall in under the Crofters Act.

48,119. You mean a fair rent fixed?—Yes.

48,120. And the fixity of tenure conferred by Act of Parliament?—Yes, just so.

48,121. You have in view a holding with a rent fixed by a tribunal, and fixity of tenure under an Act of Parliament?—Yes. I would gladly put up the house myself.

48,122. You would put up the house entirely at your own expense, and stock the farm and carry it on as a regular holding?—Yes.

48,123. Do you know what led to these evictions that took place ten or fifteen years ago? They are much more recent than almost any evictions I have heard of during the last eight years?—Well, there was one in particular, Macdonald, a shepherd that came from the Braes of Laggan, and there were two widows: the one widow gave up her house in Easterton of Glenbanchor; the other widow was uncommonly industrious,—that is the mother of the lad that was examined,—and they were all in middling condition, perhaps this Macdonald had been a little behind, and as we have been told, this Macgillivray understood that some of the tenants were not in the best position, and he made it up with this Macdonald,—I cannot say whether this is true or not, but that is what was going through the country,—he made it up with Macdonald, if he would send a line to Colonel Macpherson giving up the land he (Macgillivray) would take the sheep at valuation and make Macdonald his shepherd: and as the word went, this Macdonald was very deceitful and got them to sign this,—and Macgillivray got the land. That is what I have been told.

48,124. What was the rent of the holding you were in before the eviction took place?—It was £32.

48,125. Did you hold under lease?—There was no lease. My mother died in child-bed when I was nearly five years old, and my eldest brother, Donald, had been learning the slater trade; and another brother of mine died when he was sixteen years of age down at Alvie. My father got a little behind with his rent,—I think the amount was £14,—and he was evicted.

48,126. Do you know any other lands in this neighbourhood that you wish to submit to our attention?—On Mr Macpherson's estate again in Glentruim I knew a man whose children were about my own age. They called him "Watering Tom," because the horses that ran between Dalwhinnie and Pitmain used to get their water there daily, going and coming. That man said that by going up to the knoll at the back of his house, he could count forty-two 'reeks' of tenants, every one of whom had cattle and sheep. I was told a year ago by one of the shepherds in Etteridge, that Major Macpherson, Etteridge, had been at home, and he and this shepherd were one day going to the hill. They went the way of Phoineas and they were up on a knoll above the meal mill. Well, he said, before I went to the army, I could stand here and count thirty tenants within sight of here.

48,127. How is that land occupied now?—It is now under sheep. There were fourteen tenants evicted in one day out of that place, seventy-four or seventy-five years ago.

48,128. What is the name of that place?—They call it Phoineas, and Etteridge, and Lynallan: it is all under a man called Macarthur, who has much more.

48,129. Is that land that we ought to examine and consider?—Yes. You can drive a coach and pair through all the glens and see the waste with your own eyes.

48,130. Can you give us any idea of the extent of land?—No, I cannot say.

48,131. But is it a place where a number of new holdings might be located with good prospect of success?—Yes, there were forty-two tenants there, and even supposing you gave it to the half of that number they might live very comfortably by occupying the hill pasture along with the low pasture.

48,132. Low pasture, hill pasture, and a certain proportion of arable land?—Yes.

48,133. Is there any other land besides what you have mentioned?—I know Allt-ban; I have been working there a good deal. Allt-ban partly belongs to Mackintosh of Mackintosh, and partly to Sir George Macpherson-Grant, and falls into the Feshie from the East, where there was the White Mill or Muileann Bàn, and the Black Mill or Muileann Dubh on Sir George's ground. There is no mill on the burn to-day.

48,134. Is there much land there suitable for cultivation?—There was a good deal over there at Ruthven, and I think there were ten tenants there; my wife was born there.

48,135. Is that land now laid down in permanent pasture?—Partly; it is under the one tenant.

48,135A. His farm is now made up of land which partly at least was at one time occupied by these small tenants?—Yes.

48,136. Do you remember how many small tenants were upon the land that now forms part of Ruthven farm?—There is a place Newton, or Balure as we call it in Gaelic, where there were once three tenants, but now under sheep.

48,137. Is that part of Ruthven?—No, but part of Mr Macpherson, of Belleville, in Glenbanchor. On Ruthven there were nine or ten; I remember carting peats there.

48,138. When were they removed, or when did they leave?—I daresay it would be about forty years ago perhaps. Lieut. Macpherson, or as they called him Lieut. Sandy, had Ruthven and the low ground and the park above; these tenants were up from that again.

48,139. You remember these tenants being on what is now Ruthven farm, and being removed?—Yes, perfectly. West from that again is a place called in Gaelic Druim-dhealgaidh, where there were three tenants in my time.

48,140. Is that part of Ruthven?—That is part of Ruthven now.

48,141. Is there any place else that you can speak of?—Biallid, on Cluny ground.

48,142. How many tenants were there?—They were removed before my days, but I heard it said that between Biallidbeg and Cornach there would be ten or twelve tenants.

48,143. And is that land now under sheep?—Yes.

48,144. Is there any other land you know?—I know Laggan West, and I know every bit of Badenoch.

48,145. Take Laggan: do you remember lands there formerly occupied by small tenants and now by sheep?—Not small tenants, they were removed before I remember: but I was told that in Strathmashie where the lodge is now, the wealthiest tenants in the parish of Laggan were. I have been told that the handsomest man in the Black Watch was one Malcolm Macpherson from opposite the Strathmashie lodge.

48,146. Is that land at Laggan suitable, in your opinion, for occupation now?—Yes, I saw it under big tenants; I saw it under Macnab, and under Macdonald, Shirrabeg, and they were big farmers.

48,147. What rents did they pay?—I cannot say.

48,148. Would they be as much as £100?—Yes, more. There were fourteen tenants out of Shirramore itself: that is a place that was tenanted by small crofters. There were sixteen crofters evicted from Shirramore in one day.

48,149. Is that land now all under sheep?—Yes.

48,150. What is the name of the farm?—It is called Shirramore farm.

48,151. So that in order to the formation of the farms as they now exist, removals took place both of small tenants and of large tenants?—Macdonald of Strathmashie died, and his son died too, and the place fell into the hands of Sir John Ramsden. There was one Kennedy in Shirramore; he would not give the rent Sir John wanted.

48,152. And what happened?—He went away.

48,153. What was done with the land?—The land is in the hands of Sir John, under sheep. Kingussie. Malcolm Cattanach.

48,154. Is that land suitable for occupation now?—Very.

48,155. Is Strathmashie now a deer forest?—I think the lower part of it is under sheep.

48,156. Do you know anything particularly about the deer forests in the neighbourhood?—Yes, I know them all, I have been going through these deer forests while doing slater work.

48,157. You have been a good deal over the ground?—Yes.

48,158. Is there land in any of these forests that you would invite us to consider?—Yes, low down, but not high up: it is more suitable for sheep, I should say.

48,159. Extensive grazings could be formed, but the places are not suitable for occupation by crofters?—Not in the hill, but if they were to get the hill along with the low ground it would be very suitable; there would not be better land in the whole country.

48,160. And do you apply that remark to the forests in this land generally?—Yes, if they got the hill part along with the cultivated land it would be suitable.

48,161. That would be the means of forming successful holdings?—Yes.

48,162. To any considerable extent?—Yes.

48,163. Which forest do you refer to more particularly when you say so?—Well, I know Glenfeshie and Gaick.

48,164. Any other forests?—I am not acquainted with those lower down. I know The Mackintosh's forest up to Cro-clack as we call it.

48,165. And do you apply your observations with regard to land to that forest?—No; the hill pasture there is more suitable I think for sheep, and it is nearer to our ground, to the Glenbanchor ground.

48,166. Would you say that considerable tracts of land are now under forest that are more suited for forest purposes than for sheep grazing or for occupation?—No, but it would be much more suitable for small tenants to have the hill along with the low ground.

48,167. You would rather see that than have them under deer?—I would indeed.

48,168. And would you apply that observation to very considerable altitudes?—Yes.

48,169. Sheep grazing with low ground suitable?—Just so.

48,170. Do you think that would be as profitable to the landlord as the deer forests?—As to the deer forests, I cannot say.

48,171. Do you think that such holdings might be carried on profitably to the landlord as well as to the occupant and tenant?—Yes, and I think that including the shooting, it would pay the landlord better than the way it is now.

48,172. Is there not a good deal of land here under forest that has been under forest for many many years, perhaps for centuries?—I don't know any but in Gaick.

48,173. What about Glenfeshie?—Well, perhaps there would be about forty or fifty years.

48,174. Not more than that?—It might be sixty, but I can hardly think so.

48,175. But Gaick is a very old forest, you say?—Oh yes.

48,176. That is to say it has always been forest as far back as human memory goes?—Yes. It is there that the black Lieutenant An t-Oifigear Dubh was.

48,177. Is there a desire for additional land?—Yes. I have been speaking to Mr Macpherson for years now, and I was always expecting that I would get it, and I expect that I will get it from him yet.

48,178. In regard to Glenfeshie, the Secretary has called my attention to the fact that at the close of the evidence given before Lord Napier's Commission by Sir George Macpherson-Grant, Mr Fraser-Mackintosh puts this question:—'Do you know that Glenfeshie is an 'old Scottish forest mentioned in old Acts of Parliament?' and the answer is 'I believe such is the case.'—That is not correct. I have been going up to Glenfeshie to slate kennels and keeper's houses there. A tenant of the name of Bell told me the number, and, as far as I

Kingussie.
Malcolm Cattanach.

recollect, he said that there were 40 horses in the glen from top to bottom,—crofters' horses. I am not sure about the number, but I know it was uncommonly high.

48,179. But was there not an old small forest of Glenfeshie always forest?—No, I don't think so: it was a shooting place: the Duchess of Bedford had been there for years, in summer time.

48,180. It was a shooting lodge, was it?—A shooting lodge.

48,181. Well, there seems to have been an impression that the forest was mentioned in Acts of Parliament?—Well, that is not right. I know the man that got the sheep,—they call him Ailidh Dubh or Black Sandy; he was in Bail'-Odharaidh.

48,182. Would you say that there are no forests in this quarter older than the present century?—None except Gaick.

48,183. And are some of the forests of recent formation?—Yes.

48,184. Have some of them been made in your recollection?—The whole of them except Gaick.

48,185. Then before that, were these lands all sheep-runs and crofters' holdings?—Mostly crofters' holdings: there were large farms too, no doubt.

48,186. But the land that is now forest was sheep farms intermixed with crofters' holdings and common grazings?—Yes.

48,187. The whole of it?—The whole of it. Every crofter had part of the hill along with his croft.

48,188. They all had a right of grazing on the hill?—Yes.

48,189. And they all put whatever stock they chose upon it?—Each had a number of sheep according to the rent he paid. At our place in Glenbanchor the general rule was six sheep for every £1 of rent.

48,190. That was a kind of souming?—Just so.

48,191. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Supposing it was possible to fill the forests and glens with small farmers, I suppose it would have a good effect on local tradesmen, such as masons and slaters?—It would, and it would relieve many a hungry belly from being hungry.

48,192. You are a slater yourself to trade?—Yes.

48,193. Have you ever been a practical farmer?—Not a practical farmer; but I got some 14 acres, more than half of which was waste ground or moss, and my sons took it in. Mr Donald Grant, Belleville's factor, who gave it to me is here; he knows all about me and about the land.

48,194. But you have made your living mostly out of your trade as a slater, rather than out of farming?—Yes, by both.

48,195. More as a slater, however, than as a practical farmer?—No; because there is so much opposition in the slating trade that there is not much profit in it.

48,196. Have you made as much then by farming as by slating?—Of course, whatever time my sons could spare for slating, they would employ it in taking contracts, the same as we do now.

48,197. But pardon my pressing the question: have you made more during your life out of slating than out of farming?—I have, because I had no farm.

48,198. Mr Sutherland.—Where was the farm you spoke of having?—I had no farm; it is acres that I have. It is not in the name of acres that I have them, but they are down below Newtonmore. I have two one storey houses in Newtonmore.

48,199. Are you a feuar?—I am.

48,200. Who built the house?—One was built by one Donald Cattanach, and the other by James Macpherson, who was a grieve in Biallid; and I bought them from their sons.

48,201. But they built the houses themselves?—They built them with stone and lime, perhaps seven feet high, and thatched them with divots and straw. I put a little more height on them, and slated them.

48,202. Where were your people before you went to Newtonmore?—Up in Milton of Banchor.

48,203. Now, about this Gaick forest: there has been statements made that it was an old forest, and you say that it was not?—I did not; I say it was always a forest, before ever I was born. I don't know particularly whether it was for deer, but there were deer there before I was born.

Kingussie.
Malcolm Cattanach.

48,204. Did you hear to-day in the evidence given by the previous witnesses, that cattle and horses were summered on Gaick?—I believe they were; because the whole of the district was not so very precious at that time as it is now.

48,205. Is it within your knowledge that what was called a deer forest in old times is a very different thing from what is called a deer forest to-day?—I don't know. But whether it was a deer forest or no, when the 'Black Lieutenant' went there, there were deer on it; it was to get deer that he and his party went there at New Year, and were overtaken by a heavy storm.

48,206. Did you ever hear that there were cattle and horses summered on it at that time?—I think there were; so far as I recollect it was open, not like what it is to-day. There were sheilings as they call them, bothies where people used to live while summering their cattle.

48,207. And the deer were there as well?—The deer most likely would keep to the higher part of the hills. When I used to be there slating, I have seen the deer come down to the dale after dark.

48,208. Have you any knowledge of the fact that a forest as it was called in the old times, to which reference has been made here, was a very different thing from a deer forest to-day?—I don't know; deer were very scarce at that time, but they are very plentiful now, and they may give the place another name if they like.

48,209. But as you know, the essential part of a deer forest to-day is that every animal is excluded from it except deer. Was that the way in the old times?—No, not at all.

48,210. Are you aware of the existence of other old forests in other parts of Scotland?—I know nothing about anything but the deer forests in Badenoch, except what I read in the papers.

48,211. Do you know any of the old forests that ever were called deer forests?—I heard of deer forests that the Duke of Athole had.

48,212. Did you ever hear it called the Athole deer forest?—I don't think I did.

48,213. Did you ever hear it called the Athole forest?—Oh, yes, that is it, just in common talk.

48,214. Are you aware that an old forest as they had them then could not be erected without a Royal Charter?—I don't think they went that length with it; I think they generally just had it under common.

48,215. Don't you know that the forests acknowledged in these Acts of Parliament were Royal forests?—Yes, I believe they were paying very dear.

48,216. The point is, who had the right to make a deer forest?—I don't know; likely Queen Victoria.

48,217. But the present deer forests are not made by special order of Queen Victoria?—No, I don't think so; by the special order of the proprietors.

48,218. Are you aware whether this forest of Gaick is a forest that was made by Royal Charter, or a forest made by a modern proprietor?—I think it was never done by Royal Charter: I think it was open to all.

48,219. But are you satisfied that it is a fact, so far as you can judge and understand, that when Gaick was a forest in the olden times, there were cattle and horses summered on it?—To the best of my belief and recollection there were.

48,220. Now, as to those other places that you referred to; you spoke of Phoineas; supposing we were to drive by road from Kingussie, we could drive up through the whole of the glen and see the land for ourselves?—Yes; you could drive a coach and pair there as far as Dalwhinnie if you like; it is on the Preas-Mucrach as they call it. One Mr Macdonald who has Crubinbeg has Crubinmore, and he has what they call the Preas-Mucrach up from that.

48,221. Could we see a large proportion of the land that you refer to, by driving up the road that I mentioned?—Yes.

48,222. What other land would you suggest our inspecting?—You could go up to Glenbanchor and see it, and you could go west and see Sir John's lands, the lower ground, on both sides. The Spey comes north this way, and the road to Fort-William the other way.

48,223. But just tell us whether we can see a great portion of the land that has been mentioned here to-day within easy distance from Kingussie?—Yes. If you like I will go and point out every bit of it.

48,224. Was it your father who held the farm of £32 rent?—No, there were four tenants. My grandfather was there, and had been there before the estate came into the hands of Mr Macpherson. My father was the first tenant that paid a shilling to 'Ossian' Macpherson for rent. They left Ballachroan where my father and grandfather were; they went east to Raitts, as they call it, near Belleville.

48,225. Where was 'Ossian' Macpherson born?—He belonged to this country.

48,226. Do you know the exact place?—I don't know whether it was Ruthven,—I am not sure.

48,227. Do you know if the place where James Macpherson was born is still inhabited?—I am not sure. I am told it was in Nuide; it was there he lived before he went away from this country.

48,228. Are there any people in Nuide?—One farmer; there were four or five when I was young.

48,229. Did you say that the rent of the whole of that township was £32?—Yes.

48,230. Did they pay it together?—Each man paid his own share.

48,231. And did you say that they were behind with their rent?—I say that my father was behind, about £14.

48,232. Do you know how the rest stood?—No, I do not know. I think another man was put away the same time as my father,—one, James Mackintosh, who had come in my uncle's place. When my mother's father came to Milton, when his son married, he gave the half of his place to his son; and when my father married hi daughter he gave him the other half that he had kept in his own hands. So my uncle and my father were both there; but my uncle died, and one Mackintosh, from the parish of Alvie, came in his place. I don't know whether Mackintosh was behind a little with his rent like my father, but he was evicted at the same time.

48,233. Was it one farm that was made out of the place when they were all turned out?—Yes, and Lairg and Croft Coinneach were added to it.

48,234. Did the new farm that was made consist only of the land from which these people who were paying £32 of rent were evicted?—Croft-Còinneach and Lairg were along with it.

48,235. How much rent was charged for the land after it became a new farm?—I cannot say; it was Lairg and Milton and Croft-Còinneach all put together.

48,236. Then there is no way of ascertaining whether it paid more rent as a big farm than it did before?—You can just look to the rental book and see it there.

48,237. Mr Maccallum.—You told us with regard to these deer forests that they were pastured by the cattle and sheep belonging to crofters?—Belonging to the nearest tenants.

48,238. And you think it would be to the advantage of the tenants to get back the pasture?—Yes, partly; it is very high, but still in summer it would be beneficial to crofters to have it along with the low ground.

48,239. As they had it before?—Just so.

48,240. I think you also expressed the opinion that that could be done without any great loss to the proprietor,—that new holdings could be formed which would participate in the pasture of the deer forests, and that these could pay such rents that the landlord would not suffer?—No, taking into account the rent paid by the shooting tenant for the grouse I think it would be just as beneficial for the landlord as it would be any other way.

48,241. Supposing the deer forests were done away with and the land given back for pasture again, there would be a valuable sporting rent after all?—Yes, there would. The grouse would be there, you know, and it is a splendid place for grouse.

48,242. You think the grouse rent and the pasture rent would together be equal to the rent got for the place as a deer forest?—I would think so.

48,243. Can you tell me whether the proprietors have been put to a great deal of expense in building houses for these deer forests and in building the lodges occupied by the sporting tenants?—Gaick did not cost very much, it is a very old house, I have been repairing it several times. But there are some that cost more.

48,244. On some of the deer forests, are there houses that cost a large some of money?—Well, the Glenfeshie Lodge would not be a very expensive one; it would cost perhaps from £500 to £600, or even it might have cost as much as £1000 I daresay.

48,245. Do you think that the proprietors have paid more attention to the needs of the shooting tenants than to the small holders of land?—I do: I know that the want of their land is the cause of all the misery and discontent in the Highlands.

48,246. These forests you say have been formed within your own recollection?—Yes. Glenfeshie was formed perhaps forty or fifty years ago. I told you of the man called Ailidh Dubh or Black Sandy, who was in a place called Bail'-Odharaidh next to Kincraig. It was he who got the sheep, and he got a year and a half or two years' credit for them; and that was the first thing that put him on his feet. He was paying £40, I believe, for Bail'-Odharaidh, and I believe it was said that he had only £40 in the world when he took it. By getting credit for the sheep he was able to keep the place and make some money there. But places were not so high rented at that time as they are to-day, in general.

48,247. Then concurrently with the formation of the deer forest, has the population of Badenoch very much decreased?—Very much indeed. I remember when I used to go to church as a boy, the number of people young and old that came from Raitts to attend the Established Church would fill one part of it. Then in Glentruim again, I had the contract of the school house, and I happened to be up slating; and one of the scholars named Angus Macpherson—he is now west at Lagg I think—said 'Well, Malcolm, many is the race 'that I had through these vaults playing hide and seek: 'we were often very nearly 100 scholars but we never 'quite reached that number.'

48,248. And how many scholars are there in that district now?—Perhaps there may be half a dozen or a dozen.

48,249. The Chairman.—Do you remember the lands of Gallovie?—Yes.

48,250. And the lands of Shirramore?—I knew some men who went there, and when I went there along with my brother to slate a new building for the man that put them away,—Macdonald was his name and he was getting a house and steading put up,—I saw a great many houses on both sides of the road.

48,251. Was Shirramore occupied by crofters?—Yes; there were sixteen of them, I was told, evicted in one day.

48,252. And what about Shirrabeg?—One Macnab was there, but there was one in it in my recollection.

48,253. Then Dalchully?—There was one tenant there, a Macnab also.

48,254. And is there another place called Blargiebeg?—That is part of Dalchully now.

48,255. May I take it that all these places were formerly occupied by small tenants?—Yes.

ALEXANDER CATTANACH, Mason, Newtonmore (43)—examined.

48,256. The Chairman.—What is your occupation?—I am a mason.

48,257. Have you a feu at Newtonmore?—Yes.

48,258. Are you a relative of the witness who has just been examined?—Yes, a distant relative.

48,259. Where was your father located?—My father had a croft near Newtonmore.

48,260. Have you come here to speak as an individual or as a delegate?—As an individual.

Kingussie. — Alexander Cattanach.

48,260A. What is it you desire particularly to lay before us?—I just wish to corroborate generally what has been stated.

48,261. With regard to the farms and the forests?—Yes. There are too many large farms, in my opinion, and no small farms or small holdings in the market.

48,262. May I take it then that you are in favour of the formation of an additional number of small holdings?—Yes.

48,263. With arable land and grazing?—Yes.

48,264. Do you think that if such holdings were formed they would be readily taken up?—Yes, I have no doubt of it.

48,265. Is that a feeling which prevails in this locality?—Yes, especially about Newtonmore. People have been evicted into there from Glenbanchor and several other parts of the country and they cannot get hold of a piece of land; we cannot get an acre for love or money. Those that have an acre pay about three times as much as the big farmer adjoining. We pay from £1 to £1, 10s. of rent per annum.

48,266. Is that for arable land?—Yes, per acre.

48,267. And is that higher than the neighbouring farm?—Yes, I believe the neighbouring farms are rented at about 10s. back and fore.

48,268. What are the names of the farms adjoining?—The farm of Banchor was supposed to be given out in acres to the village of Newtonmore at one time; when the village was laid out for feus, they were supposed to get all the arable land of the farm, and there is no other industry for them there.

48,269. Then, do you say there is a serious restriction upon the purchase of land at Newtonmore?—There seems to have been, because this County Council could not acquire it, owing to some difficulty in the Acts.

48,270. Were steps taken to acquire land for new holdings, do you know?—Yes. I was not at home at the time, but there were over twenty who made application to the County Council for allotments.

48,271. And what was the result of the application?—I cannot say exactly, but they did not get the land; it was just put off: it was to be expensive, I understand.

48,272. The process was too expensive?—Yes.

48,273. But when you say there is a desire for land in Newtonmore, is it a desire for small holdings of a very few acres, or a desire for self-sustaining crofts?—There is a demand for both. There are lots of people there who would go in for croft,—the like of myself; I am getting rather old to be travelling the country in search of work. And there are others again in the village who would take up a few acres.

48,274. Suppose you got a croft, could you put up the buildings and enter on the holding without extraneous assistance?—If I got the croft on such conditions that it would keep me living and pay me.

48,275. If you got the croft at a fair rent and had security of tenure, you would venture on the scheme?—Yes.

48,276. And do you say there is abundance of land in the immediate neighbourhood of Newtonmore suitable for that purpose,—both for small holdings and for crofts?—Yes, as good as anywhere.

48,277. And also grazing in the neighbourhood,—high and low grazing?—Yes, there is hill pasture. There are lands in Sir John Ramsden's hands that I reckon would keep from fifty to sixty or seventy tenants.

48,278. These are some of the farms we have been hearing about?—Yes, some of the farms in his own hands, that were occupied by crofters formerly.

48,279. Mr Macleod.—There was an expression of opinion here to-day,—I don't know whether you agree with it,—that the proprietor in your district was very anxious to give land to small tenants: do you agree with that opinion?—No, I do not see why he does not give it, as he has been asked so often.

48,280. Then it is your opinion that it would be necessary that some power should come into force beyond what exists at the present time?—Certainly; there is no other way of acquiring it that I know of.

48,281. Mr Shaw Stewart.—With regard to the land round Newtonmore, which you say is capable of profitable occupation for crofters,—how is it occupied just now? What farms do you refer to?—As large farms and sheep runs take the country as a whole, it is all over, here and there. Adjoining Newtonmore are the farms of Banchor, Glenbanchor, and Biallid.

48,282. Take particularly the land near Newtonmore?—The farm of Banchor is situated quite near Newtonmore.

48,283. What size of farm is that? Can you give us a rough estimate of the acreage?—I think the present tenant pays about £100 of rent. [The Secretary.—According to the Valuation Roll the rent of Banchor farm is £100; and of Glenbanchor £120. These are both occupied by the same tenant, Allan Macgillivray].

48,284. It is those two farms that you specially point to as the arable land near Newtonmore?—Yes.

48,285. If you were to take a croft, would you be prepared to live by that croft and give up your trade? Or would you still continue your trade?—It would depend on the size of the croft I might get; if I could get enough land to keep me I would stick to it all the year round.

48,286. What acreage would that be, for a farm that would keep you occupied to profit all the year?—Probably twenty to thirty or thirty-five acres arable.

48,287. And how many sheep?—One hundred to two hundred sheep, and a pair of horses. Of course, it would not do to make all the holdings the same size, because you could not get people with enough capital to take them all.

48,288. It would require a man of some capital to start a farm of that size?—Yes, and some could be made smaller than that but some larger.

48,289. But if you make them smaller than that, is it possible for the man to live entirely by the croft?—Well, my father lived on ten acres, and brought up nine of a family, and I think he brought them up more comfortably than I could do with four by my trade.

48,290. Did he do any other work besides attending to his croft?—Very little, if any.

48,291. Did he do any?—Very little; perhaps a little at odd times.

48,292. How many years ago are you speaking of,—forty years ago?—No, about thirty,—from twenty-five to thirty.

48,293. Do you consider that farming is now as profitable as it was thirty years ago?—I think it is more so. Of course, last year there was a low price, certainly, and it would not be so profitable then; but taking it on an average I don't see why it should not be as profitable.

48,294. But is it not a fact that in many parts of the country, farmers,—men who have been engaged in farming all their lives,—find it much less profitable now than formerly?—Yes, that is so with large farmers; but the small farmer can hold out when the big farmer cannot.

48,295. Can a small farmer tide over two or three bad seasons running better than a large farmer?—Yes, I believe he can.

48,296. How?—He does all his work himself and he has no expenses to throw away upon other people; he just attends to his own business.

48,297. But if a bad season comes, and he may make nothing out of his stock and crop, he must have some money laid by to keep him going?—A small farmer cannot afford to go through the country in his machine, and that sort of thing; he must stay at home and do his work. I think he would do better than a large farmer who perhaps is farming on borrowed money, and has servants at home to do the work.

48,298. It depends of course, a good deal on how a man does his work. But do you think there would be many people in the neighbourhood of Newtonmore who would be able to stock and farm a holding of the size you mentioned?—There are a few.

48,299. Not many?—I could not say.

48,300. I am not speaking of a very small holding but of the thirty acres arable?—Of course that would be rather large for the majority. There might be a few who would take that,—three or four, or perhaps six.

Kingussie. Alexander Cattanach.

48,301. At any rate, a man would need to have some capital to start with before he could stock his farm and work it profitably?—Most of them have good houses; and probably a few cattle; they may have £200 to £400 worth in buildings, and they could raise some money on that to stock a farm. I know lots of them who would do it if they had the chance.

48,302. Speaking of the farms of Banchor and Glenbanchor, you say the land that might be made arable is good?—The land is good, but it is rather high, and in late seasons like this probably they could not depend much on the grain. But there is always food for their stock,—plenty of straw and turnips.

48,303. But you say the soil is good?—Yes, the soil is good.

48,304. What kind of rent would a man be able to pay for that kind of land, the cultivated land, per acre?—I cannot say: I think they generally paid from 6s. to 10s. or 15s. an acre, and about 1s. 6d. per head of sheep,—that is the way the valuation on the Belleville estate was made; so much put on the acre of arable land, and 1s. 6d. per head of sheep.

48,305. Supposing that land to be formed into these holdings, would their rent be equivalent to the rent now paid?—I think it would be more.

48,306. And you think that the farmers could afford to pay that rent and maintain themselves and their families besides?—They have done it before; the tenants who were evicted from Glenbanchor did it.

48,307. Paying 10s. to 15s. an acre?—I don't know what the acreage was, but on the whole they paid more for the place than the present tenant, putting all the crofters together.

48,308. But do you think they paid 10s. or 15s. an acre for the arable land?—I believe that would be too much for arable land in Glenbanchor; probably 6s. or 7s. would be enough.

48,309. That is a very considerable difference?—Yes.

48,310. Mr Sutherland.—In estimating the value of arable land in Glenbanchor or anywhere else, you mean, of course, along with the arable land, the use of a proportionate amount of pasture?—I think the pasture was valued separately; it was reckoned that the pasture would take so many hundred sheep or cattle, and there was so much per head put on that number, over and above the arable land. I believe that was the rule, but, of course, I cannot tell you the exact figure.

48,311. In the event of facilities being given to form new holdings, you, being a mason, would, of course, be able to do a great deal of the preliminary work of the buildings yourself?—Of course, I could put up my own buildings.

48,312. And I think you stated generally that you could take a new holding without any outside aid?—Yes.

48,313. Are there many in the same position, do you think?—There are a good many.

48,314. The Chairman.—Are the lands of Glenbanchor and Banchor on the same estate as Newtonmore?—Yes.

48,315. Then adjoining Newtonmore, is there a place called Biallid?—Biallid is on the Cluny estate, farther west.

48,316. Quite so, but it is near Newtonmore?—Not very far from it; within a mile.

ohn acdonald.

JOHN MACDONALD, recalled—examined.

48,317. The Chairman.—You send us a note* with regard to the stock held by the crofters who formerly occupied Glenbanchor?—Yes.

Kingussie.

John Macdonald.

48,318. Take first your mother's holding: she was Catherine Macdonald, I think?—Yes.

48,319. How many sheep had she?—One hundred and fifty.

48,320. And how many cows?—Six.

48,321. And followers?—Yes.

48,322. How many horses?—Two horses.

48,323. Then, Donald Macdonald, how many sheep had he?—Just the same.

48,324. And the same number of horses?—Yes.

48,325. Archibald Macdonald; how many sheep had he?—About 100.

48,326. How many cows?—Three cows and followers.

48,327. How many horses?—One horse.

48,328. Next, Alexander Macdonald; what stock had he?—Just the same; 100 sheep, 3 cows and followers, and a horse.

48,329. Then, Ewen Macpherson; what was his stock?—One hundred and eighty sheep, or so, but I am not certain about this number; 6 cows and followers, and two horses.

48,330. That makes a total of 680 sheep, 24 cows and followers, and 8 horses?—Yes.

48,331. You spoke of the rents having been raised. Do you know if, after the rents were raised, repairs were made by any of these crofters upon their dwelling-house or steadings?—Yes, we repaired all our houses.

48,332. Was that in the belief that when the rent was raised you would be allowed to remain in the place?—Yes: the repairs were required, and we never expected to be turned out.

48,333. And it was after these repairs had been going on that the notices were served?—Yes.

48,333A. Did you get any compensation for these repairs?—No.

48,334. Did these crofters pay any rent in addition to the money payment?—I do not quite understand.

48,335. Take the case of your mother: she paid a certain rent in money: was there anything else due for the holding?—No.

48,336. Were there no services; no cartages, or repairs of embankments, or so forth; or do you know about that?—No, I cannot speak to that.*

SIR GEORGE MACPHERSON-GRANT of Ballindalloch, Bart. (55)—examined.

Sir George Macpherson-Grant.

48,337. The Chairman.—I understand that you desire to submit a statement to us; you submitted a full statement to Lord Napier's Commission in 1883?—That is so.

48,338. And you desire us to consider that as a statement which we may take as your statement now?—If you please, to shorten the proceedings; possibly with some additions or explanations which you will allow me to make. I may mention as regards the statement which I had the honour to make before Lord Napier's Commission, it was agreed to by all the proprietors on this slope of the Grampians, with the exception of His Grace the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. At present, I am informed that His Grace has agreed through his representative, who is here, to join with the other proprietors in putting in that statement, if you will be pleased to receive it as coming from him as well as from the other proprietors, and he will thus occupy the same position as the six other proprietors on this side of the Grampians. We are very anxious to give the Commission the fullest information we possibly can regarding the position of these estates and their management; but we have really very little to add to what was said before Lord Napier's Commission, because we do not think things have altered very much during the interval that has elapsed since then. But I am here, so far, representing the other proprietors, and, I desire to make a very short statement on their behalf.

JOHN MACDONALD.

Kingussie, 14*th August* 1894.

* Macdonald has since written explaining that each croft contributed to the estate, five days work of man and horse annually, equal in money value to about £10 per annum.

Kingussie.

Sir George Macpherson-Grant.

I am anxious to answer all questions about my own estate in the fullest manner, and I may also inform your lordship that the representatives of all those other proprietors, to whom I have referred, are also present, and will afford you any information in their power which you may desire to have.

48,339. Do you wish to read a written statement?—I have a few notes here; the following is what I venture to lay before you as representing the other five proprietors:—

'We make reference in the first place to the statement read and the evidence given before Lord Napier's Highlands and Islands Commission at Kingussie in the year 1883, and also two further statements that were made by Mr Allan Macdonald for The Mackintosh. We cover, then, the following forests:—Abernethy, Glenmore, Rothiemurchus, South Kinrara, Invereshie, Glenfeshie, and the forest of Gaick. I have explained that the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the proprietor of Glenmore forest, was not on the former occasion a party to the tendering of the general statement referred to, but he now concurs in it, and he submits a short statement having special reference to the circumstances of his own forest of Glenmore. Very little alteration has taken place with regard to the forests above named since 1883. The total rental is now £88 less than it was in 1883; the local assessments in the several parishes have also varied very slightly, but the difference in the gross amount of the assessment now raised and the amount raised in 1883 is inappreciable.

'To the former Commission it does not appear to have been stated very clearly that not only are all these forests above named unseparated from each other by any fence, but they are also open towards the east and south to the Braemar and Athole deer forests.

'The facts which we shall emphasise before you to-day, my lord, are these:—

'(1) That under any circumstances most of the land within the area of these forests suitable for grazing is suitable for summer only, and that for no longer a period in the average of years than from 1st May till at latest the middle of October.

'(2) That there is already in the districts of these forests land used as summer grazings capable of carrying, and which does carry many more sheep than the districts are capable of wintering.

'In these circumstances, to increase the summer grazing area could be of no real advantage to the districts.

'Perhaps you will allow me to read one or two words as to my own property.

'The Estates of Invereshie and Dalraddy contain 97,700 acres, occupied as follows:—

	Acres.
By Deer Forest, as near as we can make it,	63,600
By Tenants over £30 rental,	32,300
By Tenants £30 rental and under,	1,800
Total,	97,700

'The rentals are apportioned as follows:—

Sporting rental including Deer Forest, Grouse Shootings, and Fishings,	£6012
Fifteen Holdings over £30 rental,	1721
Thirty Holdings £30 and under,	224
Miscellaneous,	303
Total,	£8260

'I was astonished to hear some statements made here to-day about the number of small tenants. There are as I say thirty small tenants, rented under £30 on my property.

'None of these crofters hold under the Crofters Act, that is to say, they have never applied to the Commission nor had their rents judicially fixed. They are all tenants-at-will, their leases ran out, and they did not express any wish to renew them as far as I know, while I for my part had no desire to impose leases on men that might exclude them from benefits which they would otherwise receive.'

Kingussie.

Sir George Macpherson Grant.

48,340. Were the rents re-adjusted, although they did not apply to the Crofters Commission?—Oh, yes, we had made abatements of rent. I must tell you that my estate is a very high-lying one, ranging from 800 to 4149 feet above sea level, more than half the area lying over 1750 feet above the sea. None of the ground afforested lies under the 1000 feet level, there is no arable land enclosed, and it is all remote from centres of population.

'The forest of Glenfeshie and Gaick, comprising 56,600 acres of the whole area under forest, have been frequented by deer from time immemorial. A gentleman who gave evidence a little ago spoke of Glenfeshie as if it were a comparatively new forest, but this is not so. I repeat, very much on the authority of Mr Fraser-Mackintosh, that Glenfeshie is one of the Scottish forests mentioned in the old Acts of Parliament.* The remaining 7000 acres, which has an average barrenness, probably not exceeded in the Grampian range, was cleared and afforested in 1872. This, I may mention, is fully explained in the evidence I gave before Lord Napier's Commission. It was formerly held as commonty by the tenants around its base, and being surrounded by deer forests was extremely difficult and expensive to shepherd, as well as being of trifling value as a grazing. An arrangement satisfactory to the tenants was come to when it was cleared, and no tenant was removed from his holding in doing so.

'Of the holdings over £100 of rent, there are only three that come under the designation of grazing farms, and there is no arable land attached to these farms that could possibly be done without. In fact, the tenants annually spend large sums in wintering their sheep elsewhere, for want of sufficient arable land at home.

'The crofters are mostly maintained by work given them by myself, and in connection with the deer forests. Large sums, averaging about 70 per cent. of their rentals, are annually spent by the sporting tenants, and their contributions in alleviation of the public rates are considerable.

(Signed) Geo: Macpherson-Grant.'

48,340A. You are of opinion that the land could not be more advantageously used than at present?—Not as a whole,—I think not.

48,341. You say that while there are considerable tracts of grazing land, they are suitable only for summer?—Certainly.

48,342. Are there no parts of them that would do for wintering purposes?—Well, I should not like to try and winter sheep at 1750 feet above sea level. As a matter of fact, sheep are not wintered there.

48,343. You say that there were at one time certain tracts of land round the bases of the higher altitudes, in the hands of crofters?—There are now.

48,344. Have the crofters got these lands now?—I cannot say they are crofters, but the tenants are there now, not one man was moved.

48,345. But was any grazing land taken from them?—Yes, I explained that.

48,346. To what extent were lands taken away?—I think I put it down as 7000 acres, but you will find it in the statement I made before the Napier Commission. I explained that it was done in consequence of arrangements of excambion with another proprietor. I got the tenants to remove their sheep, and they received a very large abatement of rent.

48,347. Any further particulars we may wish on

* In Act No. 68 of the year 1685, the following entry occurs:—

'Ratification in favors of George, Duke of Gordon, &c., of the Marquisat, Earldom and Lordship of Huntlie—

'As also the forrests of Badgenoch under written, viz.:—The Forrest of Beinallar, The Forrest of Drumnochter, the Forrest of Gaick, and Forrest of Glenfishie, with the haill rights, privileges, profits and Casualitys belonging to any forrest within the said Kingdom."

Kingussie. — Sir George Macpherson-Grant.

that point, we shall find in the statement you made to Lord Napier's Commission?—Yes.

48,348. We heard a great deal of evidence to-day which I daresay you also heard of certain places,—perhaps I could not call them townships, but old places where crofters formerly lived and resided?—Yes.

48,349. I suppose we may take that evidence as correct in point of fact?—Not on my property, except in one case only, the case of Ruthven; and when the clearances took place there I was not born, or was too young to know anything about it.

48,350. That evidence was correct enough, was it?—I could not say it is correct, without having time to examine it.

48,351. Have there been any communication in recent years between some tenants and proprietors with a view to such tenants acquiring additional land in this quarter?—I can only speak for my own property.

48,352. Has there been any such communications in regard to your own property?—Not to any extent.

48,353. Mr Sutherland.—I shall be satisfied with putting a question with regard to what you have stated just now. The Chairman has already asked you generally, and you have answered definitely, that you see no possibility of forming new holdings on your property?—No, pardon me, I think the Chairman asked me if in my opinion the land was as profitably occupied now as it could be, and I said that, generally speaking, and on a very large scale, it certainly was. I certainly do not dispute that you could plant down a holding in some places that probably might be advantageous to the community, but on a large scale, I think from the altitude at which the land lies, you cannot grow crops with any success, and besides that, I do not see where the expenses are to be met.

48,354. I think you stated that another deficiency that would arise anywhere in forming the holdings was that the sheep would require to be wintered elsewhere?—Yes.

48,355. That is done now, as a matter of fact, is it not?—Yes.

48,356. If smaller holdings were created, could not the tenants of these do the same thing as the present tenants do?—If you diminish the wintering by making small holdings, you enormously diminish the value of the small farms.

48,357. What would be the proportion between the arable and pasture?—I don't quite follow the question.

48,358. Supposing you were to take away from the pasture land by making land arable, what would be the proper proportion to maintain between arable and pasture in a holding?—I cannot answer that question quite in detail. What I mean is this: a sheep farmer in Badenoch at present must send the greater portion of his stock at very great expense to a lower place to winter; that we are all agreed upon. If you are going to limit the pasturage which he presently has for wintering, you force him to send away a large proportion of sheep, and you would therefore materially interfere with the man's profitable occupation.

48,359. But would it not rather tend the opposite way,—would he not rather winter his sheep on the arable land at home?—I do not think you can winter 200 or 300 sheep on twenty or thirty acres of land. I think those sheep must go to the wintering.

48,360. But would not the proportion of arable to grazing be the same upon a small farm as upon a large farm?—It depends on how you cut it up. As far as I can make out, the model holding is one of from 20 to 30 acres of arable, with summering for four or five cows and 200 sheep; well, I don't think you can winter that amount of stock on 20 acres of land. That is all I say.

48,361. You don't dispute the fact that whatever has to be done now to winter sheep could be done if they got smaller holdings?—Provided they have got the money to do it.

48,362. But the conditions would be the same?—I don't agree with you there; I don't think the conditions would be the same at all.

48,363. Even granting that the conditions were not the same, could not the small holder do what the large holder does now,—send his sheep to the low ground to winter?—Of course he could, but I should think he would find it a very troublesome and expensive business, and one which would quite run away with the profits of his summering.

Kingussie. — Sir George Macpherson-Grant.

48,364. Would you be astonished too to hear that it is done in other parts by small holders?—Not if you say so.

48,365. Mr Maccallum.—You speak with regard to all the forests in the district, I think?—I have spoken generally as to the view of those proprietors, stating how the land is occupied at present, and how we think it is best occupied. I can only speak as to my own property in detail, but the other properties are represented here as well.

48,366. And you say there is a great deal of land there that is suitable for no other purpose than deer forest?—I say it is more suitable for deer forest than for anything else.

48,367. But we had the opinion of a very practical man to-day, that land that would maintain deer would also maintain sheep, that, in fact, sheep would live and thrive where deer would starve?—I differ from that opinion; because I find that you do not send the deer to wintering and you do send the sheep to wintering.

48,368. But is it not the case that some of the deer starve in the winter?—Not largely that I know of.

48,369. You have heard of that?—I have not heard of any animals starving.

48,370. It would be ruinous, I suppose, for a farmer if his sheep died at the same rate?—I do not know what the death-rate among deer is.

48,371. These lands were used not only for sheep but also for black cattle; we have had evidence to the effect?—Which lands?

48,372. I think your statement was a general one, applying to all the forests?—I cannot speak in detail for any of the forests except my own. I can speak of the forest of Gaick, and of the Glenfeshie forest, but I cannot go into details about the forests of Glenmore or Abernethy.

48,373. But in your statement before Lord Napier's Commission you referred to the Abernethy forest?—I read a general statement which was prepared on behalf of Lady Seafield, the proprietrix of the Abernethy forest, as well as the other proprietors.

48,374. Is it not the case that all the forest of Abernethy was pastured by the tenant's stock? Had they not a right of pasturage in the forest?—I am sorry to appear reticent, but really as I explained already, I have never set foot on the forest of Abernethy, so I cannot give particulars about that forest.

48,375. It is all in the statement made to Lord Napier, and I understood you to say just now that with regard to the forests generally it was the upper parts that were taken, and that these were either not suitable for or never used by the tenants?—I did not say so; I never said so.

48,376. Then, can you tell us whether the stock of sheep in the district of Badenoch and Strathspey has diminished since the formation of the deer forests?—On my own property it has; I have explained it.

48,377. And you say that they have to send the sheep away to wintering in the present condition of affairs; but must not that arise partly from this, that they have to keep their sheep now in summer on what would make good wintering ground if their sheep were kept on the higher parts in summer?—Possibly that might be so to a certain extent. Of course, as I said in my evidence to-day, we saw that in the case of Gaick for instance I don't believe there is a single sheep farmer here who would put a sheep there before the middle of May, and I don't think he would leave them as long as October. Practically he could get no rent for it. If you can only graze sheep on those Highland hills for four or six months in the year, and have to pay four times the value for wintering, it seems to me not a very good speculation.

Kingussie.

Sir George Macpherson-Grant.

48,378. It would certainly be difficult to let these high places alone, but if they were given in connection with the lower ground, would these forests not be lettable?—I am talking of ground which is over 1000 feet high.

48,379. But was not that land held in connection with some lower ground formerly?—Well, it was long before my time.

48,380. Then supposing there were cattle and horses put upon these hills, could not the tenantry easily winter these at home on the lower grounds?—If you cover all these hills with horses and cattle, I am afraid the difficulty would increase. Of course it would depend upon the number of horses and cattle you put on: if you put on very few no doubt it might work; but if you are going to stock these great Grampian mountains 4000 feet high, with horses and cattle, I am afraid the difficulty would be as great as the difficulty of wintering sheep.

48,381. You cannot give us the history of the Abernethy forest?—I would rather not, for I do not know it sufficiently well. But there is a gentleman here who can give you all the details you desire, I have no doubt.

48,382. And you cannot give us statistics as to the sheep stock presently in Badenoch and the sheep stock in former times when the forests were not in existence?—No, because these forests that I am speaking of have been in existence from time immemorial. I have explained why a certain number of sheep were taken off one part of my property; and I explained before Lord Napier's Commission how a sheep farmer, whose name is very well known to some members of this Commission, made a voluntary arrangement with the shooting tenant to give up his sheep. No other sheep have been displaced on my ground in my time or in my father's time, nor any tenant evicted.

48,383. Mr Macleod.—You have said that you were astonished to hear the statement of one witness to-day as to the number of small tenants on your property; and that, as a matter of fact, there were thirty on your own property?—That is the return I have.

48,384. Can you give me any analysis?—Do you mean of their occupations, or of the rental?

48,385. The rental would give a fair idea as to the size of holdings?—I have not got the rental here, but I can give you the names and occupations, and the amounts they draw in the summer time for outside work, and that sort of thing.

48,386. What I really want to know is this: you traversed the statement of the witness, and I presume what the witness had in his mind, was a man who was to a considerable extent making his living off the holding, and only assisting himself in some small degree by extraneous labour. As I understood it, you have in your list included every small tenant, on your estate?—Yes.

48,387. Although the piece of ground he has may be no larger than a garden?—Allow an acre or more. I may not have followed the evidence, but I think it was the first witness, and he rather startled me by saying that this 1400 square miles was inhabited by a hundred holdings. I looked into the matter and found thirty on my own property alone.

48,388. I think what was in the mind of the witness in speaking of the hundred farms was those who possessed very large grazing farms, and smaller tenants, who were almost if not quite subsisting by their holdings?—Well, I mentioned that I have only three such.

48,389. How many tenants have you under lease?—I don't think we have any.

48,390. How many that you could really say are crofters?—Your definition of a crofter is a man who pays under £30 of rent: I look upon such a man as a small farmer.

48,391. Well, say a small farmer?—I have told you already thirty.

48,392. He takes us down to a holding of an acre, which is a very small croft?—How much higher would you like to go? I am anxious to give you all the information I possibly can.

48,393. Can you tell us what reduction of rent you made voluntarily to those small tenants?—About 25 per cent.

48,394. You said that you had three large or fairly large tenants?—Yes.

48,395. Was the reduction of rent to them greater or less than that, or was it the same?—It was less.

48,396. You don't know what the difference was?—It must have been 15 to 20 per cent., I should think.

48,397. Have these small tenants got any pasture?—Oh, yes. There is a small village over here which is more like a township, I daresay, than anything else we have got in this country, and the people there all keep cows and have some cow pasture. I wish it was better pasture than it is; but, as I said before, a great many are employed on the estate, and we have never had any trouble with them at all.

48,398. They have not sheep?—No, they have none, with the exception, perhaps, of a pet lamb, or a few sheep about the doors.

48,399. Are there any small tenants anywhere else that have any sheep?—Not sheep in common.

48,400. Would it be possible without interfering with the other arrangements of the estate to add to the pasture, do you think, of these small tenants?—Well, I should be very glad to make my small tenants as comfortable as I possibly can, but in the general management of the estate you must not destroy your larger farms.

48,401. What lies contiguous, say, to the pasture that these people have?—One of the large sheep farms I have already alluded to.

48,402. But it would not interfere with the working of this large deer forest area?—It is a long way from the deer forest; the deer forest is a long way off from here.

48,403. You say that there has not been to any extent upon your property, so far as you know, any demand for additional land?—Not to any great extent, so far as I know; practically none.

48,404. The Chairman.—I observe that in your statement before Lord Napier's Commission you say under the heading 'Rental in 1853':—

Thirty small farms and crofts not exceeding £30 of rental each . .	£217 5 7 and under the heading 'Rental in 1883.'

Twenty-four small farms and crofts not exceeding £30 of rental each .	£163 5 6

Now may we take these statements as representing accurately the difference in the number of crofters upon the property referred to in this evidence, between 1853 and 1883?—I cannot explain that off-hand: there was a large increase in cottars' holdings and gardens, and I suppose that is how it balances. [Mr Macleod.—Or is it not the difference between the rental of these smaller tenants before the pasture was taken off?—No; the holdings were not diminished in number by taking those sheep off].

48,405. How do you account for the difference between the 30 small farms and crofts in 1853 and the 24 in 1883; were these removals?—I don't know, but I don't think so.

48,406. How do you account for the difference?—In 1853 I personally could not know much about it.

48,407. But this is your own statement?—Yes, I know that, and I am perfectly certain that at the time it was absolutely correct, but I am very sorry that to-day I cannot explain it.

48,408. May I venture to ask at what date you came into the property?—I was 55 years of age on the 12th of August, and I succeeded my father about the year 1850.

48,409. Then both of these statements are in your own time?—Yes, certainly, in my own time; but in 1853 I was a boy at school.

48,410. Do you happen to know whether any removals took place during your father's time,—of course, you cannot speak of that from your own knowledge?—No, I cannot speak as to that.

48,411. But you do not quite profess to account for this difference just now?—No; but if it is not asking too much, I should be very glad to make it out to night and let you have it. I have not the slightest doubt that it is quite capable of explanation; at all events you may be assured it is not put here with any desire to deceive you on the point.

48,412. Oh, no, certainly not. Has there been in your time any afforestment of land that was previously grazing land or crofter's land on your property?—I have given two instances which you will find mentioned in my evidence before Lord Napier's Commission at p. 2971. You will see under the heading of 'Clearances,' two cases, one with the object of carrying out a desirable excambion with my friend The Mackintosh, and the other was the case of Mr Macrae, whose name has been mentioned here to-day, who made an arrangement with the shooting tenant of Gaick to clear away some sheep. These are the only clearances.

48,413. Does this statement to which you have referred us, inform us of the extent of afforestment?—Yes; Coire-Roy, 5000 acres, cleared of sheep in 1872; and in Macrae's case the grazing tenant alleged that he had to reduce his sheep stock by 1500 head. The shorthand writer has put a note of interrogation after that '1500 head': I don't know why he did so. These are the only two cases in my time.

48,414. What is the total number of grazing farms upon your estate?—Well, there are 15 holdings with over £30 of rent.

48,415. And what is the highest rent?—The largest farm is Killiehuntly, the rent of which is £220.

48,416. Are any of these farms at present in your own hand?—No, I have no farms in my own hand except my Home Farm at Invereshie. I have never had any farms in my own hand on my property here.

CHARLES BOWMAN LOGAN, W.S., Edinburgh (57)—examined.

48,417. The Chairman.—You appear on behalf of the Seafield estate?—Yes, for the Countess Dowager of Seafield.

48,418. Do you wish to submit any statement?—I adopt the general statement made by Sir George Macpherson-Grant, but I have a short additional statement in regard to the estate of Lady Seafield. 'The portions of Lady Seafield's estate in Inverness-'shire, which appear to come within the scope of the 'present Commission, consist of the parishes of Aber-'nethy and Duthil. These parishes are practically 'alike in respect of climate, soil, and other charac-'teristics. The river Spey separates them from one 'another, Abernethy on the right or south-eastern side 'of the river, forming part of the northern slope of 'the Grampian Mountains, and having a mean altitude 'of about 1200 feet, the lowest portion being about '700 feet and the highest point nearly 4000 feet above 'sea-level; and Duthil lying over against Abernethy 'on the north-westerly side of the Spey, and having 'about the same mean altitude. The population of 'Duthil is 1728, and of Abernethy 1354.

1. 'Duthil extends to about 55,000 acres, 5872 'acres or thereby only being arable land. Along with 'the arable land there are upwards of 28,000 acres of 'pasture land and 3470 acres woodlands let to the 'agricultural tenants. Very little land which has been 'at any time cultivated, or which is capable of being 'cultivated, is under pasture now. The agricultural 'tenants have always largely consisted of the crofting 'class. There are in all 160 separate holdings, and 'only one holding yields £200 of rent. Eight holdings 'are let at rents above £100, while there are 123 'holdings with rents less than £30. None of the 'tenants made application to the Crofters Commission 'to fix a fair rent except one, and he withdrew his 'application. The majority of the tenants hold under 'formal leases, the greater number of which have been 'renewed since 1886 at rents mutually re-adjusted 'between proprietrix and tenants. The only deer 'forest in the parish is Kinveachy which is virtually 'a wood forest. This parish and Abernethy parish are 'famed for the excellence of their natural pines, and 'the moorlands and the hill lands, to an altitude of '1200 feet, are well adapted for this kind of wood 'culture. About 30 years ago the Earl of Seafield 'resolved, in terms of a report received from experts, 'to plant large tracts of moorland which had previously 'been yielding an irregular crop of natural grown firs. 'He accordingly enclosed about 17,000 acres, which 'for agricultural purposes were practically valueless, 'the total rental at that time being not more than '£200; and he planted on the enclosed grounds about '11,000,000 of fir and larch trees. Eleven thousand 'of these 17,000 enclosed acres form the Kinveachy 'Forest, and of these 11,000 acres, fully two-thirds are 'planted ground, the bulk of the remaining extent 'being the high ground which was considered too 'exposed and sterile for planting.

'Outside the limits of the deer forest there are '6000 acres of enclosed planted ground. All of these 'plantations are in a thriving condition. Neither in 'this case nor in that of Abernethy was the forming of 'a deer forest part of the proprietor's original inten-'tion. The deer forests were the consequence rather 'than the cause of the land being enclosed. There is 'no arable land within Kinveachy forest enclosure, 'except about a couple of acres which have not been 'occupied as a croft for about 35 years. The last 'tenant left of his own accord some years before the 'lands were enclosed. With this exception there is nc 'part of the enclosed land capable of being brought 'into cultivation.

'The rent of the deer forest is £700.

2. 'Abernethy, as has already been said, in its main 'characteristics resembles Duthil. It extends to 63,000 'acres, of which only 3900 or thereby are arable. 'Along with the arable land there are let to the 'agricultural tenants upwards of 23,000 acres of pasture 'land and 1000 acres of woodland.

'There are in all 137 separate holdings. The largest 'agricultural rent does not exceed £140. Only two 'holdings are let at rents above £100, while there are '110 holdings with rents less than £30. The planta-'tions in Abernethy were made about the same time as 'those in Duthil. Prior to this time there were 10 'holdings in the upper part of the parish which were 'then added to the area growing wood and afforested, 'the tenants having agreed to give up possession upon 'getting other equally suitable and comfortable holdings 'in the neighbourhood. There is annexed hereto a 'schedule giving particulars of the holdings vacated and 'the holdings taken in substitution. I may explain that 'this schedule is the same as that appended to Sir George 'Macpherson-Grant's evidence before Lord Napier's 'Commission (p. 2979). It will be observed that the 'present holdings extend in all to 210 acres arable, and '963 acres pasture and yield in yearly rents £190, 'while the former holdings extended to 78 acres arable 'and 200 acres pasture exclusive of the sterile part of 'the mountain and were rented at £100 or thereby. 'The forest extends to about 26,000 acres, of which 'about 7,600 acres are growing wood, nearly the one-'half of which was planted. A considerable area of 'the forest ground consists of the high sterile slopes of 'some of the hills in the Grampian range, on which no 'cereal, or grass or wood crop could be grown. The 'rent paid by the tenant is £1600.

(Signed) 'CHAS. B. LOGAN,
'Commissioner for the Countess Dowager of Seafield.

14*th August* 1894.'

48,419. You say that on the Duthil portion of the estates there are 123 holdings with rents not exceeding £30?—Yes.

48,420. Have any of these crofters applied for enlargement of holdings?—No, there have been no applications. There was one application which was understood to be for fixing the rent, but it has been withdrawn.

48,421. Then in the case of Abernethy you say there are 110 holdings of a similar class. Has there been any application for enlargement from them?—None.

48,422. You speak of grazing farms: are any grazing farms on the Duthil and Abernethy estates forming parts of the Seafield estate in the hands of the proprietor?—None.

48,423. They are all let?—All let.

48,424. And I suppose I may take it, all let on leases for terms of years?—The large majority. A few are not, but the much larger number are.

48,425. Are you aware whether within the limits of land under your management there is any desire for new holdings?—I have no reason to think so. There may be a few cases; it is impossible to say among that large number that there is not, but there is certainly no general desire.

48,426. You have had no applications of that sort?—No.

48,427. You speak of holdings on these two parts of that estate not exceeding £30 of rent. Have you many cottars on the Duthil portion?—Yes, there are a few cottars.

48,428. Do they pay rent?—Some do, and some do not.

48,429. Are these cottars there with the permission of the estate, or are they there of their own free will?—With the permission of the estate; they are all recognised as residing there and having their holdings.

48,430. As to the cottars who do not pay rent, are they persons who live upon crofters' holdings, or have they non-rent-paying holdings of their own from the estate management?—They are chiefly upon the larger farms, and work on the farms.

48,431. That is to say, they are labourers attached to the farms?—They really are, although they have separate small holdings.

48,432. Then we may take it that there are no cottars who, if we may use the expression, are parasitic upon the crofters' holdings?—That is so.

48,433. And do you apply that remark to the parish of Abernethy?—Yes.

48,434. That all or nearly all the cottars on the estate are attached more or less directly to large farms?—Nearly all, if not all.

48,435. Mr Maccallum.—These two forests seem to have been formed in a different way from that in which forests are generally formed,—that is to say they were really formed at first for planting?—They were.

48,436. And there are extensive plantations?—There are.

48,437. You say that there was a good deal made of the natural wood,—that is, that the trees were a source of revenue to the estate. Can you say whether these new plantations have been financially successful?—I think I may say they have; they are gradually coming to yield a good return.

48,438. Better than the return from the woods when they were allowed to be pastured?—Yes.

48,439. And sufficient to repay the estate for all the outlays, &c. on the plantations?—I think we may say so. Of course, in the case of timber you have to wait a very long time for your return, and it is very difficult to say how it meets the expenditure and accumulated interest; but we hold that they do pay, and yield a good return upon the original outlay. In this connection I may refer to the evidence which was given before Lord Napier's Commission by the Hon. Thomas Bruce, who was then Lady Seafield's Commissioner. He there went very minutely into the question of the wood plantation, and I think you will find a good deal of information about the woods in his evidence, p. 3004.

Kingussie.

Charles Bowman Logan.

48,440. In Duthil you say 17,000 acres were enclosed for planting on the advice of experts?—Yes.

48,441. Can you tell us how that land was occupied before it was enclosed?—It was more or less pasture of a rough kind and very much in common.

48,442. Had the tenants in the neighbourhood the right to put their stock on that pasture?—Upon certain conditions and in certain proportions; and I may add that it was a source of constant irritation and even of litigation, owing to the difficulty of adjusting the rights of the different tenants. I believe the arrangement was that for each £1 of rent a certain number of sheep were allowed to be pastured, and, of course, the tenants who were nearest the pasture had a much better chance than the others. Some put more than their proper share on, and there was constant friction and disputes. It was thought desirable that a stop should be put to these; and now it is our great desire in every case not to have commonties, but to divide the pasture so that each tenant may have his own.

48,443. But land that is suitable for planting would also be good pasture, would it not?—After the wood gets up a certain height it is pastured.

48,444. But this land that was enclosed, seeing that it was thought suitable for plantation, must have been valuable as pasture to the tenants who had it?—Yes, but it was considered that both for the proprietor's sake and the sake of the country at large the wood was the better product of the lands, it being thought very desirable to extend the area under woods and forests in Scotland.

48,445. Do the tenants in the neighbourhood get the benefit of the pasture after the trees attain a certain height?—Yes, they do; the land is then portioned off and fenced for the adjoining farms.

48,446. And the higher ground is devoted entirely to deer,—they cannot have access to that now?—No, it is left for deer.

48,447. Is there any diminution in the number of tenants since the formation of the deer forest in Duthil?—Not any serious diminution; there may have been one or two holdings where the tenants died and a re-adjustment was made, but there has been no substantial alteration of the number of holdings.

48,448. And as to the number of sheep now held by the tenants and the stock they held when they had the land that was planted, how do the two compare?—I have no statement of that.

48,449. They had a considerable number of sheep in former times, I suppose, and I take it that now they have not nearly so many; is that your view?—Well, with regard to Duthil, when the deer forest was enclosed there was a large additional amount of wood pasture opened up to the tenants, so that they got considerable compensation in a way which enabled them probably to keep up their stock.

48,450. Can you say whether they had to dispose of their stock at the time when the 17,000 acres were enclosed?—Yes, they had to some extent.

48,451. You say that the Abernethy forest was formed in very much the same way; it is a larger forest?—Yes.

48,452. And ten holdings were cleared entirely in order to form that forest?—Yes.

48,453. Which are included in the forest now?—Yes. At the time of the planting, the plantation was brought down so as to cover these holdings.

48,454. And these tenants you say were provided with holdings on other parts of the estate?—Yes.

48,455. How was it that the estate was able to do that? Were other people cleared to make room for them, or were the holdings diminished in order to make room for these ten tenants cleared out of the forest?—It was all done by arrangement, and not suddenly: it was gradually done, and as these other holdings fell in, perhaps by death or the people leaving, the tenants who were in the holdings now under forest were given these vacant holdings.

48,456. How long did it take to have all ten removed?—Though there were ten altogether, they were gradually provided for elsewhere; thus we find that the first mentioned in the list got another farm, the second happened to have died, so that his case did not fall to be dealt with; the next three got farms, the next one was employed as a gamekeeper, another was also, and another died in possession; so that there were only six to provide for, which was not a difficult matter.

48,457. Can you say at all whether other holdings had to be diminished in order to make room for these six?—I believe not. They got separate holdings that fell in.

48,458. There happened to be six other vacancies at the time?—Not all at once; it took a little time to adjust. It was not all rushed through in one season, but gradually done.

48,459. The removals were spread over a certain number of years?—Yes; not very long; perhaps a couple of years.

48,460. Then, I suppose the same holds good with regard to the forest of Abernethy, that it was pastured by these tenants' stock?—It was.

48,461. And there is a great diminution of the sheep stock on that account?—There must be a considerable diminution.

48,462. There appears to be a large number of moderately-sized holdings in these two parishes under Lady Seafield?—Yes.

48,463. And, I think, you stated that there did not seem to be any strong desire for the formation of new holdings. It may not be very practicable, I admit, to find new holdings among so many moderately-sized ones; but, do you find that when any of these moderately-sized holdings becomes vacant, it is applied for by a large number of people?—Well, not by a large number, for we are always anxious to continue the croft in the same family; but now and then the adjoining farmer wishes to have it, and we do not encourage that, if we can help it, if the farm is large enough to maintain a man and his family.

48,464. You never find any difficulty in letting a moderately-sized holding?—Never.

48,465. But you have no doubt heard of the great difficulty that there is in letting large farms?—I am aware that there is.

48,466. That difficulty is not experienced on this estate, composed as it is chiefly of smaller holdings?—Certainly not experienced on this estate.

48,467. Do cottars on the estate apply for farms that fall vacant?—Two have done so. The fact is that our farms very seldom fall vacant; we always carry them on to the representatives if possible.

48,468. Is it your opinion then that there would be a considerable number on the estate who would be willing to take farms if it were possible for them to get them?—I am not able to say as to that.

48,469. Mr Sutherland.—How long have you been responsible for the management?—I have only been Commissioner for six or eight years, but I have known the estate for a much longer time, as I have been connected with it professionally during the whole of my professional life.

48,470. You know, of course, about the planting and rearing of trees?—I know very generally; I don't profess to have practical knowledge on the subject.

48,471. What I want to ask you is about the general aspect of the question. I think you stated in reply to a question that you found it a very satisfactory investment?—In this country it is.

48,472. What is the particular nature of the ground in which trees flourish best?—If you would allow me to refer again to the detailed evidence given by Mr Bruce, he went very fully into the matter.

48,473. Does he refer particularly to that district?—Specially to that district; he was Commissioner on the Seafield estates at the time, and it was he who organised that large scheme of planting. In his evidence before Lord Napier's Commission he explains the matter very fully, and I cannot add to it from personal knowledge.

48,474. Did you ever hear of the difficulty of planting on a large scale, because of the long time during which the capital invested must remain unremunerative?—Oh, yes.

Kingussie. — Charles Bowman Logan.

Kingussie. — Charles Bowman Logan.

48,475. How long is it before you get a return?—Well, thinnings begin earlier, but for the real substantial profit you have to wait fifty or sixty years.

48,476. Have you ever heard any calculation made over the whole period giving the return per acre?—Yes, but I have not it in my mind at the present moment.

48,477. May I ask you generally if you have ever heard that it was £1 an acre for every year that the land was under timber?—I cannot say,—I think I have heard that, generally speaking, but I cannot say that from knowledge.

48,478. No doubt you have a good knowledge of the Highlands generally. Do you think that a great deal of land that is now lying waste could be profitably planted?—That is simply my impression; I could not say so from any knowledge of the nature of the land itself or of planting.

48,479. Is there anything special in the nature or character of the land on the Seafield estate that renders it more favourable for the planting of timber than any other estate?—I am not aware that there is.

48,480. So you think it is quite likely that timber could be profitably planted on any other place?—I should think so.

48,481. I need not ask you whether it improves the amenity of the whole country?—That is a speculative question rather.

48,482. There cannot be very much doubt about that?—It improves its appearance no doubt.

48,483. Have you ever been struck in places where trees grow by the facilities afforded to neighbouring small holders, e.g., if there is any improvement wanted about a small holding in the way of erecting fences, &c.?—For all these purposes it certainly is beneficial.

48,484. Have you observed the want of these facilities in districts where there is no timber, and how the holdings are much neater in appearance when near a plantation?—If wood for fencing can be obtained within a short distance, of course it is a great advantage to the district.

48,485. And also as firewood in the houses?—Yes, also as firewood.

48,486. We have heard objections urged with regard to the length of time the land is put out of pasture. Is that a difficulty?—To some extent it is, because, of course, you cannot allow the land to be pastured until the trees have attained a certain height.

48,487. How many years are in that interval, as a rule?—It depends a good deal on the ground; it runs from twelve to fifteen years in general.

48,488. The grazing animals would require to be excluded for that period of years?—Yes.

48,489. The Chairman.—There is one feature of the estate management on the Seafield estates which seems to be almost unique. Every effort has been made, you say, to make each holding independent of the others by giving it separate pasture?—Yes.

48,490. Is it the fact that there is no common pasture either on Duthil or Abernethy?—Very little. There are two or three small pieces that are held in common, but these we hope gradually to separate also.

48,491. To bring under the other separate system?—Yes.

48,492. Under which each holding, in addition to having its own arable and outrun, has separate grazing of its own?—Yes. Of course, the system involves more fencing.

48,493. Is that fencing done at the expense of the estate?—Yes.

48,494. And is the upkeep of the fencing also a charge on the estate?—It is done by arrangement between the estate and the tenant; but there is no difficulty in the working of it.

48,495. What may we take as the average rental of a crofter's holding on the Seafield estate?—There is a large number below £30. [Mr Smith.—In the two parishes the average rent under £30 is £9, 17s. 6d., and including the rents above £30 the average rent is £15].

48,496. Mr Sutherland.—What proportion of the estate of Seafield is in Inverness-shire?—These two parishes of Duthil and Abernethy are all in Inverness-shire; Cromdale is in Morayshire.

Kingussie. — Charles Bowman Logan.

DONALD GRANT, Grantown (62), Agent for Dochfour, Rothiemurchus, and Belleville estates. Donald Grant.

48,497. The Chairman.—Have you any statement to make, Mr Grant?—I have no statement to make, but I shall be very glad to answer any questions.

(There were no questions asked).

WILLIAM MARSHALL SKINNER, Drumin, Ballindalloch, Factor for His Grace the Duke of Richmond and Gordon (51)—examined. William Marshall Skinner.

48,498. The Chairman.—Have you a written statement to submit?—I have.

48,498A. Kindly read it.—'The deer forest of Glen-'more is situated on the northern slope of the Cairn-'gorm Range, in the united parishes of Abernethy and 'Kincardine, and county of Inverness. It extends 'to about 15,000 acres, and includes a portion of 'comparatively low-lying ground at the foot of the 'hills bearing old natural grown fir wood. The altitude 'of this lower portion ranges from 1051 feet to about '1500 feet, and that of the higher and larger portion 'from 1500 feet—at about which height timber ceases 'to grow and the ground becomes sterile—to 4083 'feet at the top of Cairngorm.

'There is now no arable land within the forest, 'except small patches cultivated by the gamekeepers. 'The forest is entirely enclosed along the lower 'boundaries where contiguous to pasture occupied by 'agricultural tenants, the only unenclosed boundaries 'being those marching with the adjoining deer forests 'of Abernethy, Glenaven, and Rothiemurchus.

'The ground was first afforested in 1859. Previous 'to that date it was occupied for many years as sheep 'pasture in connection with the farms of Achgowrish 'and Pityoulish, holdings partly arable and partly 'pastoral, and situated lower down and some distance 'from the low forest boundary.

'In 1859, the tenants of these farms, by arrangement 'and during the currency of their leases, voluntarily 'gave up the portions of their pasture now afforested, 'in respect of which their rents were reduced £100 'each, the tenants still retaining the lower and more 'valuable portion of their pasture, extending from 'the forest boundary downwards towards their arable 'lands. No tenant was therefore removed in carrying 'out the afforestment, and the respective tenancies of 'both the farms above referred to have since continued 'in the same families down to the present time. The 'rental of the forest area as sheep pasture may be 'put as above indicated at £200. The present rental 'as a deer forest is £1500.

'The Kincardine property, of which the above deer 'forest forms part, extends to 18,164 imperial acres, 'of which about 4000 acres are under natural grown 'Scotch fir and other wood, the greater part of which 'is within the forest boundaries.

'The extent outside the forest boundary is about '3000 acres, partly arable and partly green pasture and 'heather. This portion is occupied as farms and crofts, 'partly arable and partly pastoral.

'About the beginning of the present century there 'were six holdings within the area now under deer, 'the tenants of which pastured the lower-lying portions 'of the glen, and probably cultivated more or less the 'portions now represented by old grass land or green 'pasture, the extent of which is about 100 acres.

'These holdings became gradually merged in the 'larger farms of Achgowrish and Pityoulish, and in '1843 the whole are included in the rents of these 'farms, and so remained until the date of the afforest-'ment in 1859.

'A rental for crop 1843 is appended, which includes 48,499. Are there any crofters' holdings on the lands you have been speaking of?—There is only one, the holding of £15 rent.

Alexander Macpherson.

Alexander Macpherson, Solicitor, Kingussie, Factor for Cluny and Glentruim (55)—examined.

48,500. The Chairman.—Have you a statement to submit to us?—I have prepared no statement, but I am ready to answer any questions regarding the Cluny and Glentruim estates.

48,501. Do you know about the older deer forests in Badenoch?—I know something about them, from some old MSS. of which I got possession some time ago, written by the late Capt. Lachlan Macpherson of the 52nd Regiment, long popularly known in Badenoch as 'Old Biallid,' at Cluny's request, for a gentleman who intended to write a history of the Scottish forests.

48,502. What information can you give us from these MSS. with regard to the existence of these old forests?—I have got the MSS. here, and I am prepared to read them if I may do so.

48,503. Are they very long?—The part that relates to the old deer forests is not very long. [Mr Sutherland.—May I ask whether the expression 'deer forest' is used in the MS.?—I think so: yes, it speaks of the 'Badenoch deer forests']. The quotations I would like to read are the following:—

'The Earls of Huntly possessed by far the most 'extensive range of hills as deer forests in Britain. 'They commenced at Ben-Avon in Banffshire, and ter- 'minated at Ben-Nevis near Fort-William—a distance 'of about seventy miles—without a break, except the 'small estate of Rothiemurchus, which is scarcely two 'miles in breadth, where it intersects the forest. This 'immense tract of land was divided into seven distinct 'divisions, each of which was given in charge to the 'most influential gentlemen in its neighbourhood. The 'names of these divisions or forests are:—1st, Ben Avon; '2nd, Glenmore, including Cairngorm; 3rd, Brae 'Feshie; 4th, Gaick; 5th, Drumuachdar; 6th, Ben Alder, 'including Farron; and 7th, Lochtreig, which extended 'from the Badenoch march to Ben-Nevis. The extent 'of these divisions was nearly as follows:—Ben-Avon 'about 20 square miles, Glenmore 20, Brae Feshie 15, 'Gaick 30, Druimuachdar 25, Ben-Alder 50, and Loch- 'treig 60 square miles—in all, 220 square miles. 'The whole, however, were not solely appropriated for 'the rearing of deer, for tenants were allowed to erect 'shielings on the confines of the forest, and their cattle 'were permitted to pasture as far as they chose through- 'out the day, but they must be brought back to the 'shieling in the evening, and such as were left in the 'forest overnight were liable to be poinded. These regu- 'lations did very well between Huntly and his tenants, 'but they opened a door for small proprietors who held 'in feu from the Gordon family to make encroachments 'and in the course of time to acquire a property to which 'they had not the smallest title. The old forest laws in 'Scotland were exceedingly severe, if not barbarous. 'Mutilation and even death was sometimes inflicted. 'It is related that Macdonald of Keppoch hanged one of 'his own clan to appease Cluny Macpherson of the time 'for depredations committed in the forest of Ben Alder, 'and it is a well-known fact that another hunter (called 'John Our) had an eye put out and his right arm 'amputated for a similar offence. It is also said that 'he killed deer even in that mutilated state. No 'alteration took place until after the Rising of 1745, 'when the whole forests were let as grazings except 'Gaick, which the Duke of Gordon continued as a deer 'forest until about the year 1788, when it was let as a 'sheep-walk, and continued so until 1826, when the 'late Duke of Gordon (then Marquis of Huntly) re- 'established it. It is now rented by Sir Joseph Rad- 'cliffe; but as he takes in black cattle to graze in 'summer, the number of deer is not great, perhaps not 'more than two or three hundred. The deer in this 'forest are small, and are principally hinds, but in all 'the other named forests it was not uncommon to kill 'harts that weighed twenty-four and even twenty-seven 'imperial stones.

Kingussie.

Alexander Macpherson.

'The forest of Ben-Alder is now rented by the 'Marquis of Abercorn; but as the sheep were only 'turned off in 1836, there are not many deer as yet: 'however, as the Marquis of Breadalbane's forest is not 'far distant, they will no doubt accumulate rapidly. 'This forest lies on the north-west side of Locherricht, 'and contains an area of from 30 to 35 square miles. 'Its lie is in a south-west direction. The boundary on 'the south-west is the small river Alder, on the north- 'west Beallachnadui (the dark vale) and the river Caal- 'rathy, and on the north-east it is bounded by Loch- 'pathag and Farron. The mountains are high, probably 'near 4000 feet above the level of the sea; and there is 'a lake, about two miles in circumference, at an eleva- 'tion of at least 2500 feet, abounding with trout of 'excellent quality'.

Then about Gaick the same writer says:—'Gaick. '—There are many circumstances connected with this 'forest that give it an interest. Its lie is in a south- 'west direction, bounded on the south by the Braes 'of Athole, on the north by Glentromie, on the east 'by Corry Bran, and on the west by the Glentruim 'Hills. In the centre of Gaick there is a plain of 'about 8 miles long, and in this plain there are three 'lakes—Loch-an-t-Seillich, Loch Vrotain, and Loch-an- 'Dùin—all abounding with excellent trout and char, 'and another species of fish, called dorman by the 'country people.'

My next quotation is from Scrope's 'Days of Deer- 'Stalking.' [Mr Sutherland.—Is that a sportsman's guide-book?—No, it is not; it is a history of the Scottish deer forests written or published about half a century ago. It gives the more modern measurements of the extent of the different deer forests].

'Glenfeshie, in the parish of Kingussie and county 'of Inverness, is bounded on the south and south-east 'by the forests of Mar and Athole, on the west by the 'forest of Gaick, and on the south by the estate of 'Invereshie; by survey in 1770 it contained 13,706 'Scots acres. It was let in 1752 to Mr Macpherson of 'Invereshie, and continued to be rented by that family 'until 1812, when it was purchased from the Duke of 'Gordon by Mr Macpherson of Invereshie and Ballin- 'dalloch. It has been pastured by cattle and sheep 'since 1752.

'Gaick, in the parish of Kingussie and county of 'Inverness, is bounded on the south and west by the 'forest of Atholl, on the east by the forest of Felaar 'and the estate of Invereshie, and on the north by the 'lands of Invertruim, Ruthven, Noid, Phoness, and 'Glentruim. It contains three lakes stocked with char 'and large trout, and salmon are occasionally found in 'them, ascending by the water of Tromie from the 'Spey. By survey in 1770 it contained 10,777 acres. 'It was let in 1782 as a sheep-walk to Robert Stewar 'of Garth for nineteen years. In 1804 it was let to 'Colonel Gordon of Invertruim [Invertromie?], who 'occupied it as a grazing till 1814, when the Marquis 'of Huntly got it from his father as a deer forest. In '1830 it was purchased by Mr Macpherson-Grant of 'Ballindalloch, from the Gordon trustees, and it is now 'let to Sir Joseph Radcliffe, Bart., who strictly pre-

Kingussie. — Alexander Macpherson.

'serves it as a deer forest, and has an excellent 'shooting lodge near the centre of the range.

'Drumouchter, in the parish of Kingussie and county 'of Inverness, is bounded on the south by the vast 'forest of Atholl, on the west by the Duke of Athole's 'and Sir Neil Menzies's properties, and on the north 'and east by the lands of Glentruim and Cluny. By 'survey in 1770 it contained 5782 Scots acres, ex- 'clusive of Ben-Alder, which forms a part of it, and 'contains 14,927 acres. It was let for pasture to 'Lachlan Macpherson in 1773. In 1829 it was pur- 'chased from the Gordon trustees, along with the 'lands of Glentruim, by Major Ewen Macpherson of 'the H.E.I.C.S., and is occupied as a sheep-walk and 'grouse-shooting range. Ben-Alder is now the property 'of Ewen Macpherson, Esq. of Cluny, and has recently 'been let to the Marquis of Abercorn as a deer forest.

'Glenmore, in the parish of Kincardine and county 'of Inverness, containing 10,173 acres, was formerly 'a great pine-forest. It is bounded on the south by 'the forests of Glenavon and Mar. It is used now for 'pasturage. Cairngorm forms part of this forest.

'Glenavon, in the parish of Kirkmichael, county of 'Banff, contains 22,086 Scots acres. Since 1773 it 'has been occupied as a grazing, but it is said that the 'Duke of Richmond contemplates restoring it to a 'deer forest. It adjoins the forest of Mar.

'Glenbuilg, adjoining Glenavon, 3396 acres.

'Glenfiddich, parish of Mortlach, county of Banff, '5522 acres, is possessed by the Duke of Richmond as 'a deer forest, and has always been retained as such by the Gordon family.

'Of all these ancient forests, the last and Gaick are 'the only ones now strictly preserved for deer; the 'others are pastured by black cattle or sheep, and are 'therefore only partially stocked with the noble 'animals.'

48,504. Where did the MS. come from, may I ask?—I got it from the grandson of the writer; he is now the proprietor of Corriemony.

48,505. I think you are the author of a recent book on Badenoch in the olden time?—I am.

48,506. Do you know these forests in detail? Have you been through them?—I have not been through them, but I have been on Gaick and Glenfeshie a good deal.

48,507. Only these two?—Only these two.

48,508. Are you able to say with regard to these two whether there are lands there capable of profitable or advantageous occupation by crofters?—I should say not, except for a very small portion of the year,—perhaps from the end of May, or not sooner than the middle of May, until perhaps the beginning of October.

48,509. On what ground do you say so?—On account of the altitude; you could not keep sheep there during winter and there is no wintering for them at home.

48,510. I suppose we may have an opportunity of seeing the forest lands?—They are quite accessible.

48,511. Mr Sutherland.—The paper you have read is not your own statement, but do you assume responsibility for it?—I certainly do, from what I know about the character of the writer.

48,512. The writer speaks of the laws of Scotland in olden times being barbarous and cruel. Can you tell me what Acts of Parliament that remark is intended to apply to?—I cannot say.

48,513. The only reference given is to certain acts of cruelty on the part of some Highland Chief, but have you any reason to suppose that if there was anything barbarous or cruel in the conduct of the Chief, he was acting in accordance with Acts of Parliament?—I think he must have been, or the writer would not have mentioned it in the way he does.

48,514. Did the Chiefs in the Highlands always act in accordance with Acts of Parliament?—They were sometimes very barbarous.

48,515. But you cannot refer me to the Acts specifically?—No. I have never come across any such Acts, and I have gone over a good many.

48,516. Mr Maccallum.—At the time when that document was written, I think it is said towards the end that all these forests were pastured with the exception of two,—Glen-Fiddich and Gaick?—Yes. Kingussie. — Alexander Macpherson.

48,517. So that in that year these were the only two forests in existence?—Practically, at that particular time.

48,518. All the rest were pastured by tenants' stock of sheep and cattle?—Quite so. I may be allowed to say that I am quite prepared to answer any questions regarding the Cluny and Glentruim properties: there were some statements made here to-day in connection with these estates.

48,519. The Chairman.—If there is anything you would like to say bearing on the evidence that has come out to-day we shall be glad to have it?—I may mention with regard to the farm of Middleton on the estate of Cluny Macpherson which became vacant last year, that we advertised it to let in allotments,—it has about 60 acres of fairly good arable land,—at rents to be adjusted with the County Council, and we did not get one single offer.

48,520. When was that?—In the spring of last year.

48,521. Had you had any indications before that of a desire for small allotments?—There was a great deal of talk about the people wanting more land, and we resolved to put the matter to the test; with the result I have stated, that we did not get one single application for the land.

48,522. Was the matter made widely known?—It was; we spent a good deal of money in advertising it. Something has also been said about Aberarder, and I should like to explain about that also. The lease terminated under a Mr Purdie, and in 1891 we advertised the farm for a very long time, and offered to divide it into two separate holdings and to build a new farm house and steading; but we never got a single offer for it.

48,523. What would the rents of these have been?—The rent when the lease terminated was £700.

48,524. You offered to divide the farm into two holdings?—Yes.

48,525. Had it been two holdings at any previous time?—No, only one holding for a considerable time previously.

48,526. And what rents were you prepared to accept?—We were prepared to accept any reasonable rent.

48,527. The estate you say would have put up the new buildings required?—Yes.

48,528. And any necessary fencing?—Any necessary fencing besides.

48,529. Mr Sutherland.—You would be expecting that that would form two holdings of about £350 each?—We were prepared to take a considerably lower rent than £350; we hardly expected to get £700 for the two holdings because the prices of cattle and sheep were coming down.

48,530. Would you not be justified in expecting more rent when you sub-divided the farm?—Of course we would, but we did not expect even the £700 if we erected the dwelling-houses, because the rents of farms all over Badenoch had gone down very considerably.

48,531. Was there any evidence given here to-day by a witness who could speak about the farm of Middleton?—I am not aware, but there was evidence given to the effect that there was a cry for more land.

48,532. But was the fact which you have stated within the knowledge of any who have given evidence here to-day?—It must have been, because it was very well known at the time; I think one of the witnesses referred to it. One of the witnesses also referred to Aberarder being converted into a deer forest. It is now sublet; the tenant who took it as a deer forest at £500 found that it was not going to work well, and he sublet the grazing at a lower rent than he paid himself.

48,533. What was the reference to Middleton which you say was made by a witness here to-day?—I forget the exact allusion, but, I think, it was Mr Campbell, the first witness, who referred to it.

48,534. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Was this farm of Middleton advertised in the local newspapers?—Yes. I exhibit a copy of the advertisement:—

Kingussie. Alexander Macpherson.

'ESTATES OF CLUNY MACPHERSON.

'The arable farm of Middleton, in the parish of 'Laggan, extending to 60 acres or thereby, is to 'let as from Whitsunday first.

'The proprietor is prepared to let the farm in 'allotments or small holdings, on terms to be 'adjusted with the County Council, provided 'the whole farm is so taken up.

'Applications to be lodged with Alexander Mac-'pherson, solicitor, Kingussie, factor on the 'estates, on or before the 22nd current. Kin-'gussie, 6th Feb. 1893.'

48,535. Mr Sutherland.—It was only to be given in allotments on condition that the whole farm was so taken?—So it was stated in the advertisement.

48,536. The Chairman.—But I understand you to say that you did not get any application for it?—No.

48,537. Or inquiry?—Nor inquiry.

48,538. Mr Sutherland.—Don't you think the proviso would exclude that?—I don't think so. There are a number of people in Laggan who profess to be anxious to take small holdings.

48,539. Don't you think the taking over of the whole farm would prevent some from coming forward?—You might divide it into four or five.

48,540. But don't you think that if the condition of taking the whole farm were taken away it might have elicited applications?—I don't think so, because it was quite natural that we should have made that stipulation.

48,541. Mr Shaw Stewart.—If there had been a very strong desire on the part of the people to take small holdings, you would have expected applications from at least half a dozen?—Quite so: we were prepared to let it to three or four, or five or six.

48,542. Mr Sutherland.—But how were the public to know that, seeing the proviso is so distinctly stated?—Well, they made no inquiry.

48,543. But, don't you see they were practically prevented from that by that proviso?—I don't think so if so many of the people were really as anxious to acquire small holdings as they were said to be.

48,544. Mr Gordon.—What is the nearest place to this farm of Middleton?—Laggan Bridge.

48,545. Is there any work that the people could have got if they had settled there?—They might have gone out as gillies, as many of them do; or they might have got work as tradespeople, such as masons, and the like.

48,546. But there is not much outside work to be had near?—Not much outside work.

48,547. I have no doubt that might operate as one element in the case.

48,548. The Chairman.—Did you contemplate dividing the farm into small holdings by which a person could live?—Yes, to a great extent, perhaps combined with some other employment.

48,549. The idea was that the holdings should be of such a size that the occupants could live partly by the produce of the holding, and partly by outside labour?—Quite so.

48,550. Mr Maccallum.—Did you communicate with the County Council in regard to this plan?—No, we made no communication to the County Council.

48,551. How, then, was it possible for you to advertise about the adjustment of terms by the County Council?—We were quite prepared if we had got offers, few or many—three or four, or five or six, to refer the whole matter to the County Council, and adjust the rent of each holding with them.

48,552. But you put into this advertisement a thing for which you had no proper authority,—that you are prepared to let this land 'on terms to be adjusted with 'the County Council,' although you did not know whether the County Council would adjust them or not?—No, we did not know whether they would or not.

48,553. How did you think the County Council would be so very subservient to the estate management?—We did not want the County Council to be subservient to the estate management, but rather to the crofter population.

48,554. Under what Act were they to adjust these terms with you?—I am not at this moment aware under what Act they might do it, but they were supposed to have the power to allocate allotments. Kingussie. Alexander Macpherson.

48,555. Might not the people suspect that the process involved delay—that there was a great deal of time to be lost between you and the County Council?—I don't think that would operate in the slightest degree against the scheme.

48,556. You did not offer this land to the County Council to be bought by them or let to them?—No, we did not do that; we simply advertised it in the manner you see in the advertisement.

48,557. But why not proceed on the Acts that have been passed for settling these matters?—That might be an expensive process, as you were told here to-day.

48,558. Not if the proprietor is willing to give facilities?—Well, the proprietor in this case was quite willing to allot all that farm.

48,559. But no such communication was sent to the County Council?—No, we waited to get in offers, in the belief that they would come in.

48,560. But is it not the County Council that are to put the Act into force?—I am not aware; I have not a copy of the Act before me.

48,561. Are you not aware that it is an Act that is to be put in force by the County Council?—I am not aware of the exact provisions of the Act.

48,562. It is not an Act which falls to you to administer, but the County Council, and no communication was sent to them in regard to the matter?—No communication.

48,563. What did you expect the County Council to do?—As soon as we should get the offers in, we would submit them to the County Council, and if they chose to take the matter up we would say we are willing to let this farm in allotments, according to the rents that you may consider fair and reasonable.

48,564. You thought the County Council would fix the rents for you?—We were prepared to agree to that.

48,565. To any rents that the County Council would fix?—Which might be fair and reasonable, at all events.

48,566. You see what the thing is worth now?—Well, of course, there must be two parties to a bargain.

48,567. You say that the terms are to be adjusted with the County Council and that you would accept 'these if they were fair and reasonable' in your opinion; what was the worth of that to the people?—Well, we were really quite prepared to accept whatever rents the County Council might consider fair and reasonable.

48,568. The Chairman.—Had endeavours been made to let this farm before, or in one lot?—No; no such endeavours were made till afterwards.

48,569. Had a lease fallen in?—Yes, the lease had fallen in.

48,570. What, in particular, led you to make this proposal?—The cry for 'more land' on the part of some of the Laggan people, for small holdings.

48,571. Had that cry reached you from individuals, or was there just a vague idea in your mind that such a desire existed?—Statements were made in public that the people wanted more land; there was a cry for more land, and Cluny resolved to test it by placing this farm at their disposal.

48,572. Has it been let since?—It has.

48,573. To a single tenant?—To a single tenant.

ALEXANDER MACDOUGALL, Factor for Sir John Ramsden. Alexander Macdougall.

48,574. The Chairman.—We have a letter from Sir John Ramsden, addressed to the Secretary, in which he says:—'Sir, in my own unavoidable absence I have 'requested Mr Alexander Macdougall, who acts for me 'at Kingussie, to attend the sitting of the Royal Com-'mission, and to say in my name that if there is any 'information relating to my estates in Badenoch and 'Lochaber which the Royal Commissioners wish for, I 'will cause it to be furnished; and further, that if it 'should be their pleasure to visit and inspect any part 'of my lands I beg they will do so, and I have given Kingussie. — Alexander Macdougall.

'directions that any facilities it may be in my power to 'provide for enabling them to make such inspection with 'ease and comfort may be placed at their service. I 'have the honour to be, &c., J. W. Ramsden. 13th 'August, 1894?'—I am not prepared with any statement,—Sir John did not authorise me to give any; but if you would be so good as to give me a note of any queries he would be very willing to give you the fullest information in his power.

48,575. You mean in writing?—Yes, in writing; and in the meantime to give you all facilities for viewing the grounds and any other assistance you desire.

48,576. But you have no written statement to submit?—No.

48,577. And you are not prepared to answer questions at present?—No.

48,578. You would rather give in a statement in writing?—Yes.

48,579. We have not been in the habit of doing that; but perhaps if we desire it you would attend another meeting of the Commission later on?—Yes, I should be very glad.

48,580. You would probably have no objection to come to Inverness?—No.

48,581. And would you kindly be ready then to answer any questions we may wish to put: and possibly you may have a written statement ready to submit by that time.

Allan Macdonald.

ALLAN MACDONALD, Solicitor, Inverness, Commissioner for The Mackintosh of Mackintosh (50)—examined.

48,582. The Chairman.—You are Commissioner for The Mackintosh?—Yes.

48,583. Have you any written statement to submit?—No, I have not.

48,584. Is there anything you wish to say?—Yes, I wish to elaborate the remark that I made this morning during the examination of the first witness. I did not exactly hear all that that witness said, but as it struck me he seemed to say that the tenants had been turned out to enable this land of Coignafearn to be afforested. He explained afterwards that what he meant was that that happened forty or fifty years ago. Now, I cannot speak of anything that happened so far back as that; I have only been factor on the estate for the last twenty years. But I never heard that land had been afforested before my time; I have always understood that it was a sort of natural forest or natural resort for deer. When the forest was made or extended in 1882, we took away about 1000 acres of pasture from some of the crofters. There is a crofting township of nine holdings there who used to have an outrun of about 10,000 acres. I may say that the whole estate of Coignafearn extends to about 38,000 acres of which 28,000 acres have been cleared for deer. It was in order to complete a corrie that about 1000 acres were taken from these crofters. But I wish to explain that the matter was carried through in a perfectly amicable manner, and that the crofters affected by it got their rent reduced on their own terms. When they came down to see Mackintosh at Moyhall, they were asked what they wanted and how many sheep they would lose by this portion being taken off. They said it would reduce their stock by about 800 sheep; that they valued a sheep at 10d., and that they would be quite willing to take that for them if they got an additional reduction of £12, being the amount which for some purpose or other one of my predecessors, Mr Fraser-Mackintosh, had added to their rent, when he was Commissioner on the estate. I accordingly sometime afterwards wrote this letter, dated 25th February 1888. 'At 'the last rent collection at Moy, you told me that yourself 'and the other Coig's tenants would consider it a fair re- 'duction of rent in respect of the hill ground recently 'resumed and fenced off by The Mackintosh, if, in 'addition to the reduction spoken of at Moy, when 'you and John Mackintosh, Cognashee, met The Mack- 'intosh and myself there, you were also relieved of the 'increase of rent imposed in Mr Fraser-Mackintosh's Kingussie. — Allan Macdonald. 'time, viz., £12. In order to come to a friendly 'settlement with you and to avoid the trouble and 'expense of a valuation, The Mackintosh is willing to 'agree to these terms. He is thus willing to allow you 'the following abatements:—(1) For the reduction of 'your stock by 800 sheep—which is your own estimate '—at the rate of 10d. per sheep, which you yourselves 'state was the rate fixed between yourselves and the late 'Mackintosh—the present chief's father—£33; (2) 'the sum by which the rent has been raised since you 'made that arrangement with the late Mackintosh, '£12; in all, £45. Your total rent will thus be reduced 'to £135, and the reduction will take effect from the 'time you first became entitled to a reduction, which, 'I think, you said was Whitsunday 1886. I shall be 'glad to hear from you that you and all the other 'tenants agree to this arrangement, when I shall at 'once draw up a short Minute of Agreement between 'yourselves and The Chief. I am sending a copy of 'this letter to Mr Macgillivray, Achingall.' Then, in answer to that letter I received this one, which I shall read to Your Lordship, from John Mackintosh.

"Coignafionnternach,
1st March 1888.

'Mr Macdonald,

'Sir, I received your letter of the '27th, and I have seen all the other tenants and they 'all agree with the offer The Mackintosh is giving 'and we all wish to thank The Mackintosh for agree- 'ing with us. Hoping there will be no more disagree- 'ing between us. I am, truly yours, John Mackintosh, 'in name of all the other tenants.'

48,585. Was that land which up to the date of that arrangement held by the crofters under Act of Parliament?—No; it was held originally under a lease, and latterly by tacit relocation for many years.

48,586. But it was held by crofters?—They have never applied to the Crofters Commission.

48,587. But they are crofters I suppose under the Act?—Yes, I presume they are.

48,588. And this was part of their common grazing?—Yes.

48,589. Which was taken from them under this arrangement which you have described?—Yes.

48,590. So that this was land which they held with security of tenure under an Act of Parliament, taken from them by The Mackintosh, acting through you, by means of this arrangement?—Yes. [Mr Gordon. Did they get the reduction of rent as from Whitsunday 1886?—Yes. That was before the Act was passed?—Yes].

48,591. No doubt the Act of Parliament was passed on 25th June 1886, but the arrangement here was, I understand, concluded in March 1888?—That is so.

48,592. Well, the transaction is completed now, and perhaps there is no use of saying anything more about it, but it is the first transaction of the kind that I heard of?—As you have seen, it was quite an amicable arrangement.

48,593. You say the crofters were satisfied with it?—Yes; there is their letter.

48,594. That land was taken from them in order to form a corrie?—To complete one side of a corrie.

48,595. And, of course, the area taken was all that was necessary for that purpose?—Yes; we took it from the river.

48,596. Was there any measurement made from the 6-inch scale map, or how are you able to say that there were just 1000 acres?—I really cannot tell you at this moment; I don't think there were quite 1000 acres.

48,597. There is some difference between you and other witnesses, you know, as to the extent and the area: may it have been a good deal more than 1000?—The witness said more than that, but, I believe, it was in reality less.

48,598. I think he rather indicated more; but were there sufficient means taken to ascertain the precise area?—A fence was put up, so that the tenants saw the piece of land that was taken off; but I cannot at this moment say whether it was measured or not.

48,599. The usual method for landlords getting land which becomes the crofters by Act of Parliament, is by application for resumption of holding?—Well, that is so in the case of crofters; but I expect these gentlemen did not want to be crofters, although they actually were under the Act.

48,600. Mr Gordon.—The arrangement is thus stated in the letter: 'Your total rent will be reduced to '£135, and the reduction will take effect from the 'time you first became entitled to a reduction, which, 'I think you said, was Whitsunday 1886.' The fence was put up before the Act was passed.

48,601. The Chairman.—But the transaction was completed in 1888 after the Act had been in operation for two years?—That no doubt is the time when the transaction was completed; when it began to be spoken about was several years previously.

48,602. Mr Sutherland.—I should like to ask you one question with regard to the voluntary nature of this surrender of their grazing. Of course, you have shown us that it was voluntarily surrendered by the reading of the letter?—Yes.

48,603. But, did the people know that they had the means of resisting the demand if they chose?—Oh, perfectly well.

48,604. What means do you think they thought they had?—I don't know any crofter in the country who did not know the meaning of the Act of 1886 by the end of two years after it came into existence.

48,605. Under which this transaction did not take place?—This did not take place.

48,606. If they were aware of the privileges they had under the Act, why did they not enforce them, and stand upon them?—Because they were quite willing to oblige the proprietor. They were on very good terms with the proprietor, and were quite willing to oblige him; and it was better for themselves.

48,607. So that less land is better for them?—Less land, with less rent.

48,608. How far would you carry that principle?—I carry it here in this case; I am not responsible for any more.

48,609. Is that area the exact point at which it stops, if there is not a principle involved in it?—There is no principle involved in it. These people gave up so much of their land in order to oblige their proprietor, in return for the reduction of rent, and they never asked for any other compensation.

48,610. Did they know that they could under any circumstances contest that conclusion of the landlord?—I have no doubt they did.

48,611. And knowing that they had a remedy, they chose voluntarily to take the restricted area instead of the large area?—Most distinctly.

48,612. You are satisfied in your own mind as to that?—I will take my oath on it, if you like, for I believe it to be the case.

48,613. But you stated as a principle that there was no injury done to them, because if there was a reduced area, there was also a reduced rent?—I say there was no injury done to the tenants in this case, because they got compensation for the reduced area.

48,614. Then, if you were to reduce the area by another half, and take off half of the remaining rent, do you hold that there would still be no injury?—I am not going to say anything about that.

48,615. That is carrying out the principle?—I am not here for principles, but for facts.

48,616. What is the difference between the principles and the facts? What distinction do you draw in your own mind between the principle and the fact?—If you are asking the difference between a principle and a fact, I really must decline to chop logic with you.

48,617. But you stated the principle yourself?—No, I did not state any principle.

48,618. You stated that there was no injury done to them because if their area was reduced their rent was also reduced?—I said there was no injury done to these tenants, because their rent was reduced in proportion to their loss of area.

48,619. And arguing in the same way, if the area was still further reduced, and the rents also still further reduced, there would still be no injury?—That may be your opinion, but it is not mine.

48,620. But it is your own opinion?—No, it is not. You will allow me to have my own opinion, if you please.

48,621. Have you any practical knowledge of sheep farming, may I ask?—No, none.

48,622. Does The Mackintosh let his sheep farms at 10d. per sheep?—Well, I may say that they could only summer sheep up here; and I never made the calculation of what The Mackintosh charges per sheep.

48,623. Is it not common to let farms on the principle of so much per sheep?—I never let any on that principle.

48,624. You never heard that it is common in certain parts of Scotland?—I never did till this moment.

48,625. You did not hear what price they charged for sheep?—No.

48,626. And do you think that 10d. per sheep was quite an adequate reduction?—It is what they asked.

48,627. Mr Shaw Stewart.—The reduction of rent was given on their own terms?—On their own terms.

48,628. And if they had asked a larger reduction they might have got it?—I believe they would.

48,629. They thought they were asking what was fair to themselves and to the proprietor?—Certainly, I understood so.

48,630. Mr Maccallum.—You stated that it must have been present to the minds of the crofters that they had protection under the Act?—I believe it was.

48,631. Was that present to your own mind when you were making this arrangement?—I did not make the arrangement.

48,632. Was it not through you that it was made?—No, they came down to Moyhall and made the arrangement there.

48,633. But you were one of the parties to the transaction?—I heard the transaction discussed, and was afterwards the hand which reduced it to shape or writing.

48,634. I ask you then, was it present to your own mind that the tenants had that privilege under the Act?—I don't know that it was; I really do not remember at this moment.

48,635. You think it was in the mind of the crofters, but you don't know whether it was in your own mind?—I have not the slightest doubt they knew of it, and I have not the slightest doubt that I did, although I do not at this present moment recollect whether it was specifically mentioned or not.

48,636. It is an important matter, this fact of the security which they had under the Act; and they had by this arrangement conferred a great obligement on the proprietor. Do you remember whether there was any conversation between you and them as to their rights under the Crofters Act?—No, I do not remember of any.

48,637. Seeing you do not remember that, is it not more likely that these people did not know their rights?—I don't know: I say I am almost sure that they did.

48,638. Would it not be natural for them to bring this forward as an argument in their own favour, that the land was theirs so long as they paid a fair rent for it?—They did not bring forward any such argument. There is no law, so far as I know, which prohibits tenants from doing a friendly turn to their landlord. I am quite sure that they were quite willing to give up this land on their own terms, and quite thankful to get these terms.

48,639. To get the land off their hand?—To get these terms.

48,640. But the affair originated with the proprietor, did it not?—No doubt it did.

48,641 And the favour was all to him?—Yes.

Kingussie.

Allan Macdonald.

48,642. Not to them?—No, it was no favour to them, it did them no special good: the favour was to the proprietor.

48,643. In fixing the compensation, would it not be natural really to try and consider how these people were sacrificing their rights under the Crofters Act; did you consider that?—I don't know that I did.

48,644. Then further, do you know whether under the Crofters Act the proprietor can resume land in order to make it a deer forest?—With their own consent I presume he can.

48,645. But I mean acting under the Act of Parliament?—Whether he could compel them, do you mean?

48,646. Not whether he could compel them, but whether he could come before the Crofters Commission and seek power to resume the land in order to turn it into a deer forest?—I don't know.

48,647. So that if there is no provision under the Act for resuming land for deer forest, then it would be impossible for him to get it, except by consent of the crofters?—If there is no provision for his doing it compulsorily, of course he must do it by consent.

48,648. So that a very considerable favour was conferred in this case, and still there was no mention made of these rights? Was it not your duty, if they did not know it, to bring it under their notice?—No, I do not see that it was. Further, as I have stated repeatedly, I am perfectly certain they knew quite well what they were doing.

48,649. Do you think you would be entitled to take advantage of their ignorance?—No, I would not be entitled to take advantage of anybody.

48,650. The Chairman.—You were acting as agent for The Mackintosh in the transaction?—Yes, to the extent of writing the letter which I have read.

48,651. And the crofters had no agent?—No, they had no agent.

[Adjourned.]

FIFTY-SEVENTH SITTING.

Fort-William.

FORT-WILLIAM, August 18, 1894.

Present:—

David Brand, Esq., Advocate, Edinburgh, Sheriff of Ayr and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.
Angus Sutherland, Esq., M.P.
Rev. Malcolm Maccallum.
William Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary.

Donald Macphee.

Donald Macphee, Solicitor, Fort-William (49)—examined.

48,652. The Chairman.—You are a Solicitor in practice in Fort-William?—I am.

48,653. Are you appearing with regard to lands on the Abinger estate exclusively?—No, My Lord, I wish to make a general statement, and will include a reference to the Abinger estates among my observations with regard to the estates surrounding this place.

48,654. Are you appearing as a delegate?—I am a County Councillor, and I am a member of the Land League here, and I represent a number,—not one township in particular, but a number of townships on various estates.

48,655. We shall be glad to hear your statement?—I may say, My Lord, that I am a native of this district, and my ancestors have been here for centuries. The particular part of country where my ancestors on my father's side were settled was Loch-Arkaig, on the Lochiel estate. Of course, I cannot speak from personal recollection as to the evictions or clearances of the people from these places, but there are documents accessible to me, and I have made special inquiry into the condition of the country at the beginning of this century before these evictions or clearances began to take place, and as the result I am pretty conversant with the state of the distribution of population over the place and the manner in which the country was occupied during that time.

Fort-William.

Donald Macphee.

With regard to Loch-Arkaig side there were two glens branching off it,—Glen-Dessary and Glen-Pean,—in which a great many families were settled, as well as at various hamlets along the loch side. These hamlets were cleared at the time when the whole country side there was converted into sheep walks. That there were people there in considerable numbers, I think, appears evident from a reference to a rental or valuation of the farms on the Lochiel estate, which I exhibit to Your Lordship. It was taken about a century before 1883 when this book was published, which is a history of the Clan Cameron, by Mr Alexander Mackenzie, Inverness. Cameron of Lochiel was a subscriber to it, and I do not suppose he would have subscribed for the book and taken a copy of it unless he had been satisfied of its substantial accuracy. In that rental you will find the number of tenants on the various hamlets or localities up at Loch-Arkaig side, and I think they represent a considerable number indeed. I should say by way of explanation that only the tenants who pay a rent who hold directly from the proprietor are entered or numbered in that rent roll; besides them there would be cottars or sub-tenants whose names do not necessarily appear there, so that you can make out from that alone that there was a considerable population there at one time. I understand also that the level of Loch-Arkaig has been raised by forming a bank or weir at this end of it. The level of the loch has risen so much that it has submerged about 40 acres of land suitable for cultivation at the upper end of the loch.

Lochiel read a statement here before the Crofters Commission in which he said that the population there migrated from Loch-Arkaig side down to the Caledonian Canal when it was in course of construction. I do not know that he said expressly that it was in search of employment, but the implication and the inference from what he said was that they left voluntarily in order to find employment on the Canal banks. I do not know that it was mentioned in his statement—Mr N. B. Mackenzie is here and he will bear me out, but in the course of some of the observations that were made in the reading of that statement he said that he was unable to go back to the previous history of the estate management as the estate records only existed for a period of thirty-eight years from the time he made the statement, viz.:—last year. Now, I do not know how he should come to make this statement with regard to a transaction that took place at the beginning of the century if estate records are not in existence prior to a period of thirty-eight years back. But fortunately we do not depend on the records of the Lochiel estate office, because it is a matter of notoriety, and there are witnesses who will be adduced who have seen those who were dispossessed; and it is the subject of a poem by no less a distinguished scholar than Professor Shairp of Oxford titled 'Glen-Dessary.' I have it here and a certain portion of it is copied into a book also by Mr Alexander Mackenzie entitled 'The Highland Clearances,' and I see that the poet says in the introduction that it is founded on fact. It is notorious about here that Professor Shairp spent a good deal of time in this country gathering information on which this poem is based, and it correctly sets forth the facts in so far as it coincides with the results of my investigations. They went out, as the poet says, with herds of sheep and with cattle; they were not a poor destitute lot at all, but their stock was sacrificed by being thrown in the market all at once. The strong and able-bodied among them went to America, and a few, burdened with aged parents, were offered holdings on the margin of Loch-Eil here, and a number of them settled on what was then practically a peat bog, and is so still at Lochy side where they reclaimed land and where their descendants are to this day.

The same thing obviously has taken place up Loch-Eil side, from Corpach to Craigag, and in driving up, as I understand your Lordship and the other Commissioners will do in the beginning of this week, to go to your sittings in Arisaig, you will see unmistakable evidences along the road side of comfortable holdings there which have been cleared, and now form part of the sheep farm.

48,656. On which side of the loch?—On the north side of the loch. Lord Morton's property is on the south side. Then on Lochiel's estate, on the south side of Loch-Linnhe, witnesses will be adduced to-day to prove that between Druimarbin and Onich in Ballachulish there were numerous hamlets on what now constitutes the farm of Coruanan, and Inneirigh and Blar-nan-Cleireach and up there. These have been cleared off. Lochiel's estate on this side just begins where we are sitting, and goes on to Ballachulish. At North Ballachulish, about thirty years ago, or between twenty and thirty years ago, there were forty-two crofters. I do not mean that active eviction was employed in their case; but by a process which was equally effective, twenty of them were suppressed, and their holdings consolidated into a farm which was attached to the hotel there, and is now rented by the Episcopal Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, who rents both the farm and the hotel. The remaining crofts there are of very small size, so small indeed that when one became vacant about two or three years ago with a rental of £2, 12s. Lochiel thought it was so inadequate in size that it would be a good thing to enlarge the adjoining croft. We had not much fault to find with that if the enlargement had taken place out of the twenty crofts which were consolidated into such a large holding; if the necessity existed for enlarging the inadequate sized crofts that remained, then the crofters down there contend, and, I think, with justice, that the enlargement should have taken place out of these 20 acres which were consolidated into the inn farm, and handed over to a man who could make a very good living independently of that land. Land is a necessity of life to a crofter. That land now forms the Home Farm attached to Bishop Chinnery-Huldane's residence there.

The people of Ballachulish and the people of Achintore on the Lochiel estate have also to complain that valuable rights of summer grazing have been taken from them. There is a mountain range on this side of the Moor of Rannoch called Beinn-Bhreac, about 8 miles long, and the tenants of Onich and Achintore, and also the inhabitants of Fort-William, had the right of sending their cattle there during the summer to be grazed at first on the principle of the old shielings. They took their milk cattle there, and converted the milk into butter and cheese; but latterly it was, I understand, used for eild cattle and young beasts. It appears that at that time two proprietors had a kind of run-rig right of proprietorship in that mountain range, and also in Glas-bheinn, but by a system of exchange or exambion Glas-bheinn was assigned entirely to Sir Duncan Cameron, and Beinn-Bhreac, with the exception of a bit at the north end next the estate of Major Walker of Loch-Treig, was assigned to Cameron of Lochiel. These rights were valuable and the people were deprived of them, and, of course, it meant a reduction of the stock they were able to keep. Now, I should have said generally with regard to Loch-Arkaig and the other lands on Lochiel estate, that they are admirably suited for maintaining a large population on moderately-sized holdings.

48,657. You have gone back to Loch-Arkaig. Kindly endeavour to deal with that tract of country a little more in detail. You have referred us to Glen-Dessary and Glen-Pean, and you have told us about townships or farms that existed there in times past?—Yes.

48,658. Can you speak more particularly to tracts of land that you think we ought to consider, or are you only asking our attention generally to the land in and surrounding these glens, and on the sides of Loch-Arkaig?—I am only asking you to look at them generally as the result of my investigation and the perusal of that rent roll.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,659. You attach importance, and not unnaturally, to this rent roll; we had better have it in your evidence instead of by way of reference. Kindly pick out the farms or townships to which you ask our special attention. Does that book give the date of the rent roll?—The book was published in 1884, and Mr Alex. Mackenzie prefaces the reference to the rent roll by saying:—'The following statement giving the names 'of all the tenants, and the total rental paid on the 'Estates of Lochiel, nearly a century ago, will be found 'interesting,' so that that carries us back to about the year 1784. At Achnasoul, on Loch-Arkaigside, there were eight Camerons; that is near Achnacarry on the north bank. At Creiff there was a John Macphee (1); at Salichan there were a Cameron and a Macphee.

48,660. Which side of the loch is that?—I think they are nearly all on the north side. At Muick and Kenmore there was one tenant paying £20; at Caolonich, three Camerons and one Macphee; at Callicharth there were three Camerons, one Donald Macmillan and a John Macphee—that will be between Caolonich and Murlaggan. At Murlaggan there was a Macmillan, a Mackintosh, and a Maclachlan. At Relesmore there was a shieling in the occupancy of Alexander Macmillan. At Invermaillie, on the south side of loch, there was one Alexander Cameron; then at Kinloch-Arkaig, at the upper end, three Camerons. At Lagganfearn, near there Donald Cameron; and at Glenpeinbeg and Lagganfern there was one Ocain Cameron; at Glenpeinbeg there were two Camerons and two Macmillans. Glenpeinbeg is up at the head of Loch-Arkaig; it branches off there. Three quarters of Glenpeinbeg and half of Lagganfern was occupied as I have said by Ocain Cameron; a fourth of Glenpeinbeg was occupied by two Camerons and two Macmillans; Glenpeinmore was occupied by Allan Macmillan; Glen-Dessary by ten Macphees, four Macmillans, and four Camerons.

48,661. Was there a township of Glen-Dessary as well as the glen?—Yes. There are adjacent places like Moy to the south of Loch-Arkaig and Barr and Strone and Inverskilavullin. At Barr there were five Camerons; at Inverskilavullin two Camerons; at Errecht, Allan Cameron, without augmentation. At the two Moys there were twelve Mackinnons and four Camerons. I expected that Mr Alexander Macmillan, the present tenant of Moy, would have come here. I said a little ago that there were twelve Mackinnons and four Camerons at Moy. To show the fitness of the land to maintain a population of that number I asked Mr Macmillan, the present tenant of Moy, which is the only part of these lands in the occupation of an agriculturist and a pastoral farmer, all the rest being deer forest, to come, and give such evidence as he could. With your permission I will read the letters I got from Mr Macmillan on the subject.

48,662. Could Mr Macmillan not attend here himself?—It was not convenient for him to attend, he is a very old man. [Mr N. B. Mackenzie, factor for Lochiel.—He is a hale man, enjoying sound health].

48,663. We are not in the habit of taking evidence indirectly from any persons who are able to come and tender it themselves; and unless it is alleged that Mr Macmillan is unable to come I am afraid we cannot accept his letters as evidence? I will adopt his statements and make them my own, and that will obviate the difficulty. Mr Macmillan writes as follows:—'Dear Sir, You could not have found out a more unfit 'person for the important duty required. I never had 'a foot in their forests except a few yards at the top of 'the hill where I march. We dare not go in for our 'sheep except twice a year and then the shepherds cannot 'go in except with the gamekeepers, so I can say 'nothing about what their preserves are like, except 'by hearing others speak of them. If they had come '200 years sooner the Macphees and the Macmillans could

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

'have shown them many a score of reeking lums, with 'stalwart inhabitants on land that to-day lies desolate. 'I have no words to describe the folly, sin, and shame 'of the change. What is sport? a keeper taking an 'old gouty clappy Englishman and placing him on a 'pass, then a dozen or two of beaters to drive a herd 'past him. If he manages to butcher one of them 'he is overjoyed (any old wife could have done it). 'In most cases the victim is a nobler animal than the 'butcher. Grand policy to consign the bonny fertile 'glens of fair Scotia to such base uses. When shall we 'do to others as we would be done by. Therefore, sir, 'as I am incapable for the duty you require, I hope 'you will find one that knows the glens and also can 'describe them.Hoping you will not be disappointed, 'I am your obedient servant, Alexander Macmillan.' Dated from Moy, 8th August 1894. I wrote Mr Macmillan asking his permission to make use of his letter, and he replies: 'Dear Sir, You are welcome 'to make any use of my poor letter that you please. 'I had no thought of it going further than the eye of a 'private friend, else I would have put a few more 'stubborn facts into it, and given it a more independent 'dress. But you can round the periods and sharpen the 'points. Moy Moss is an object lesson to show what 'can be improved; what is taken in was just the same 'as what is left, and what is taken in is the best field 'in Moy for all crops. Had not the prices fallen and 'labour risen, I would have taken in the whole, 'although I got no encouragement—not a stob—'although there are hundreds of pounds rotting in 'the forests in the shape of wood. When he would 'not give the wood I wanted gamekeepers to put in 'for straining posts, but I did not get them either, and 'as it was no rare thing for a dozen deer to be in the 'corn all night, stripping the heads off, I then wanted 'the factors and the deer put into the Ground Game 'Act, for it was very aggravating to fatten the bonnie 'beasts especially when they were reserved for such a 'base ignominious end.'

48,664. How is that land occupied at present?—The high ground is occupied as a sheep run.

48,665. Who is the farmer?—The writer of this letter, Alexander Macmillan, and he has trenched a considerable area of low ground. He says in that letter that the land is exactly the same as the land all about, and he says that the land taken in is the best field on his farm.

48,666. Are you able to speak of this trenching from your own knowledge?—I am.

48,667. What is the name of the neighbouring forest, the nearest forest?—Invermallie, I do not know what particular name you have for it; it is on the south side of Loch-Arkaig.

48,668. There is a place called Moy down near the Caledonian Canal?—That is the place.

48,669. Is it near the Lochiel forest, or marching with it?—It is. It is on the Lochiel estate, and marching with the forest.

48,670. Is it part of Lochiel forest or part of another forest?—It marches exclusively with Lochiel's deer forest.

48,671. Have you finished your statement?—I think I have said all I meant to say about Lochiel's estate. But I may say generally, and I may say it in this connection too, that there exists a very great demand for such holdings; that is evidenced by the competition when a croft becomes vacant; there is a great competition between the heirs of deceased, or with other people in the case of a man voluntarily removing from his holding. The demand clearly shows that any number of these holdings could be tenanted, the fact that they pay appears to me to be evidenced from this, that Records of the Court do not disclose any actions for payment of rent worth speaking about. You may get an occasional one, but if, generally, the tenants had been unable to pay the landlords would not be slow to seek the assistance of the Court, because it is notorious that Lochiel in particular desires to suppress the crofters there, to reduce their number, and I will give you ground for that opinion. But I say from the fact that hardly a case is enrolled in the Court for recovery of rent, it is plain that the tenants are paying their rents very well indeed. They did that in the days when they were rack-rented or over-rented, because since the sitting of the Crofters Commission in many cases very serious reductions of rents have been effected, and you would naturally expect that before these rents were reduced they should find considerable difficulty in paying the too high rents that were exacted from them. Yet, in point of fact, if you search the records of the Courts you would find no evidence of that existing.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,672. May I ask you whether you have a personal acquaintance with the lands on the north bank of Loch-Arkaig?—No, I did not say that I had a personal acquaintance with them; I have been at this end of the Loch, but I have not travelled up.

48,673. You do not, of your own knowledge, know whether they are suitable for cultivation or occupation otherwise?—No; other witnesses will speak as to that, I am merely giving you the result of my investigation.

48,674. Then, do you know personally the lands in Glen-Dessary and Glen-Pean?—No, because they are still further off than Loch-Arkaig side. You only approach Loch-Arkaig from the Achnacary end where Lochiel's seat is.

48,675. Now you mentioned Lochiel, can you give us the names of old townships going up from Corpach?—I can give you the name of Achdaliew; if you look at that rental you will find that at Corpach and Banavie, prior to these evictions from Loch-Arkaig and other places, there was only one tenant, I think the parish minister. It is land much inferior I understand to the lands from which the tenants were evicted and was only settled down on from sheer necessity. This rental shows that there was a public-house at Corpach, the rent of which was £3, 10s., and Corpach was let to Alexander Macdonald of Glencoe for £120. The fishing of Corpach was let for £2, 5s.; three-eighths of Banavie were let to Mr Fraser, minister, and Patrick Mackinnon. Further up there were eight Camerons. But what has practically been reclaimed or converted into soil capable of maintaining families in some degree of comfort has been soil made by the labour of these men who were evicted from these farms.

48,676. Now, coming to Loch-Linnhe, can you give us any more specific information than we have had from you already with regard to the old townships or old hamlets there; or do you just call our attention to that tract of ground generally?—There are two existing townships there,—Achintore and Druimarbin. With regard to Achintore I might point out an injustice that results from the treatment of it at present to the ratepayers. Achintore begins where we sit just now and extends westward. It was let out to the crofters. It has now been disposed of as a feuing ground, and has been feued out to the extent I should say of fully half a mile westwards from here. So long as the land was occupied as crofts the tenants paid agricultural rents on which they paid poor rates, county rates, and other assessments. Its agricultural value I think we may assume at something between 10s. and £1 per acre; yet when it is feued out to feuars here—I speak in presence of Lochiel's agent—I think I am right in saying that the rate of feu-duty is about £10 per acre. But while the landlord gets at least ten times the rent that he got for it as crofting land, it escapes all taxation and the rent is lost as a taxable entity to the community. It disappears from the Valuation Roll as a subject on which rates might be recovered. They get police protection, but so far as the landlord, whose return from the land has increased from ten to twenty fold, is concerned, he escapes taxation altogether. No doubt it will be said, my lord, that when the feu is given off, the feuar builds a house on it, and that something much more valuable comes into existence as a taxable subject. But I think we have a substantial ground of grievance when we find that the landlord who was taxed before for the small rent levied off the croft escapes taxation altogether when he converts it into a feu, and his rent is secured by the buildings which his vassal places on the feu.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,677. That is hardly a matter which concerns this Commission. You referred to the loss of rights of summer grazing on the Lochiel estate. Can you give us any specific information with regard to that, or point us to any particular tracts of grazing of which crofters or small tenants have been deprived?—I have done so.

48,678. You referred to a demand existing for new holdings; can you tell us from the knowledge in your possession what sort of holdings are in view?—I may say that we have made application through the District Committee to the County Council by men well able to take up these holdings, and I have some of them in Court to-day, natives of some of the districts which were cleared; comparatively substantial men who find themselves perfectly helpless as it were, divorced from land and compelled to live in a crowded village. They are quite helpless, yet if they could get suitable holdings of say from 10 to 12 acres of land they would be able to live in comfort.

48,679. I was about to ask whether they had in view holdings of a kind on which they could live by the holding alone, or is it holdings of such a size that they would maintain themselves partly by outside labour or by fishing?—Mostly holdings of a size that would support them; combined agricultural holdings of 10 or 12 acres, with a right of pasturing 300 sheep or so.

48,680. Then they would desire to get holdings which would occupy their whole time, and by which they could live?—Quite so.

48,681. Not holdings of the kind we are more accustomed to, which are merely homes, and which require outside labour to keep the occupants going?—No; these men are in circumstances that would enable them to take a moderate-sized holding and to make a living by it.

48,682. Was that the kind of holding for which application was made to the County Council?—Yes. Of course, we did not go into details; you are not required in the application to specify exactly what you want; but they did not get that length.

48,683. Is there any desire for fishermen's holdings, very small patches of land where the occupants would live entirely by the sea?—Not in this quarter. There is no fishing in this quarter such as there is in the west of Lewis, or in Barra, or the Outer Islands, to justify the establishment of a colony of fishermen.

48,684. Is there no fishing industry?—None, but salmon fishing; there are white fish but they cannot be caught here in great abundance. There are odd men who devote their time to fishing, but it is a precarious industry, and it does not reward them so well as to encourage others to follow their example.

48,685. Is this desire for holdings to be found in any considerable degree among persons resident in this town?—I have several witnesses here, who are in this town just now, who want holdings, and who can show, if necessary to your lordship, that they are able to take and stock them.

48,686. I was going to put that question. They have in view to enter on such holdings, put up the necessary buildings, and carry on the farm without outside assistance?—Without outside assistance.

48,687. Mr Sutherland.—You gave us some indications of a former population; I presume that was in order to show us that there is land fit for the purposes of our inquiry?—Quite so, and they were on these lands for generations; I can show that by reference to such books as Skene's history.

48,688. And the fact that people lived there before, I take it is, in your opinion, prima facie evidence that they could live there again?—No doubt of that, and I shall have witnesses here to-day who will speak to this; that the land at that time was treated very much as it is in Switzerland to-day; cattle were grazed on it and the old small breed of sheep. But they were supplanted by the bigger sheep farmers on account of these lands being admirably suited for sheep runs.

48,689. What made them, in your opinion, better fitted for sheep runs at that time?—I do not say that they were better.

48,690. What made them well fitted for sheep runs?—Because the lands were essentially good. Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,691. Do you know the character of land that is best for sheep,—mixed pasture?—I do not venture to give you any opinion as a practical farmer, but the inference I draw from the fact that such farmers as Cameron Coire-Chuinnlidh, one of the most noted farmers of his day, and also a most distinguished family of farmers from the south, the Cunninghams took the farms of Locharkside and held them for some time, and I believe that when they gave them up there were delivered to Lochiel 18,000 sheep.

48,692. But with regard to the fitness of these sheep-runs when they were new for rearing stock, are you of opinion that these runs were enhanced in value by the fact that part of them had been cultivated before?—I have no doubt of that, because even such an expert as Mr Malcolm of Invergarry says, that it is undoubted that land formerly in cultivation affords good pasturage. We know it also from the wintering of sheep here. Sheep are sent to winter to crofting townships simply because they get the benefit of the grass that grows on the cultivated part of the crofts, showing clearly that the valuable part of the wintering ground is not the hill or outrun attached to the township, but the land under cultivation by the crofters. In the same way I should think that the lands from which these people were cleared were lands of identically the same description. They had been cultivated; perhaps not so highly then as now, but, still, these lands, I have no doubt, did form the most valuable part of the grazing, and it is possible that when these lands went back into a state of nature they were not then so capable of maintaining the same number of sheep.

48,693. Then I think a just inference from that statement of yours is that while the small holdings increased the value of the land, the large sheep grazier has deteriorated its value?—Quite so.

48,694. There is a small holding on the side of the hill across the water which I saw this morning—right opposite the hotel?—Yes.

48,695. It is a small holding in the middle of a moor I may say. Supposing that holding were to be laid waste and the tenant driven out of it, do you think it would form a good nucleus for a sheep farm?—I have no doubt it would afford the sweetest bite and the most abundant pasture; not the holding itself but the hamlet.

48,696. Is it your opinion that, extending that example outwards, was the general state of the Highlands before the removal of the people and the formation of the sheep farms?—I have no doubt of that. These are very good illustrations of what I mean; the existing townships from my knowledge of them are on infinitely inferior lines. The best lands were cleared, and those who did not emigrate were permitted to settle down on practically waste lands.

48,697. In your opinion, is it good farming to allow the land to go back into a state of nature?—I cannot speak as a farmer, but as a common-sense man I should say it was the worst policy possible.

48,697A. But from a common-sense point of view, do you think it is scientific farming to allow land to go back into a state of nature?—I do not think scientific farmers would do that.

48,698. You and I could become farmers on that principle?—Quite so. I might say also that I do not think the system has benefited Cameron of Lochiel, and some of the other proprietors, because while the crofters have been getting on, and there is a marked improvement, especially since the passing of the Crofters Act, in the condition of the crofts about here, the circumstances of the extensive proprietors in the district seem to be going back. I find even that such men as Lord Abinger and Lochiel, instead of possessing their sporting grounds, had to let even their dwelling-houses, their furniture, their family pictures, and their napery along with their shootings.

48,699. You devoted what I should consider to be perhaps a little too much time to proving to us that there were people on these lands before?—I am sorry for that.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,700. Well, it is a matter of assumption; it is taken for granted. You are aware that Cameron of Lochiel himself was a member of the Royal Commission of 1884 which made this report in regard to the matter. 'The history of the economical transformation 'which a great portion of the Highlands and Islands 'has, during the past century, undergone, does not 'repose on the loose and legendary tales that pass from 'mouth to mouth; it rests on the solid basis of con-'temporary records, and if these were wanting, it is 'written in indelible characters on the surface of the 'soil'.—Quite so; I agree with that.

48,701. Cameron of Lochiel's signature is to that statement, so that I think that can be taken as a matter that has been settled authoritatively?—Perfectly so.

48,702. You did not say that it was stated directly but that it was implied that the population round Loch-Arkaig-side voluntarily shifted at the time of the formation of the Caledonian Canal down to the Canal side?—In search of employment.

48,703. That might have been literally the case, might it not? But did they abandon their homes for that purpose?—No, they did not. Colonel Cameron of Glen-Nevis at that time was either the factor or the farmer, and people do not go in search of employment preceded by their droves of cattle or accompanied by their furniture and household goods. They would not take their whole farm stock when going in search of work.

48,704. I gather from the general tendency of your evidence that you are of opinion that there is land there fit for the purposes for which we are sent to inquire, and also people willing and able to take that land?—I am satisfied of that.

48,705. And these conditions are to be found in Fort-William, as to people, and in the neighbourhood, and in those glens you have referred to, as to locality?—Yes, and it would be a very great stimulus to exertion on the part of our people here were they sustained by the hope of getting back to the country, for I think nothing is more injurious to human beings than to send them adrift on the world without any hope of returning to their native spots. The prospect of being able to get back here and settle down on their own country again would stimulate them to exertion and do an amount of good. I think that would make it very desirable that facilities should exist for giving them the opportunity of returning.

48,706. During our inquiry we have been met in some places by objections on the part of landlords and their representatives that localities which are mentioned by witnesses before us, are unfavourable because of their altitude. Is this a very high country?—It is.

48,707. Do you know the height of Loch-Arkaig above the sea?—No, but we can find it from the Ordnance Survey Map. I may say in regard to that point that I have witnesses here who were shepherds and gamekeepers, and who will tell you for example that up at Loch-Treig sheep will survive where deer succumb in great numbers, and sheep will pick up a living where no other animal can. I have heard the same thing from others with regard to Glen-Nevis and other farms about here, and I think it is an established fact.

48,708. The height of Loch-Treig appears to be 784 feet above sea-level?—Yes.

48,709. But the height of Loch-Arkaig is only 140 feet above sea-level?—Well, if what I say would prevail at Loch-Treig with its much highera ltitude a fortiori would it apply to Loch-Arkaig.

48,710. Or to Kingussie with its 900 or 1000 feet?—Quite so.

48,711. Of course, you would not expect them—it would not be fair to take the height of Ben-Nevis and say that that is the altitude of the country?—No, certainly not, these are exceptional things. There is no vegetation on Ben-Nevis beyond half-way up either for deer or for sheep so that there would be no question of competition there.

48,712. Then you referred to a transaction that took place in the neighbourhood of this town; how was that transference accomplished, from crofts to feus, and what is the date of that transaction do you know?—About thirty years ago. There was not judicial pressure brought to bear, but they were removed.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,713. I was going to ask you whether they received any compensation?—There are delegates from that township who will speak to that matter. But in connection with North Ballachulish I may tell you that so keen is the desire that exists to remain on the holdings there that one man to whom a croft was bequeathed was refused the croft by the proprietor. He applied to the Sheriff Court here to have himself declared heir.

48,714. Was that before the Crofters Act?—No, my lord, since the passing of the Act. He was unfortunately in this position; he and the testator were the sons of sisters, and as land cannot transmit through women he lost the croft; the matter was appealed to the Court of Session and they confirmed the Sheriff-Substitute's view that he was outside the circle of relations favoured by the Act. We appealed to the House of Lords and as the man was too poor to maintain the appeal in that expensive Court we applied to have him admitted to the benefit of the poor roll; but the Committee of Law Lords held that he had no probabilis causa seeing that he had the judgment of the Sheriff-Substitute and of the Court of Session against him. We have not got their determination, but I cite that as showing how intense is the desire on the part of the people, when they actually fight for the possession of a £2, 12s. croft through all the tribunals of the land up to the House of Lords.

48,715. Have you in this neighbourhood the same practical confession of failure of the sheep farming system as we have found in other parts of the country; are sheep farmers as prosperous as they used to be?—Few of them exist. Taking Glen-Spean down which I understand you travelled last night; from Breackachy and Ardverikie to Inverlochy you have ground that I should say is capable on the south side of the glen of maintaining 50,000 sheep or so. Out of that there has been cleared Leanachan, on Lord Abinger's estate, 2000 sheep, Coire-Chuinnlidh and Kyllie-honnet 6000 sheep; Fersit and Torgulbin now on Lord Abinger's estate, but recently acquired by him from Major Walker of Loch-Treig and let to Sir John Stirling Maxwell, 5000 sheep.

48,716. Loch-Treig let with Inch 4000 sheep? [Mr N. B. Mackenzie.—No, that is not cleared, it is under sheep still]. I make the statement, and I think we will get evidence to support it. Ardverikie deer forest, including Ben-Alder, about 15,000 sheep. In all a tract capable of carrying 30,000 sheep has been cleared on one side of the glen. That is the best side of the glen, and you will find population only on the other side. It is I may say an absolute wilderness from Fort-William to Breackachy, whereas on the other side, particularly on the estate of Mackintosh of Mackintosh, there has been little or no disturbance of population.

48,717. But with regard to the transformation of sheep-runs into deer forests, you say that all those tracts you referred to that carried so many sheep are now deer forests; is that your statement?—Quite so.

48,718. What is the ostensible reason for this change?—Acquisition of money.

48,719. The rent of sheep farms has gone down; is that so?—No, but fewer people are able to take them.

48,720. Or is it because the rents of deer forests have gone up?—Probably; the supply of such land for the gratification of sport is limited, and the wealth of those who desire such places is, I may say, unlimited. Money is no consideration to them, and, in my opinion, land is divorced from its primary use and put to a use that is quite unjustifiable.

48,721. Are those farms that you have referred to made into one or more deer forests?—Several.

48,722. Are they all contiguous?—Almost in line with slight breaks. I can give you the name of the farms intervening and the stock upon them.

48,723. Are they contiguous throughout, are all those forests contiguous all along?—No, but they are almost contiguous, with perhaps a farm going in like a wedge here and there between them. For instance, there is Inverlochy and Claggan at this end with a stock of about 1000 sheep. Then there is Torlundy Home Farm—Mr Smith will correct me if I understate or overstate the numbers, but I estimate the stock at about 1000. Dawnie has 1500 of a sheep stock, Tomnafet 1800, Insh perhaps 2000, Monessie 1000, Inverlair 1700, in all 10,000 sheep interspersed in an area capable of carrying about 50,000 sheep.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,724. I suppose the number of sheep that went into the market from these tracts of land could be easily obtained. It would not be impossible to obtain an estimate of the number of carcases of mutton that were sent into the market of this country every year from these places when they were under sheep?—No, I think not. I remember discovering the stock lists of Cameron, Coire-Chuinnlidh, extending over a great many years, among the papers in my employer's office.

48,725. Can you give us no idea of the amount of food for the people that gets its way into the market from deer forests?—Very little gets into Fort-William, and I don't know that any goes anywhere else.

48,726. Have you ever formed any estimate of the number of acres required to maintain a deer?—No, I have not.

48,727. Have you ever heard the question asked or talked about in any way?—I could easily work it out. There is generally a certain number of stags assigned to the shooting tenant for each year, and if you take the area of the forest, I think it takes seven years to stock a forest; multiply the annual crop by seven and you may get something like the stock. The calculation could be worked out, but I have not applied my mind to it.

48,728. It would be a rather interesting calculation, would it not?—Yes, but I am sorry I am not in a position to give you the figures.

48,729. Then as to the town of Fort-William itself; it is an old town, is it not?—It is an old town. In the year 1597 an Act was passed by James VI. for the purpose of creating three burghs, one in the Lews, one in Cantyre, and one in Lochaber.

48,730. So it is older than the '45?—Yes.

48,731. Was the fort here built after the '45, as in the case of Fort-George and Fort-Augustus?—No; it was built in 1698, I think.

48,732. Then, has Fort-William obtained an accession of population from the thinning out of people from the districts round about?—Its population has gradually increased, with this result, that when you consider the total population of the parish you may see very little fluctuation; but if you consider the distribution of population you will find the rural population has been steadily declining with almost a corresponding increase in the urban population of this place.

48,733. The two are concurrent?—They are concurrent, whereas in Kilmonivaig, which has not been an absorber of population like Fort-William, there has been a steady decline from 1800, while the population of the country as a whole has almost trebled since that time.

48,734. Now, whatever might have been the drawbacks in olden times,—no doubt in these places and at that time there would be drawbacks—these do not now exist?—Clearly.

48,734A. Such as?—Travelling facilities are very much improved, and farmers can now get their stock sent to market very much better and more quickly than they could then. They can import improved seed or get an improved stock in; in fact, wherever you have travelling facilities you can get all the advantages of civilisation applied to your own particular part.

48,735. You have heard, I have no doubt, comparisons made between the methods of agriculture in those days and the improved methods of the present day?—Yes.

48,736. Do you think that is a fair comparison?—No, the times are different, but you will perhaps permit me to say that in Switzerland I have seen very much the same system followed that was said to prevail in this country. They still drive their cattle there up to the higher parts of their mountains and bring them down just as the severity of the weather drives them, keeping the low-ground pasture clear for winter keep and fodder. That, I understand from reading, is the system which was pursued in the Highlands in olden times. I have been to Norway this summer, and I have seen places there cultivated in much the same fashion.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,737. The Norwegian sæter and the Highland shieling are practically the same thing?—I do not know so much about Norway, but I have seen places that in this country would be thought absolutely inaccessible except by eagles or other birds utilised for summer pasture. So steep and inaccessible are the places that wire ropes are attached to the mountain side half way up, and the farmers tie their hay in little bundles and run them down these ropes, otherwise they would not be able to get down a load very easily.

48,738. Then, there is the fact of a railway having been opened here a few days ago; does not that change the circumstances?—It does immensely. That railway runs all along Lord Abinger's estate; it opens up that valley which, as I said, is comparatively well populated on the one side but absolutely deserted on the other and the better side. I would like to emphasise that point, that the part which has been cleared is capable of maintaining four or five times the population that now exists on the other side of the glen. All that district is now placed within easy reach of the large centres by means of the new railway.

48,739. And that without taking into account the facilities afforded by Mr Macbrayne's steamers?—Yes, without taking that into account at all, the whole of that district is tapped by this new railway.

48,740. I suppose then you are of opinion that it is absolutely unfair to compare the state of agriculture that existed on Loch-Arkaig-side before the people were cleared with the state of agriculture that obtains in the neighbourhood of Fort-William now?—That is so. And if any just comparison was made it ought to be with the state of agriculture in the neighbourhood of Fort-William at that time?—Quite so.

48,740A. I may take it generally that you are of opinion that there would be very little danger of these people not succeeding, provided they got such holdings as you indicate?—I have no doubt of it. There is another matter which I would like to mention if it is relevant to this inquiry. I would like to say that there are one or two particulars in which, I think, the Crofters Act could be amended with very great advantage. I refer to the clauses as to the bequest of holdings. This was evidently imported from the Agricultural Holdings Act. In the Act, as your lordship may remember, there is an unfettered permission given to the tenant to bequeath his lease to any person. Now, the restrictions with which the right to bequeath a croft is loaded work out the greatest dissatisfaction and injustice. I think it would also benefit the crofters very much and tend to the general prosperity of this part of the crofting counties at least if the right of free sale of their holdings were conferred on the crofters.

48,741. The Chairman.—Adopting the Irish principle?—Either that or in some other way; I think we are independent enough to find a method of remedying the evil among ourselves. But it appears to me, my lord, to be an unnatural tying of people to the land like limpets to a rock; if a man is a crofter it is a sort of slavery to compel him always to be a crofter, but if he wishes to change his condition he must at present forfeit certain valuable rights. I think it would be for the benefit of the country generally when the crofter chooses to change his occupation, as under many conditions it might be for his advantage that he should have the right of free sale. If his family were grown up they might wish to extend their operations if they possessed more capacity than is required for simple crofting, the present position of the law creates difficulty; if a man was enabled to realise his interest in his croft and go to the labour market with what he got for the croft he would have a starting fund with which he and his family could enter a trade or profession with a much better chance of success. Then again, if there were free sale he would be sustained by the hope that though he might not get back to the spot where his forefathers lived yet he would be able, if circumstances favoured him in the struggle for life in the south, to get back to a place if not his own, at least very much like his own. The support and the stimulus that such a hope would impart to him would be the salvation of the man, whereas men going now into large towns and compelled at first possibly to live in slums live so hopeless a life that it accounts for a good deal of the inclination to drown their woes in drink.

48,742. The Chairman.—Then, would you also be in favour of repealing the prohibition against assigning tenancies?—The assignment of tenancy or free sale would do; you may adopt any form you like. Then there is another grievance which exists here which I may be allowed to point out. While in any civil suit or in any criminal prosecution the evidence of two witnesses is required to establish the guilt of any man charged with a crime or offence, I see no just reason why there should be an exception made in favour of game laws to the effect of making the evidence of one man, and that man frequently an interested man, such as a gamekeeper, sufficient to convict.

48,743. I think we had better not go into that matter; it is hardly relevant to this inquiry?—I would only say that I see no reason why the ordinary rules of evidence should be relaxed in favour of so exceptional a property and with manifest injustice to Her Majesty's subjects.

48,744. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to this question of the amendments of the Crofters Act suggested by you, would you give the crofters the right to sell to any person, or would you limit their right in any way? Might there not be a danger if free sale were allowed that these small holdings might fall into the hands of people who had other holdings, and that the consolidation of the small holdings might be the result?—No, that is not intended; some restriction would be imposed. It appears to me that national defence and the requirements of public health render it necessary that we should have a better distribution of population than we have, because I think it is generally admitted that the long continuance from generation to generation of people in towns produces a debilitated race. Now, I should certainly like to see as many openings as possible provided for a circulation of people from the city to the country, and vice versa, and I think it would be proper that some prohibition should be enacted against the consolidation or combination of holdings.

48,745. You think that some such limitation would be necessary, and that the small holdings should be conserved in this transference?—Quite so.

48,746. And in some cases perhaps where the holding was too small, and where it would be desirable to add it to the other small holdings, there might be an appeal, say to the Crofters Commission, for power to do so?—Quite so.

48,747. In your experience, is it the case that since the crofters have got fixity of tenure in their holdings they have improved their dwellings and perhaps also improved their lands?—Unfortunately, in this part of the country I cannot say much about that, without violating confidences given me as agent; but, I may say, generally, that the tenants have been waiting here suspending operations in the way of improvements until they should get their rent fixed, so that whatever money they expended on their holdings by way of improvement could be clearly ascertained and differentiated, so as to establish the amount of compensation they would get for it. The decisions of the Crofters Commission have only been issued so recently with regard to this country that they have had no time yet to carry their resolutions or purposes into effect, but from what I have seen in other parts of the country where a sufficient interval has elapsed between the issuing of the judgment of the Crofters Commission, I have no hesitation in saying that a marked improvement has taken place over many parts of the Highlands,—a very beneficial change.

48,748. Then, by conferring on the crofters the right of free sale, do you think they would be stimulated to make even greater improvements?—I have no doubt of that.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,749. Because just now, if they had to give up their crofts, there would be a danger of their not getting full value for them.—Quite so.

48,750. You have given us a very full account of the distribution of the land here, and I think I gather that the great want is moderately-sized holdings?—Moderately-sized holdings.

48,751. You have large deer forests and very large farms, and you have crofts, but very few moderately-sized ones?—Or even ordinary-sized sheep farms. There is an utter absence of a middle class here,—a class between the landlord and the crofter.

48,752. You tell us also very clearly that there is a great desire to have land, and that there would be a keen competition for moderately-sized holdings?—I have referred to the applications made to the County Council in support of that view.

48,753. Do you find people applying to yourself to mediate between them and the proprietors in order to get land?—I have one man with whom I have done that successfully in Mr Smith's case—Duncan Macdonald, Spean-Bridge. While he is very grateful for what he has got, yet he is quite prepared to stock a much larger place and on better land than has been assigned to him.

48,754. Then the proprietor has not tried to meet this demand for small holdings to any appreciable degree?—Not in this part of the country. These applications, I may say, have come from every part of the country, and I remember County Councillor Smith of Breackachy making a motion in order to test whether this Act was a reality or a delusion, and the committee to whom the petitions were referred returned a report which practically proved that the applicants could get no land under the Act.

48,755. You mean under the Small Holdings Act?—Yes.

48,756. You found that that Act was quite unworkable?—Utterly unworkable.

48,757. After having given it what you considered a fair trial?—Quite so. Without compulsion we cannot get the land.

48,758. How do you account for the proprietors not trying to meet the people, seeing that you say there is great desire, that the people have means, and that large sheep farming does not pay? How do you account for the deadlock?—Those who want sport and want a country devastated to provide sport have generally unlimited means, and can give more than the actual value of the land for agriculture, or pasture, or anything of that kind. But I think to provide sport for one or two at the expense of whole communities of the people ought not to be permitted.

48,759. Do you think that the land held by the crofters just now is better than the land in large farms and deer forests?—By no means.

48,760. With regard to these new holdings that might be formed here, I presume they would have formed them out of what are now large sheep farms, or deer forests. Would you suggest that the new holdings should be in the form of club farms, having separate arable land and the hill ground held in common?—In some cases; that would be one way of using it, but in other cases, such as Lianachan and Dawnie, the land is admirably suited for being let in lots of 12 to 20 acres to single tenants without hill grazing if they cared to take them that way. Other parts would be better managed by taking the hill along with it, and that is generally what is desired,—club farms, in fact. We have one at Kinlochiel, a club farm where five crofters combine and have a stock of 400 to 500 sheep. It is small enough. There are club farms up on the braes of Lochaber at Bohuntine in Glen-Roy; the tenants, I understand, are not crofters, because they were lease-holders at the passing of the Act; but though technically not crofters they are so in reality.

48,761. Have they a club farm at Bohuntine?—They have, and to give you an idea of the size of it I may say that this year they sold a crop of lambs numbering 800. Then there is the Gabhailmhor, which is a large holding also on the opposite side of the glen on The Mackintosh's estate; it is on the left hand as you go up.

48,762. Are these club farms holding a large stock of sheep getting on successfully?—As well as other farms are doing; of course they have passed through a crisis lately as regards prices.

48,763. The experience on the Lochiel estate is that, when a large farm is held by one man, he does not succeed and he throws it up?—Throws it up.

48,764. But these have not thought of putting their farm in the hands of the proprietor?—No.

48,765. And do they pay their rent?—They do. I am referring to the Lochiel estates just now: I am not in a position to state how the Bohuntine and the Gabhailmhor tenants stand with regard to rent, but I know in the case of the Kinlochiel crofters exactly how they stand, because I acted for them. One of them had some arrears, but his was a single instance.

48,766. But the large farms, when let to one individual, seem to be unlettable when they fall out of lease?—They are in point of fact unlet, and I suppose that is the reason.

48,766A. Have the crofters shown their desire to get more pasture by making application to the Crofters Commission for enlargement of their holdings?—They have.

48,767. Have any enlargements been granted?—Yes, but they have not got facilities from the proprietors to get the enlargements. In the case of the Kinlochiel crofters they applied for an enlargement of holding. They got an enlargement in this sense, that a bit of debateable ground was declared to be theirs. That was merely a dispute as to marches; they maintained that their march was so and so, and the proprietor maintained that it did not include a very good piece of pasture, but by an arrangement or adjustment it was agreed that subject to certain rights of pasturage on certain days by the proprietor the tenants should have the exclusive use of this debateable bit of land, and in consideration of that we withdrew a special application for enlargement of holdings. We did not want to have any open questions in view of the arrangement I have narrated. But the tenants of Blaich, on Lord Morton's estate, have got an enlargement of holding, and I may say of Lord Morton that he is an extremely good proprietor, the best that we have about here; the tenants on that holding are now, I think, in the way of getting on well, though for a time, owing to the depredations of deer, they suffered very seriously indeed. The tenants of the adjoining township of Garvan asked for an enlargement of their holdings. Their proposed enlargement extended like a tongue into the deer forest, and his lordship's agents did not see their way to give them that extension in full. They conceded to them a part of the land they wanted, but that land turns out to be the worst of the whole place,—land that they would only have taken as a part of the whole and would never have thought of asking as an extension of enlargement by itself. They have appealed to the Crofters Commission; their object being merely to be relieved of that bit of land which formed the base of the triangle representing the enlargement. That land is so wet and boggy that, by itself, it is of no possible use to them. They would be greatly benefited if they got the enlargement which they sought originally.

48,768. That matter has not been disposed of, I suppose?—No, it is still sub judice. I hope I am not expressing any opinion, prejudicial or otherwise—I merely wish to state facts.

48,769. The tenants on Lord Morton's estate, I suppose, feel the benefit of the extension which they have got?—Those on the Blaich estate do, but, with regard to Garvan, so long as this is in an open condition, they cannot say anything.

48,769A. But with regard to the other case?—It has proved an undoubted benefit, although it has only been in operation for over six months or so. They have got their wintering let.

48,770. And it is your opinion that crofters can utilise these pastures to profiting?—Yes, they can sell the right of wintering for a specific sum. Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,771. Now, with regard to the summer grazings, taken from Onich and Auchintore and Blarmachfoldach and other places, can you tell us about the quality of that land; whether it is suitable for sheep?—Beinn Bhreac was stocked as a sheep farm by Mr Campbell of Monzie, and the Beinn Bhreac wedders fetched the top price in the market.

48,772. Then as to the benefits derived from the deer forest, do you think now, that employment on a deer forest has any prejudicial effect upon the people who are so engaged. You tell us that these sportsmen have unlimited means; I suppose they spend money pretty lavishly when they come. Do you think that would have a bad effect upon the people who are engaged upon the deer forest?—I think it distinctly has a bad effect; an unwise expenditure of money makes the acquisition of wealth too easy, and I consider that the man who works hard for his money appreciates its value, and applies it to a better use. Besides, a crofter becomes a much more manly and independent man, because he is not dependent on the caprice or will of one individual, but in the case of the keepers and others employed on the deer forest, the more lavishly they are paid the more obsequious they become, and then their tenure of employment is so precarious. You do not find many very old gamekeepers here; I do not mean to condemn gamekeepers as a class, but the close connection with wealthy people who are lavish in their expenditure has a deteriorating moral effect, and its tendency is to beget a contempt for honest or hard labour.

48,773. The Chairman.—You referred particularly to the lands of Glen-Dessary and the lands of Glen-Pean: do you know if these lands are at present held as grazing farms?—No, they are part of a deer forest, I understand; I would not like to speak positively, but I am satisfied they are. We can get that out later on. I am quite content to accept the statement of my friend here on that point.

48,774. My impression is that they are let as grazing farms. Then are you aware whether the lands on the north side of Loch-Arkaig, to which you have asked our attention, are at present in the hands of the proprietor as grazing farms or as forests; or do you know?—You can take the Clunes farm; I understand it is in the hands of the proprietor. The farmhouse is not exactly at the side, it is perhaps half a mile from the east end of the loch.

48,775. At all events, whatever the area, you say that farm is in the hands of the proprietor?—Yes. Mr Weir, Lochiel's sheep manager, stays at Achnasaul, on the north bank of Loch-Arkaig, near its east end, but, I understand, the greater number of the sheep were transferred from the lands immediately behind to inferior lands on the south side of the loch,—Glenmaillie or Invermaillie.

48,776. Can you tell me whether the other lands you have mentioned on the north side of Loch-Arkaig are in the hands of the proprietor, or are occupied by a tenant?—I think a good part of them are thrown into the deer forest of Glenquoich, on the Invergarry estate.

48,777. You are aware that to a considerable extent a practice prevails in some quarters of sub-letting deer forests, and sub-letting shootings. Does that custom prevail to any extent here, to your knowledge?—No; I think I heard this season of a Mr Brinckman sub-letting Meoble, but I don't know whether it is the case or not. At any rate, it is not a general practice here.

48,778. You referred to applications being made to the County Council?—A number of applications.

48,779. How many?—I should think thirty, at least.

48,780. Would you just explain to us what the County Council did with these applications. I take it that they were competent in form, in accordance with the Act of Parliament?—Yes.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,781. Are you a member of the County Council?—I am.

48,782. Tell us what the County Council did with these applications?—The County Council ascertained that the proprietors were not willing to treat.

48,783. And thereupon the thing fell through?—Quite so.

48,784. These applications, I understand, were directed to lands belonging to different proprietors?—Different proprietors.

48,785. Has there been in your knowledge any offer of land by landlords in this locality, by advertisement, or otherwise, in the form of small holdings?—I am not aware of it.

48,786. Has there been any considerable building of new houses on crofters' holdings in this district since the passing of the Act?—For the reasons I have explained, there has not been much; it is only now that they have got their rents fixed.

48,787. They are considering as to improvements in buildings and otherwise?—Yes, there is a general intention to improve their holdings, but I may speak of one on The Mackintosh's estate, and I can particularise it, where improvements to the estimated value of £600 had been carried out by the tenant, Kenneth Kennedy, at Inveroy, or Inver-Roy.

48,788. What rent does he pay?—His rent was reduced to £13 odds.

48,789. From what?—From £17.

48,790. And that has led him to expend something like £600?—Yes.

48,791. That includes, I suppose, a new house and offices?—Yes, steadings.

48,792–93. Mr Harold Y. L. Smith, Factor for Lord Abinger.—I wish to ask you whether you have considered the question of what money would be required by these tenants for stocking the new holdings to which you refer?—I think you will find out from the next witness. I will tell you the sum he is prepared to expend, and he is one who was born on Inch estate, which his lordship has lately acquired. He knows the capabilities of the land, and he has a pretty good idea how much will be required to stock it.

48,794. You mentioned that applications had been made from this district to the County Council?—Yes.

48,795. There was one made by one man on Lord Abinger's estate?—Yes.

48,796–97. And that man has had a holding given to him since?—I referred to him by name already,—that is Duncan Macdonald: but he has not got a holding on the land he desired to have,—that is, where his people were settled before. He was ploughman at Spean Bridge for thirty years, and he had saved some money and brought up a family of ten. He thought it extremely hard that he should be cleared off the estate, and I think it would have been a disgrace if he had been. A bit of land was assigned to him at Brackletter,—but the land is very bare,—about as bare and cold and exposed a place as there is in the country. He has had to provide himself with a house and everything. I think I am right in saying that he only got the bare land, which is of very little value.

48,798. You are not right in assuming so. Lord Abinger has provided him with the wood for his house, and with the stones and the lime?—He gathered the stones from the land. Lord Abinger does not make stones.

48,799. They belong to him, though?—He has provided the corrugated roof; you did not give him the sarking, did you?

48,800. I should like to ask whether you have gone into any details to ascertain the success or otherwise of large sheep farms, which you condemn in a rather wholesale way?—No; I say that large sheep farms are distinctly preferable to deer forests; they employ more men who are resident all the year round. But I would prefer seeing smaller holdings; a place held in smaller holdings as a club farm. [The Chairman.—I think what Mr Smith means to ask you is whether you have considered sheep farms as a commercial undertaking?] I don't know that I have ever heard of a sheep farmer here resorting to bankruptcy; but I know that many live here with a very respectable sum of money at their credit; so that I gather from that it must have been a very profitable business.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,801. I think you said the crofts were useful for wintering, and I want to ask whether that is due entirely to their being arable land, or whether it is not due in part to the fact that it is low ground, sheltered ground?—I meant mainly that it was arable.

48,802. Is it not also that the ground is low and sheltered; or perhaps you have not considered the point?—No doubt that does make it better.

48,803. That is the important element, is it not?—I should not quite say it is the important element; I will get you low ground on a peat moss between the River Lochy and the canal,—ground on the sea level, you cannot possibly have lower ground,—and yet it is absolutely worthless as wintering, whereas on the other hand I can get you these coveted lands upon Lianachan and upon Fersit and at Loch-Treig-side which are at a very considerable altitude and which are very valuable for the purpose of cultivation. As Mr Sutherland said, the altitude of Loch-Treig above sea level is upwards of 700 feet,—I think I am right in saying 740,—and you could winter a sheep on an acre of that land, while on this peat moss here you could not sustain a sheep on 50 acres.

48,804. Mr Sutherland.—And successful agriculture is carried on at Kingussie at 1000 feet?—Quite so.

48,805. How do you explain this apparent anomaly? A question was asked of you about the success of large farms; you did not deny that large farms had been a success?—No.

48,806. How then do you account for their being transformed into deer forests?—I do not like to impute motives, but I think it is just from a desire to have more money.

48,807. Mr R. Robertson, of Messrs Dalgleish & Bell, W.S., Edinburgh, Agents for Lord Morton.—You spoke about Garvan and Duisky enlargement. Are you aware that that enlargement was the result of an agreement between the landlord and the tenants, embodied in a joint minute?—That is so. I was not the agent there; it was Mr J. M. Campbell who was agent, but I was present and noticed the whole negotiations. At that time the tenants were very reluctant to enter into that agreement: but the agent,—and I must say I agreed with him,—recommended the tenants to accept it in order to come to an amicable understanding with the proprietor.

48,808. The Chairman.—The proprietor was meeting them part of the way, at least?—He was; but I did not realise then that the extent of the enlargement which he proposed to grant consisted of such boggy and unsuitable land. The crofters of that township are in this position: they are quite prepared to take the enlargement they applied for, and they will take this bad land along with the good; but if they do not get the enlargement in its entirety, they would prefer being relieved of this boggy land, which is of no use whatever. There is no doubt that, as Mr Robertson points out, they did enter into this agreement; I may take blame for that, and the agent may, although we thought it would turn out a better thing for them; but they assure us that it is absolutely worthless, and you will agree with me, Mr Robertson, that an increase of £25 was added to them in respect of that extension. They would much rather have that increase taken off and give back the land.

48,809. Where is the locality?—It is at the head of Lochiel. The papers are now back from the Crofters Commission, and I think your lordship will get the plan that was produced.

48,810. What is the name of the nearest township?—It is on the south side of Lochiel, up near the head; Garvan, Duisky, and Blaich.

48,811. Mr Robertson.—When you spoke of an appeal being taken, did you mean an application to the Commission, or an appeal against the decision of a single Commissioner?—An appeal against the decision of a single Commissioner.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,812. And I gathered that the object of that appeal was to get behind this agreement with the landlord?—Well, you can put it that way.

48,813. Are you aware that nearly the whole of the Garvan and Duisky tenants before the Crofters Commission last year declared their absolute inability to stock any additional land?—I cannot remember that.

48,814. Well, it is a fact; you may take it as a fact from me; I led the evidence. Most of them were in arrear, and I led evidence to show that they were unable to pay these arrears or to stock any additional holdings. [The Chairman.—You mean that was generally said by them while examined on oath and cross-examined?—Mr Robertson—Yes.] Witness.—And yet you gave them that enlargement?

48,815. That only says so much the more for the landlord?—I have never said a word against the landlord; I think I have said that Lord Morton is a very good landlord.

48,816. Mr Sutherland.—Did the enlargement take place before or after the passing of the Crofters Act?—Only last year; it was discussed at the sittings of the Crofters Commission quite recently, in April last.

48,817. During the time when the crofters had a right of application to the Commission to give them enlargement?—Quite so.

48,818. Mr Allan Macdonald, Commissioner for The Mackintosh.—I think you said that Kenneth Kennedy had spent £600 on buildings on his croft?—Yes.

48,819. Do you say so of your own knowledge, or are you merely taking his statement before the Crofters Commission?—Merely his statement, but an inspection of the buildings satisfied me that that sum at least must have been spent.

48,820. An inspection of buildings could not have satisfied you as to who spent the money?—No, but that the buildings must have cost that amount. If you say that The Mackintosh built them, then, of course, I will qualify my statement.

48,821. No, I don't say that?—But you don't dispute the statement that he made.

48,822. Was this expenditure, suppose it ever took place, before or after the passing of the Crofters Act?—The greater part of it I should say was before the passing of the Act,—perhaps all of it.

48,823. Will you take it from me that there has been no expenditure by Kenneth Kennedy on the croft since the passing of the Act except the erection of a wooden shed for the shooting tenants' stores that were going up there?—Well, we will leave out all reference to the shooting tenant; I will take it from you that he put up such a perfect and complete set of offices on the croft before the passing of the Crofters Act that it was unnecessary to build any more. But if it had been necessary he would have built them.

48,824. You are aware that Kenneth Kennedy is a gamekeeper of twenty-five years' standing?—Yes.

48,825. Mr Donald Macrae, Plockton.—I take the liberty of asking a question or two with regard to the estate of Lord Morton. In reference to that application for more land, was there a condition in the agreement not only with regard to rent, but also with regard to the erection of fences?—There was. I omitted to state that; the agreement imposes on them an undertaking to fence. [The Chairman.—Do you mean that that is in the joint minute?—I think I am correct in saying that it is.]

48,826. What was the proposal in the joint minute regarding fencing?—We can get the minute.

48,827. The Chairman.—Do you complain that that condition was a hardship?—They considered it a hardship; I merely put it that way.

48,828. Speaking on their behalf, you are now complaining of a thing to which they acceded as parties to a joint minute?—I told your lordship, and I said to Mr Robertson that I did not dispute the fact that they had agreed to a joint minute and must be bound by whatever is contained in that; but I explained to your lordship the circumstances under which they were advised by their agent then, with whom I co-operated, and which I now very much regret.

48,829. You rather take blame to yourself in the matter?—Quite so, for any part I had in doing it. Had I known that the land was so bad as it turns out to be, I should certainly have advised them to have nothing to do with it, unless they got the whole of the enlargement.

48,830. So that the complaint conveyed in Mr Macrae's question is rather a complaint against yourself?—It may be.

48,831. Mr Macrae.—No, my lord, I think if I may be allowed I will make it clear that that is not so. My complaint is against the security of the terms. [To witness]. Did the landlord in that minute undertake to assist in any degree with the erection of fences?—I should like to see the minute; as you can understand, so many minutes and agreements have passed through my hands that I cannot recall the exact terms of each. (Copy Minute produced by Mr Robertson and handed to witness.) I know that, in the case of the Blaich township, for whom I acted, the burden of erecting the fence was laid entirely upon the tenants, and they have put it up. But the land there was worth annexing and they do not complain of it. (Reads) 'Campbell 'for the applicants and Robertson for the respondent '. . . . further stated that it had been made a condition 'by the respondent, and had been arranged and agreed 'to that a good and sufficient fence in terms of a 'specification to be approved of by the Commissioners 'should be erected, and after that maintained on the 'boundary of the said lands, between the points marked 'A and B on the said plan thereof, and that by or at 'the sole expense of the said applicants, and that on or 'before such day as the Commissioners shall fix, 'under certification; and that in the event of the applicants failing so to erect said fence, the said assignation and allocation of said land shall be null 'and void, and of no effect.' Perhaps the best way to get out of this enlargement is not to put up the fence. [Mr Robertson.—Read on.]

48,832. The Chairman.—Just finish reading that clause.—'. . . of no effect, and that the respondent on his 'part undertakes, after the erection of the fence above-'mentioned, to erect and thereafter to maintain at his 'own expense a fence so far as may be required between 'the points marked C and D on the plan; and they 'further crave the Commissioners to make such regulations as are just and proper for the safe burning of 'heather on said land, and such other regulations as 'they may be entitled to make.'

48,833. That is signed by the crofters' agent and by the landlord's factor?—Yes.

48,834. And bears to be a joint minute?—It does.

48,835. Mr Macrae.—Do you know the estate of Lord Morton?—I know it generally; perhaps sufficiently for your purpose.

48,836. How many crofters are on it, roughly speaking?—Somewhere about thirty; from twenty-six to thirty.

48,837. Have there been more tenants on that estate at one time than there are to-day?—Yes.

48,838. Within your recollection have there been more tenants on Lord Morton's property?—Yes, who have been cleared off for the deer forest.

48,839. Evicted?—I won't say they have been evicted.

48,840. Well, cleared off. How long since?—Drumfearn was cleared within the last thirty years at all events; perhaps a good deal less than thirty.

48,841. That is one place; can you name another?—I should say Callop, up in the valley between the head of Lochiel and the head of Loch-Sheil.

48,842. Any other township cleared within the last thirty or forty years?—I think one of the Garvans has been; the Garvan occupied by Mr Boyd. Garvan is down again at the head of the loch. There are two Garvans. [The Chairman.—Garvan and South Garvan: these are the places concerned in this enlargement, I suppose?—One of them only; the other has, I think, been taken into the deer forest, and the farmer's house is now occupied by the gamekeeper or some other servant.]

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,843. Have you named all the old townships that were cleared and absorbed by the deer forest?—Of course there is Inverscaddle; Conaglen sheep farm has been cleared. I remember a sheep farmer residing where Mr Booth, the factor, now lives at Stonchreggan.

48,844. How long is it since that farm was cleared?—I cannot say exactly.

48,845. Twenty years ago?—I think it was under sheep when I left this country first, in 1864, and the clearance must have been subsequent to that; somewhere between twenty and thirty years ago. But, I may say, that I have information that there were dales or mains up along the River Scaddle, at which there were unmistakable traces of dwelling-houses, showing that a considerable community lived there. There are two or three of those dales up there; one, I understand, is from 20 to 40 acres in extent of excellent land at the river side.

48,846. Was it because these lands were not suitable for occupation that the people were cleared?—I should think not; they were very suitable.

48,847. Were they as suitable as the places where people live to-day on the same estate?—I think I am quite justified in saying that to provide room for some of those who were cleared off, a process of squeezing had to be resorted to, which makes it perfectly safe for me to say that the lands as originally occupied were better fitted to bear the population than under the existing arrangements.

48,848. Was there a considerable population displaced for the deer forest?—No, I cannot say that there was. I may hand in to your lordship a statement addressed by Colonel Maclean of Ardgour, dated in 1850. Upwards of thirty years ago Colonel Maclean sold Conaglen estate to the present proprietor, Lord Morton, and in this statement Colonel Maclean brings you back in his own language to the year 1790.*

48,849. I think you have already said that the deer forest does not improve the condition of people in the neighbourhood. Is that true with regard to Lord Morton's deer forest?—There have been bitter complaints about the encroachments of deer on the crops. I do not say that the same ground now exists for these complaints.

48,850. Am I right in assuming that Lord Morton has not put himself to the expense of erecting a deer fence with the view of keeping his own stock on his own ground, and with the view also of enabling his tenants to live?—That that was the case clearly appeared at the inquiry before the Crofters Commission; and the necessity for this fence is, I think, proved by the non-existence of such a fence then.

48,851. And yet in his minute he binds these crofters to erect entirely at their own expense, and for ever after to maintain at their own expense, the boundary fence between his lordship and themselves?—The minute speaks for itself.

48,852. And he holds them to that, while he states and knows that they are so poor that they can do nothing towards stocking land?—Well, I don't know that.

48,853. The Chairman.—This document which you have handed to us headed 'Colonel Maclean of Ardgour 'to his crofters' is dated Ardgour House, 31st August 1850, and it refers to a state of matters existing between 1780 and the commencement of the present century. It bears to set forth that the crofting system, at least on this estate, had hardly then commenced?—The runrig system had prevailed before then. That does not mean that there was no population then.

48,854. The runrig system had prevailed, and as he says, he proceeded to rescue them and himself from that system and to divide the farms along the shores into separate holdings, which appeared to him to be most attainable and most conducive to the interest of both parties?—Yes.

48,855. And after referring to emigration he mentions the process he pursued to carry out this system. He says he 'had four farms upon the shores of Loch-'Eil surveyed and subdivided into allotments, each 'consisting of some arable or land easily improved into 'arable, with each allotment the pasture of four cows, 'three followers, and a certain number of sheep. The 'value of kelp at that period was about its height, but 'as encouragement to improve the soil, I gave it up to 'the occupiers, and to this day yourselves are the best 'judges of its value.' The rents were fixed by three of their own number selected by themselves; and accompanied by the surveyor and the factor he apportioned the amount of rent on each croft separately; and when it was found that disturbance arose from every man attending to his own flock, the system was adopted of the whole sheep farm being put together under one mark and one shepherd, under the control of three chosen men of their number?—Quite so.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,856. That looks very like the modern idea of a Committee appointed under the Grazings Act of 1891?—Yes, and the club farm system.

48,856A. He goes on to say that at the date when he writes (1850), the whole arrears are under 8 per cent., half of which are due by five individuals, and he then advises his tenantry to persevere in their present course?—Of well being.

48,857. This is an important historical document?—I was going to add that Lord Morton,—the predecessor in family and title of the present Lord Morton, took the sheep grazing lands from the tenants on that loch side, and they were to make a corresponding diminution in the rent, but they ingeniously devised another way of assessing the rent, i.e., they placed so much on the acre of arable land and so much on the grazing per head of cattle, and the result, extraordinarily enough, brought out that they had to pay the same rent for the land minus the sheep grazing that they had paid for the whole before; so that by this arrangement there was practically a diminution of their holdings and an increase of their rent. He held that increase for 30 years, and so recompensed himself three times over for the price he paid for the sheep stock. The tenants have survived that treatment however.

48,858. Mr Sutherland.—Have you observed this statement in Colonel Maclean's paper, 'The crofting 'system was then hardly known'?—Yes.

48,859. Did that strike you as a remarkable statement?—Well, speaking of the population of Loch-Arkaig-side, I should not describe them as crofters, though I don't commit them to any description; and I believe that what prevailed on Lochiel and Ardgour prior to that was practically the same thing that prevailed on Arkaig and other places.

48,860. Colonel Maclean would be very likely to state that accurately, both from disposition and from knowledge?—I believe so. It is admitted by the crofters generally that what he says there is true.

48,861. But I am putting rather a historical question to you. Have you ever heard it stated that what is known as the present crofting system was inherent in Highland history? And how do you account for this statement of Colonel Maclean's that the crofting system was practically unknown in the light of that? Does it not strike you as a remarkable thing?—It is an inaccurate use of terms. What he means is the crofting system as it now exists, under which one has a self-contained lot or area of land not interspersed or mixed up with his neighbour's ground. That is the system that prevails generally now; but even nowadays you find the runrig system prevails among some crofters, and I could give you two instances of that.

48,862. You do not require to give us any instance: every club farm is a runrig?—But I mean as regards arable land.

48,863. But the distinction holds only between arable and pasture. Was the runrig system not devised for the purpose of distributing the land properly?—It may have been that: that one should not get a lot of good land while his neighbour might have to cultivate a bare croft.

48,864. The idea at the bottom of the system was perfect justice to every member of the community?—True.

* For the full text of this circular, see after question 48,876, page 1195.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

48,865. Now, what do you consider to be the essential point of the crofting system as we know it to-day; and what is the necessity for making the modern definition? —I have not applied my mind to that.

48,866. Where is the link that connects the crofter of to-day with the clansman of old? How did the clansmen of the Highlands become the crofters of modern times? Did you ever read in history of a Highland Chief calling his crofters together?—No.

48,867. What do you invariably hear of?—His clansmen.

48,868. When did the clansman become the crofter? —There is a decision of the Court of Session to the effect—

48,869. But I want a higher Court than that?—After 1745, I should say that a gradual change took place over the Highlands, and I don't know whether it was later than that date that an engagement took place between the Macdonalds and the Mackintoshes up at Glenroy, which is said to have been the last engagement between two independent armies within the area of Scotland. I don't know whether that was later than 1745,—1600, I am told.

48,870. Was that a transaction regarding the land? —It was. The Macdonalds were, I think, the tacksmen of the time, and the dispute they had with the Mackintoshes was settled by force of arms.

48,871. I need not trouble you much on the historical matter, but this expression here is surely a very striking one, as coming from a gentleman, evidently a Highlander by descent, and one who knew the state of the country well. Is it the fact that the crofter, as he is now understood, was not the work of the Highland people at all? Did he voluntarily become a crofter?—I should say not.

48,872. Was he, in your opinion, made so by process of law?—He was. If we are to go into the question of title, I think the tribal tenure was not a feudal tenure at all.

48,873. Was the one not the antithesis of the other? —The Chiefs of the clans were men who held the land in trust for behoof of the people, and they had no right at one time to exact rents: their office, such as it was, was maintained by contribution from the clansmen.

48,874. The Chairman.—I think you will agree that this document rather goes to show that, so far as Col. Maclean's crofters were concerned, they were made crofters, in the modern sense of the word, since they began to exist at the beginning of this century, not by process of law, but by friendly arrangement between themselves and their landlord, who persuaded them to give up the runrig system; and who assigned them separate holdings, they themselves fixing their own rent by a committee of three?—It would be difficult to determine the point at which a man ceased to be a clansman and became a holder of land (we can use that term) in the modern sense of the word. That reference merely denotes the change from holding land under the runrig system, to holding land under the present system of a defined area of arable land, with a right of common pasture on the hill.

48,875. Mr Sutherland.—But this transaction took place in the year 1801, and could not the landlord have removed them by process of law at that time if he had wished to do so?—I should say so.

48,876. Did the Act of Sederunt under which all the removals in the Highlands were conducted not exist at that time?—It is a question of law. [The Chairman.—I think Mr Sutherland refers to the Act of 1756.]

The circular referred to by Mr Macphee in question 48,848, and in the subsequent examination, was as follows:—

'COLONEL MACLEAN OF ARDGOUR, TO HIS CROFTERS.

'MY FRIENDS,—Our connection existed before crofting 'was known. Near seventy years ago, 1780, I found 'you and your forefathers located in the glens and on 'different farms upon the estate, some holding a fourth, 'some an eighth, and many as low as a sixteenth share 'of the farm—the arable land divided into as many 'parts, and lots drawn for it every season, so that no 'man should sow the same land two years following. 'This pernicious system was more injurious to the 'tenant than to the landlord, but greatly so to both; 'ten years afterwards, 1790, I found you all in the 'same predicament. I was then a Captain of Dragoons, 'and allowed my military service to prevail over duties 'more important both to you and to myself, and things 'remained as they were. At the conclusion of the first 'French war, when I came more among you, I perceived 'it was incumbent upon me to rescue you and myself 'from so pernicious a system, and dividing the farms 'along the shores into separate holdings appeared to be 'the most attainable and most conducive to the interest 'of both parties. On its being first proposed to you, 'all those holding fourth and eighth shares rejected it 'rather indignantly. At that period large emigration 'to America was going on from the neighbouring 'countries, and many of you said, if you were removed 'from your holdings, you would emigrate also. I had 'an aversion to any of you leaving your native country, 'and endeavoured to show you the benefits of what I 'conceived to be a better system, advantageous to both 'you and me. With this impression, I had four farms 'upon the shores of Locheil surveyed and sub-divided 'into allotments, each consisting of some arable, or 'land easily improved into arable—with each allotment 'the pasture of four cows, their followers, and a certain 'number of sheep. The value of kelp at that period 'was about its height; but, as encouragement to im-'prove the soil, I gave it up to the occupiers, and to 'this day yourselves are the best judges of its value. 'You could not at once see all the advantages of the 'plan. The crofting system was then hardly known: 'I did not press you, and gave you time to consider. A 'year or two elapsed before a large majority agreed to 'make a trial.

'At length, in 1801, the allotments were surveyed, 'marked out, and to be taken possession of at Whitsunday '1802. The rent of the farms was fixed according to 'the rents of the day, and three of your number, 'selected by yourselves, accompanied by the surveyor 'and the factor, apportioned the amount upon each 'croft separately.

'The numbers were then put into a bonnet 'and drawn out by one of yourselves—the Hill 'Rent was given gratis for three years, when stone 'houses, head and side dykes were to be finished— 'restrictions were few, intended for mutual advantage, 'but were to be strictly complied with—tenure, based 'on good conduct, industrial and frugal habits, quiet 'neighbours, obedient to the laws of our country. 'Assurance was given that no alterations should be 'made for nine years, and at the end of that period your 'own industrial conduct, with one exception, rendered 'any change uncalled for. Years rolled on before we 'discovered an error in our practice, but which was 'easily remedied and acquiesced in by all: I allude to 'every man having his sheep on his own mark and his 'own management, fraught with almost daily disturbance 'to the flock. The whole sheep of the farm were then 'put together under one mark and one shepherd, under 'the control of three chosen men of your number. The 'change has worked well, and all, I believe, are 'satisfied. Sometime ago I offered you leases: your 'reply was, What was to be the use of them? "Had 'any man been removed unless for bad conduct, or had 'any man's rent been raised for forty-eight years? 'What good, then, would a lease be to us?" I agree 'that, when mutual confidence exists, you are better 'without a lease. I know the absence of it has saved 'many of you from bad and indolent habits, and that 'my watchfulness preserved many of you from mischief. 'I shall now close this Address, by thanking you most 'fervently for your general good conduct and persevering 'industry, the beneficial results of which are now 'apparent in your present condition — your crofts 'improved, your rents paid. At this date, the whole 'arrears are under eight per cent.—one-half of which 'is due by five individuals. All I have to add is, 'persevere in your present course;—while I live, mine

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

Fort-William. Donald Macphee.

'to you shall not be charged, and before I go hence my 'endeavour shall be to insure to you support in your 'present possessions. On one point only have you 'disappointed me—the improvement and cleanliness of 'your dwelling-houses. For this you have facilities 'which few crofters in the West Highlands possess. 'You get small timber for houses and offices gratis, 'almost for the asking; and when a man leaves his 'croft, from whatever cause, he receives two-thirds of 'the value of the house and offices, valued by the 'verdict of three sworn burleymen.

'Ardgour House, 31st August 1850.'

Donald Macdonald.

Donald Macdonald, 5 Fassifern Road, Fort-William (69) examined.

48,877. Mr Donald Macphee, Solicitor, Fort-William, Agent for crofters. — Where were you born?—At Insh.

48,878. Was Insh the property of the Duke of Gordon at the time?—Yes.

48,879. And was it afterwards acquired by Col. Walker, and since then by Lord Abinger?—Yes.

48,880. Insh is situated on the south side of Glen-Spean?—Yes.

48,881. Has it a considerable extent of arable land?—A great deal.

48,882. How many families would that maintain, or did it maintain at one time?—I don't know the exact number: that was before my time. But there is a great deal of arable land about, and first class grazing. I cannot judge how many it would hold or maintain.

48,883. Now, go a little to the north-east, to Monessie and Achnacochine, do you remember crofters being settled there?—Yes.

48,884. How many crofters were settled on these two townships?—Twelve, as far as I remember.

48,885. And were they all removed except Donald Macdonald?—Yes, he took a farm.

48,886. Then going up to Inverlair and Fersit, you do not remember the population being there yourself?—No.

48,887. But you have heard old men say, who were aware of the facts?—I have heard old men speaking about them, and the ruins are there yet; the furrows are still to be seen on the land.

48,888. Is there abundance of ground there and at Fersit to maintain a considerable population?—Well, Fersit is not good.

48,889. But dealing with Inverlair first?—Inverlair has a great deal of arable land.

48,890. Does the new West Highland Railway come through Fersit?—Yes.

48,891. Now to go back from Insh, the next places on the south west are Coire-Chuinnlidh and Kylliechonnet?—Yes.

48,892. Have you seen the ruins of houses there, showing where a number of families used to live?—Yes.

48,893. And do you know that the land is well suited for maintaining a large number of people?—Yes, it always got that name, and the remains may be seen yet.

48,894. Were you there when Cameron, Coire-Chuinnlidh, had it stocked with sheep?—Yes: I was nine years with his successor, Mr Wallace.

48,895. And did it carry a very fine stock of sheep?—Upwards of 6000.

48,896. How many does Insh carry?—Insh is now divided into two separate places; with the wedder ground turned into a deer forest it would hold about 4000.

48,897. What part of the wedder ground was that?—Up towards Loch-Treig.

48,898. What is the name of the forest?—Corrour deer forest.

48,899. Both Monessie and Inverlair are under sheep at present?—Yes.

48,900. But Fersit has been cleared?—Yes, a few years ago. Fort-William. Donald Macdonald.

48,901. Is the land at Inverlair, to which you refer, land under farm grazing, or forest land?—Grazing land just now.

48,902. Then was Torgulbin under sheep in your recollection?—Yes.

48,903. How many sheep would it carry? I understand you went there to keep the sheep off the Ardverikie forest?—When it was a sheep farm, Torgulbin and Fersit were the same, but there were wedders on one part and ewes on the other.

48,904. What stock between wedders and ewes would the two carry?—When it was Macdonald's, I think there were about 5000; but when Mr Craig got it, I believe he put on 6000.

48,905. Now, we shall travel south-west from Coire-Chuinnlidh and Kylliechonnet, do you know Tom-na-fet?—Yes.

48,906. Is that under sheep at present?—Yes, mostly.

48,907. Now, go down to Lianachan, Achnacoichan, and Dawnie?—Achnacoichan and Dawnie are under sheep also.

48,908. But Lianachan is cleared for a deer forest?—Yes.

48,909. Do evidences exist on Lianachan that there was a considerable population there at one time?—Yes, and I have heard old people speaking about the numbers there; over thirty they said.

48,910. Do you know a John Cameron who went out to Australia from Blarmachfoldach? Are you aware whether he was born there?—I do not know.

48,911. But is that land well suited for agriculture?—Oh, yes; there were a great many there, and they were doing well; brave men they were.

48,912. I have no doubt about the men, but was the land good?—Yes, the land is good and fertile.

48,913. And you say it carried a number of fair women and brave man?—Certainly.

48,914. Is Achnacoichan also suitable for small holdings?—It is a good place.

48,915. How does it lie from Dawnie or Lianachan?—It is between the two.

48,916. Is it nearer here?—It is nearer Fort-William than Lianachan, and Dawnie is nearer still.

48,917. Who turned out the people there, do you remember?—Yes, I know who did that; he was father to Dr Kennedy that was in this town here.

48,918. Who was Dr Kennedy?—A man in whose memory a monument was erected in the middle of the town. He had been a crofter with the rest of them; a great many of them were there under the Duke of Gordon. He went to the Duke and told him he would take the places that he used to have, and when he came back he took it for himself and had the rest all turned out. That is how I heard the story.

48,919. You are speaking of the father of the medical man?—Yes.

48,920. Was Dawnie included in Lianachan farm?—Yes, it was at that time.

48,921. So that the people of Lianachan, Achnacoichan, and Dawnie were cleared out at that time to form the farm?—Yes.

48,922. Do you know Creag-Uanach?—Yes.

48,923. That is at the head of Loch Treig?—Yes.

48,924. I believe you were settled there for a good while?—Yes.

48,925. That was the back part of Coire-Chuinnlidh farm?—Yes.

48,926. Did it carry good stocks of sheep and black cattle?—Yes.

48,927. And it was a favourite summer pasture?—I saw black cattle when Cameron, Coire-Chuinnlidh, had it. [Mr Sutherland.—What is the meaning of Creag-Uanach?—I cannot explain it, it is a Gaelic name.—But has it no meaning?—I cannot make anything of it.—What is Uan: is it not 'a lamb'? And what is the meaning of Loch-nan-caorach?—That is a place for sheep likely.]

48,928. You acted as keeper and shepherd up there by times?—Yes.

Fort-William. Donald Macdonald.

48,929. And you know pretty well the habits of deer as well as sheep?—I ought to; I was all my life among them.

48,930. That ground is pretty high; Loch-Treig is 740 feet above the sea level, is it not?—I thought not.

48,931. Do you not think it is so high?—I cannot say.

48,932. Will you take it if the Ordnance Map says so?—Oh yes.

48,933. Have you seen deer and sheep grazed together in that neighbourhood?—Often, and last year too.

48,934. Have you seen the deer succumb or die off when the sheep were feeling quite well?—Yes; that happened last winter.

48,935. Just tell us what you know about the comparative hardiness of deer?—They were just dying at every turn up yonder; and 300 sheep that were wintered in a small place along with them wintered well.

48,936. What was the death-rate among the sheep?—Nothing of any consequence.

48,937. But, I suppose, some of them did die?—I did not hear of any except two or three; I know there were not many deaths among the sheep.

48,938. But you saw great mortality among the deer?—Yes.

48,939. How many carcases did you see there?—I think I have seen twenty there myself, but that was nothing to the rest.

48,940. Do you know Beinn-Bhreac?—Yes.

48,941. Were you often there in your young days?—Yes, and in my olden days.

48,942. Have you seen the Achintore people and the Onich people?—No, they left there before I went, as far as I remember.

48,943. Do you remember going up there for some cattle of your own?—Yes, I remember that, though I was quite young at the time.

48,944. You found cattle there?—Oh yes, I found cattle.

48,945. Whose cattle did you find there?—I think they were Achintore cattle, but I cannot make a sure story of that.

48,946. You found your own among them?—Yes.

48,947. And you took it away without paying anything for the summering?—Yes, I paid nothing.

48,948. Did a woman come afterwards and claim 5s. as the rent for summering the beast there?—Yes.

48,949. She was there as caretaker for the Achintore people?—I think it was for Achintore.

48,950. You say Beinn-Bhreac is 8 miles long?—Yes.

48,951. Just tell us how it is mapped out among the various townships or farms?—I cannot explain that thoroughly.

48,952. Do you know that the Onich people had a right to part of it?—Yes, I know the ruins of their shielings there.

48,953. Do you know that Blarmachfoldach had a right?—Yes.

48,954. Had Fort-William people a right either to that or to Glasven?—I do not remember; I cannot say.

48,955. You have been a thrifty man, and have saved some money?—Well, some.

48,956. And you are very anxious to have a holding if a holding could be got?—Certainly.

48,957. And do you see lands admirably suited for it from Dawnie up to Inverlair?—All the way.

48,958. You would be content to be in any spot there?—Yes.

48,959. Is the land superior to the land on the north side of the glen?—I consider it is; it is more waste land now when there is no cultivation.

48,960. But it is eminently fitted for being brought back into cultivation?—Yes.

48,961. Could you take such a holding, put up the necessary buildings, and carry it on without assistance?—I think so,—a small holding.

48,962. Do you know that there is a general desire among people of your class to have holdings in the country?—Certainly; they are only compelled to go and pay a high rent in Fort-William.

48,963. The Chairman.—What rent do you pay in Fort-William?—£7 for two small rooms; that is for rent and rates.

Fort-William. Donald Macdonald.

48,964. You say you have been a shepherd and gamekeeper?—Yes.

48,965. How long were you engaged as a shepherd?—I was only nine years a keeper, and all the rest of my life I served as a shepherd till I came to Fort-William.

48,966. Where were you occupied as a shepherd?—About Loch Treig-head all the time.

48,967. Who was the proprietor?—When I was there first it was Major Walker.

48,968. Did you act as a shepherd to any one else besides Major Walker?—Places of his were let as farms, and I was shepherd to the farmers.

48,969. All the time you were a shepherd, were you acting to farmers upon that estate?—Yes.

48,970. Sometimes one and sometimes another?—Well, I was on Lord Abinger's estate at the head of the loch for eighteen years.

48,970A. But your occupation as a shepherd took you over the whole of those lands of which you have been speaking?—Yes.

48,971. And you know a great deal about them personally in the past?—I know it well.

48,972. How many hirsels had you?—They had no hirsels; they did not manage that way.

48,973. How did you manage?—It was a large farm, and the one shepherd helped the other. Every shepherd had a piece of his own certainly, but the sheep were all mixed together.

48,974. Different proprietors' stock mixed with each other?—No; all the ground was Major Walker's estate; the Macdonalds of Keppoch had it first, and then a south countryman came, Mr Martin.

48,975. How many sheep had you under your charge?—About 4000 wedders; there were three shepherds of us. That is as near as I can say.

48,976. How long did you act as a gamekeeper?—Nine years.

48,977. With whom were you employed?—With Lord Abinger.

48,978. Was it in the forest or upon grouse shooting?—I was at Creag Uanach, at the head of Loch-Treig.

48,979. Was it cleared as a forest or as a grouse moor?—It was not cleared when I got there, but it was cleared shortly after that, the back hill.

48,980. Were you employed in the forest?—Yes, I was.

48,981. Mr Sutherland.—What became of the low ground at Fersit that was not added to the deer forest,—is it still a sheep farm?—There is not a great deal of arable land at Fersit.

48,982. Is it still a sheep farm?—It is a forest now.

48,983. You said the wedder ground was separate and added to the forest?—That was not Fersit.

48,984. Where was that?—The upper end of Loch-Treig.

48,985. But when was the separation made that you talked of between the low land and the high land of the farm?—Torgulbin and Fersit; it was a sheep farm first, and then when it was taken into a forest they shifted the thing and put all the sheep away, and one Mr Cross has it.

48,986. Is the whole of that land a deer forest now?—Yes, the whole of Fersit.

48,987. Now, with regard to the Onich people's right of grazing on Beinn-Bhreac, how was that taken away?—The landlord did it.

48,988. And what is it now? Is Beinn-Bhreac a deer forest?—It is all a forest. [Mr Macphee.—I think I explained that; it was sold recently by Lochiel to Sir John Stirling Maxwell.]

48,989. What I want information about is whether there was any compensation given to these people by reduction of rent, or by money down, when the summer grazings were taken away from them?—They got nothing that I am aware of.

Fort-William. Donald Macdonald.

48,990. No reduction of rent?—Well, there are people here who know about these things better than I do.

48,991. Mr Harold Y. L. Smith.—Will you tell me whether you have ever applied to anybody for a holding?—No.

48,992. What size of a holding do you want?—Just a small holding.

48,993. How many acres arable?—To keep 200 sheep, and four or five cows and a horse.

48,994. How much arable in connection with that?—Ten acres would do.

48,995. Would that be sufficient to keep you without any other employment?—I think it should, but I never tried it.

48,996. It would not keep you so well as 18s. a week?—I think it would keep me more easily, at any rate.

48,997. That is to say, you would not work so much. Have you the money to take over the stock?—I did not get the place yet.

48,998. Have you the money to put up the buildings?—I did not get the place yet.

48,999. The Chairman.—Suppose such a holding were offered to you, would you be prepared to take it up and erect the buildings and carry it on without assistance?—As for the buildings, it is a great drawback certainly.

49,000. Would you be prepared to do that without assistance?—Perhaps I could put up a sort of temporary building.

49,001. You would require assistance for the buildings; or would you undertake to do the whole thing and carry it on without assistance?—As to the building, I would be against the building.

49,002. You would need assistance for the building?—Yes.

49,003. But you could do the stocking for yourself?—Yes.

49,004. And suppose fencing were necessary, could you put up fences?—I don't know; I could help with it.

49,005. If the landlord would meet you, you would do the rest?—Yes.

49,006. You have spoken with regard to the old tenants of Monessie and Achnacochine. Do you recollect a man called James Mackintosh?—They were there before.

49,007. Was there not a man who took the farm in partnership?—Yes.

49,008. Why did you say, then, as a piece of accurate information, that after all the tenants were turned out, Donald 'Marsant' had the whole holding?—He had it after that, and he had it till he died.—[Mr Macphee.—I think the witness is dealing with long periods of time, and is skipping over estates.] When he got it first it was the half, and, as far as I understand, Mr Macgregor, banker here, was in company with Mr Macdonald for part of it. Then these Mackintoshes that Mr Smith speaks about got that half.

49,009. Mr Macphee.—Mr Macgregor went out?—Yes.

49,010. And he put the Mackintoshes in?—Yes.

49,011. They got into trouble up at Loch-Treig?—Yes.

49,012. And Donald 'Marsant' took the whole thing?—Yes.

49,013. So that you are perfectly correct in saying that Donald had the farm?—Yes.

49,014. Mr Harold Y. L. Smith.—But Mackintosh was one of the old tenants, was he not?—Yes, they were one of the old tenants.

49,015. You say that you have made money; did you not make money chiefly as a gamekeeper?—Well, I made it everywhere I had tried it. I think you are going too far. I did not save much money there.

49,016. Mr N. B. Mackenzie, factor for Lochiel.—You told us that the Achintore people had an interest in Beinn-Bhreac?—I did not say so with certainty; I said others knew about it better than I do.

49,017. Do you know, or do you not know, whether the Achintore people had any interest in the Beinn Bhreac summering?—There are people here that will tell you better.

Fort-William. Donald Macdonald.

49,018. Do you know anything about it of your own knowledge?—I have seen cattle there, and I don't know whose they were.

49,019. And you guessed that they came from Achintore, is that it?—I think they were going up there, but I cannot speak with certainty.

49,020. Might they not have come from any other township quite as well as Achintore?—Yes, there were other townships: there are people there who can prove it.

49,021. Now, with regard to Onich, do you know of your own knowledge that people there had the rights you spoke of?—I cannot speak with certainty about the Beinn-Bhreac summering at all.

49,022. May I take it that you have a very vague knowledge of this Beinn Bhreac business altogether?—About the cattle grazing I have; it is a long time ago.

49,023. May I go a little farther and say you know nothing about it?—I know Beinn-Bhreac, at all events.

49,024. May I take it you know little or nothing about those people who are entitled to grazing rights on Beinn-Bhreac?—No, I cannot be certain about it. [Mr Macphee.—You know that there were cattle summering there?—Yes, I saw the bothies there.—And you may not be able to state with precision what various townships contributed these cattle?—No.]

49,025. When did these rights of summering on Beinn-Bhreac, such as they were, cease?—I cannot tell you.

49,026. Is it a matter of fifty years ago?—I think so, somewhere thereabouts; it is upwards of forty.

John Macmaster.

JOHN MACMASTER, Dairyman, 17 Low Street, Fort-William (73).—examined.

49,027. Mr Macphee, agent for the crofters.—Where were you born?—At the top of Glen-Nevis, Lubailt.

49,028. Do you know Loch-Treig?—Yes.

49,029. Tell us what you know about Loch-Treig and the summering rights on it. Were you employed up about there?—I was employed at Creag-Uanach.

49,030. As a gamekeeper?—Yes.

49,031. How long were you there?—My father was there for thirty years, and I was there all the time. I was born up there, and spent all my life there till I was about fifty.

49,032. Do you know about the townships of Achintore and Onich and Blarmachfoldach sending quantities of stock to summer there?—Yes.

49,033. You have seen the people from there?—Yes.

49,034. Tell us what part of Beinn-Bhreac the Achintore people had?—They were not in Beinn-Bhreac, they were in Glasven, at Creag Ferenean in Coire-nan-eun.

49,035. Did any stock go to Beinn-Bhreac?—Yes, to Glasven.

49,036. What stock went there?—The Ballachulish cows went to Laganore on Beinn-Bhreac.

49,037. Had the Blarmachfoldach people any rights of summering there?—No, but they had rights at Loch-Eilt.

49,038. Who were the owners of the Ballachulish cows,—were they the cows from the township?—The yeld cows from the township of Ballachulish. All the cows except the milk cows went up there with a herd who lived in a bothy.

49,039. Did the cows from any township go there?—Yes; there were separate bits for every place.

49,040. Tell me some other place.—Lundavra sheep were going there: Camisky sheep went up to Coirean, and the father of John Macmillan in Tom-a'-Charaich used to go from Camisky with his sheep. Coirean was a sublet to Camisky by one of the townships.

49,041. Did the Fort-William people send their cattle there?—No, except those in Achintore.

49,042. Did the Drimarbin people?—Yes, I think so, to Coire-nan-eun.

49,043. You cannot speak of any others sending stock to Beinn Bhreac except the Ballachulish people; the Fort-William. John Macmaster.

Lundavra people, and the Camisky people?—No, I don't remember any other stock going there.

49,044. How long is it since these cattle and sheep used to go there?—I should say perhaps thirty-eight years or so, but I cannot say with certainty; that is only a guess.

49,045. Do you know if they got any compensation for the loss of these rights of summering cattle?—No, I cannot say anything about that.

Donald Cameron.

DONALD CAMERON, Woodbine Cottage, Fort-William (76)—examined.

49,046. Mr Macphee, Agent for crofters.—Were you born at Clunes near Achnacarry, at the east end of Loch-Arkaig?—Yes.

49,047. And I think your grandmother's people belonged to Clunes for generations?—Yes.

49,048. Your father's people belonged to Camisky, on Lord Abinger's estate?—Yes.

49,049. Camisky was occupied by Camerons?—Yes, for generations.

49,050. You served your apprenticeship as a blacksmith at Glen-Loy?—Yes.

49,051. Just be good enough to describe where Glen-Loy is?—It is near Erracht, between that and Strone; between Strone farm and Moy farm.

49,052. When you were an apprentice how many men were employed in the blacksmith's shop at Glen-Loy?—There were two men constantly employed and an apprentice.

49,053. After being away from the country for some time, I think you eventually became the tenant of the smithy at Glen-Loy?—Yes.

49,054. When did you enter into the tenancy of the smithy?—About 1850.

49,055. Had you full employment for yourself when you went there?—No, except when Lochiel was making an improvement at Achnacarry, that was all the work I had that was keeping me going constant.

49,056. And now the smithy is given up and abandoned?—There is no work for a smith there; one man could do in a day all that is required in a month.

49,057. Do you attribute that to the depopulation of the surrounding country?—That must be the cause; the people are not there who were there when I was an apprentice.

49,058. Are there people at Barr?—None now.

49,059. But when you were an apprentice were there some there?—No, they were upon the south side of the river Loy, at Inverskillavullin and Achnahety and Achnanellan.

49,060. Are these places all in Glen-Loy?—Yes, on the one side of the River Loy.

49,061. Do you know Loch-Arkaig?—Yes.

49,062. Have you been up both sides?—I have.

49,063. And have you been at the glens, at the head;—Glen-Pean, Glen-Dessary, and Glen-Kingie?—I have not been in Glen-Kingie, but I have been in the others.

49,064. Now, speaking about Glen-Dessary, did you see traces there of the glen having been occupied by people at some former time?—Yes.

49,065. What did you see?—I have seen old ruins of houses where their holdings were.

49,066. How many such ruins did you see; did you count them, or could you give an idea of the number?—I could not count them all with certainty, for the shepherds took away a great many of the stones to build fanks.

49,067. What you saw were the remains of ruined houses after the shepherds had taken away a great number to build fanks and others enclosures for sheep?—It is hard to tell of some of them.

49,068. Could you reckon from what you saw, what number of people had occupied the glen, as nearly as you can?—I can tell all the ruins that I could mention that had plainly been houses built for the habitation of man.

49,069. Did you hear the evidence I gave as to the population of the locality?—Yes. Fort-William. Donald Cameron.

49,070. And in these glens of Glen-Dessary and Glen-Pean and the various hamlets, Caillich and Caoinich, and down Loch-Arkaig-side; do you concur in my evidence about these places?—Yes.

49,071. Was it correct as far as your knowledge goes?—Yes.

49,072. Do you think that place could be peopled again with small holders?—It is a place that could, very well.

49,073. Now, supposing you are making allotments to carry tenants with a stock of a horse, six cows, and two or three hundred sheep: how many such tenants would the place yield, roughly speaking?—It depends on the number each holding would have.

49,074. Take the number I mentioned, 300 sheep: would it hold fifty tenants?—I should think so.

49,075. You are quite clear that, on that ground, there could be formed a good many substantial holdings?—Yes.

49,076. Would Loch-Arkaig-side sustain thirty from the various hamlets alone?—Yes.

49,077. Glen-Dessary would sustain about twelve such?—Yes.

49,078. And Glen-Pean eight?—Well, Glen-Pean is less no doubt.

49,079. For Glen-Loy, both sides, may we say fifteen?—Glen-Loy is a fertile place, it would take quite that number.

49,080. And Moy and Strone, how many,—twelve?—Yes.

49,081. Do you mean by Moy the land above the canal, or do you think the land above the canal alone for both these places would carry twelve families?—I know it carried more.

49,082. Do you know also that there is splendid land between the canal and the river Lochy?—Yes.

49,083. How many would you set down for that,—twenty?—The most of the arable land is there; it would carry that number.

49,084. Mr N. B. Mackenzie, Factor for Lochiel.—When were you last in Glen-Dessary?—Twenty years ago.

49,085. How often have you been in Glen-Dessary altogether?—I was there only twice, and I remained for days betwixt Glen-Dessary and Glen-Pean.

49,086. When were you last in Glen-Pean?—Just at the time I was at Glen-Dessary, twenty years ago.

49,087. How often have you been in Glen-Pean?—Just twice.

49,088. What were you doing there, and how long were you there?—I went there to see friends of mine who were shepherds up there.

49,089. And how long did you stay with your friends, the shepherds?—I stayed two days and two nights, and these shepherds came round to let me see the ruins of houses that had at one time been flourishing in that place.

49,090. Did you count the ruins?—I did not count them all.

49,091. Is it the recollection of the ruins you saw twenty years ago that you were telling us about?—I think I have seen forty of them.

49,092. (Question repeated).—I had information about them before; I am only saying what I have seen; that is what I am telling you just now.

49,093. Are you quite clear that you saw the remains of as many as forty different dwelling-houses in Glen-Dessary?—I am certain I have seen forty ruins.

49,093A. And how many in Glen-Pean?—I mean between the two places.

49,094. What size of holding would you require to have?—It would need to be comfortable.

49,095. Can you give us any idea of the extent?—No.

49,096. What extent of stock do you think would be necessary?—Six cows, a horse, and about 300 sheep.

49,097. And, I suppose, we may take it that if you had that stock you would require arable land sufficient to supply you with the necessary wintering?—Yes.

49,098. I think you mentioned that the land below the canal and the river would support about twenty people?—Yes, and they would be better than the crofters.

49,099. Now, in saying that, do you mean to convey that you could put twenty times 300 sheep between the canal and the river? (No answer.)

49,100. Can you give any idea of the acreage on the farm of Moy between the canal and the river? (No answer.)

49,101. Mr Sutherland.—What do you say is your occupation?—A blacksmith.

49,102. And you were a blacksmith in Glen-Loy?—Yes.

49,103. When you were an apprentice there was plenty blacksmith work to be had at Glen-Loy?—Yes, for two smiths and an apprentice.

49,104. There were plenty people there at that time?—Well, in my own time a good many left for Australia; they went off with Dr Boiter.

49,105. How many families were there at the time when you were an apprentice blacksmith?—There were ten families that disappeared in one year.

49,106. How many are there now?—There are none at all but two shepherds.

49,107. Had these ten families land, do you know?—Yes.

49,108. Why has there been such a reduction in the population?—I suppose they saw that they could not be maintained in their own country properly; that is the only reason I can give. They were not emigrated; they went off of their own accord.

49,109. Had they much land at that time? Had they big farms?—No; only here and there, like small crofts.

49,110. And had they the grazing behind, away to the west?—All their places went to big farmers.

49,111. But the same people who were there before,—had they the grazing away up to the west, above where their arable land was, up the hill from Moy?—Lochiel had his factor there. Moy was formerly a township with black cattle.

49,112. Do you know whether they had the grazing behind?—He did not allow any to be there but the servants at Moy, after the small tenants left.

William Macphee.

WILLIAM MACPHEE, Crofter, North Ballachulish (58)—examined.

49,113. The Chairman.—What is your occupation?—I am a general labourer.

49,114. Are you a crofter?—Yes.

49,115. What rent do you pay?—£12.

49,116. Was your rent dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—I cannot say; the Report is not out.

49,117. But did you make an application to the Commission?—Yes.

49,118. And it is not yet disposed of?—No.

49,119. Where are you labouring at present?—In my crofts.

49,120. I thought you said you were a general labourer?—Sometimes I have to do that.

49,121. Now, what is it you have come here to tell us?—I have come here to ask that the land be given to the people.

49,122. What land do you refer to?—The land that was taken from the crofters at North Ballachulish.

49,123. Were there old townships there?—No, only one township.

49,124. What was the name?—North Ballachulish.

49,125. Do you remember when that land was taken, or was it before your time?—I remember well when the most of it was taken.

49,126. How many years ago?—About twenty-eight or twenty-nine or so.

49,127. What was done with the land?—It was put to the hotel. [Mr Donald Macphee.—It is now in the occupation of Bishop Chinnery-Haldane.]

49,128. Do you remember how many removals had to be effected in order to get this land for the hotel?—About twenty. Fort-William.

49,129. Was your holding one of them?—My aunt's holding. William Macphee.

49,130. What was the name of your aunt?—Christina Cameron.

49,131. Now, do you remember what size of holding she had?—About an acre and a half.

49,132. And had she some grazing?—Yes, cows' grazing.

49,133. When your aunt was put out of that holding, what became of her?—She died while resident in the holding.

49,134. Who succeeded her in the holding?—It was put to the hotel.

49,135. On the occasion of her death?—Yes.

49,136. There was a number of others who were put out of their holdings?—Yes.

49,137. Were some of them put out in order to form the hotel farm?—Yes.

49,138. How many?—Nineteen or so.

49,139. Crofters?—Yes.

49,140. And were the lands belonging to these crofters put into the hotel farm?—Yes.

49,141. Are you sure of that?—I am certain, for I know it.

49,142. You saw it yourself?—I know every one who was removed, and the crofts were added to the hotel.

49,143. What became of those who were removed?—There are some of them there still, in North Ballachulish.

49,144. They got other holdings there?—Yes.

49,145. And some of them, I daresay, went further away?—Yes, some of them went to Australia.

49,146. Were you living with your aunt at the time she died?—Yes.

49,147. You say her croft was then put into the farm; where did you go?—I could not get any place, though I was promised the first opening by Lochiel.

49,148. Did you get a place?—No.

49,149. Where did you go?—I went to Callart.

49,150. Did you get a holding there?—I got occupation as a ploughman in service.

49,151. Is the land from which these persons were removed, and which was turned into the hotel farm, suitable for occupation and cultivation by crofters now?—Yes, the whole of it connected with the crofts.

49,152. It forms a part of the hotel land?—Yes.

49,153. Is that land arable land, or grazing, or both?—Both.

49,154. Now, are there any other lands of which you have special knowledge?—Yes, the Loch-Leven side, Mrs Cameron-Campbell's property. [Mr Donald Macphee.—Nearly opposite the slate quarries, four or five miles up.]

49,155. Do you know of removals having been effected there?—I know of there being about twenty-four tenants, or I may say twenty-four families on the space.

49,156. Was that on the north side or the south side?—On the north side of Loch-Leven.

49,157. Do you know Callart House?—Yes.

49,158. Where are these holdings or the remains of them, from Callart House?—They are a good bit along; they are not far from Callart.

49,159. Which side of the water are they on?—The north side, the Callart side.

49,160. Is that land, in your opinion, suitable for cultivation and occupation now?—Yes.

49,161. Is there a demand for new holdings in that locality?—There is no doubt about that.

49,162. Do you remember the names of any of the old houses that you recollect seeing on the north side of Loch-Leven?—Yes.

49,163. Just give us them?—I begin at the upper part,—Pairc-an-Fhasaidh, about 2 miles above Kinlochmor, opposite the River Kinlochmor; Bun-Nathrach (Serpent they called it in English), it is a river; Leac, nearer Callart; Caolas-nan-Con; Camus-na-h-Eiridhe; Callart,—there were two Callarts at that time,—Callart Cruaidh and Callart-a'-Mhuilinn.

Fort-William. William Macphee.

49,164. In your recollection were all these places occupied?—Yes, all occupied.

49,165. Do you remember a place called Carnas?—Yes.

49,166. Give us the names of any places on this side of North Ballachulish?—Innse-Righ; Coire-Chaorachain; Coir'-uanan; to the east Blar-a'-Chaorainn; Gleann-Seilich and Blar-nan-Cleireach.

49,167. Any more?—I don't think I know any more.

49,168. In your recollection were all these places you have mentioned occupied by persons dwelling there?—Yes.

49,169. And is the land there suitable, in your opinion, for occupation again?—Yes.

49,170. Are there considerable patches or tracts of land capable of being made arable and cultivated now?—They are just patches, but some of them are good land.

49,171. And is there a demand for small holdings in that quarter up Loch-Linnhe, in these places mentioned last? (No answer.)

49,172. Suppose holdings were formed there, would there be people to come forward and take them?—I am sure there would.

49,173. Have you any doubt about it? I do not gather doubt from your words, but I gather a little from your manner. Are you clear about it?—Clear.

49,174. Can you tell us how many families could be accommodated comfortably on the lands you specified on that side of Loch-Linnhe? Take first Lochiel's estate; how many crofters could be accommodated on the lands you know on Lochiel's estate?—A good many.

49,175. And how many would you put upon the portion of Mrs Cameron-Campbell's estate that you know of?—Four could live there comfortably.

49,176. Where?—Two at Camus-na-h-Eiridhe, one at Leac, and one at Carnas

49,177. Would you put any more on Mrs Cameron-Campbell's estate?—Unless you would give them sheep and so on, the patches of cultivable ground on the rest are too small.

49,178. When you say that four could be accommodated on Mrs Cameron-Campbell's estate, what size of holdings have you in view?—I should say about ten acres arable land.

49,179. And what grazing land? Or what stock would each holding carry?—I would wish to have ten cows or so, 200 or 300 sheep, and a horse.

49,180. You are of opinion that, with such an extent of arable land and such a stock as that, a man might get along comfortably without having to seek outside labour?—That is my opinion.

49,181. Would you undertake a holding of that kind yourself?—Yes, I would, to-morrow.

49,182. And would you enter upon such a holding without any assistance?—No, I could not.

49,183. How much assistance would you require?—I cannot say; that would be great.

49,184. Would you require a considerable amount of assistance?—Oh no, I would not require a great deal; of course, a few hundred pounds.

49,185. That would be by way of loan, I suppose?—Yes.

49,186. Would you contemplate getting the money on loan and repaying it by instalments along with the rent?—Yes. I would say of my own conscience that I would like if Government would put up a fund that would help crofters for that same.

49,186A. You mean that crofters should get assistance from such a fund by way of loan?—Yes.

49,187. To be repaid over a long period of years?—Twenty or thirty.

49,188. And in the end they would stand free if they paid up?—Yes.

49,189. Mr N. B. Mackenzie, Factor for Lochiel.—Did you say that nineteen people were put out at North Ballachulish to make room for what you call the hotel farm?—I did not say that.

49,190. What did you say?—I said that there were twenty crofts added to the hotel, the Loch Leven Hotel; I did not say the people were put away.

Fort-William. William Macphee.

49,191. The Chairman.—Were nineteen or twenty crofters removed or got to go away from their holdings in order to their lands being put into the hotel farm?—There were some of them removed, some of them placed in other places.

49,192. How many were removed?—There were five or six removed.

49,193. You mean by removed, that they were sent away to a distance?—They were removed to other places.

49,194. But you say that others were put to other places: do you mean that they went away voluntarily?—Some of them went away abroad.

49,195. Voluntarily?—Yes.

49,196. How many chose to go away abroad when this state of matters arose?—There were two I knew who went away.

49,197. Any more?—No.

49,198. You say five or six were removed to other places and two went abroad voluntarily: that makes seven. Now, what about the rest?—They were shifted into other crofts.*

49,199. On the same estate?—Yes, on the same estate and on the same township.

49,200. But are you quite clear about this, that whatever became of them,—whether they went abroad, or got crofts on the same estate, there were about twenty of them altogether?—Yes.

49,201. Mr N. B. Mackenzie.—Who were the ten that were shifted to different parts of the township of North Ballachulish to make room for this alleged farm? Give us their names?—Catherine Maclachlan; she died before she was shifted; she died in her own residence.

49,202. What became of her holding?—It was added to the hotel.

49,203. The Chairman.—Give us the next one?—One Kennedy.

49,204. Where did he go to?—He died also.

49,205. And was his croft added to the hotel?—Yes.

49,206. Now go on to the third one?—John Rankine.

49,207. What became of him?—He was shifted.

49,208. To where?—To another croft in the same township, nearer Fort-William.

49,209. And was his croft added to the hotel farm?—Yes.

49,210. What is the next one?—John Mackenzie (John).

49,211. Were these changes gradual changes, or were they all done about the same time?—Gradual changes.

49,212. How many years would they extend over?—I cannot say; perhaps five years.

49,213. But during that time are you perfectly clear that no fewer than nineteen or twenty crofts were gradually consolidated into the hotel farm?—Well, I mean, my lord, of that number of twenty, that was like one cow for one croft, and some of these were two cows and common big crofts, but there were some of them on one cow's grass.

49,214. And some on more?—Some of them two. That is the way I count them, by the cow.

49,215. How many holdings altogether would you suppose fell into the hotel farm?—Ten of two cows.

49,216. That would make twenty of one cow?—Yes.

49,217. How many families were removed?—Twenty.

49,218. Mr N. B. Mackenzie.—You have spoken of the Bishop's farm: do you mean by that the farm in name of Patrick Vernon Chinnery-Haldane, who is the son of the Bishop, the Bishop himself having nothing to do with it?—I mean the hotel farm.

49,219. Mr. D. Macphee, agent for the crofters.—Who first took the farm from the proprietor: was it the son of the bishop?—It was in the name of the son.

* With reference to this answer, Macphee, on 24th October 1894, wrote:—"I should have said that seven families got notices to quit on the ground that they were only daughters or nephews of the late crofters, and I should also have said that there were two downright evictions."

Fort-William. — William Macphee.

49,220. From the first?—Yes.

49,221. Had the son any money of his own, do you think?—I cannot say.

49,222. How many families are on the part of North Ballachulish that remains as a crofting community?—There are nineteen at present.

49,223. So that about half the number were suppressed?—Yes.

49,224. What size of crofts have the nineteen?—They are different sizes.

49,225. Give me the size of the smallest, or the stock it carries, and the size of the largest, with the stock it carries?—The smallest can carry a cow and a follower, and the largest six cows and followers.

49,226. Do you know that one Duncan Macinnes occupied one of these small crofts?—Yes.

49,227. And on his death he bequeathed it to John Mackenzie, tailor?—Yes.

49,228. John was so anxious to get possession of this croft that he pursued Lochiel from the Sheriff Court right through all the Courts to the House of Lords?—Yes.

49,229. So there is a demand for crofts down there?—There is plenty demand.

49,230. The Chairman.—Can you give me the name of any crofter there who has six cows?—Duncan Mackenzie.

49,231. Anybody else?—John Bain Mackenzie.

49,232. Mr Macphee.—Had the township of Ballachulish at one time summer grazing rights on Beinn-Bhreac?—Yes.

49,233. Had the adjoining township of Onich the same rights?—Yes.

49,234. Do you know when they ceased to enjoy these rights,—how long is it since?—I daresay it will be twenty-three or twenty-four years ago.

49,235. Was that when Ewen Cameron was the ground officer?—Yes, it was not taken then, but shortly after.

49,236. Now, are you sure whether it was on Beinn-Bhreac or on Glasven that these grazings rights were?—They had Glasven altogether, and a part of Beinn-Bhreac.

49,237. When they were deprived of these rights, did they get any compensation in the form of a money payment or reduction of rent?—Some of them did.

49,238. Who did?—I cannot say; but the most of the crofters got some reduction, for I heard them say so; but some of them did not.

49,239. You lived with your aunt at that time?—Yes.

49,240. Did she get a reduction?—No, it was after her time.

49,241. What do you mean?—She was not alive then. I remember putting away the beast right to the top of the hill, and the place was not taken away then.

49,242. Do you know how much any other crofter who was deprived of the summer grazing got by way of abatement of rent?—I cannot say.

49,243. When did you become a crofter?—Sixteen or seventeen years ago.

49,244. I understand your croft is on the slope?—Very much.

49,245. And when the rain comes it washes away the substance?—All away to the sea.

49,246. After a season like this you require three times the manure to fertilise it?—Yes. I would make a swap for a level ground any day.

49,247. And you are eaten up with rabbits?—I cannot keep them down. That is all I am for; I have to say that there is plenty desire for land, and the land is yonder, and good land it is.

JOHN CAMPBELL, Murlagan, Achaluachrach (about 36)—examined.

John Campbell.

49,248. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am.

49,249. What rent do you pay?—We have a club farm.

49,250. Are you under the Crofters Act?—I don't know. [Mr Macphee.—He is a tenant on The Mackintosh's estate, and is one of the joint-tenants of the Gabhail-mhor farm.]

Fort-William. — John Campbell.

49,251. Mr D. Macphee, Agent for crofters.—Did you hear what I said?—Yes.

49,252. And do you agree with it?—Yes.

49,253. You are not satisfied with the place you have?—No.

49,254. There is no room for an energetic man extending or getting on in the world?—No.

49,255. And you know the country about?—I know it.

49,256. You have prospected Fersit and Inverlair?—Yes.

49,257. And you instructed me to make an application to the County Council to get you a holding there?—Yes.

49,258. You understand, or you believe, that I did my best, but failed?—I understand so.

49,259. Is the land up there good?—It is good.

49,260. And you are prepared to build and stock a place there?—Yes, a small place.

49,261. The Chairman.—What size of place did you wish when you applied to the County Council?—There were somewhere about 15 or 20 acres of arable land on the place I pointed out.

49,262. How many acres arable?—I would like not much less than 20 acres altogether.

49,263. And any grazing?—Some grazing.

49,264. What stock had you in view to keep if your application had been granted?—It would carry about six cows and followers and a horse.

49,265. And any sheep?—Very few sheep.

49,266. Suppose you got good land, which you were quite ready to enter upon, what rent are you willing to pay?—I don't know. I was going to leave the rent to a judge.

49,267. A fair rent?—A fair rent.

49,268. And would your present share of the stock in the Gabhail-mhor be more than sufficient to stock a place of that kind?—It would not be more, but it would be sufficient. I have a very small arable farm about 4½ acres.

49,269. What was your proportion of the profits of that club farm last year?—It was nothing.

49,270. Do you mean that it was a bad year?—I don't mean that the farm was dear, but there are too many of us.

49,271. How many are there of you?—We are 15 in the club farm.

49,272. What stock have you among the 15?—About 2000 sheep.

49,273. What kind of sheep?—Black-faced.

49,274. And how are they managed?—By managers; the proprietor, The Mackintosh, appoints managers himself.

49,275. How many managers are there?—Three.

49,276. Do the crofters appoint one of these?—No, they are all appointed by The Mackintosh.

49,277. Who keeps the accounts of the outgoings?—The managers.

49,278. And is there a meeting regularly with the crofters, twice or thrice a year?—Yes, there is a meeting once a year.

49,279. At which you are told the result of the year's proceedings, I suppose?—Yes.

49,280. Do you get payments made to you when the year turns out to be profitable?—Yes.

49,281. How long is it since you got a penny?—It is a good many years since there was much profit.

49,282. It is a club farm worked by managers appointed by the proprietor for the benefit of the crofters. Presumably, some years there is a profit from the stock?—There is.

49,283. How long is it since you got a payment?—There are three years since I got anything.

49,284. What did you get three years ago?—I forget.

49,285. I would like very much indeed to know. This is the first kind of club farm I have heard of managed in this particular way. How much were you supposed to get?—I forget, but the managers work the thing.

Fort-William. John Campbell.

49,286. But do you not sometimes get some money?—I do.

49,287. Well, how much did you get last time you received any?—I forget at this moment.

49,288. How is the profit that is derived from this club farm adjusted with your rent?—It is divided between us by the managers: they divide it and give it to us.

49,289. Then you give them the rent when the rent falls due?—Yes, we give them the rent, and they pay the rent to the proprietor. Whatever is over the rent we get back.

49,290. They keep the rent from your share of the profit and pay you the difference?—Pay us the difference.

49,291. When they keep the rent, how much do they keep?—They keep the rent.

49,292. How much is it?—I cannot say exactly, but it is about £230.

49,293. For which the 15 crofters are held liable, the managers looking after the stock and deducting the rent from the profit of the concern?—Yes.

49,294. And, I presume, they pay you the difference in proportion to your holding?—Yes, they pay us the balance, whatever is over the rent.

49,295. Are you each paid equal sums or different sums?—Different sums, according to the share or half share.

49,296. You yourself have a half share?—I have a half share.

49,297. How long has this club farm gone on?—Since I remember, and before that.

49,298. And has it always been managed by the proprietors' managers, or did the crofters at any time have anything to do with that?—It has been managed since I remember by the proprietors' managers: of course, they have a share in the place.

49,299. They have a share in the club farm?—Yes.

49,300. What share have they?—A whole share each.

49,301. Mr Harold Y. L. Smith, Factor for Lord Abinger.—I understand you to say that you have, as your share, something like 60 sheep out of 2000: that would be your share?—Yes.

49,302. Have you any money besides? (Question objected to).

49,303. The Chairman.—Suppose you had got such a holding as you instructed Mr Macphee to ask for from the County Council, could you have put up the necessary buildings upon the holding and fenced the land if necessary at your own expense?—I would put buildings that would suit myself and the place.

49,304. And the necessary fencing?—As to the necessary fences, that would be between the proprietor and me.

49,305. You have the means that would enable you to do so, or you could get them?—I think so.

49,306. Are you a contractor?—I do small jobs at times.

49,307. What sort of contracts do you take?—Any job that comes in the way, roads and wire fencing and such like.

49,308. Do you do a good deal of work in that way?—I am always working at something of that kind.

49,309. Mr Sutherland.—You do not pay the rent out of the holding?—The rent is paid out of the holding.

49,310. You do not pay it?—I do not pay it.

49,311. It is paid for you?—The managers pay the rent: of course, if there is any deficiency to be made up, I have to give my share, and they will pay it if the farm does not pay.

49,312. If there is a loss?—Yes, if there is a loss.

49,313. Have you arable land besides the hill grazing?—Yes, I have 4½ acres.

49,314. Have all the partners in this club farm got arable land as well?—They have.

49,315. Do you think that if you had the appointment of the managers yourselves you would like it better?—I don't know.

49,316. You have never heard any opinion expressed by the people on that point?—No. Fort-William.

49,317. Did you ever see the books yourself?—No, I never saw them. John Campbell.

49,318. But, generally, are you satisfied with the management of the club farm?—I would prefer to manage my farm myself.

49,319. Does that apply to a club farm, or do you prefer a separate farm?—It cannot be done there with such as that.

49,320. You would like to have your farm separate?—Yes, all to myself.

49,321. Have you ever tried a club farm where you had the election of the managers yourselves?—No.

42,322. You don't know whether that might remove your difficulty?—I don't know.

49,323. You have not thought of it, have you?—No.

49,324. Do you consider that you are paying a very high rent for your sheep ground?—No, we do not consider the rent is high; but I consider that I have too little arable land.

49,325. And where is the arable land that you think would form suitable holdings,—what particular place have you in your mind?—I was thinking all over the river, just opposite us on Lord Abinger's estate; Fersit was the particular place I had in view when I made the application.

49,326. The Chairman.—I gather from what you say that you and the other crofters or small tenants who have this club farm have not at any time made any complaint against the managers for the way they have conducted the management?—No; they do always what they can.

49,327. Is there any charge made for the management?—No, only travelling expenses going to markets or the like.

49,328. Do they all go, or only one of them?—Two of them go.

49,329. Mr Allan Macdonald, Factor for The Mackintosh.—Do you know, or do you not know, that the managers were elected by mutual arrangement between the proprietors and the tenants, when they entered into the first lease in 1871?—No, I am not aware of that.

49,330. Your father was the tenant then?—Yes, my father was the tenant then.

49,331. You are not aware that, as a matter of fact, the names of the managers are entered in that lease which is signed by the proprietors and the tenants?—No.

49,332. The Chairman.—Could we see that lease? [Mr Macdonald].—I could give it to you when you come to Inverness. The managers were four of the most intelligent members of the club farm.

JOHN KENNEDY, Crofter, Garvan (46). John Kennedy.
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

49,333. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter at Garvan?—Yes.

49,334. Was your croft dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

49,335. What is it you are anxious to tell us?—That there is so much land in the country waste.

49,336. Do you want to get a holding?—Yes, I am on the worst piece of land.

49,337. You want to get another holding with better land?—Yes.

49,338. Could you take such a holding without assistance?—I could take as much as I have.

49,339. What is the extent you have got?—A little over two acres.

49,340. Of arable land?—Yes.

49,341. What stock have you got?—Two cows and a calf.

49,342. Have you any sheep?—No sheep.

49,343. Would you be satisfied if you got another holding similar in size to the holding you have, but with better soil?—Yes, or a little larger.

Fort-William. John Kennedy.

49,344. I see that, according to the Crofters Commission Report, you have 2 acres arable and 2 acres 1 rood 33 poles of outrun; also a share in the grazing of 29 cows and one pony on pasture, the landlord having the surplus grazing. There are apparently eight families in the township, and you have got two shares; your old rent was £2, 13s. 4d. and the fair rent is £2, 2s.; the arrears were £15, 16s. 6d., of which £4, 4s. were ordered to be paid and the remainder cancelled. Your main objection to the holding you are in is, I understand, the very poor quality of the soil?—We want ground, and we complained of the croft.

49,345. At present, I understand, you live partly by your holding and partly by labour?—We must do that.

49,346. If you got a new holding, do you desire a continuance of that system, or would you prefer a holding by which you could live?—Most certainly a holding by which I could live.

49,347. If you had the means to take it up?—Yes, if I had the means.

49,348. Mr Donald Macphee, agent for crofters.—Your father stayed at Creagaig at one time?—My grandfather.

49,349. And you and your people have been moving about between Blaich and Creagaig, and you know all about the people who were on it at one time?—They were going back and forward between Creagaig, Garvan, and Blaich.

49,350. When your grandfather was at Creagaig, did any other people live there besides himself?—There were other two put out of Creagaig at the same time.

49,351. Your grandfather was put out and other two at the same time?—Yes.

49,352. Were they crofters?—They had Creagaig between them.

49,353. Is Callop near Creagaig, but east of it a little?—Just on the other side of the river.

49,354. Do you remember when that was occupied as a farm?—I remember three living there on the one side, and a farmer on the other.

49,355. What became of them?—Three on the south side of the river were put out to make room for deer.

49,356. What became of the farm?—The farmer went away for the same purpose; he got no lease.

49,357. His lease was not renewed?—No.

49,358. Do you remember Drumfearn?—I do not remember more than one farmer.

49,359. Do you remember Garvan, where Boyd was?—Yes.

49,360. Which Garvan was that?—North Garvan.

49,361. Has that farm been cleared for deer?—That was cleared for deer.

49,362. Were there any other people on North Garvan besides Boyd?—He had two cottars along with himself.

49,363. Have you been up the glens in Conaglen?—Yes.

49,364. Have you seen the ruins of dwelling-houses there?—Yes.

49,365. Do you remember when Mitchell was at Inverscaddle?—I remember very well, but I forget how long since.

49,366. Mr R. Robertson, of Messrs Dalgleish & Bell, W.S., Edinburgh, representing the Earl of Morton.—Are you aware that there was an application for enlargement of holdings?—Yes.

49,367. Were you one of the applicants?—Yes.

49,368. And you know that an appeal was taken against the judgment of the Commissioners?—Yes.

Widow Ann Macmillan or Maclachlan.

WIDOW ANN MACMILLAN or MACLACHLAN, crofter, Garvan (75).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

49,369. The Chairman.—Are you the occupant of a croft at Garvan?—Yes.

49,370. What rent do you pay?—£1, 11s.

49,371. Do you share in the desire which prevails in the locality for getting more land for new holdings or extension of grazings?—Yes.

Fort-William. Widow Ann Macmillan or Maclachlan.

49,372. Have you any sons living with you?—I have a son living with me.

49,373. What is his age?—About 35.

49,374. Is he married?—No.

49,375. If you got a new holding would your son be with you and help you to carry it on?—I think he could.

49,376. Mr Donald Macphee, agent for crofters.—Were you at one time at Drumfearn?—I was at Drumfearn first.

49,377. How many tenants were on Drumfearn when you were there?—There were three crofters on the one farm.

49,378. Had you a croft, or had you the farm?—A croft on the farm.

49,379. What stock did that croft carry?—One cow and a calf.

49,380. Was that place better than your present holding?—Much better.

49,381. Had you young beasts along with the cow?—Just a cow and a stirk.

49,382. The Chairman.—How many crofters were under the farmer?—Six crofters.

49,383. And, I suppose, they all worked as labourers on the farm?—They were working on days' wages to the farmer.

49,384. Mr Sutherland.—How is the land of Drumfearn now occupied?—As a deer forest.

Donald Macmillan.

DONALD MACMILLAN, Duisky (30)—examined.

49,385. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter in your own right?—No, my mother is the crofter.

49,386. You live with your mother in a croft at Duisky?—Yes.

49,387. What rent does she pay?—£3, 16s.

49,388. Duisky is further east along the loch from South Garvan, and on the same side?—Yes.

49,389. Did your mother apply to the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

49,390. What is it you are anxious to tell us to-day?—I would like to get a croft the same way as any other, because there is plenty of waste land up Locheilside and up Conaglen and so forth.

49,391. Do you mean an extension of the holding your mother has got, or a new holding?—Either a new holding or an addition to this.

49,392. Are you not the eldest son?—Yes, I am the eldest.

49,393. The area of the croft seems to be 3 acres 1 rood 20 poles arable, 11 acres 3 roods 31 poles outrun, and the right to graze two cows; common pasture 619 acres in one place and 775 acres in another: the general grazing of the township has 29 cows and one pony upon it, the landlord having the surplus grazing and wintering. Additional pasture of 317 acres and 92½ acres arable have since been assigned with the consent of the landlord to the crofters of North Duisky and Garvan under an application for enlargement. The old rent of the croft was £3, 14s., and the fair rent is £2, 18s.; the arrears were £11, 4s. 6d., of which £7, 4s. 6d. were cancelled and £4 ordered to be paid. How many share in the grazing?—Thirteen, I think.

49,394. Mr Donald Macphee, agent for crofters.—And you have only the right to graze 29 cows altogether among 13 people?—Yes.

49,394A. That makes very small holdings necessarily, does it not?—Yes, very small.

49,395. Now is there abundance of land in your neighbourhood there that you could get for the purpose of enlarging holdings?—Yes, there is.

49,396. Where is there suitable land in the neighbourhood?—There is suitable land in Finlaton and Conaglen, but it is deer forest now.

49,397. Anywhere else near you?—In Duisky.

49,398. Drumfearn?—Yes.

49,399. Callop?—Well, Dalriach; Callop meets Dalriach.

ort-William. 49,400. One of the Duiskys is in Lord Morton's hands?—Yes.

onald acmillan. 49,401. And is Achaphobuill in his hands?—Yes.

49,402. Is there land there suitable for cultivation?—Yes, very good.

49,403. Was it formerly in cultivation?—Yes, it used to be.

49,404. Is it very long since it was put out of cultivation?—Between fifteen and twenty years ago.

49,405. Would it make a very good holding for any man who was able to stock it?—Yes, it would.

49,406. You would not be afraid to undertake to stock it?—No, I would not.

49,407. Mr Sutherland.—When was your case decided by the Crofters Commission?—About fifteen months ago.

49,408. I observe that the landlord has the surplus grazing rights and wintering on the pasture, outrun and arable land. I wish to know what is the meaning of that. When you were paying this old rent to the landlord, does this mean that he pastured cattle upon your outrun arable and grazing land at the same time? Did the landlord, as a matter of fact, do that,—pasture any stock upon your arable land, your outrun or your grazing?—No, but the deer were coming to our crofts before the agreement was entered into.

49,409. Did the landlord ever actually use this right?—Yes, he did.

49,410. And it was only before the Crofters Commission, as I understand it, that he gave over that right?—No, he has not given it over yet.

49,411. Yes, it is distinctly stated here 'the right to 'surplus grazing and wintering, together with additional 'pasture of 317 acres and 92½ acres arable, has since 'been assigned with the consent of the landlord to the 'crofters of North Duisky and Garvan under an en-'largement application by them.'—That is an Order that is appealed against.

49,412. This right of pasturing involved in the appeal is part of the enlargement?—Yes.

49,413. So you are perfectly correct in saying it still exists?—Yes.

49,414. The Chairman.—You say that the landlord still uses that right. In what way does he use it?—He is wintering hoggs on our ground the way he used to do.

49,415. He did this last winter?—Yes. [Mr Robertson.—I might say that there is a suspensive condition in the Order for enlargement with regard to the fences, so that really it does not come into operation till Martinmas next. The tenants are not paying the increased rents in the meantime and the rights of parties are in statu quo.]

49,416. Mr Macphee.—Did you hear the statement which I made in the meeting in my evidence about traces of ruins of houses in Conaglen?—Yes.

49,417. And on the River Conaglen?—Yes.

49,418. Do you know the remains there?—Yes.

ald eron. DONALD CAMERON, Middle Street, Fort-William (76)—examined.

49,419. Mr Donald Macphee, Agent for crofters.—Where was your father born?—At the head of Glen-Roy, Glen-Turret.

49,420. Where were you born?—At Lianachan.

49,421. You mean Highbridge?—Yes.

49,422. Do you know Glen-Turret yourself?—Yes.

49,423. Have you heard your father speak of those who occupied that Glen?—Yes.

49,424. How many were there?—I am sure there would be seven or eight families.

49,425. Do you know Leichroy and Annat there?—Yes.

49,426. Would that accommodate a few more families?—Yes.

49,427. Have you seen these places yourself?—Oh yes.

49,428. Have you seen the traces of ruins there?—Yes.

49,429. Can you form any idea of the number of people who dwelt there at one time,—I mean in Glen-Turret, Leichroy, and Annat?—I should think ten families. Fort-William. — Donald Cameron.

49,430. Among them all, do you mean?—Yes.

49,431. You know Lianachan and Dawnie and those places?—Yes.

49,432. Have you heard what the witnesses have said already about their capacity for carrying families?—Yes.

49,433. Do you agree with what they say?—Yes.

49,434. You have also heard what was said about Coire-Chuinnlidh and Kylliechonnet?—Yes.

49,435. And do you agree with what Donald, the old fox-hunter said?—Yes.

49,436. Did you know the thirteen families who were at one time on Monessie and Achnacochine?—Yes.

49,437. Do you know Beinn-Bhreac and Glas-Bheinn?—Yes.

49,438. Did you hear what Macmaster said about them?—I heard a good part of that talk among people before.

49,439. But were you up at Beinn-Bhreac yourself, and did you see cattle from Achintore and other places summering there?—No.

49,440. Did you meet any who were evicted from Loch-Arkaig at one time?—I heard people saying that they saw no fewer than fifty families sent from Loch-Arkaig.

49,441. Who said so?—Some of their relatives that did not go to America long ago.

49,442. Are the people who told you so now dead?—Yes, all dead.

49,443. Did they themselves form members of the families who were turned out of Loch-Arkaig?—Yes.

49,444. Do you know the Rathlies in Glen-Fintag?—Yes, I know the townships.

49,445. Do you know that the Camerons of Doch-an-Fhasaidh were evicted from there?—Yes.

49,446. Have you been up there and seen the bothies that they once occupied?—Yes.

49,447. For summer shielings or grazings?—Yes.

49,448. And the ruins of their houses are there yet?—Yes.

49,449. Mr Sutherland.—You said ten families were in Glen-Turret and the upper portions of Glen-Roy?—Well, I never heard what the number was, but judging from the appearance I would think so.

49,450. Are you including the farm of Crannachan in that estimate?—My forefathers were living at Glen-Turret, and I saw the place several times.

49,451. You have seen the farm of Crannachan as well, I have no doubt?—Yes.

49,452. Do you consider it a good place for new holdings to be made in?—Oh yes, it is a very good place.

49,453. Have you seen the marks of the old cultivation there?—There is not much agriculture in that farm now.

49,454. But what there is is good?—Oh yes, good enough.

49,455. And do you see the marks of the old ridges up to the hill?—Yes.

49,456. Is it good grazing, do you think?—I should think so.

49,457. Have you any idea how much stock is on the farm of Crannachan?—Well, no, but I think it would keep close on 2000 sheep.

49,458. Does it go up as far as Glen-Turret?—No.

49,459. What farm is Glen-Turret in now?—It is Sir John Ramsden who has it in his own hands.

49,460. What does he use it for?—He has sheep on it.

49,461. Do you know Ach-a'-Mhadaidh?—Yes, I knew it; it is the next farm to Bohuntine. It is just opposite Crannachan, on the north side of the river.

49,462. How much stock do you think was on the whole farm of Glen-Turret?—I do not know.

49,463. But there is a large extent of ground there at present in the possession of the proprietor himself?—Yes

Fort-William. Donald Cameron.

49,464. He is unable or unwilling to let it?—I did not hear which.

49,465. But he has it himself in his own hands?—Yes.

49,466. Supposing you were looking for a new holding, would you take a holding up in Glen-Turret yourself?—Yes, I would: I would like to live in it yet, although I was never living in it.

49,467. Is that because of the attachment you feel for your grandfather having been there, or because you would make it pay?—It is a good place, one of the best places in this country altogether.

49,468. Mr Allan Macdonald, Factor for The Mackintosh.—Do you know that Ach-a'-Mhadaidh is now added to the crofting township of Bohuntine?—Yes.

49,469. Mr N. B. Mackenzie, Factor for Lochiel.—Are you aware that the townships of Corpach, Upper and Lower Banavie, Caol, and Lochyside were formed for the accommodation of the people brought from Loch-Arkaig-side?—I believe some of them got homes there, but it was the people who made the homes for themselves.

49,470. These townships that I have mentioned were, you are aware, set out for these people?—I heard so. [The Chairman.—They reclaimed waste land and built houses for themselves?—Yes, that is what I mean.]

49,471. Are you aware that, for instance, the hill grazing of Banavie extends to upwards of 1000 acres of land? Is that consistent with your own knowledge?—I believe they got some places that were not bad.

49,472. Was the Caledonian Canal being formed through these lands about that time?—Yes, it was. I well believe that they were working at it at the time the people left Loch-Arkaig.

49,473. The Chairman.—They left the loch side and came to Corpach and Banavie: is that so?—Yes. Most of them went to America, but the remnant stayed about Corpach and were perhaps working at the canal.

49,474. So that what you say is this, that most of those who left or had to leave their holdings went to America?—Yes.

49,475. But some of them who settled in Corpach and Banavie got work at the Caledonian Canal?—Yes.

49,476. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Do you think then that they left Loch-Arkaig side in order to work at the Caledonian Canal?—Well, I never heard that.

49,477. You never heard that they left of their own accord?—No, they did not: I heard the reverse of that,—that they were sent away against their will.

49,478. You have spoken to members of the families who were removed, and you were led to understand that they all left much against their will; is not that so?—Yes. But I never saw the people who went away; it is a long time since they left. I saw some of their relatives, and I was well acquainted with the son and daughter of a man who went to America with all the rest of his family.

49,479. But some of them after their removal from Loch-Arkaig found work at the Caledonian Canal?—They did.

49,480. Mr Sutherland.—People have gone from Fort-William to work at the new West Highland Railway, have they not?—I well believe they did.

49,481. But they did not leave their homes to do so, did they?—Well, no.

49,482. Do you think it would be necessary for these people to give up their holdings if they went to work at the Caledonian Canal?—It depends on the homes that they have.

49,483. You have seen people going from home to work at railways and the like?—Yes.

49,484. Do you think it is likely that, if it were to obtain work at the Caledonian Canal when it was being made that they came down, they would like to go back again to their homes?—Yes.

49,485. You have seen people coming from home to work, remaining all week and going home on Saturday?—Yes.

Fort-William. Dona'd Cameron.

49,486. Loch-Arkaig is not very far from some parts of the Caledonian Canal, is it?—No, but there are not very many people at Loch-Arkaig now.

49,487. Mr Macphee.—Did you ever hear that before they left Loch-Arkaig side they got summonses of removal?—I will not say that.

49,488. Were they forced to remove?—I heard that they were forced to remove.

49,489. The Chairman.—When these people left Loch-Arkaig side, under whatever circumstances, was there work in the neighbourhood?—The only thing I heard about the people was that they were compelled to leave their place, and that they came to the market in Fort-William here with their cattle on one day and sold them here; and it was a sight to see so many people and cattle going together from their homes at Loch-Arkaig.

49,490. You did not know, I suppose, whether they had enough of work to keep them going when they left home?—No, I don't know about that.

49,491. When they came to Corpach and Banavie, those of them who settled there, was there a good deal of work going on there in connection with the Caledonian Canal?—What I heard people saying was that some were not able to go to America, but all the able people and the young people had to leave some of their old relatives about Banavie and Corpach there, and these were making with their own diligence a living at the Caledonian Canal.

49,492. Mr Harold Y. L. Smith, Factor for Lord Abinger.—You spoke about some people going away from Monessie. Do you remember those people being there?—Yes, I knew the whole of them.

49,493. Did they go away of their own accord?—There was some disagreement among themselves, I know.

49,494. Is that why they broke up?—Yes, they were not agreeing very well among themselves.

49,495. The disagreement among themselves led to their going away?—Yes, in the townships of Monessie and Achnacochine in Glen-Spean.

49,496. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know when the Caledonian Canal was made?—It was finished about the year 1822.

49,497. And do you know when these people were removed from Glen-Arkaig? Was it before or after, can you tell us?—It was twenty years sooner than that.

49,498. The people were cleared out twenty years before the Caledonian Canal was made?—Was finished.

49,499. How many years did it take to finish it?—I ought to make that also.

49,500. Did it take twenty years?—More than that.

49,501. When were the works begun?—I cannot say exactly.

49,502. Then with regard to Monessie and the disagreement among the tenants, was it necessary for them to go to America because they disagreed up there?—Some of them went to Australia.

49,503. That is further away still. If you differ from any of your neighbours you would not feel yourself called upon to go to America or Australia on that account? Do you think that is the sole reason for the people leaving the place altogether?—(No answer.)

49,504. The Chairman.—Do you know if, at the time when this disagreement existed which led to some of them going away to another country, any proceedings had been taken by the landlord in the matter, or against the tenants themselves?—I cannot say how it was.

49,505. Did they go away of their own free will?—Oh yes, they did.

Harold York Lidderdale Smith.

HAROLD YORKE LIDDERDALE SMITH, Solicitor, Fort-William, Factor for Lord Abinger (35)—examined.

49,506. The Chairman.—Have you a statement to submit?—Yes.

49,506A. Read it, please?—My name is Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith, Factor and Solicitor, Fort-William. I am thirty-five years of age, and am now Factor on the estates of Inverlochy and Inverlair for the Right Honourable James Yorke Macgregor Scarlett,

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

Baron Abinger, proprietor of these estates. I wish to express on behalf of Lord Abinger his regret that he cannot be here in person to-day. He suffered from a very severe attack of typhoid fever in spring, and is only just recovering, but I hope he will be in the country shortly. I may say that I have been accustomed to come to Scotland at intervals all my life, and from 1882 to 1885 was in the office of Messrs Dundas and Wilson, C.S., Edinburgh, studying Scotch Law and Factory business with a view to becoming Land Agent for the late Lord Abinger and Mrs Nicholson of Arisaig and South Morar. In the autumn of 1885, I came to Fort-William to the office of Mr N. B. Mackenzie, factor and writer there. I joined Mr Mackenzie in partnership in 1886, and continued with him until the beginning of 1892. During this time I had special charge of the estates of Inverlochy and Arisaig, for the proprietors of which estates I have continued to act as agent, and when acting with Mr Mackenzie assisted in taking charge of several other estates in Argyll-shire and Inverness-shire. In the course of my work I have obtained considerable insight into the working of farms, deer forests, and other estate matters. The estate of Inverlochy extends approximately to about 40,000 acres. The ground cleared for deer is known as the Inverlochy Forest. The forest extends to about 22,500 acres. About 40 stags, besides hinds, are killed in the forest and it is improving. I think it highly probable that in course of time at least double that quantity will be got. There are about 8 acres in the forest now under cultivation, and of these 6 acres at Lianachan are fenced against deer. There are also about 30 acres of permanent pasture at Lianachan surrounded by a fence from which a crop of hay is taken at intervals. The arable land in cultivation is occupied by the stalkers. The highest ground in the forest is about 3990 feet and the lowest about 350 feet. By far the greater part is over the 800 feet contour line. In my opinion, if the remaining part of low-lying moor ground and rough pasture were withdrawn, there would be serious loss by death of deer even if the forest could be profitably continued at all. I consider that there is hardly any available land except what is occupied by the stalkers and watchers. If the land was taken from them there would be no servants to work the forest. On the other hand, if small pieces were taken from the forest it would injure it by diminishing the already too small area of low ground, and would create a disturbance by dogs and people passing to and fro which would be injurious to the forest; deer fencing would, of course, be required. Speaking generally, the remainder of the Inverlochy Estate comprises farms extending to about 15,000 acres of hill pasture and including about 600 acres of arable ground; crofters' holdings extending to about 2900 acres of pasture and 240 acres of arable ground; and allotment ground of about 80 acres in the neighbourhood of Fort-William. There is also about 800 acres of wood, of which about a third is larch and fir plantations, the rest natural wood. I must be kindly understood as giving these areas as approximate; I have endeavoured to verify them to the best of my knowledge, but in a large tract like this it is impossible to be quite accurate. There are two large hill farms let on lease carrying about 800 and 1000 sheep respectively, and a large number of dairy and other cattle. These farms are Inverlochy and Claggan and Achindaul and Camesky—rental being £248 and £135 respectively. The hill ground of the former rises to an altitude of over 3000 feet; the latter to about 750: it is the farm that lies on the north side of the Fort-William road. I may say that I have marked roughly on the Ordnance Sheet the boundaries of the farms for the benefit of the Commission. I intend to verify them if anything more is required.

49,507. You can show us estate plans, I suppose?—We have no regular estate plan.

49,508. Is there not an old estate plan showing the forest of Inverlochy?—I don't think so. There is a very old plan hanging up in the castle, but I don't think there is any plan showing the forest of Inverlochy. It has been formed since 1870 or the end of the 60's. Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,509. The whole of it?—I think so: it was all finished before I came here. I think the late Lord Abinger told me it was finished in 1883 and began to be formed in the late 60's. Of course, it was not all made at once. There is also a farm mainly arable let on lease to the tenant of the Spean-Bridge Hotel, and one let on long lease to Mr G. B. Davy, a gentleman residing at Spean Lodge.

The three principal farms in the proprietors' occupation consist of the Home Farm of Torlundy, the upper part of the farm of Achindaul, and the farm of Killichonate. The farms of Torlundy and Achindaul together carry a black-faced ewe stock of about 2000 sheep. The hill ground of these two farms rises to an altitude of about 4000 feet, and the farms are for the most part high ground. The farm of Killichonate is low ground. The meadow land surrounds the shooting lodge of Killichonate like a park, and is a most desirable adjunct to its amenity; I mean that none of it could be taken away or allotted without very seriously interfering with the amenity of the house. This land and the hill ground outside is used for summering of cattle and tups and wintering of young sheep from the farms of Achindaul and Torlundy.

It is of very great importance to the proprietor on this account and is only capable of wintering part of the sheep, others being wintered elsewhere on the estate. The arable land of the Home Farm forms for the most part the castle park surrounding the castle. I do not think any of the hill farms on the estate could be properly worked to profit if the low ground was taken away. One of the most serious considerations in this country is the question of wintering. If a farmer cannot winter his sheep at home he has in the first place to make a large immediate outlay for which he may get no proportionate return, and in any case there is a long delay in getting a return. The cost of wintering sheep away from home is about 6s. 6d., and at present prices this is above the value of the lamb itself. If the low ground was taken away, the rent of the high ground would be seriously diminished. Large sums have been expended by the proprietor in farm buildings, draining, fencing, &c., which would be to a great extent lost if the farms were divided up.

49,510. Had the forest of Inverlochy any other name? We cannot find it in the Parliamentary Return?—Perhaps it might have been called Coire-Chuinnlidh, it was part of the farm of Coire-Chuinnlidh. The last time the forest was let as a whole was in 1892. In this year the forest, castle, shootings, and certain fishings were let for £2925, which includes wages of gardeners, keepers, and stalkers and other servants but not tenant's taxes, which amounted I believe to about £90. The tenant's expenditure is not known, beyond that he employed nine ghillies at a cost of about £150 and six ponies at a cost of £80 for about three months. There would also be additional money for beaters and the like. [Mr D. Macphee.—Did you make inquiry, or is it a guess of your own?—I found out from the keepers how many ghillies were employed and I asked what wages they got, and reckoned according to the number of weeks. I have not got the particulars here, but I remember doing it very carefully to make it approximately correct.] The tenant hired all his horses and some of his carriages in the locality at a cost to him it is believed of about £250. The household expenses of a house of about forty rooms is necessarily large. All the money spent by the tenant on ponies, ghillies, hiring horses, &c. is circulated among people on the estate or in the immediate vicinity, at least that is my understanding and belief. The tenant it is understood gave away locally all rabbits not used by his household (he killed about 1000, and sold none) and all forequarters of venison, keeping the haunches himself.

49,510A. You do not in this general statement speak from a long experience?—I am able to speak from an experience of about ten years of this work. The figures given relate mainly to the year 1892, and are therefore within my own knowledge, the particulars having been obtained by me from the different people who were able to give me the information. The expenses of transit of guests, servants, and goods is circulated in the district through the medium of coaches, steamers, &c. Speaking generally, the Mansion House of Inverlochy Castle as recently enlarged must have cost about £40,000. The great value of so large a house is in connection with a sporting estate. During the autumn months a large amount of accommodation is required for the guests and their servants, and the house was built with this intent; it was built and enlarged by the late Lord Abinger with the view of its being a house on a sporting estate. Should the sporting value of the estate be impaired, the main value of the house would be destroyed. The deer forest is one of the great attractions of the letting. Grouse shooting and salmon fishing, which are both available on this estate, let better I think in combination with a deer forest. The three kinds of sport taken together, afford continuous amusement during the summer and autumn. I may say, as reference has been made to my experience during the last ten years, that a great portion of my time has been taken up in arranging for lets of sporting subjects, both fishing and deer forests, and I am constantly brought into contact with the tenants and know very well what their feelings are on the matter, not only in my capacity as factor but also personally as a friend. The rent which is derived from grouse shooting is a very important factor, and I am of opinion, under careful management, this can be made to show better results when the ground forms part of a deer forest. The absence of dogs is a great matter, as they do damage, and sheep also when gathered may cause great damage. Leaving out of the question the interest which might be expected on £40,000 expended, the house alone, if let unfurnished, would not realise enough to do much more than pay expenses. The annual value as recently adjusted for valuation purposes is £215, and this is, I think, a full value. The cost of caretakers, insurance, coal, and repairs have amounted to something like £200 and will amount to much more as repairs are requisite. It would be very hard to let the house without sporting rights attached. I may say that under instructions from Lord Abinger, I have endeavoured to let it during the months of June and July, and had not a single inquiry, though the place was advertised. I do not think that the Western Highlands, looking to climate, &c., are suitable for permanent residence of persons of the wealthy classes without the adjunct of sporting occupation. The heavy rainfall debars people from enjoying the out-door amusements so popular in the south. Owing to agricultural depression and other causes the greater number of Highland proprietors in this district are obliged to let their sporting rights, and had it not been for the revenue arising from this source, most proprietors would have had to curtail their estate expenditure to a minimum. The sporting rents are always punctually paid and almost invariably paid forehand, so that a proprietor can count with certainty on this money to enable him to carry on the estate. The expenditure on repairs and estate improvements amounted in the year to January 1894 to over £1000. Farm rents are often considerably in arrear, and crofting rents have of late years been quite uncertain, and a proprietor naturally hesitates to spend money trusting to such sources to recoup him. I look on it as certain that if the sporting rents were diminished appreciably, almost all improvements on Highland Estates would cease, and the loss to the labouring classes would be very considerable. The net assessable income from forest (£800), shooting (£400), castle and policies (£225), is £1425. This is the letting value one year with another. Almost all the arable land on the estate has been protected by a deer fence, 6 feet high, which was begun and partly erected by the late proprietor at his own immediate expense, and partly by the West Highland Railway Company, by arrangement with the late proprietor. The main portion of this fence is about 9 miles. I think there is little land in the forest suitable for crofters and, in my opinion, it is doubtful if any could find enough money to start a fresh croft. It is necessary to allow at least £150 for a house, £75 for outbuildings, and £50 for fences, drains, &c., besides what is required for purchase of stock, implements, furniture, and a horse. One or two crofters on the estate have, I believe, saved a little money from occupations outside their crofts, but I do not think that any others have the necessary capital. Even if properly stocked and equipped and moderately rented, I am doubtful if such lands could be profitably occupied by crofters. I find crofters are always complaining that even at low rents the crofts do not pay; I have often heard that said by crofters. It seems evident that the lands could not be worked to a profit while paying the rent at present obtainable for it as a forest. Nor can I suggest any more profitable way in which they could be employed. I am doubtful whether a croft of the usual size pays of itself. It is no doubt useful as affording a home to the occupant where the house presently exists, but it is very doubtful if any crofter would or could agree to pay fair interest, say 5 per cent., on a house costing £150. Where a crofter gets plenty of work he may save something by employing his spare time on his croft, to supply himself with milk and potatoes, but it is by no means certain that the labourer in regular occupation without any cow or ground is not better off. The death of a cow is an accident which is not infrequent and soon destroys the little profit obtained.

Fort-William.
Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

It is found that even when potato ground is given to labourers they are very slow to avail themselves of it. I find crofters are anxious to get their houses and land near where they can get work: that is to say they attach more importance to being in the neighbourhood of work than to the prospect of what the croft will produce.

Since the West Highland Railway has been in course of construction, labour is scarcer, though I find most of the crofters prefer estate work to railway work, and I have had more applications from crofters on the estate, for estate work, than I have been able to satisfy. I do not mean to say that they have not found other work lately, but they seek estate work in preference to working at the railway or elsewhere.

Previous to the construction of the railway there was a sufficiency of labour for the wants of the district, and I think now the railway is finished there will be no need of any additional hands. An introduction of fresh labourers would diminish the work to be apportioned over the estate. I am of opinion that there is no need of an increased number of crofters on the estate.

49,511. How many crofters have you doing estate work at present?—They are generally employed by contract.

49,512. Have you a considerable number or a small number?—I have had a considerable number; I don't know that at this present moment I could say that more than one man is actually doing estate work,—well, two men have got contracts. But during the winter there were four that I recollect at this moment who had contracts,—big contracts for which they in turn employ other crofters.*

I consider that, so far as I am able to judge, the farming by crofters has, as a rule, a deteriorating effect on the land. It is seldom that artificial manure is applied except lime, and that in very few instances, and the produce is often insufficient to enable the crofter to winter his cattle properly. I know about lime because in this district Lord Abinger has a lime kiln from which he is prepared to offer lime at a rather lower rate to crofters and people on the estate than to other people, and I do not find that I have many applications. If fodder is bought as little is got as possible. This means the manure is poor and scanty. The crofters mainly keep milk cows and their manure is of inferior quality. Manure is seldom kept under cover and loses value from exposure to the heavy rainfall. Most crofters sow about a boll (6 bushels) to the acre of oats, and get a return of about 4 bolls as an average. They sow about 6½ barrels of potatoes to the acre and get about 45 barrels. [Mr Sutherland.—What do you think they ought to get?—I don't think they would get very much more in this country; I don't think farmers are doing very much better. But there is not a great growth of potatoes here; we only grow just about enough.]

* I wish to amend this answer by stating that, since January 1893, I have given at least three contracts to crofters, varying from £28 to £44, and several others which would employ at least two men some time.

One of the difficulties militating against successful husbandry in this district is the rainfall. Fort-William lies immediately to the south-west of the estate and Luibruairidh to the south-east.

In April rain is specially required and in September fine weather. The Crofters Commission have visited the estate. The proprietor had arranged with all his tenants, except one, who applied to the Commissioners.

The fair rents fixed by the proprietor and one fixed by the Commissioners amounted to £164, 12s. for the year to Whitsunday 1893. The amount of these fair rents for the period from Whitsunday 1892 to Whitsunday 1894 is £329, 4s., and of this sum only £259, 15s. 9d. has been paid up to the latter date. The arrears of the crofters whose rents were so fixed amounted at Whitsunday 1892 to £522, 12s. 6d. Of this sum, £382, 16s. 6d. was cancelled and £139, 16s. agreed to be paid. Of the sum agreed on, £95, 11s. or about 68½ per cent. has been paid up to Whitsunday last. The rates payable by the proprietor for the estate of Inverlochy amounted in 1893–4 to £569 as proprietor, £95 as tenant, and the rates paid by larger tenants on the estate would amount to £26, 11s. 1d. These rates though paid direct by tenants, are, of course, really out of the landlord's pocket, as all farmers in reckoning their rent take into account the rates which must be paid. The crofters I do not here take into consideration, because they have their rent fixed statutorily. The smaller tenants who arranged their rents with Lord Abinger may have taken the rates into consideration, but certainly a large tenant who makes an offer for a farm considers what the rates in the locality amount to. I have been asked that myself. My point is this, that practically rates paid by tenants come out of the landlord's pocket or out of the land; if they did not have to pay so much in rates they would certainly be able to offer more rent. The poor and school rates paid by the proprietor as proprietor amounted to nearly £150, while the fair rents fixed for crofters by the proprietor including one case fixed by the Commission, amounted to £165. In the year 1893–4, the proprietor paid on the sporting rental £143 in rates. Without the rates accruing from this source the burden of taxation in the parish would be materially increased, because I question whether the land could be so profitably employed as it is. [Mr Maccallum.—But seeing it is the landlord who pays all taxes, the benefit of the low taxation must go to him, therefore the increased burden would also fall upon the landlord and not upon the ratepayers generally?—Yes, certainly. Q.—So that all the benefit of a reduced taxation goes to the landlord?—Yes.] The total valuation of the parish of Kilmonivaig is £22,500, and a penny in the £ brings in about £94.

I have hitherto been speaking of the Estates of Inverlochy but pass now to the Estate of Inverlair. The Estate of Inverlair was purchased at Whitsunday 1893 by the present Lord Abinger. It is all under sheep and cattle, there being no afforested ground at all. It extends to about 17,000 acres, of which 125 or thereby are arable or meadow. There is a considerable extent under natural growth of wood, oak, and plantations, and the remainder is hill grazings.

The farm of Inch and Loch-Treig is in the proprietor's hands; it carries a blackfaced ewe stock of about 2300 and cows and followers for shepherds and keepers and includes about 34 acres of arable land, the return in the Valuation Roll being £400 in 1893. The farm of Inverlair is also in proprietor's own hands and carries a blackfaced ewe stock of about 1800 sheep and cows and followers for shepherds and keepers. There are about 26 acres of arable ground at present in cultivation and about 26 acres more of meadow land. The Valuation Return is £270. The Mansion House of the estate is at Inverlair, and this land is very desirable if not necessary for the amenity of the house. The shooting rental of the estate is £400, which includes the house. The farm of Monessie is tenanted under lease by Miss Macdonald and Mrs Gillies, who succeeded their brother, who also succeeded the man who was spoken of as 'Donald Marsant.' It carries a sheep stock of about 800 to 1000 blackfaced ewes and 20 black cattle and includes about 40 acres of arable ground and meadow grounds. The Valuation Return is £135. This farm includes Achnacoichin, which was also referred to.

Fort-William. — Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

With the exception of a small fringe of low ground along the Spean Valley, the ground on this estate is all very high. The hills rise very abruptly from the Spean, so as to leave a small area between their base and the river. At present it is practicable to winter the ewe hoggs of the estate at home. This is a very important consideration in the farming of this estate, as the amount saved on the wintering is very considerable. For this purpose all the available low ground is essential, and any diminution of its area would most seriously prejudice the value of these farms. A good deal of the low ground both of Inverlair, Monessie, and Inch is liable to be flooded, and serious damage has been done by the River Spean in recent years. It is undesirable to crop this portion of the land, as the soil is more liable to be carried away, to say nothing of the crops themselves. This materially reduces the area capable of cultivation.

The proprietor pays in rates on this estate about £104 as proprietor, and £39 as tenant; £36 or more than the one-third is paid in respect of the sporting rental, and the shooting tenant pays besides about £22—so that the sporting rental of this estate means a contribution representing more than ½d. per £ on the rental of the parish. Putting it otherwise, if this sum were no longer available as a rateable subject, the remainder of the estate would have the whole rates increased by one-third.

In this connection I may point out that the sporting rental of Inverlochy amounts, roughly speaking, to nearly one-half of the whole rent, so that the loss of it would mean doubling the rates. [Mr Sutherland.—Why do you speak of the sporting rental as if it would disappear?—I consider that if the ground was divided up it would certainly affect the grouse shooting? Q.—Did you never see a crofter's holding with a grouse shooting on it?—I may say that I have found that a place where there are many dogs about is not very good for grouse. Q.—But you have seen that?—Yes, I have, but that is my opinion. The Chairman.—Are you not aware that some of the best shootings in Sutherland are in the district of Rogart, where there are a great many crofters?—Iam not aware of it; I have never been in Sutherland.] I was asked to give the numbers of sheep stock on some of the farms, and I tabulate the figures as follows :—

Farm.	Sheep stock.
Inverlochy and Claggan, . .	800 to 1000
Torlundy and part of Achindaul,	2000
Remainder of Achindaul & Camesky,	800 to 1000
Lianachan cleared for the forest, . . .	about 1300 to 1500
Coire-Chuinnlidh, . . .	about 6000
Inch and Loch Treig, . .	2300 to 2500
Monessie, ...	800 to 1000
Inverlair, ...	about 1800

Roughly speaking, a total of 16,000 sheep, of which 8500 are still there, so that only 7500 or so were cleared for the deer forest. I think my friend included other areas in making his estimate, but that is on what belongs to Lord Abinger. There are one or two points referred to by my friend on which I should like to say a word or two. I must say that I have not observed in my intercourse with the people any signs of the deterioration which he seemed to ascribe to contact with shooting tenants and others. I have had a good deal to do with keepers and gillies and others both in my working capacity and also as going out on the hill, and I must say that I have not noticed anything of the kind. I should rather incline to the opinion that mixing with people of the better class has an improving effect upon them: I think it increases their civility.

49,513. How many crofters are on Lord Abinger's estate?—I think there are twenty-four.

49,513A. Twenty-four separate holdings?—Twenty-four separate holdings, I believe.

49,514. And how many cottars?—I cannot say off-hand; I should prefer to make out an exact return for you: but, of course, I can give you the number to the best of my recollection. [See after question 49,825, page 1218.]

49,515. Subject to correction from a Return, what do you say?—Not counting servants or paupers I should say about six people inhabiting cottages who are not labourers on the estate. Of course, there are people occupying houses on the Home Farm who are in one way cottars, but these get regular employment in the Home Farm.

49,516. And live by the wages they make?—Yes.

49,517. Have they small patches?—They have a small patch of potatoes, which I may inform you some of them do not take the trouble to cultivate.

49,518. How many of that class are there?—I think there are four of that class; of course, I speak from recollection only.

49,519. Can you tell me what is the average size of a crofter's holding on Lord Abinger's estate?—That I should rather prefer to ascertain and give you.*

49,520. At all events, there are, you say 2900 acres of crofters' pasture and 240 acres of crofters' arable on the Inverlochy Estate, making a total of 3140 acres?—I think that is about correct.

49,521. That is the total area of the land arable and pasture held by the twenty-four crofters?—Yes; I may say that there are some people who have also rights of grazing over the crofters' pasture.

49,522. Who are they?—One or two fishermen and a gamekeeper and shepherd; also the Inspector of Poor and the hotel-keeper at Spean-Bridge.

49,523. How many shares has the hotel?—It has the right of grazing, I think, ten shares.

49,524. And the crofters have one share or two shares each, as the case may be?—Yes, some of them. Almost all of them have certainly one share and some of them more.

49,525. Of course, if a man gets two holdings consolidated into one he has two shares?—Yes.

49,526. Has anybody else the right of grazing over these 2900 acres?—Not for cows, but over part of it Lord Abinger has the right of wintering sheep.

49,527. Over the whole ground?—Not over the whole ground but over one township.

49,528. What township?—The township of Unachan.

49,529. What is the extent of his right of wintering sheep over the township of Unachan?—It was estimated at one quarter of the rent previous to the recent adjustment by Lord Abinger and the Commission.

49,530. One quarter of the rent payable by the crofters?—Yes, that is to say, supposing a crofter paid £10, the wintering right was taken off and he only pays £7, 10s. now.

49,531. That right of wintering by Lord Abinger still remains?—Still remains.

49,532. What consideration is given for rent in respect of that?—When the rents were fixed by Lord Abinger and the Commission the right was treated as belonging to Lord Abinger, and the £7, 10s. was taken as the rent to be dealt with. I may take the example of this one case that is now under appeal. The original rent, including wintering, would have been £8: now Lord Abinger made the rent £6 when he resumed the wintering; and when the Crofters Commission came to deal with the rent, they dealt with the rent as £6.

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,533. Subject to the landlord's right of wintering?—Yes. They held that the rent which they were entitled to deal with was £6, and they reduced that rent, in the case to which I refer, to £5. Now in every case Lord Abinger, in considering the matter, dealt with the rents without taking into consideration the question of wintering; he held that the wintering was his.

49,534. Then when the matter of fair rent was dealt with by the Commissioner who had it under his jurisdiction, the fair rent was fixed subject to a right of wintering by Lord Abinger over the township of Unachan?—Yes.

49,535. So that we must take it that the fixed rent is a fair rent with the right of wintering to the landlord?—Yes, that is to say, the landlord has the right of wintering: and this rent was fixed as a fair rent without reference to it.

49,536. I presume I may take it that this right of wintering to Lord Abinger existed long prior to the passing of the Act?—Yes.

49,536A. When the crofters came under the Act on 25th June, 1886, they did so with their holdings subject to this right to Lord Abinger?—That is the view that Lord Abinger submitted to the Crofters Commission and they sustained his view. I may add that the case is still under appeal.

49,537. Besides these persons,—the fishermen and gamekeeper and this right of wintering,—has any one else, other than the crofters, a right of pasturing over the 2900 acres? Has any clergyman, for instance?—No, there is nobody else, so far as I understand.

49,538. Have the cottars any rights of grazing over that ground?—No.

49,539. Do they pay rent?—Yes.

49,540. What rent do they pay?—There are four cottagers who pay I think £10 or £11.

49,541. Are they cottars?—Well, they are people who inhabit houses,—new cottages which were put up,—I don't know whether you would call them cottars.

49,542. At all events they are not crofters?—Oh no.

49,543. Have they rights of grazing over this pasture?—No. One is the Inspector of Poor, whose house is taken for the Board.

49,544. Have these cottars land?—They have a small piece of garden ground.

49,545. But nothing else?—Nothing else.

49,546. Have they not the right each to keep a cow?—No.

49,547. What is the average rent of these cottars or whatever I ought to call them?—In those four cases the average is a little over £10.

49,548. Now, suppose that after a full inquiry we came to be of opinion that these crofters had a well-founded complaint of requiring additional land arable or grazing, or arable and grazing, in your opinion is there such land within the limits of Lord Abinger's estate? Observe my question: we have no opinion at all at present, and we have a great deal to do before we get that length, but suppose we came to be of opinion, after inquiry, that these crofters had a well-founded complaint of want of land, arable and grazing, or both, do you say there is the means of satisfying the want?—There is certainly both arable land and pasture on Lord Abinger's estate which are under farm now and which could, of course, be farmed by one man as well as another.

49,549. You frankly answer the question in that way?—That is how it would appear to me.

49,550. Now in saying so, your reference is, I understand, to grazing farm land and not to forest land, or is there land in the forest?—There is grazing land in the forest, no doubt.

49,551. Is some of that grazing land in the forest

* I have calculated that the average holding of Lord Abinger's crofters is approximately 9 acres of arable and private pasture, with an allowance of nearly 2 horses and rather more than 4 cows, with their followers; otherwise stated—about 8 cows and followers, reckoning one horse as equal to two cows. The average rent is rather under £8. Over the holdings of five crofters, Lord Abinger still holds the right of wintering sheep. I find the arable land held by the fishermen, shepherd, and Inspector of Poor is included in the 240 acres of arable.

capable of cultivation?—There are very small pieces, if at all: that is my opinion. I refer to profitable cultivation.

49,552. You mentioned a number of farms at the conclusion of your statement?—Yes.

49,553. Are these all existing farms?—No. The existing farms are Inverlochy and Claggan, Torlundy and part of Achindaul, the remainder of Achindaul and Camesky, and then those on the Inverlair estate.

49,554. What about Lianachan and Coire-Chuinnlidh?—These are now forest.

49,555. What about Inch?—Inch is a sheep farm.

49,556. And Monessie?—It is a sheep farm.

49,557. And Inverlair?—It is a sheep farm.

49,558. The only farms that have been afforested apparently are Lianachan and Coire-Chuinnlidh?—Yes.

49,559. Which have been added to the forest of Inverlochy?—Not exactly added to, but made into the forest of Inverlochy.

49,560. That is the process which began in the late 60's and concluded in 1870?—Oh no, some of it was finished in 1870, but other parts not until the year 1883.

49,560A. Then the whole of that forest of Inverlochy, as it now appears to be called, was within comparatively recent years farm grazing?—Certainly.

49,561. And I suppose that a considerable portion of the lower lands of Lianachan and Coire-Chuinnlidh could be divided into smaller holdings capable of profitable cultivation in fair years?—I must say that is not my opinion.

49,562. What is your opinion?—My opinion is that they are better as they are.

49,562A. That is hardly meeting my question. You observe that this is quite a peculiar case. I don't know that we have had it quite so sharply brought out as in your statement; this is a case of land which, up to a very recent date, was not forest at all but grazing farm land?—Yes.

49,563. My question is whether that land or a considerable portion of it which was so recently grazing land might not be sub-divided into holdings capable of profitable or advantageous occupation?—Well, I can only give my opinion that I do not think so. Of course, my judgment may not be sufficient.

49,564. But I should attach much more weight to your judgment if you would tell us precisely on what grounds you base it?—These two farms extend, as I have said, to over 22,000 acres. Now only a very small portion of that, comparatively speaking, is low ground.

49,564A. Keep in view for a moment that there was a separate farm of Lianachan and a separate farm of Coire-Chuinnlidh?—Yes.

49,565. These separate farms separately worked by separate tenants were no doubt at one time carried on to a profit in the better days of sheep farming?—I should think so.

49,566. In both farms there is high ground and low ground, wintering ground and summering ground, ewe ground and wedder ground, and so on. May not we take it that some tract of the lower ground in each of these farms is now capable, if divided under proper supervision, of profitable or advantageous occupation?—I think it might perfectly well be occupied as a sheep farm.

49,567. But not otherwise?—I think not.

49,567A. Why as a large farm? Why should not Lianachan or Coire-Chuinnlidh be divided (I am speaking theoretically), say, in the latter case, into three farms with 2000 sheep each, or six farms with 1000 sheep each, or twelve farms with 500 sheep each?—I don't think they could be worked so profitably.

49,568. But are you able to assign any reason why such a holding, say with a stock of 500 sheep, should not be carried on to a profit?—Look at the contour of the ground of the whole district, and the mountains of which it forms part. I don't mean to say that part of the low ground might not possibly be taken off from the high ground; that is a different thing; but if you take the whole of it together I do not see how it could be divided up with any sort of success. That is, as far as I can judge from the appearance of the ground both low and high; and I may say that I am familiar with the ground. I have not got the precise area of what may be called low ground as compared with high ground,—it could be easily taken from the Ordnance Map, but the proportion is, in my opinion, very insufficient.

49,569. Then you think the only possible way in which these two farms could be used is either as forest, as they are now, or large farms, as they were in recent years?—I do not say the only possible way, but I think that is the only convenient way.

49,570. I was not discussing the question of convenience; I was wishing you to address your mind to the question whether these farms might not be so dealt with as to afford reasonably sized holdings capable of profitable or advantageous occupation?—I can only say that I don't think so.

49,570A. There is no other forest of which you can speak except this recently formed one of Inverlochy?—No; I have also to do with Arisaig, of course, but that is not before you at present.

49,571. What do you say about Inverlair? You say it is not afforested, but there is a sheep and cattle stock upon it, and it extends to 17,000 acres pasture and 125 acres of arable or meadow land?—That is according to my rough estimate.

49,572. Then I understand you to say that the farms of Inch and Loch-Treig are in the proprietor's hands?—Yes.

49,573. Also the farm of Monessie?—No, it is tenanted.

49,574. How long have Inch and Loch-Treig been in the proprietor's hands?—It was a former proprietor, so I am not able to say; it has only been in Lord Abinger's hands for a year.

49,575. He was the purchaser?—He was the purchaser in 1893.

49,576. And when he purchased that, he purchased it without there being a tenant on it?—Yes.

49,577. And you think it has been without a tenant for some little time?—Yes, that is my belief.

49,578. Then I think some other farms on Inverlochy are in the proprietor's hands?—Torlundy and the upper part of Achindaul.

49,579. How long has that been in the proprietor's hands?—For a good many years, some fourteen or fifteen years.

49,580. And have any of the other farms been in the proprietor's hands?—The other part of the farm of Achindaul and Camesky was in the proprietor's own hands, but was let at Martinmas last to a tenant.

49,581. Are any of the other farms that you mentioned in the proprietor's hands at present?—Killichonate is.

49,582. Any other one?—No, I think these are all.

49,583. Are the others let on leases for terms of years?—Yes, on leases for terms of years.

49,584. Now, taking those farms that have fallen into the proprietor's hands, Inch and Loch-Treig,—well, these have been only a short time in hand,—Torlundy and Achindaul, how did the latter farm come into the proprietor's hands? Was it because the landlord and tenant could not agree about the rent?—I don't think so.

49,585. Well, I want you to tell me, if you happen to know, how that farm fell back into the hands of the proprietor?—I cannot tell you for certain.

49,586. But he has had it in his hands for a good many years?—Yes, it was in the time of the late Lord Abinger. [Mr Macphee.—Might I suggest that it was to make a Home Farm?—Mr N. B. Mackenzie.—Torlundy has always been in Lord Abinger's hands ever since I had to do with the estate, now going back twenty-seven years. Achindaul and the part above the road came into his hands when the tenant left and a satisfactory tenant could not be got. That is about fourteen or fifteen years ago.]

49,587. Don't you think, Mr Smith, that where a farm falls into his lordship's hands through the inability to get a satisfactory tenant, it would be a very good thing to try the sub-division of that farm into smaller holdings, appealing to a larger number of possible tenants?—Well, I don't think the farm of Achindaul could be divided into suitable holdings or could be dealt with otherwise than as one farm. In Torlundy, of course, there are a lot of parks round the castle and some 16 acres of arable, detached; but the rest of the farm of Achindaul, which is at present in Lord Abinger's own hands, has little or no ground which is not absolutely hill ground.

49,588. I do not know about these large farms in particular, but you are no doubt aware, as a matter of history, in the formation of large farms in the Highlands, that they are made up partly of smaller farms and sometimes of crofters' holdings gradually incorporated?—Yes.

49,589. Apart from the incorporation of crofters' holdings, and taking the cases of large farms formed by the gradual absorption of smaller farms,—e.g., a farm of £300 rent made up of several farms with rents varying from £50 to £150,—don't you think these farms might quite well be re-divided, as they did exist before the formation of the large holding?—Such might, but I don't think that would apply to Achindaul.

49,590. Is it the case in any of these farms?—In none of the farms on the Inverlochy estate, so far as I am able to ascertain.

49,591. And in the case of Inverlair estate you are only a recent acquirer?—Only a recent acquirer.

49,592. Have there been any applications to Lord Abinger, apart from the Commission, by his crofter tenants for more land?—I don't think there has been any definite application, so far as I recollect. There was an application from the man we spoke of, Duncan Macdonald, who said that he would like to get a place, who asked to go over to Lianachan, but Lord Abinger said he did not like that, as it was in the middle of the forest, so he offered him another place, which he has been put into. There certainly have been no formal applications.

49,593. I am now going to put a question to you which I put already, but with a different aspect. Suppose we came to be of opinion that the crofters on the Abinger estate had grave cause of complaint for want of land, and could make out a strong case for getting more land, arable or grazing, are you of opinion that such a request ought not to be granted by sub-dividing any of the existing farms, or by excising any land from the forest: is that your opinion?—That is my opinion.

49,594. How do you propose we should deal with the complaint, assuming it to be well founded?—I don't know that I have any other mode to suggest to you.

49,595. Then you would deal with the complaint by just letting it stand over?—Yes.

49,596. You see we are put here to meet a very serious question, and exhaust as far as we can an important public inquiry?—Yes.

49,597. And we must look the question in the face, and deal with it to the best of our humble ability. If you can give us any assistance we shall be obliged. How would you propose to deal with a case of that kind? You tell us there is no land on the farms, and there is no land in the forest, and you concede, in compliance with my request, the justness of the demand. As a matter of argument you have the whole thing there; the occupation of vast tracts of land, high and low, good and bad, by a comparatively small number of people?—Yes.

49,598. You have the occupation of a small area of land by a comparatively large number of people; and the large number of people complain that they are very much in need of land. If, after inquiry, we come to the conclusion that that is a well-founded complaint, how is it to be dealt with?—Of course, if you have to obtain land for the people it must come from somewhere.

49,599. Must it not most naturally come from the estate where there is land?—There is no doubt that, if you must have land, and you must take it from the same estate, you must take it from the estate where they are on: but it does not follow that the landlord would not be a sufferer from that, or that the thing would be advisable either from the landlord's point of view or the public point of view.

49,600. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—What do you get for the forest a year: £2925 is it not?—That is what we got in 1892.

49,601. And the castle is included in that?—It is.

49,602. The castle cost £40,000 you said?—That is as near as I can estimate it. I know that the half of it cost about £20,000.

49,603. Then I suppose there was other expenditure besides that?—There is, of course, this 9 miles of fencing.

49,604. What outlay would the proprietor have on the forest altogether?—I think I could hardly speak to that.

49,605. I would like to get it in round numbers?—It would not be easy to tell from the mode in which the late Lord Abinger's accounts were kept: he used to sign most of his cheques himself, and his estate books were not branched particularly under different headings, so that it would be very difficult for me to pick out the individual items you wish.

49,606. But may we take it that he spent many thousands of pounds on fencing, &c.?—I do not like to suggest an opinion when really I am unable to base it on anything definite. You ask what sort of sum the late Lord Abinger would have expended on the forest itself?

49,607. For which he is getting this income of £2925?—Of course, you will understand that a good deal of that is reckoned as outlay for up-keep of gardens, and so forth, and for wages: these are deductions from that sum, so that the nett sum, which I think we would be safe to deal in as the free return, is about £1400. The nett sum entered in the Valuation Roll which the thing is worth year by year is £1425.

49,608. Is that all the return he gets for an outlay in the first instance of £40,000 and of another indefinite sum of large amount?—That is all he gets as a return; there is no doubt of that.

49,609. What do you think would be a fair return,—first of all on £40,000?—Take it at 5 per cent. if you like.

49,610. That comes to £2000 a year?—Yes.

49,611. That is to say he does not get an adequate return for even the outlay on the house alone?—No.

49,612. How do you make out that deer foresting pays, seeing that after adding to it this valuable adjunct, it only brings in £1400 odds? How, in the light of that, do you bring out that deer foresting is a profitable thing to the proprietor?—The house by itself involved an enormous outlay; but as regards the land, I think more is got out of it as a deer forest than in any other way.

49,613. But we put these two things together; the house goes with the forest?—Yes.

49,614. In that way they are one subject, and the conclusion surely that you must come to is that the thing does not pay, and that he has expended on that deer forest far more than he gets any adequate return for?—I certainly admit that he does not get out of the deer forest a return for the house.

49,615. We are comparing what the proprietor gets from crofters and what he gets from sporting tenants. Don't you see that, instead of getting a greater return from the sporting tenants, he gets a much greater return from the crofter?—I should not put it in the way that you do in looking at the matter, because the rent of the forest must be looked upon separately from the house.

49,616. But was it let separately from the house?—No.

49,617. And the deer forest and house belonging to it have been put up at a great loss to the proprietor?—The house may have been put up at a great loss to the proprietor, but not the deer forest, I think.

49,618. Well, but when you put it along with the house you find that it does not get one half per cent. This house you say is returned in the Valuation Roll for how much?—£215.

49,619. Now, do you think there is any house in Fort-William, or any feuars' house at all, that is valued at so low a rate as that, when you compare the cost?—I think not: but what is stated in the Valuation Roll is the rent which it would fetch one year with another if let unfurnished.

49,620. I know that is the system and the law; I do not doubt that at all; but you admit that that house has cost a very large sum, and yet on account of the state of the law at present it is put down in the Valuation Roll at a very small sum?—It is put down at the full amount it would fetch in the market.

49,621. How do you know what it would fetch in the market?—Because if more could be got for it, more would be.

49,622. But it was never for sale?—For letting. It has been tried to be let separately, and it has not been able to be let separately.

49,623. If this house were rated at some reasonable calculation on the expenditure it would be a great relief to taxation, would it not? If we got the benefit of this £40,000, at some reasonable rate, that would relieve the taxation very much, would it not?—Of course, the more you increase the valuation of the country you relieve the taxes.

49,624. Do you know what was got for the land before it was afforested?—Yes, I think it was £1045 that was got for these two farms together.

49,625. Is that the pastoral rent?—The pastoral rent.

49,626. And yet with this big house it only fetches £1425?—But other things were included in the £1045, e.g., other houses which are entered separately in the Valuation Roll.

49,627. What is the valuation of these?—£140, or so. Practically there is not a very great difference. I have looked into the matter carefully, and certainly, looking at the reduction of rents which has come through the country the rent has been maintained.

49,628. You got £1045 first, but you say that there were some houses included there that are not included in the forest?—They are a part of the forest; stalker's houses, &c. which are either part of the forest or entered otherwise in the Valuation Roll: so that you may take the rent prior to afforestment as £900 for purposes of comparison.

49,629. What was the shooting rental at that time?—That I cannot say without looking up; but the shooting goes on just the same now.

49,630. It is included in the £1425?—Yes.

49,631. We add £400 to the £900, which would make £1300 that was got for the land without a house at all,—without the £40,000 house; and without all the other outlays that have been made to improve this forest?—I do not think that the £400 would have been got without a house: that was a shooting rent.

49,632. You have it down here separately as £400; was there a house with it?—The castle is what was let, if it was let with the grouse shooting.

49,633. But I want to find out what you consider the sporting value of it was then over and above the grazing?—I cannot divide up the sporting value.

49,634. We will take it at something like £300; that would make £1200 as compared with your present rent of £1425, which leaves £225 for the castle; so that it cannot possibly be that deer foresting has been profitable to the landlords. Then, I have been very much struck with your theory of taxation. You say, speaking of rates paid by tenants, that 'these rates, 'though paid direct by the tenants, are, of course, really 'out of the landlord's pocket'?—Yes.

49,635. Very well. Several things must follow from that, as, for instance, that all grants-in-aid of local taxation must go to the landlord's pocket too?—Well, yes.

49,636. Then, all the assistance that has been given in that way to the Highlands in aid of taxation has gone to the landlords' pockets?—Yes, I suppose it has 49,637. People were under the impression that it was to relieve the crofter population and to help them?—Remember I do not take into consideration the crofter population at all.

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,638. No, but the Government were supposed to have that in consideration in giving these Grants-in-aid?—There is no doubt they did have the effect of lightening the crofters' burdens.

49,639. What help were these grants to the crofters if they went to the landlords' pockets?—But I did not take into consideration the crofters, because they are a different class of people altogether. Their rents are fixed by the Government, not by the landlord,—there is no adjustment between crofter and landlord.

49,640. You make out that the crofter has to pay a little, but all other tenants pay nothing?—I say that when a man makes his offer for a farm, if he offers £100 for a farm he would have offered a little more, if he had not to pay rates in addition to the £100. Hence the rates in his case really come from the landlord.

49,641. And it follows therefore that all Grants-in-aid of rates go into the pocket of the proprietor; and very large grants have been made under the impression that they benefitted the tenants, but you make out that they benefit not the tenants but the proprietor?—There is an exception of course in cases where previous leases exist, and there is an increase of taxation during the currency of the lease.

49,642. But you do not make even that exception in your paper?—Well, I was not pressed in the matter, but I should like to make that statement, that if during existing leases the amount of taxation is increased—and there, no doubt, have been lately increases of taxation on account of County Council and so forth—there is no doubt this increase comes out of the tenant's pocket, because he did not contemplate that when he made his bargain.

49,643. But that applies only to the end of the lease?—Yes.

49,644. And the ultimate benefit is to the benefit of the proprietor? The grant-in-aid of police-rates and everything else go to the pocket of the proprietor?—Yes: I look on it that everything goes out of the pocket of the proprietor, so the other must follow.

49,645. Then, there is another thing that must be inferred from this. You were saying that if you diminish the assessable rent, the rates would have to be increased, and that the burden of taxation in the parish would be materially increased?—Yes.

49,646. Now, do you think you are quite logical there?—I do not at this moment see wherein I am wrong.

49,647. You say that the taxation falls altogether on the proprietor. Then whether you increase or decrease the amount on which you levy rates, surely the burden cannot be altered. What does it matter what sum you put against his name, if he pays the whole?—I am not quite sure that I follow you.

49,648. You say the burden of taxation in the parish will be materially increased. I fail to see how, if it is the proprietor that has to pay the whole, his burden can be increased whatever you put in the Valuation Roll,—the sum to be raised does not vary, though the valuation might?—Of course, a good deal of difference would be made supposing rents are fixed without reference to the proprietor, if these new holdings be created.

49,649. You did not fully consider this matter, or else you could not have made this statement, on which so much of your argument is based. Then you told us about the extent of land held by crofters; it seems very small as compared with the extent in the deer forest?—Yes.

49,650. A very small proportion of the whole estate of Inverlochy is held by the great mass of the population,—one deer forest includes more than half the area—and you still think that that is the most satisfactory distribution of the land?—I think it works best.

49,651. Then even the 3140 acres they do have is held partly under a claim of grazing by the proprietor?—Partly

Fort-William. — Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,652. And, I suppose, you know there is a great desire on the part of the people to extend their holdings?—I don't know that there is that great desire.

49,653. You differ, I suppose, from the witnesses that were here to-day?—Yes. I don't mean to say that people have never said anything in a general way; but there has been no formal application that I have been aware of to Lord Abinger for extension of holdings. There certainly was none to the Crofters Commission.*

49,654. Did they wish to get this right of grazing that is now in the hands of Lord Abinger?—Some of them may; this particular man of whom we are speaking wished to get it, but the others arranged with Lord Abinger, and I don't think they are dissatisfied.

49,655. You don't think they want that privilege?—I think they would be perfectly satisfied to leave things as they are.

49,656. Have you reason to think that they do not want the right of grazing the whole of that property?—Yes, that is my understanding; I don't think they want it.

49,657. Is there any limit to the number of sheep the proprietor may put on this grazing?—I don't think there is any specific limit, but there has never been any complaint.

49,658. And still the Crofters Commission have fixed the fair rent, and you say that the landlord has the right of putting an unlimited number of stock upon it?—No, I don't say that; there has not been a precise limit, but there has always been an understood limit.

49,659. But understood things are never satisfying?—Well, there has never been any complaint so far as I know of the number of sheep put upon it.

49,660. Is there any limit as to the time when they must be removed?—Yes.

49,661. And when they may be put on?—Yes.

49,662. You spoke of Lord Abinger's resuming the wintering. Why did he resume?—He wanted it for wintering in connection with his hill farms.

49,663. It was not for their benefit that he resumed?—No, I should think probably not; at least I don't know that it was so.

49,664. Is it not rather an unsatisfactory thing to find the proprietor, after having so much in his own hands, making an incursion upon the small extent held by the crofters?—I think you would not consider it so unsatisfactory if you were to understand that in this country the very large amount of hill ground necessitates low ground, and that it is impossible to winter the young sheep on the high ground, and that the low ground is absolutely necessary in connection with it, and that if those sheep could not be wintered on the estate they would have to be sent away to a considerable distance.

49,665. But, why would he not deal with these crofters freely, without coming and saying I will take this and I will put on what I think right: would it not have been a much more satisfactory thing for them to have full control of their own holdings?—Well, the arrangement was made at the time; the bargain was that a certain deduction should be made from their rent, and they were satisfied with that.

49,666. They had to be satisfied with it, I suppose; they did not wish to make the arrangements, I presume?—Well, I was not here at the time when the resumption was made.

49,667. But can you conceive of a more unsatisfactory arrangement than that?—I thought it was a very satisfactory arrangement.

49,668. Mr Sutherland.—Did it never occur to the proprietor that the crofters might require that land for wintering their sheep?—The crofters had no sheep.

Fort-William. — Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,669. That is a new element. Now, the distribution of people on the estate is that there are twenty to thirty families with 100 acres each; and how many occupy the 22,000 acres in deer forest?—There is only one tenant in the deer forest.

49,670. And in the other case there are upwards of twenty with 3140 acres between them?—Yes.

49,671. Is that a state of distribution of the population on the land that you now justify?—I confess that I have always looked upon the land as belonging to the person who purchased it, and that he was justified in making that distribution.

49,672. Are you prepared to push that to its logical conclusion? Have you Lord Abinger's authority for making that statement?—No.

49,673. I am glad to hear it.—I am only giving my personal opinion; I do not say what Lord Abinger would do or would not do if he were applied to. You understand that the present Lord Abinger is a young man who has only recently succeeded to the estate.

49,674. What is his age?—He is twenty-three years of age, and anything that ought to be submitted to him I submit to him and take his instructions upon.

49,675. Do you see any objection to the district of Lochaber being cleared altogether of people?—Certainly I do not wish to see the district of Lochaber cleared of people.

49,676. I do not wish to press the point, but it arose as a logical sequence to the opinion you expressed. Then you said you have no experience as a farmer?—I have experience.

49,677. Have you ever been a farmer?—I have had the management of farms.

49,678. But you have never farmed?—I have never farmed for my own benefit.

49,679. Have you ever been tenant of a farm?—Not where I have gained any benefit. [The Chairman.—Have you farmed land to your own loss?—No, I have not conducted a farm.]

49,680. Have you ever been a crofter?—No.

49,681. Have you ever been a sporting tenant?—No.

49,682. I take your statement to be an attempted justification of the existence of deer forests, and you attempted to show that they were beneficial to the individual and beneficial to the community?—I think that is what I meant.

49,683. And with regard to our inquiry, you thought in the first place that we could not get any land such as we were asked to look for in the deer forest, because it would diminish the letting value of the remainder?—That is rather the line I took.

49,684. You seemed to contend in the case of sheep farms that no part of it could be taken away without being prejudicial to the sheep farm?—I certainly think not.

49,685. That is a truism, I presume; you cannot take away any land from any man without doing him a loss, if more land is better than less land?—Yes.

49,686. As to your statement about rates, I need not ask many questions after the answers you have given to Mr Maccallum. Does Lord Abinger or any other proprietor pay any rate that he is not compelled by Statute to pay?—He pays rates for his servants,—I don't think he is compelled by Statute to pay these.

49,687. But I wish to know if these landlords who take credit for paying so much in the shape of rates pay more than the tenant pro rata?—I am afraid I do not quite follow you.

49,688. I will try to make it plain. By the law of Scotland a proprietor is compelled to pay half the rate and the tenant is compelled to pay the other half: it matters not how much land he holds?—But there are other burdens of course falling on the proprietor.

49,689. If a crofter has a holding, be it only £2 of rent, he pays rates upon £2, does he not?—Certainly he does.

49,690. If the crofter paid £100 of rent instead of £2, he would pay rates on the £100?—He would

* I could not recollect any applications when under examination, and there have been, as I stated, no 'formal applications' (i.e., to Crofters Commissioners or County Council), except Duncan Macdonald; but I have since recollected two cases, in one of which additional grazing was given by the proprietor, and another where the subject was mooted but left over for consideration. Nor did I advert to several cases where crofters have asked to be moved from one holding to another,—not to get larger holdings, but almost invariably to be nearer where they were getting work,—nor to several cases where crofts have fallen vacant and been offered to or applied for by neighbours.

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,691. Any comparison then between the rates paid by the landlord and those paid by the tenant is simply a measure of the land the one has and the other has not?—There are several public burdens payable by proprietors which are not payable by the tenant. There is the county rate, minister's stipend, heritor's assessment, land tax, &c.

49,692. But you will admit, I am sure, that the comparison of the rates paid by the landlord with those paid by the tenant—the large holder and the small holder—is merely another way of showing the unequal distribution of the land; is not that so?—I am afraid I am not quite understanding the drift of your question.

49,693. You pointed out that the shooting tenant pays a large proportion of the rates. But he simply does so because he holds a large proportion of the land; is not that so?—Of course, it is in proportion to what he holds.

49,694. So that the comparison of the rates paid by one who pays only a small sum with the rates paid by one who pays a large sum is simply another way of showing the gross inequality of the distribution of the land?—There is no doubt that the people who have larger holdings, whatever they may be, pay larger rates.

49,695. And I think it is the most graphic way in which the inequality of the distribution of the land may be shown. You do not claim that any of these people pay rates that would not be paid by other people if they had land?—I do not think there would be so much.

49,696. Well, suppose a town like Fort-William were to be built on Inverlochy Forest, and compare the area of Fort-William with the area of Inverlochy Forest and see which pays the larger sum per acre: you see how striking the comparison would become?—Quite so.

49,697. I am obliged to you for bringing that before us. Then you stated in answer, I think, to a question by Mr Macphee, that you saw no deterioration in the people who act as gillies from their intercourse with sportsmen and others,—I rather think you said it was just the opposite?—That is my experience.

49,698. Now, I am going to read a short extract to you on this point from the Report of the Royal Commission of 1883; I do not say that I am adopting it, but the authority is the parish minister of Kintail in Ross-shire, not very far from here. The Rev. Roderick Morrison, minister of the Established Church there, says:—'Now, this land that is let in deer forest is wholly 'withdrawn from contributing to the supply of any of 'the needs of the human race except the need of High-'land lairds for cash. The venison produced is not worth 'speaking of, and though no doubt wages are paid to 'keepers, gillies, watchers, &c., none of these men are 'productive labourers, and they are as completely with-'drawn from the industrial population as the land on 'which they live from the food-producing resources of 'the country. Further, it is well-known that the life 'these men lead is demoralising in the extreme, and 'soon renders the majority of them useless for any pur-'pose except that for which they are trained, so that 'when thrown out of employment they become an 'incubus on society.' I do not ask you to agree with that opinion?—I do not agree with it.

49,699. But as you see it is the expression of opinion of a man who was in a very responsible position, a man who was a Highlander, and whose father and grandfather, I understand, were ministers of Kintail before him. I have no personal knowledge of my own to back it up, but I take Mr Morrison's statement with regard to it. Now, would you kindly tell me what is the lowest altitude that is embraced in the forest of Inverlochy?—350 feet, I think.

49,700. Are you aware of the recommendations made by the Royal Commission of 1883 with regard to deer forests?—I think I may have read them, but I am not familiar with them.

49,701. Are you aware that the Commissioners recommended that no land under the altitude of 1000 feet should be made into deer forest?—I do not remember their saying so.

49,702. You had not that in your mind?—No.

49,703. I may read a sentence or two on the subject from the Report. 'The appropriation of lands to the 'purposes of deer forest might be prohibited below a pre-'scribed contour line of elevation, so drawn as to mark 'in a general but effective way the limit of profitable root 'and cereal cultivation, of artificial pasture, and of 'pasture adapted for wintering live-stock, a line which 'on the east side of Scotland, in a high latitude, might 'be approximately fixed at an altitude of 1000 feet above 'the sea-level, and on the western sea-board at a lower 'level than 1000 feet, making allowance locally for the 'convenience of the march' (p. 94). That Report, as I have said already to-day, is signed by gentlemen concerning whom it cannot be said that they had no practical knowledge of deer forests?—What I have said is that there was very little of this forest which was below 800 feet: indeed, I might say there is really very little below 1000 feet, as far as my recollection goes. (Shown portion coloured green on map.)

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,704. What proportion of that is green?—It is rather hard to say, but I should think only a very small proportion, perhaps a tenth.

49,705. I am glad you say a tenth, because ten to one is supposed by experts to be the proper proportion between high land and low land on a grazing farm. Do you dispute the statement that was made by a witness to-day, that deer cannot survive a storm that sheep can survive?—I should not like to say as a general fact that a deer would always survive or a sheep would always survive: I look upon it that they both need low ground. Possibly in winters that had continuous wet weather the deer might suffer more; in exceptional winters.

49,706. But it is a question, as I understand, of which would longer survive without food?—I should not like to say that I have formed a special opinion as to which would survive the longer.

49,707. Taking it for granted that they are somewhat alike, is it not the natural conclusion that the best way is to allow them to graze together?—I hardly think it would be possible to work a deer forest and sheep grazing together.

49,708. The deer forest is not a necessity of society or of existence. However, would there not be as good sport to be got on a sheep farm as on a deer forest?—I don't think there would be; it could not keep the same stock.

49,709. Did you never see deer shooting on a sheep run?—Certainly, deer are shot on sheep runs, but they are very seldom got on sheep runs till quite the end of the season, when they are not in a condition to be shot.

49,710. Why?—Because they are not good for food. They come down to the sheep runs when they want to be among the hinds. In the grounds that I am acquainted with, where there are deer and sheep together, the deer do not come to the sheep ground until they are obliged in the course of nature to do so,—their wish to go to the hinds is stronger than their fear of man.

49,711. You stated just now that deer are not got upon sheep runs. Where were the deer got when there was no deer forest?—I did not say that they are not got upon sheep runs.

49,712. But they are not got so plentifully as they used to be; do you know why?—I don't know that they are not so plentiful upon sheep runs.

49,713. But it is your own statement?—As they were formerly, you asked me a question why deer are not got upon sheep runs now as plentifully as formerly.

49,714. The Chairman.—Are you not aware that before the days of conducting deer stalking in the drawing-room style, deer were killed when found among sheep?—I have no doubt they were.

49,715. That the deer and the sheep herded together?—I can quite understand that the deer and the sheep might be together.

49,716. And the old sportsman in former days was content with a few stags, whereas now a man is not satisfied unless he has twenty or thirty or forty in the course of the season; and one sportsman, I think last year, shot as many as 110?—I think it is possible.

49,717. Mr Sutherland.—But do you know why they are not found in sheep runs to such an extent? Is it not because they run to the deer forests?—My opinion is that very likely the same number of deer are on sheep runs that used to be.

49,718. Plus the number now in the deer forests?—I have no doubt there is a great increase of deer in the deer forests.

49,719. But have you any personal experience of deer being upon sheep runs?—I know cases where deer are upon sheep runs.

49,720. Do you know a place now, a deer forest that was a sheep run within your memory?—No.

49,721. Do you know the principle upon which deer forests are generally made?—The principle?

49,722. Have you never heard of the process of tapping a deer forest?—I do not know: I may have heard of what you mean, but I do not understand it yet.

49,723. Suppose there is a sheep run low down and a deer forest high up, and by forming the low-lying grazing into a deer forest the top is tapped and the man below gets the deer before the man up above; have you never heard of that?—No, I never heard of it.

49,724. Have you noticed how all the deer forests in Scotland are in a continuous run?—I do not know that they are in a continuous run. (Shown map appended to Lord Napier's Report.) If that is a correct representation, that would seem to be the case.

49,725. Do you know that all these gaps are now filled up?—I will take it from you if you say so.

49,726. You have not noticed the growth and development of deer forests recently; evidently you have not been paying attention to it. Then, you stated several other things against the country you live in; you said it had a rainfall?—It has a rainfall.

49,727. Is it an excessive rainfall?—It depends upon what you compare it with; it seems to me to be excessive.

49,728. I am comparing it with all Scotland?—I should consider that about 80 inches is a pretty heavy rainfall.

49,729. What is the average for Scotland?—I should not like to say off-hand.

49,730. You do not say anything about frost; have you nothing to say about it?—A propos of what?

49,731. In the same connection, we have heard a great deal about King Frost you know, and his effect upon new holdings?—I had nothing special to say about frost; there is no doubt it is very severe here, especially on the high ground.

49,732. You also stated that farming by crofters does not improve the land?—I do not think it does, so far as I can see.

49,733. Does deer foresting improve the land; you do not maintain that, do you?—Well, I have not noticed in my experience a deterioration of the grazing grounds.

49,734. You said his manure was poor and scanty?—So far as he keeps only milk cows, it is poorer than yeld cattle.

49,735. I thought you also stated as a general objection that his processes of agriculture were not scientific,—it amounted to that, did it not?—I did not say that, but there is no doubt that is the case.

49,736. That is not an unfair way of putting it, is it? If it is, I won't insist on it?—I certainly do not know that his processes are scientific; I should be inclined to say that a crofter is not scientific, but he may be for all that.

49,737. Scientific occupation of the land, is, I suppose, redeeming it from a state of nature and improving it, is it not?—Well, I consider that in so far as an attempt has been made, I have not seen it very successful,—I don't think it can be done to pay.

49,738. But don't you think it is a little ungenerous, to say the least of it, that after putting a man in a place where he could not improve his position, you turn round and say he is not scientific? Have you ever tried scientific farming upon 2 acres of land, and making your living off it at the same time?—No, but I did not say it was any grievance against him that he was not scientific.

49,739. Why did you think it proper to mention it?—I stated it simply as a fact.

49,740. Is crofting less scientific then than allowing land to run to waste as in a deer forest? Is there much science required for that?—It is used as grazing land; the deer forests are grazings.

49,741. You call the deer forest a grazing?—It is grazed.

49,742. Then, how do you say that the rich could not live in the West Highlands without deer forests?—Without sport, I say.

49,743. Yes, sport?—That is my experience of this country; I do not think people would come to reside here permanently, making a home here except for the sake of the sport.

49,744. May I put it without offence, are you a sportsman yourself?—Yes.

49,745. Do you come here as a sportsman?—No, I am here as a working man.

49,746. Useful to the community? Could not other people do what you do?—Oh, certainly, they might do what I do, but they would not find much to amuse them.

49,747. Could they not cultivate a croft?—Oh, but I have no croft.

49,748. They might?—Then they would not be doing what I do.

49,749. I am not referring to you at all.—I thought you asked me if other people could not do as I do.

49,750. Why should not people come here without sport? How many people come by the new railway,—how many citizens of Glasgow have come here already,—do they find it necessary to have sport?—These are not people who reside here permanently.

49,751. But they do come here, and it is my belief that they circulate more money than a sportsman. [Mr Maccallum.—Would you say that the sportsman is a permanent resident,—how long does he stay?—About three or four months.]

49,752. His lordship already put the question to you whether you could assist us beyond the statement you have made, and you have stated already that you cannot. Then it is your opinion that there is no land within the area for which you are responsible which could be more profitably used in any other way than the present?—That is what I consider.

49,753. The Chairman.—At what date did Lord Abinger acquire this estate?—The date of entry was at Martinmas 1840.

49,754. That was in the time of the great Lord Abinger?—The great Lord Abinger bought it for his son, I think. The first Lord Abinger was once here.

49,755. Was the property formerly in the hands of the Dukes of Gordon?—Originally.

49,756. After Lord Abinger got this estate in 1840, were there any clearances made?—Not so far as I am aware. I think I may say with certainty that there has been no wholesale sweeping away of crofters.

49,757. Can you tell me whether there is any, and if so what difference between the number of crofters on the estate in 1840 and the number in 1894?—I cannot tell you that without looking up, but I can tell you that the number of crofts is certainly much greater than the number of crofters,—that is to say there has been a very considerable consolidation of crofts.

49,758. By clearances, I suppose?—So far as my recollection goes, I don't think any crofter in Lord Abinger's time has ever been forced out, except, I believe, one man who would not pay his rent.

49,759. At any rate, from whatever process,—I am not suggesting a process of forcible removal, but from whatever process, has there been a considerable reduction in the number of separate holdings, and a consolidation of these either with large farms or with other holdings?—Yes, there has.

49,760. Can you tell me to what extent since 1840?—

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

I could very easily find out and tell you, and I should be very glad to do so. [See after question 49,825, page 1218.]

49,761. I should be very much obliged if you would send in a note to the Secretary stating that?—I should be very pleased to do so.

49,762. We heard a great deal before in the earlier part of your examination about Unachan, and the right of wintering possessed there by the landlord. He has a number of other townships on his estate?—Yes.

49,763. Are any of these subject to a similar right on the part of the landlord?—Not now.

49,764. When did these rights, whatever they were, cease?—In the cases of Brackletter and Kilmonivaig it ceased within the last year, we may say.

49,765. What were these rights in the cases of Brackletter and Kilmonivaig?—There were the same rights of wintering.

49,766. What were the circumstances under which these two townships got the wintering?—They wanted to get the wintering, and by arrangement it was given to them. [Mr Macphee, Agent for crofters.—They were interdicted,—there was an action in the Court of Session: they would not allow his lordship's sheep to graze there.]

49,767. Was there an action in the Court of Session about that right of wintering?—Yes, there was.

49,768. To what townships did that action relate?—To the townships of Kilmonivaig and Brackletter.

49,769. At whose instance was the action raised?—The action was at the instance of Lord Abinger and a Colonel Willson.

49,770. A tenant?—A tenant.

49,771. To interdict the crofters from what?—From preventing the sheep going on to the hills.

49,772. Was that action litigated by the crofters?—It was.

49,773. And what was the result of it?—The result was a settlement by which Lord Abinger gave them the wintering for a sum of money to be paid.

49,774. He renounced his right of wintering over the holdings for a sum to be paid by them?—Yes.

49,775. What was that sum?—They paid £1 a croft.

49,776. And are they doing that still?—The arrangement is depending; they have not yet made the first payment.

49,777. When was the action raised?—It is about a year ago, or rather more; it was settled last summer, I think.

49,778. Are there any other townships on the estate subject to such a right?—No.

49,779. Were they under such a right at any previous date?—Not so far as my knowledge goes.

49,780. Is not this the way of it, that at one time Lord Abinger exercised a right of wintering over the whole of the townships?—I don't think he did over the other townships; I never heard of it.

49,781. How does it happen then that when these townships of Kilmonivaig and Brackletter got quit of this right of wintering in terms of the arrangement you mention, Unachan was not included in it?—Those people wanted it: an arrangement was made with the Unachan people fixing the rents, with the exception of this man Macgillevantick, and these people were satisfied.

49,782. You mean under the Crofters Commission?—No, between Lord Abinger and them, and no question was raised about the wintering.

49,783. Now, the present rental of the estate you say is £2925 for the year 1892?—That was the sporting rent, the let of the forest and other subjects mentioned in my statement.

49,784. What was the let of the same land when it was exclusively grazing farm?—The land that is now under forest, when it was exclusively a grazing farm, I think I already said brought £1045.

49,785. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—As there was a resumption of the right of grazing by Lord Abinger, there must, of course, have been an abandonment of the right before then. Now, can you tell us why Lord Abinger at one time gave up his right to the grazing?—The circumstances existed of the crofters having the wintering, and then Lord Abinger took them into his own hands, but what happened prior to that I cannot say; I think, in point of fact, it is only in comparatively recent times that wintering has been of importance.

Fort-William. Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,786. He resumed a right that he must have had and given up before. Can you tell me why at one time he gave up that right to them?—No, I cannot tell you.

49,787. When he gave them that right were the rents raised?—That I cannot tell you; it is not within my knowledge. I know that when he resumed the rights the rents were reduced.

49,788. Had he hoggs to winter when he gave up the right?—So far as my knowledge goes he never gave it up.

49,789. How could he resume a thing he never gave up?—I suppose he was letting it to them before he resumed it; and if I, as a proprietor, have a thing and let it to a tenant, and afterwards I take it away from him again I may be said to resume it, that is to say, I no longer let it to him.

49,790. But when he gave the right of wintering to them, had he any sheep of his own to winter?—No.

49,791. Are you quite sure of that?—Perfectly certain. It was when he had to take these big farms into his own hands that he wanted this wintering.

49,792. You are quite sure that when he gave them this right of wintering, he had no hoggs to winter?—He had no hoggs that he required to winter.

49,793. You are quite sure that his hoggs were not wintered after all at Unachan?—That is my information.

49,794. But after he gave them that right of wintering, did he not take that wintering from them, send his hoggs and agree with them as to the price which they were to pay,—is that not the case?—I am afraid I am not following you.

49,795. He gave them the right of wintering, to do what they liked with it. Did he not then come and ask them to winter his at a certain price?—He agreed with them that he should take back the wintering right,—that is to say, he should no longer let them have it, and that their rents should be reduced by one quarter. That is my explanation of it; of course, I was not here at the time.

49,796. So you think that he resumed the wintering because he had sheep to winter, and gave them the wintering when he had no sheep to winter?—Yes, that is my understanding.

49,797. Mr Donald Macphee, Agent for crofters.—Is not wintering a device resorted to for enabling a farm to carry a larger stock than it would otherwise do?—I should not say that, as far as my knowledge goes.

49,798. Would you accept the authority of so eminent a man as Mr George Malcolm, Invergarry, on the subject?—If Mr Malcolm says so.

49,799. I am unable to quote the exact words; but I ask you simply if it is not a means resorted to for increasing the carrying capacity of a farm?—I should not have put it in that way at all.

49,800. I put it in that way, and you will be good enough to answer it?—I will answer it to the best of my ability. I should rather call wintering a device for preventing or limiting the death-rate upon a farm.

49,801. Now, about this wintering upon Unachan and Brackletter and Kilmonivaig, is it not a fact, though I daresay it occurred before your time, that some years Lord Abinger for electioneering purposes put in the old rent, the full rent, including the wintering?—There may have been times when he gave them other rights.

49,802. Are you aware that they were first induced to part with their wintering on the plea that they might save taxes seeing that as he was tenant no money passed between them, and that instead of entering the crofts at the full rent they should enter them at the nett rent, minus the wintering?—That is not within my knowledge.

49,803. But it is within your knowledge that he raised the rent again for electioneering purposes to the old level?—I don't know exactly for what purpose,—there may have been a change in the rentals.

Fort-William. — Harold Yorke Lidderdale Smith.

49,804. But they were increased to a sum sufficient to confer the franchise?—There may have been changes in the rental.

49,805. His lordship asked you about the rental of the sporting deer forest being £2900, and I think you stated that of that only £1400 was entered in the Valuation Roll. Will you kindly explain why you should enter so little seeing you receive so much?—There were certain deductions allowed for purposes of assessment. I have confined myself as far as I could in this inquiry to the sporting rental of land, as distinct from fishings, and I said in my statement that that £2900 included certain fishings.

49,806. Is the £2900 entered in the Valuation Roll?—Not in so many words, but what I have stated as regards the sporting does.

49,807. I understood you to say the forest rent is £2900?—No, I said the castle, forest, shootings, and certain fishings.

49,808. Will you distinguish between the amounts derived from the castle and forest, and shooting rent, and the amount derived from fishing rent?—There was £250 derived from fishing, and there was a deduction of £400 made in respect of keepers; also for gardeners, £400.

49,809. You have not gardeners who take away £400 worth of the rental?—There were four gardeners, and then there was the upkeep of gardens; manuring, glasshouse, and expenses of various kinds.

49,810. But do you really mean to say that the gardens attached to a deer forest cost as much as the wages of keepers? I could understand they would amount to a considerable sum, but do you say that gardeners cost £400?—Not gardeners, but gardens, including upkeep. The calculation was very carefully made at the time.

49,811. You said that the landlord paid £569 of taxes?—Yes.

49,812. Was he entered in the Valuation Roll as tenant of the shootings as well as the fishings at the time the Roll was made up, as he had not then let it?—Yes.

49,813. And in fixing your rent, I suppose you took into account that the tenant should bear his proper share of the burdens; or did you lose sight of that?—The tenant did pay his share that year, certainly.

49,814. Then it is not correct to say that the landlord paid all the taxes?—You are going beyond my depth. The rental was fixed before the assessment was made up.

49,815. You say that the landlord paid £569 as against £95 paid by some other person?—That was paid by the tenant.

49,816. Now, you said that the £569 represented the landlord's share of taxes as tenant of the shootings and the fishings as well as proprietor of these?—No, I don't think I did; at least I do not wish to be understood as saying so.

49,817. Well, it seems an extraordinary amount of taxes, £569 of taxes on £1400 of rent?—It is not that at all; it is on the estate.

49,818. I ask whether you mean us to understand that this £569 was paid by the landlord in connection with the deer forest or the shooting?—No, nothing to do with it; that was the taxation on the estate.

49,819. The Chairman.—The house and land is entered in the Valuation Roll at £176?—That is the Home Farm, I think.

49,820. No; the household farm and woodlands are entered at £225?—Yes.

49,821. That includes Inverlochy Castle, offices, gardens, and policies, 15 acres: the deer forest is entered at £800, the shootings at £400, and some parks at Dalnabea are entered at £31?—Yes.

49,822. That seems to be the whole rental as entered in the Valuation Roll for 1893–94?—There are some other figures, e.g., stalker's houses are let separately: I could give your lordship a special note of these.

49,823. You had better do that, I think. The Secretary has been good enough to turn up the sentence in Mr Malcolm's paper of 1883, in which he uses these 'words:—'Further prosperity to sheep-farming in the 'Highlands was attained when the system of turnip-'hogging,—or the practice of sending the hoggs or year-'ling sheep to be wintered in the Lowland districts, '—was introduced. This system is now almost uni-'versally followed; and until the charge imposed by the 'Lowland farmers for the wintering of these young sheep 'became excessive, it materially added to the gains of 'the hill farmers, enabling them, as it practically did, to 'increase their flocks by about one-third at a compara-'tively small cost.' I suppose you agree that that is historically correct?—Well, if Mr Malcolm has stated it so, I certainly should not like to differ from him; but at the same time I am sure there is a great deal in what I say, that it is not merely to increase but to save the lives of those that would otherwise die on the farm. It may be true that wintering is resorted to for increasing the carry, but it is also employed to preserve the lives of the young sheep. [Mr Sutherland.—It is practically the same thing.]

49,824. Mr Macphee.—If you reduced the stock on the farm by one-third, you would not require wintering, of which you have made a good deal?—But you would have a much heavier mortality.

49,825. Other results might follow; but if you reduced the farm stock by one-third, then wintering would be unnecessary?—I am not prepared to say that.

[The information promised in questions 49,514, 49,760, &c., was as follows:—

'William Mackenzie, Esq.,
Secretary, Royal Commission,
6 Parliament Square, Edinburgh.

'Fort William, 3*rd Sept.* 1894.

'Sir,—I have the honour to forward the information 'I promised to give to the Commission regarding the 'Inverlochy Estate.

'So far as I can ascertain, there were sixty-one hold-'ings on this estate about the year 1840, when the 'first Lord Abinger bought the property—four of these 'seem to have been divided into two. From a comparison 'of the numbering of the holdings, it appears that 'about three-quarters of these holdings are now occupied 'by twenty-nine persons cultivating small areas of 'ground, including twenty-two "crofters" and seven 'occupants of other descriptions. The remainder of the 'ground has partly been united to other ground to form 'two farms under £100 rental, partly been utilised for 'building and garden ground for cottages of the better 'class, partly been taken by the railway, and partly 'is still occupied by the proprietor.

'I mentioned, I think, in my evidence, twenty-four '"crofters." There is one other crofter whose holding 'has been formed since 1840, making twenty-three in 'all. The other one arose from my including, by mistake, 'a small tenant who is not a "crofter."

'Not including servants or paupers, there are on the 'estate two persons occupying a house and house and 'garden respectively, on a yearly tenure, paying under '£6 of rent, one on a lease occupying a house and 'garden, also paying under £6, and four persons oc-'cupying houses and gardens on a yearly tenure, pay-'ing £10 and over.

'As far as I can ascertain, the ground now under 'forest was rented in the 60's, prior to afforesting, at '£1045. This now appears in the Valuation Roll as:—

'House, Lianachan, . . .	£20
'Parks, „ . . .	31
'Parks and Garden, Coire-Chuinnlidh,	25
'Parks, Dalnabea, . . .	31
'House and Land, Dalnabea, .	15
'House and Land, Craiguanach, .	14
'House and Land, Meananeach, .	4
	£140
'Deer Forest Grazings, . . .	800	940
	Difference,	£105

'I have the honour to remain
Your obedient servant,
'H. Y. L. Smith.'

[Adjourned.]

FIFTY-EIGHTH SITTING.

ARISAIG, August 21st, 1894.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Edinburgh, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission—Chairman.
MICHAEL HUGH SHAW STEWART, Esq., M.P.
ANGUS SUTHERLAND, Esq., M.P.
GEORGE GORDON, Esq.
REV. MALCOLM MACCALLUM.
WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

ALLAN MACEACHAN, Crofter, Kinsadel, South Morar (64).

(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

49,826. The Chairman.—Your croft at Kinsadel, according to the Crofters Commission Report, has only one acre arable and the right to graze one cow on the farm of Cross. The old rent was £4, and the fair rent is £2, 16s.; the arrears were £10, 17s. 6d., whereof £5, 17s. 6d. were cancelled, and £5 ordered to be paid. Who is the tenant of the farm of Cross?—One Donald Mackenzie is the tenant.

49,827. When did he enter upon the occupation of it?—Last Whitsunday. [Mr Harold Y. L. Smith, Factor for Arisaig estate.—I may explain that the tenancy is a joint one, in name of Donald Mackenzie and Duncan Kennedy; the rent, according to the present Valuation Roll, is £75, but the actual rent is about £65.]

49,828. Can you tell me the extent of the farm?—I cannot tell.

49,829. Do you know what stock it carries?—I asked the former tenant in the course of last year what stock the farm carried, and he replied that there were between 400 and 500 sheep at that time.

49,830. Did he say anything about cattle?—There are not many cattle; the present tenant has not many cattle.

49,831. Has any one else a right of grazing one cow on this farm similarly to yourself?—One other has,—Alexander Maceachan, Toigeal.

49,832. Are there any more?—There are four of us who have the right of a cow and a stirk each.

49,833. You are desirous of obtaining more land, I suppose?—Yes.

49,834. In what direction do you ask us to look for land suitable for an extension of your holding or for a new holding?—I would like to get a new croft; if the railway comes along, as we hope it will come, it will come through the centre of my present croft.

49,835. Where do you say a new croft could be got?—I don't know; you yourself will know what kind of land you look for.

49,836. But sometimes we get valuable information from those dwelling in the locality who know the land already?—The people in the district are not looking for any one particular place: they wish to see what the Commission will do.

49,837. Is there a desire in the locality for new crofts?—Yes.

49,838. For new crofts, or for extension of grazing, or both?—There are a great many who want crofts who have no crofts at all; it is new crofts these require.

49,839. And among those who have crofts, what is the general desire?—Every one who complains of the croft he has, or who is not satisfied with it, desires to get a new croft.

49,840. Are there many in that position?—I don't think there are.

49,841. Now, you say there are a large number of persons who have no crofts; how many would you say?—There are about thirty who want to get new crofts.

49,842. Upon what estate are these thirty situated at present?—Between the River Morar and Kinlochailort. There are more than thirty who want land; there are altogether about forty-eight landless people in that tract of country, and there are about thirty who want new holdings.

49,843. Were you delegated to speak for these persons as well as for yourself?—Yes.

49,844. You were appointed at a meeting?—Yes.

49,845. You have told us about the farm of Cross; is there any other farm on the Arisaig estate that you ask us to consider?—I do not care to mention any particular place.

49,846. Are you quite clear that there are places suitable for a number of new holdings to meet the wants of those whom you represent?—I think there are.

49,847. Land suitable for cultivation and for grazing?—Yes, for both.

49,848. I observe you have only one acre of land and a cow's grass; how do you earn your livelihood?—By labouring: my family and myself labour throughout the country. If I do not get a living in that way, I cannot live on the croft by itself.

49,849. Do you mean that you do not get labour on the estate, but away from home?—I get very little labour on the estate.

49,850. What family have you?—Five sons.

49,851. And how many of these sons live with you when they are at home?—At present they are all at home except one. They get odd day's labour about, which keeps them going at present.

49,852. I suppose neither you nor any of your sons earns anything by fishing?—Not at present.

49,853. But do you sometimes go to the fishing?—It was at the fishing I used to be regularly.

49,854. You say you have a cow's grass on the farm of Cross. Do you keep any stock elsewhere?—No.

49,855. Did you or any of those whom you represent make any application to the landlord for additional land within the last few years?—We did not; we did not see that there was any suitable land, supposing we did apply.

49,856. When did you come into the holding?—So far as I remember it was twenty-three or twenty-four years ago.

49,857. And have you increased the arable land to any extent?—I got the land reclaimed as it is, when I entered.

49,858. And did you get a house?—Yes, the house was there.

49,859. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did I understand you correctly to say in answer to the Chairman, that you did not suppose there was any suitable land even if you did apply to the proprietor?—I think there is suitable land throughout the country.

49,860. But did you not say just now that you did not think there would be any suitable land on the Arisaig estate; or what was the meaning of your former answer?—I said so; I did not see any land about that was not presently in the occupation of farmers or others.

49,861. Then, can you tell us more clearly where the land is which you think would be suitable for crofters to farm?—There have been papers issued some time ago, calling attention to sheep farms or forests; and both kinds of land are in our country.

49,862. That is a general statement; I am asking for particular information, and I would like if you would point me to some particular land?—There is Rudha-Arisaig down here, suitable for new holdings: there were tenants there before. It maintained a considerable number of people in former times.

49,863. Any other place?—Yes, there are plenty of places in the district, but they are now in the occupation of farmers. There is Kinloid in the vicinty here; that is a place that was full of people formerly.

49,864. Any other farm?—There are other places suitable for small holdings, but I think that Kinloid and Rudh'-Arisaig would be sufficient for all the people in this district who want new holdings.

49,865. Including the thirty you spoke of between Loch-Morar and Kinlochailort?—I think the two places I mentioned, Kinloid and Rudha-Arisaig, would suffice for the thirty applicants I refer to.

Arisaig.

Allan Maceachan.

49,866. How are those men chiefly employed? What do they work at?—Every man works for himself as well as he can; most of them are day labourers.

49,867. Do you think, supposing there were crofts laid out in these farms, men could live on such crofts entirely, without seeking labour at all?—They do not mean that at all; a poor man cannot take as much land as will suffice to maintain him.

49,868. Then, how much land would each man require?—It is not the same extent that every one would require.

49,869. How much would you require yourself?—I have a large family, and I think I would require what would keep four cows.

49,870. Mr Sutherland.—How is the farm of Rudha occupied at present?—It is a deer forest at present.

49,871. And how is Kinloid occupied?—It is let to a tenant.

49,872. Mr Gordon.—Is there not a small farm at present at Rudha?—Yes, at the outer end of Rudha.

49,873. Where is the other arable land upon the Rudha point except at that farm?—There is plenty land that was formerly in cultivation.

49,874. Is it upon the north shore or the south shore?—There is some on both sides,—some on the west side, but more on this side.

49,875. Facing the north?—On the east side.

49,876. Does the township of Back-of-Keppoch not extend up to Kinloid?—Yes, it marches with Kinloid.

49,877. What is the size of Kinloid farm?—I cannot tell the present boundaries, but when it was tenanted by small tenants, the march was not far out.

49,878. Can you tell us what stock the farm keeps?—No, I cannot.

49,879. Do the crofters of Back-of-Keppoch have any pasture in addition to their small holdings? Have they any sheep?—No.

49,880. Can you give us any idea of the size of the grazings of Kinloid?—No, I cannot; I do not know the present marches. [The Secretary.—The common pasture of Back-of-Keppoch is 108 acres, of which 48 acres were added in 1891.]

49,881. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Is it on either of these two places you mentioned that you would like to get a croft for yourself?—Yes.

49,882. On which of the two places would you prefer a holding?—I would prefer Rudha-Arisaig; it is more convenient for the sea.

49,883. Have you got a fishing boat just now?—Not at present.

49,884. Are your sons accustomed to the fishing?—They never did much at the fishing; they are young as yet.

49,885. What is the age of the eldest?—About 21.

49,886. And the youngest?—Thirteen years.

49,887. Rudha-Arisaig would be suitable for fishing crofts, would it?—Yes.

49,888. I think you said that there were crofts there before; do you know whether these crofters followed the fishing?—They were at the fishing, and at anything that came in the way.

49,889. Do you know when they were removed from Rudha?—There is another delegate who will speak as to that.

49,890. But you are clearly of opinion that it is a very suitable place for fishermen's holdings?—Yes.

49,891. Then, would Kinloid suit for fishermen?—Kinloid is far from the shore for any man to work at the sea.

49,892. Do the crofting townships in the neighbourhood of Kinloid require an extension of pasture?—I think so; those townships marching with Kinloid have no sheep.

49,893. And an extension of holding could only be got from Kinloid, is that so?—I am sure they would take it.

49,894. Is there any other farm from which an extension of grazing could be got for the townships along the shore there?—Kinloid itself is the most convenient place for the crofters at Keppoch and Buna-caimb.

Arisaig.

Allan Mace achan.

49,895. There is a farm of Keppoch?—Yes, on the south side.

49,896. Is it a large farm?—Not very big. [The Secretary.—The rent is £55.]

49,897. And do you think it would be for the benefit of the large population of Back-of-Keppoch to get some of the grazings upon Keppoch farm?—I am sure they would be the better for it; I don't know whether they want it or not.

49,898. Was Kinloid ever held by crofters?—Yes.

49,899. When did it come to be made one farm?—The first batch of tenants were removed from Kinloid in 1843. There were ten crofters in Kinloid at that time.

49,900. And were the ten removed at that time?—Yes, and not one of them was a penny in arrear.

49,901. Do you know why the tenantry were cleared?—Yes. The factor that came there, one Rose, wanted them to reclaim moss at the road-side at their own expense; the tenants would not agree to do that, and on that account they were warned out that same year.

49,902. And when they were removed, what was done with the farm?—A minister of the name of Maccallum who was in the district at the time took it; he had been tenant of Craigmore before that, and he took Kinloid along with it.

49,903. That was just immediately on the removal of the people?—When the tenants were removed the minister took Kinloid.

49,904. And did he reclaim the moss?—He reclaimed a little of the moss, but he did not put any crop in it. He got people from the north and trenched a piece of this ground; after that it was cropped, but not by him.

49,905. How long did he hold the place?—I think about five years.

49,906. Has that reclamation been a success? And what has been the extent of it?—There are not many acres of it altogether.

49,907. Is it cropped now?—It is under crop now, but Mr Astley retrenched it and put it into a proper state of cultivation.

49,908. Who succeeded Mr Maccallum?—After Mr Maccallum, the minister, left, the place was let to sixteen small tenants.

49,909. Who was the proprietor at that time?—One Mackay.

49,910. Where did the sixteen come from?—Through the country here.

49,911. How long was this Mackay proprietor?—Not very long: I do not remember how many years.

49,912. How long did the sixteen continue in Kinloid?—They were there for about six years.

49,913. Were they getting on well in Kinloid?—Yes, they were getting on well enough.

49,914. Did they build houses for themselves when they were put there?—I am not certain whether they got help or not for the building of the houses.

49,915. The houses were built for the tenantry who went there at that time?—Yes, they all had houses.

49,916. How are these houses occupied now, or are they standing?—They are not standing.

49,917. Were these sixteen removed at one time?—They were removed at the same time. A tacksman's house was erected at that time, and Kinloid has been held as a tack ever since.

49,918. Who was the proprietor when they were removed?—Mr Astley.

49,919. What provision was made for these sixteen on their removal?—Some of them went to Australia, some to other districts, and some to Arisaig. Some are in Arisaig still.

49,920. What stock would each of these sixteen have when they occupied Kinloid?—I am not sure how many acres each of these had.

49,921. Were they better or worse off than the crofters in Arisaig to-day?—The crofts were good enough; they were somewhat like the others.

49,922. Had they sheep?—No sheep.

Arisaig. Allan Maceachan.

49,923. There is a large sheep pasture attached to Kinloid: had they that?—No.

49,924. Then, who had the grazing that is now in Kinloid along with the arable?—It was attached to Borrodale at that time, and the rest was attached to Craigmore: it was let to the minister, Mr Maccallum.

49,925. Then if Kinloid were made into small holdings, would you think it right that they should have the present sheep grazing along with the arable?—Undoubtedly, if the place was divided into small crofts they would require to have outrun into the hill.

49,926. What became of the ten that originally held it?—Mrs Macdonell of Morar, the mother of Mr Æneas Macdonell, pleaded with the proprietor to allow them to remain for another year, and she herself became security for their rent for that year. They were allowed to remain, but there was an increase of £20 put on them in respect of that year. Then Mrs Macdonell sold out her own stock on the farm of Traigh and let the farm of Traigh to them.

49,927. Then, when factor Rose did that, who was the proprietor?—Lord Cranstoun.

49,928. How long did Lord Cranstoun have the property?—That was before I remember. They were desirous of converting it into a tack again.

49,929. But were the small tenants paying their rents?—I never heard that they were not.

49,930. Mr A. W. Nicholson of Arisaig.—You referred to a desire for extension of your holding. Have you ever applied to me for an extension?—No.

49,931. Are you aware that your neighbour got an extension in 1888?—Yes.

49,932. Did you apply to me at the same time?—I spoke to your manager at the time, one Mackay.

49,933. Did you ever apply to me?—No, but I spoke to your factor, Mr Mackenzie.

49,934. You also mentioned Kinloid. Do you include in the land which you consider available for crofters the arable land of Kinloid?—Undoubtedly, it is the arable land that would do good to a poor man.

49,935. Do you mean by arable land, land presently under rotation of crop?—Yes, but there is plenty of land there that is not in cultivation now, but that would yield crop as well as the land now tilled.

49,936. Would you point out on the map or tell the Commissioners where that land is to be found? Is it in the ground at present grazed by sheep?—Any one who traverses the ground can see that for himself.

49,937. Will you say one spot on Kinloid hill which you consider suitable for cultivation?—I do not compare arable land, but hill land.

49,938. What I wanted to get from you is whether you could point out one spot outside the present arable land which is cropped, which you consider suitable for cultivation?—I know pieces of land both in Kinloid and in the hill which were formerly cropped, but before my recollection. [The Chairman.—Will you show us the particular places you mean when we go over the ground?—Yes, and I will show you the rigs still.]

49,939. Lazy-beds, I presume?—Yes.

49,940. You referred to the grazing of Keppoch Farm. Do you know the stock which Keppoch Farm as at present held grazes?—I do not know.

49,941. Are you aware that it is not much more than a hundred sheep at the outside?—I cannot say what stock he has.

49,942. Are you aware that part of that farm was taken off for the Keppoch crofters three years ago?—Yes.

49,943. At what time did these ten removals from Kinloid take place?—In 1843.

49,944. How old were you then?—About 14 years old.

49,945. Were you living on Kinloid?—Yes, I was in Kinloid myself at the time.

49,946. Were you living there?—My father was one of the ten who were removed from Kinloid.

49,947. These crofters who were removed and went to Traigh, what became of them eventually?—After the expiry of the five years' lease we had at Traigh, two of the tenants were allowed to return to Kinloid, —John Cameron and Alexander Maceachan.

Arisaig. Allan Maceachan.

49,948. And what about the other eight?—The others after the lapse of some years got small holdings.

49,949. Were they removed from Traigh again?—They were not removed from Traigh, but they were deprived of their land.

49,950. Are they there now?—Some of them are there still, and plenty of them are in Eternity.

49,951. The Chairman.—Do you know of any lands having been recently afforested?—No.

49,952. How long ago is it since, to your knowledge, land formerly held as grazing was put under deer?—Rudha is the last place; I cannot give you the exact date, but I think it is about forty years ago. [Mr Nicholson.—It is about forty years ago.]

49,953. You have called our attention particularly to Rudha-Arisaig and to Kinloid; and you said there was land there sufficient for the desires of those who wish more land or new holdings. I want to ask you if there are any other farms which you commend to our notice?—There is not a place in the occupancy of a tacksman in Arisaig that is not suitable for small tenants.

49,954. And how many tacksmen are in Arisaig?—I think there are twelve between Upper Arisaig and the River Morar.

49,955. Then you ask our attention to the whole of these?—I leave that to the Commissioners' pleasure.

49,956. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—In reply to Mr Nicholson, you said that there was an extension given to the Keppoch crofters about three years ago?—Yes.

49,957. Was that an extension granted by the proprietor, or had they to come before the Crofters Commission for it?—It is my belief that the landlord gave it to them. [The Secretary.—The land was assigned by the landlord, and the valuation of it was left to the Crofters Commission.]

49,958. The report of the Crofters Commission shows that it was 48 acres divided into 11 shares. [Mr Nicholson.—But among six crofters.] Are these all the crofters in Back-of-Keppoch?—Yes, six tenants.

49,959. Are there any cottars there?—There is another delegate, James Macdonald, who will explain better about it.

JOHN MACMILLAN, Crofter, Morach, Arisaig (65). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

John Macmillan.

49,960. The Chairman.—Was your croft valued by the Crofters Commission?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The extent is 1 acre arable, 3 acres outrun; right of grazing one cow on the farm of Mains of Arisaig: old rent £5, 10s., fair rent £5, 10s.; arrears £21, 7s. 6d., ordered to be paid.]

49,961. Are you anxious to get a new holding?—I am anxious to get more than I have; I have but little arable land.

49,962. Is it extension of grazings or extension of arable that you want?—I am in need of a little of both.

49,963. Could you stock additional land at your own expense?—Yes. My family is growing up and I could stock it.

49,964. What family have you?—Eight.

49,965. How many sons?—Three sons.

49,966. What is the age of the youngest?—The youngest is at school, about five years of age; and the eldest is twenty-two years of age.

49,967. Is there land near your present holding suitable, in your opinion?—Yes, there is land near me which was formerly in the hands of the crofters; they were removed from there in 1823.

49,968. What land is that?—Aird-nam-fuaran is the old name of the place: it is now called The Square.

49,969. How many crofters were in that township of Aird-nam-fuaran?—There were fifteen tenants in it, and five others along with them.

49,970. And you say they were removed in the year 1823?—Yes. There were four townships altogether;

Arisaig. John Macmillan.

the place was completely cleared in 1823, but they had begun to clear before then.

49,971. What were the names of the four townships?—Larach-mhor, Seananais, Torr-dubh, and Aird-nam-fuaran.

49,972. Who was then the proprietor?—Clanranald.

49,973. What became of those who were removed?—Twelve of them went to America.

49,974. And what became of the remainder?—They were scattered as objects of charity throughout the country.

49,975. How is that land occupied now?—One piece of Aird-nam-fuaran is now part of the tack of Kinloid.

49,976. And the other portion?—The other portion is now down at what we call the Square, at Arisaig Mains; and there is also a place called Gaoideal at the end of the forest.

49,977. Are you appearing here as a delegate?—Yes, I was appointed at a meeting, and I agreed to come.

49,978. Were you appointed at the same meeting as Maceachan?—Yes, but I was selected before.

49,979. How many are there without land and desirous of obtaining land in this quarter whom you represent?—I did not consider that; I did not inquire the number, and I am not in a position to answer that question.

49,980. Are there persons desiring land, both those who have no land, and those whose holdings are too small?—That is what I understand; those that have no land would like to get a little.

49,981. And those who have land would like a little more?—Yes, that is so.

49,982. Do those persons whom you represent, people without land and those who have small crofts, live partly by their crofts and partly by labour?—That is how they all maintain themselves; it is from the day's pay that they make their living.

49,983. Do most of them for a day's pay have to go a considerable distance from home?—The youth of the district are all away from home, and they send home their earnings to their parents.

49,984. You spoke particularly of a clearance having taken place in 1823; do you remember, or do you know of any other clearances in this locality?—Yes, many a removal since then.

49,985. Do you remember how many there have been since then?—I remember that quite well.

49,986. How many?—People were removed from Gaoideal after that,—it is the nearest place to those I have mentioned. They were removed from there in 1829.

49,987. Any other removals?—At that time there were ten removed from Gaoideal and one from Sandaig. Gaoideal now takes in the march to The Square or Mains Farm.

49,988. Do you know of any other removals besides these two?—There is another place on the other side of Gaoideal that was also cleared.

49,989. What place is that?—That is Rudha itself.

49,990. When did that occur?—In the year 1842.

49,991. What was the next removal after that?—Kinloid was cleared the next year, 1843: the estate was at that time sold to Mr Mackay of Bighouse.

49,992. After the removal from Kinloid in 1843, were there any removals?—In that same year there were people removed from other parts of the districts,—from the Braes of Arisaig, and also from Keppoch, now called Face-of-Keppoch. That was from 1841 to 1843.

49,993. Were there any removals from this estate after that?—Yes, after 1850.

49,994. What removals took place after 1850?—The sixteen that were re-settled in Kinloid were removed in 1850. They were also removed from Camus-a'-Rudha.

49,995. In what year?—I think about 1854.

49,996. Do you know of any after that date?—At that same time there were thirty-one removed from Achcraig, Kinloid, and Moss.

49,997. What was the date of the last removal?—The matter was stopped then,—it was done through a misunderstanding on the part of Mr Astley. The matter was referred to Mrs Astley, and it was stopped.

49,998. What was the date of that?—I think it was either 1853 or 1854.

49,999. The previous witness, Mr Maceachan, told us that all the lands under tack in this locality were suitable for our consideration. Do you agree with that view?—Yes, I agree with it: I do not see any place here but what was under tenants.

50,000. And are you of opinion that land that was under small tenants before, might profitably and advantageously be put under small tenants again?—I am sure of that, and I am sure it would be more profitable to the landlord, for I am certain that the rents paid by the tacksmen are lower than the rents that were fixed for the crofters lately.

50,001. Do you mean the rents fixed by the Crofters Commission?—Mr Nicholson charges 12s. an acre to the tacksman for arable and for pasture accompanying it; I pay £5, 10s. for about an acre of land.

50,002. Was your house put up by your landlord?—No, it was not; it was built before the Reformation; but it was re-roofed. It was the landlord who slated it about thirty-eight years ago.

50,003. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You told us there was some land on the Mains of Arisaig suitable for crofters. Has any part of that land you refer to been under rotation of crops for some years?—Some of it is under crop, but some has not been cropped for a number of years, I don't know how many. Anyone with eyes can see that.

50,004. Do you know that this Commission has nothing to do with cultivated land?—It is land capable of cultivation that is in pasture.

50,005. But I am speaking of land under rotation?—That is another matter.

50,006. Then you are only speaking of land that is under sheep?—I am speaking of land under pasture; land under sheep; and land under cattle; also land under water.

50,007. That would not be very suitable for crofters' occupation, would it?—There are lots of land under water, which could be drained.

50,008. Would not that cost the tenant a great deal?—I am referring to the crofter who may get that land.

50,009. So am I. Would it not cost him money to clear the water off?—Yes, but it is better for him to have that than to be without any land.

50,010. Even although it should cost him a good deal of money to drain it?—There is a great difference between money and a man's labour.

50,011. How long would it take the tenant to clear the water off the land you refer to as being under water?—There are lots of places that are suitable, which would require to be drained; the places are running waste.

50,012. How long would it take to drain the land before you could get a good crop out of it?—There is plenty of land that would give a crop the first year.

50,013. Land that is now under water?—Yes, land that will require to be drained.

50,014. Could it all be drained in one year and made ready for cropping the next?—I am not responsible for that question, and I am not in a position to answer it.

50,015. I should like to have your opinion as to the houses which would require to be put up for these new tenants. Who would put them up?—They might build their own houses if they were to get land,—houses which would suit them at first, and which they could improve afterwards.

50,016. Do you think the tenants would be prepared to undertake, without any help, the cost of putting up houses, draining the land, fencing and stocking?—I don't think that: I think some of them would require a little help; but the less help the better for them.

50,017. Where do you expect the help would come from; from Government?—I think so.

50,018. May I ask what is your own occupation?—I am a wire fencer, but I used to be a shepherd.

50,019. Rev. Mr Maccalbum.—I think you stated that, in your opinion there would be no loss to the proprietor if the land were occupied as small holdings?—As far as I can see, there would be no loss; as far as I know the rents.

50,020. You think the rent paid by the larger tenants is not higher than the rent paid by the smaller tenants?—I am sure of that. When Kinloid was under crofters, they paid £105.

50,021. And what is the present rent?—Kinloid is now a tack, and takes in Aird-nam-fuaran and Borrodale, but I don't know what the rent is.

50,022. The Valuation Roll shows it to be £100, but this tack that is called Kinloid is, you say, much larger than what was held by the crofters for £105?—Yes, by a long way.

50,023. Do you think it is twice as valuable?—Yes, three times as valuable as what the Kinloid crofters have.

50,024. So that at that rate, the crofters paid more for a third than is now paid for the whole of Kinloid?—They paid £105; Kinloid of to-day has different boundaries.

50,025. But you stated that the part held by the crofters is not more than a third of the tack?—Yes, that is so.

50,026. The crofters of Kinloid paid £105, and Kinloid then meant a third of the present farm?—It is not even so much.

50,027. And was the present steading of Kinloid put up by the proprietor?—Yes, Mr Astley, the proprietor, put it up.

50,028. Is there an extensive steading there?—Yes. It was dear enough to Mr Astley.

50,029. Can you give us any idea of the cost of it?—He would not know that himself, supposing he were alive.

50,030. Why do you think so?—There was a piece added every now and again, and changes made at the instigation of different people.

50,031. Do you know about the sixteen people who were settled in Kinloid,—whether they got houses built for them?—No. My mother and I were among those tenants, and we built our house. There were four townships.

50,032. Can you tell us whether, on their removal, the people got compensation for these houses that they built?—No, they were just pulled down.

50,033. I think you stated that these removals took place through a misunderstanding?—I heard that language from his own mouth, in the presence of a hundred persons.

50,034. How do you account for such a misunderstanding as that, which would lead to the removal of these people?—I have nothing to do with that.

50,035. But you said the thing was put a stop to when it was rightly understood. If it was only through a misunderstanding that these removals took place, how is it that the people were not replaced in Kinloid after the misunderstanding was cleared up?—Most of them were off to Australia, and scattered by that time.

50,036. And was no attempt made to get the place re-occupied by small tenants?—He did not live long after that.

50,037. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know the deer forest of Rudha-Arisaig?—Yes, every yard of it.

50,038. Is that land, in your opinion, fitted for new holdings?—I saw them there formerly.

50,039. How many holdings do you think could be made in that forest?—I do not know; there were ten in Gaoideal and one in Sandaig and there would be about thirty in the remaining part of Rudha.

50,040. Do you think if new holdings were to be made it would be desirable to have so many as that now?—No.

50,041. Could the tenants in such new holdings have pasture as well as arable land?—Yes, they would have more hill ground, and they would have arable land also.

50,042. But do both kinds of land exist in suitable proportion?—Yes, and it is in ports and bays at the shore.

50,043. Is the forest surrounded by the sea on most sides?—Yes, except the upper end of it, the eastern end.

50,044. Do you know much about deer forests?—For ten years I have been employed protecting forests.

50,045. Are deer forests, as a rule, down at the sea-level?—I never saw a forest at the sea-side except this one and some in the island of Skye.

50,046. And in the island of Skye it would not be easy to have them far from the sea?—I don't think you can go more than five miles from the sea in any part of Skye.

50,047. You spoke about land under water; do you mean by that, land that is allowed to fall back into a state of nature through want of occupation?—It is land that was formerly under crop, which has been allowed to go to decay through neglect.

50,048. And do you think that if the land were given back to the possession of small holders, that state of matters would cease?—They would bring the land to usefulness.

50,049. Do you think that people who can pay £1, 10s. per acre for land, could pay as much as a big tacksman for more land?—There is not such a thing as 30s. an acre in the west of Scotland at all.

50,050. Is not that your rent?—I pay £5, 10s., and I have a little over four acres.

50,051. Mr Gordon.—When you say that crofters can pay bigger rents than tacksmen, do you mean small crofts the occupants of which would be engaged in labouring throughout the country or in fishing?—There is no small tenant who would not require to be at work as a labourer or a fisherman.

50,052. Is that the class of men you have in your mind when you speak of them paying bigger rents than the tacksmen?—Yes. The rents we pay presently are higher than the rents paid by the tacksmen.

50,053. But these rents you earn, not out of the croft, but by the labour or fishing?—I earn the rent and what I eat not from the croft.

50,054. And is that the class of croft you have in your mind when you say the crofters can pay more rent than the tacksmen?—Yes; but I hope that the new croft will be more profitable to the new tenants than mine is to me.

50,055. But you said specifically that crofters could pay and were paying bigger rents than the tacksmen. Do you mean that these rents should be earned by fishing or labouring otherwise than on the croft?—I am sure of that.

50,056. The Chairman.—How many rooms are there in your house?—Two rooms and kitchen, and a garret above.

50,057. Is there sleeping accommodation in the garret?—Yes, there are beds in the garret.

50,058. How many?—Two beds.

50,059. Are there two apartments, then, in the garret flat?—Yes.

50,060. You say that your house has existed since the Reformation; you got the house, I suppose, when you got the holding?—Yes.

50,061. And occasionally, since you got the house and the holding, you have had assistance from the landlord in repairing it?—That was all taken up before the Crofters Commission; those who gave that information were not put on oath.

50,062. When you say there is a desire for new holdings, do you mean holdings by which the occupants are to live entirely, or holdings where they would live partly by their holdings and partly by labour?—The kind of croft they want is a croft that would be a home, but where they would earn their livelihood at labour or at fishing.

50,063. Then, is there no desire for holdings by which the crofters could live entirely?—There may be one or two of that class.

50,064. Mr A. W. Nicholson of Arisaig.—You say that all the land in the hands of the larger tenants is suitable for small crofts. You are a fencer and an old shepherd; have you ever farmed a bigger piece of land than your present croft?—Yes, at Craigmore.

Arisaig. John Macmillan.

50,065. How much did you farm there?—I had the fourth of the township.

50,066. How much does that mean?—The township would maintain 12 cows and 8 score of sheep.

50,067. You had a plough, I suppose, and worked the land yourself?—No, we did not have time for that; we were removed shortly after we got it.

50,068. Then, you have never farmed any piece of land that you had to plough with a horse?—No.

50,069. You have referred to the Mains as suitable for the extension of crofts?—Yes.

50,070. I suppose you mean the land that is at present under cultivation, which was reclaimed by the landlord?—I mean all the land that is here; it was all formerly in the occupation of crofters.

50,071. Was it not all reclaimed by the landlord? Were not the present canal and all the drains made by the landlord?—Clanranald improved it first of all.

50,072. I said 'the landlord'?—He removed the water out of it and made the canal, which Mr Astley afterwards deepened.

50,073. Are you aware how much it cost?—No.

50,074. Are you aware that Mr Astley spent upwards of £1000 on that canal alone?—I do not know.

50,075. You have referred to possible new holdings in Rudha forest?—Yes, every man of sense would say that.

50,076. Have you considered the cost of a new croft in Rudha?—No.

50,077. Do you think it would cost £300 to start a man with a proper sized croft?—If I were aware that such a question as that would be asked of me, I would have prepared myself to answer it.

50,078. Don't you think that if you come here to give evidence, you ought to be prepared?—But I did not know all the kinds of questions that might be put.

50,079. Could you find £100 to put into a new croft at Rudha?—No, and I would not require £100 for a croft in Rudha.

50,080. How much would you require?—I do not know. I have cattle, and I have a croft of my own: I don't seek a croft in Rudha.

50,081. But, do you know any parties who could put £100 towards making a new croft in Rudha, or in any one of these farms that you say are suitable?—I do not know what any man may have.

50,082. It was rather difficult to follow the apportionment of rent between the crofters of Kinloid in the old days and the grazing, but I would like to ask you whether the crofters at the present time would pay the rent which they paid when they paid £105,—would they pay in the same way a rate which the landlord wanted, or would they apply to the Crofters Commission and get their rents fixed?—It is the Commission themselves that do that.

50,083. You say that the crofters would pay higher rents than the bigger tenants?—Yes, I repeat that, and I can prove it.

50,084. But they would expect to have their rents fixed by the Commission and not fixed by competition in the market?—I don't know as to that.

50,085. When they paid £105, there was no Commission to fix the rent?—No; the rent was fixed for them.

50,086. The Chairman.—Suppose that new holdings were established, would you be in favour of the rents being fixed by private agreement, or by a tribunal acting under statute?—We were longer accustomed to the landlord, and we would consider it more natural to deal with the landlord; but when it is a matter of fighting, we must take the best weapon (or the best channel) for fighting.

50,087. Mr Sutherland.—Did you ever in your experience know of a new holding having been formed?—I saw sixteen crofts made and sixteen houses built at the same time, with their own effort. I saw sixteen crofts also made between Munlochy and the Kessock Ferry, and there was nothing there but wood.

50,088. Had these people to satisfy authorities that they had £300 each?—No, but some of those in Munlochy got £12 each.

Arisaig. John Macmillan.

50,089. Are you of opinion that what was done before could be done again?—In this place in Ross-shire that I refer to the land was under wood; but the places I speak of here were all under cultivation before.

50,090. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Was all the land that is in the Mains Farm reclaimed by some proprietor or other?—No; when the water was taken off the Mains, the landlord immediately put it under plough.

50,091. When was the canal made?—First of all it was begun in 1816, or 1817, and it was afterwards deepened by Mr Astley.

50,092. Crofters held some of the land that is now in the Mains of Arisaig, did they not?—It was crofters who were on both sides of the Mains altogether,—in Gaoideal and in Aird-nam-Fuaran.

50,093. The Secretary.—According to the Particulars of the Clanranald estates when offered for sale in 1826, there were six tenants paying £6 each in Gaoideal and one in Diulaid. Rhudha, Dubh-Chamus, &c. were let to Archibald Macdonald; and Borrodale, &c. to John Macdonald. Craigmore, Drumdarroch, Sandaig, Aird-nam-fuaran, and Point-of-Keppoch were small farms.

James Macdonald.

JAMES MACDONALD, Mason, Strath, Arisaig (36) —examined.

50,094. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

50,095. Were you appointed as a delegate?—My father was appointed as a delegate, and I appear in his place. I have a statement.

50,095A. Why is he not here himself?—He is old and ill.

50,096. What is his age?—Seventy-five or seventy-seven.

50,097. Is the statement written by you or by him?—By me, through what I have heard from him.

'I have been duly appointed a delegate to appear 'before your Royal Commission at a public meeting 'held at Arisaig for the purpose. There are a great 'many of the cottar class in Arisaig who are landless. 'And the most of the holdings of such as are of the 'crofter class are far too small to maintain them. The 'former require new holdings and the latter class 'require an extension of their present holdings. There 'is also in the district a sufficiency of suitable and 'available land at present under deer and used for 'grazing purposes, to meet the requirement of the 'whole country-sides.

'1. Aird-nam-fuaran.—This township contained six-'teen tenants up till about 1823 when they were evicted. 'Several of those who were born there are still living 'among us. They were all in good circumstances. 'They held the Strath lands, the hill grazing, and a 'heavy stock. Each of the sixteen had a horse. This 'township was divided between two farmers. The one 'portion of it was added to the grazing farm of Kinloid 'and the other portion was added to what is now called 'the Mains of Arisaig which is let to a tacksman.

'2. The Deer Forest of Arisaig.—The following town-'ship were cleared, and since made into deer forest:—

'(1.) Gaoideal, which contained ten tenants, was 'cleared in 1829, and a portion was added to the 'Mains, and the remainder let to a tacksman.

'(2.) Sandaig contained one tenant, and was 'cleared in 1829 and added to a neighbouring 'tack.

'(3.) Doire-na-drise, cleared of five tenants about '1843.

'(4.) Dubh-chamus, cleared of three tenants about '1843.

'(5.) Rumach, cleared of twenty tenants about '1843.

'(6.) Ardghasaraic, cleared of two tenants about '1843.

'(7.) Ach-a'-gharbh-uilt, cleared of three tenants 'about 1843.

'(8.) Drimindarrach, cleared of three tenants about '1857.

Arisaig. James Macdonald.

'(9.) Na Puirt, cleared of three tenants about '1854.

'These fifty well-doing tenants, exclusive of twenty-'nine cottar families, once lived in comparative comfort 'on the lands now embraced in the deer forest of 'Arisaig. They were all summarily evicted without a 'penny of compensation for the buildings or other 'permanent improvements made by them.

'The mill in the district above described is now 'used as a byre by the gamekeeper. To-day there 'are in the area only two gamekeepers, one tenant, two 'cottars, and two paupers, where, within living memory, 'seventy-nine families lived in comfort.

'3. Polnish.—About the year 1838 this township 'was cleared of three tenants. It is now a part of the 'large farm of Glenmamie. This farm embraces Camus-'a'-fhraoich, from which three tenants were evicted in '1851; Earna-poll, from which three tenants were 'evicted; Ceann-loch-nan-Uamh, from which three 'tenants were evicted.

'4. Keppoch.—From this township five tenants were 'evicted in the year 1836, Poll-Throundainn had three 'of these.

'5. Kinloid Farm (Cean-a'-leathaid).—In 1843 there 'were ten tenants evicted from these lands, their 'holdings consolidated and given to the Established 'Church minister, who held them for only five years, 'when it was again let to sixteen crofters. Again six 'years after this, these sixteen crofters were evicted, 'and the land given to a tacksman. Every one of the 'sixteen crofters who held the land for the six years had 'built the house and steadings, but got no compensation 'on their compulsory removals.'

(Signed) JAMES MACDONALD.

50,098. You referred particularly to a cottar class. How many are there belonging to that class desirous of getting more land?—About thirty.

50,098A. Have the cottars any land at present?—I would rather speak in Gaelic.

50,099. You have been working in the south?—Yes.

50,100. And you speak English when you are in the south?—Yes, but that is a different case.

50,101. Do these thirty cottars pay any rent?—Yes.

50,102. What average rent do they pay?—They have different rents.

50,103. What is the general run of the rents paid by the cottars?—£5.

50,104. And have they any land?—Small lots, potato ground.

50,105. And some of them have gardens, I suppose?—Yes.

50,106. Have any of them no land?—There are a good few who are landless.

50,107. Now, as I understand you, the whole of these are desirous of getting new holdings?—Yes.

50,108. What kind of holdings have they in their minds?—Small holdings.

50,109. That is to say, holdings where they would live partly by the holdings and partly by labour or fishing?—Yes.

50,110. They do not wish holdings large enough to maintain them?—Very few.

50,111. But there are a few who do?—Two or three.

50,112. Would these persons desirous of new holdings undertake such holdings without assistance?—Some would need help, and some could do without it.

50,113. What as to the majority?—The minority would not seek much; very few of them could do without assistance. The majority of them would need assistance.

50,114. The greater number would require some assistance?—Yes.

50,115. Do you mean by assistance, money borrowed which would be repaid over a term of years?—Yes.

50,116. Have any of these cottars stock at present?—None.

50,117. Do they live by labour mainly?—Mainly by labour.

50,118. Such work as they can get in the neighbourhood, or going further from home?—Wherever they can procure work. Arisaig. James Macdonald.

50,119. They pay their rents out of their labour and not out of the land?—Out of their labour.

50,120. Were the houses which these cottars occupy put up by the landlord or by themselves?—By the landlord.

50,121. In every case?—In every case; all the cottars' houses.

50,122. Are the houses repaired by the landlord from time to time?—Yes.

50,123. You mentioned particularly land that is under deer. Do you refer to the Rudha forest?—Partly.

50,124. And partly to what other forest?—And partly to what is outside the forest and to two other tacks.

50,125. And you ask our attention both to land in the forest and to land which is presently part of grazing farms?—Yes.

50,126. The forest you refer to is the Rudha forest, I suppose?—Yes, that is the most suitable for us hereabout.

50,127. It is near at hand?—Yes, and near the sea.

50,128. Is there a good deal of land there that we should consider?—There is a good deal, only it is scattered here and there.

50,129. Suitable for cultivation and suitable also on the higher reaches for grazing?—Yes, for both.

50,130. Then, I suppose, such new holdings as are in view would be holdings consisting partly of arable land and partly of hill grazing?—Yes; mostly hill grazing.

50,131. Their idea is to pay the rent mainly out of the stock of sheep and cattle they might have?—Yes.

50,132. Now, is there any desire in this quarter for fishermen's holdings,—that is to say, small patches along the sea-shore with houses, and to live by the sea entirely?—Yes.

50,133. There is a desire of that kind?—Yes, a great desire amongst them for fishermen's holdings.

50,134. They would have a house and a small patch of land for potatoes, and would live entirely by the sea?—Just so.

50,135. And is there a class of that kind in this locality?—There is.

50,136. Who live by the sea at present?—Partly by sea and partly by their croft.

50,137. Where are they mainly situated?—In a township of the name of Bun-na-Caimb.

50,138. But is there a desire for small holdings by the sea-shore where the fishermen would live by the sea altogether?—I cannot say.

50,139. Do you carry on your trade as a mason mostly in this quarter?—I have been more away, till lately.

50,140. Where do you work?—Away south, and out in the Western Isles sometimes.

50,141. But lately you have been getting labour here?—Yes.

50,142. And have you got regular employment?—No.

50,143. It comes and goes?—Comes and goes.

50,144. What sort of wage do you make?—I make 5s. a day when I am employed; sometimes more, sometimes less.

50,145. Is there a general complaint among the crofters that their holdings are too small?—Yes.

50,146. Among the whole of them?—Most of them.

50,147. And if their holdings were enlarged, either the arable or the grazing, or both, would they still desire to live partly by their holdings and partly by labour, or entirely by the holdings?—I cannot say.

50,148. Mr Sutherland.—Do the people in this locality expect that there will be better opportunities for carrying on the fishing after the railway is made to Mallaig?—Yes.

50,149. And is that, in your opinion, a reason why such holdings as you have spoken of should be made with a prospect of success?—Yes, because they get a ready market for the fish, and a better price; and they don't want to be engaged with their crofts altogether.

50,150. Have the people north of this always been

Arisaig.

James Macdonald.

engaged more or less in fishing?—I cannot go further than the River Morar.

50,151. Well, up to the River Morar, at anyrate, is that the case?—Yes.

50,152. How do they get their fish disposed of at present?—By steamboats.

50,153. And do you expect that when the railway is made, there will be a better price and a steadier market for fish?—It is the rumour amongst people.

50,154. It is the belief?—It is their belief, in general.

50,155. Have you heard the evidence that has been given by the other gentlemen who have given us information?—Yes.

50,156. Do you agree with what they said?—Yes, for the most part.

50,157. These places that you mentioned from which people were put away before, are places that, in your opinion, could be peopled again; is not that the reason why you mentioned them?—Most likely.

50,158. And you think these are places that we ought to go and see when we are in this locality?—Yes.

50,159. Mr Shaw Stewart.—What fishing is it chiefly that they get round this coast, the herring or the white-fishing?—Herring and white-fishing, both.

50,160. You told us that two or three of those you speak for are looking for holdings that they could live by entirely?—Yes.

50,161. Can you tell us of any land in this neighbourhood where a man could really support himself on the croft, without getting anything from labour or from fishing?—I believe I could, but it is not my own wish that I should live by a croft, because I am a mason to trade, and would be glad to have a home.

50,162. But speaking for others, can you point us to any land on which, in your belief, or in the belief of your neighbours, a man could support himself and his family, pay rent, and not fall into debt, by living entirely on his croft?—Yes, he could.

50,163. Whereabouts is that land?—In the district of Arisaig, in a good few places.

50,164. Where?—But there must be more land given in that case to each new holder, to give him an independent croft. He should have from 8 to 10 cows; he cannot do with less.

50,165. And how many sheep?—Two or three hundred sheep.

50,166. Any arable land?—Certainly.

50,167. How many acres would you put down to the arable land?—From 10 to 12.

50,168. Can you show us any suitable place where such crofts could be made?—There are farms in the district of Arisaig with 70 acres of arable land.

50,169. Are there crofters in this district who would be able to occupy such land without help?—I cannot say.

50,170. They would have first to build the house, would they not?—They would require a house.

50,171. And something in the shape of a steading?—Yes.

50,172. And then they would require to stock the land and work the farm?—Yes.

50,173. Do you believe that there would be sufficient profit from land farmed in that way in this climate to maintain a man and his wife and family, and provide the rent, without his running into debt?—Yes.

50,174. You think that could be done?—Yes.

50,175. Have you any practical experience of farming yourself?—No, but I have seen that done, and people in that position keeping themselves clear of debt.

50,176. In this neighbourhood?—No, not here.

50,177. Where?—There are none here.

50,178. Where have you seen it?—In the Island of Coll and the Island of Tiree, and in a good few islands away west.

50,179. But you have never seen such a small farm in this neighbourhood?—No.

50,180. I suppose it would be a considerable benefit to you, as a mason, if there were a number of new houses to be built in this district?—According if I would get the work to build them.

Arisaig.

James Macdonald.

50,181. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You stated that there are about thirty cottars, I think, and that these have all comfortable houses?—Some of them.

50,182. The majority of them?—Yes, the majority.

50,183. Houses built by the proprietor?—Yes.

50,184. Who also gives work, I suppose?—Not to the half of them.

50,185. But when these houses were built for them, were they mostly in the employment of the landlord?—Yes.

50,186. Was there more work when they were built than there is now?—Twenty times the work that there is now.

50,187. So that their condition now is not so favourable as it was when these houses were first built?—No.

50,188. Do you represent that these people are all of the opinion that they would be more comfortable if they were settled on the land?—Yes.

50,189. And that the comfortable houses which they have do not at all compensate them for the want of land?—No.

50,190. Are there many of these cottars who held land at some time?—Yes, a few.

50,191. And these would like to go back to the old condition and have the land again?—Yes.

50,192. They have had experience of both, and they prefer having the land?—Yes.

50,193. The proprietor, you say, was at the expense of building these houses when they became cottars?—Yes.

50,194. So that the turning of crofters into cottars was a transaction that cost the proprietor money?—He built the houses for them.

50,195. But when they became crofters, they built the houses for themselves?—Yes.

50,196. For instance, do you know about the sixteen people who were settled in Kinloid?—No, I cannot say I do.

50,197. We heard to-day that these people built their own houses, and that they paid a much higher rent for a portion of that farm than is now paid for the whole. They did that when there was no security of tenure, did they not?—Yes.

50,198. And, as a matter of fact, they were removed very soon after they settled?—Yes.

50,199. Now, if people were replaced there, with security of tenure, and the rent fixed not by the proprietor but by some impartial tribunal, do you think they would much more readily, much more easily, build the houses than they did under the former condition of things?—Yes, they would be more willing to do it, in my opinion.

50,200. And do you think that the putting of them back there might be done without any help from the proprietor, except that they would get an opportunity of settling upon the land?—I cannot say.

50,201. Can you say whether there are a certain proportion of them who would be able to find means to do it, on condition of a fair rent and security of tenure?—Yes.

50,202. You say that there is a strong desire for holdings where the tenant would prosecute the fishing. Can you tell me whether the land in the deer forest is suitable for such holdings?—Very suitable.

50,203. Is that the most suitable place round here for such fishermen's holdings?—Yes.

50,204. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Can you show us any houses near here which have been put up entirely by the crofters themselves?—No, I cannot, but there are plenty people in the house who can and who are well acquainted: old people can.

50,205. I don't mean ruins, but can anybody show me in this neighbourhood a house that has been put up by a crofter himself in which he now lives?—I believe that could be done.

50,206. Can you show us such a house yourself?—I cannot go into that question. I know some such houses, but they might be paid for partly by the proprietor and partly by the crofter.

Arisaig. James Macdonald.

50,207. Nearly all the houses, you may say all the houses, here have been built by the proprietor, or else the tenants have received assistance to build?—Some are built partly by the proprietor and partly by the crofter.

50,208. And the others?—By the proprietor.

50,209. Mr A. W. Nicholson of Arisaig.—You said there were twenty tenants at Rhuemach. Do you know what land they had?—Yes.

50,210. How much had they?—I cannot say.

50,211. How much was there between them?—I cannot say, but the land is there still, and you can see how much there is for the eight.

50,212. You said there were twenty tenants living there?—When I say twenty, I include both Rhuemach and the surrounding small townships.

50,213. Would you name the townships you mean, because I should like to know them?—Achnadrisheig and some of the places in my statement.

50,214. I should like to know how much land these twenty tenants at Rhuemach had?—Well, I cannot say how much they would have.

50,215. Did they have three quarters of an acre?—I believe they had.

50,216. And how many sheep?—I cannot say: I did not hear.

50,217. And how many cows?—Three or four each.

50,218. And horses?—I don't think there are horses mentioned in my statement.

50,219. But do you know whether they had horses? I want to get at the facts?—I did not mention horses at all.

50,220. How do you know they were comfortable if you don't know the amount of their holdings or what stock they had?—They had not a very great deal of land, but they were depending on fishing.

50,221. And how did they get their fish away in those days?—By boats.

50,222. By steamers?—No, but they had steamers too.

50,223. Where did they take them to?—To Glasgow with small boats.

50,224. Do they take them there now?—There is none there now.

50,225. But why did they lose their boats?—The crofters at that time had boats.

50,226. And have they got boats now?—There are no crofters in Rhuemach now.

50,227. No, but the people about the place. Do they take their fish to Glasgow now?—No, because there is a steamer calling.

50,228. And they are better off now than when they had to take their fishing boats to Glasgow?—Something about the same.

50,229. Would you be surprised to hear that there are about 15 acres in the enclosed space at Rhuemach?—Yes.

50,230. You referred to cottars; whom do you mean?—The landless people.

50,231. Where are they?—Hereabouts, a good few of them.

50,232. Where do they live?—There are a good many in Arisaig without land.

50,233. Do you mean the people in the Strath?—They have not got much land.

50,234. Are you referring to the tenants of the houses in the village?—Yes.

50,235. What cottar pays £5 of rent?—Macpherson, new building, and Mackinnon, new building.

50,236. I produce a rental showing that these two pay £4, 10s. Only one pays £6, and all the others pay much less?—Well, I beg your pardon for being wrong to the extent of 10s.

50,237. The average rent is nothing like £4, 10s. for these houses. Then, have not these people plots of potato ground?—Yes, for which they pay £3 an acre.

50,238. That is what might be called accommodation land, just above the village, is it not?—Yes.

50,239. You said that there was a desire for fishermen's holdings?—Yes.

50,240. How is that desire shown?—By their coming to the meetings and asking what they were wanting.

50,241. Have any of these cottars boats or nets, or both?—Not at present.

50,242. Not one of them?—Not one that I am aware of.

50,243. Then they would have to learn their trade of fishing as well as get their boats?—They were fishermen once.

50,244. How long ago? You say that these people were removed forty years ago; do the cottars to whom you are referring understand the fishing?—Yes, some of them; they go away with others as hired men.

50,245. Are there half a dozen such?—There cannot be a great many, for there are not a great many cottars altogether, only forty-eight or forty-nine in the whole district.

50,246. You have referred to arable lands on farms, and you say there are some farms with 70 acres?—62 to 70.

50,247. The lands you are referring to are at the present time under cultivation by the farmers?—Yes.

50,248. You are not then referring to any other lands outside these?—I do.

50,249. Would you mind saying where?—In the hill, and under heather and brackens.

50,250. You think those would be suitable places?—Yes.

50,251. And the size of holding you think for a man to live by should be 8 to 10 cows, and 200 or 300 sheep and 10 to 12 acres arable?—Yes.

50,252. Have you considered what capital it would take for a man to have a holding of that kind?—A good deal.

50,253. Two or three hundred pounds?—It would be more than that; I think I said there are only two or three who want that size of holdings.

50,254. You gave us some interesting information about Coll and Tiree: is the land here as good as the land in Coll and Tiree?—Some of it is better.

50,255. Are not the dairy farms in Coll and Tiree about the best on the west coast?—Yes, but it is mostly all sandy soil.

50,256. But whether it is sand or rock, the cheese and butter made there is about the best made on the west coast?—Yes, it is called the Dunlop cheese. [The Chairman.—The cow's milk here is as good as the cow's milk in Coll and Tiree?—And better.—Therefore, the butter will be better?—Better too. There is more heather here, and more mixed grass.]

50,257. You say also that there was more work when the houses were built?—Yes.

50,258. I think I understood that there are fewer people now?—Yes.

50,259. And there is less work?—Yes.

50,260. So that it is about the same as it was then?—No.

50,261. You mean that there is still less work in proportion to the number of people?—There were scores of men working at that time, and women also; and now there are only twenty working, and there is more than the fifth part of the people in the country yet.

50,262. You said that some would be able to build the houses, &c. for themselves?—Yes.

50,263. How many, do you think, in Arisaig, of these thirty cottars?—I cannot say how many; very few.

50,264. The Chairman.—This paper which you have read proceeds, I understand, on information got from your father?—Yes.

50,265. It is not based on information of your own, but got from your father?—Yes.

50,266. You come forward to give your father's statement in writing because of his age and infirmity?—Yes.

50,267. Who wrote this out for you? Was it written by a friend, or by yourself?—By a friend.

50,268. And you signed it for your father?—Yes. [Mr Nicholson.—You have been working for us for the last two or three months?—Yes.]

50,269. In the time of the late Mr Astley, was there

Arisaig.

James Macdonald.

a good deal more work given to small tenants on the estate than now?—Yes.

50,270. There was a good deal of estate expenditure and wages paid to people in the locality for doing work upon the estate?—Yes.

50,271. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—With regard to the farms round about here, would you consider that they are all pastoral farms?—Yes.

50,272. They are all mainly pastoral?—Yes.

50,273. And do you say that a good deal that was formerly cultivated in these farms is now pastured?—It is now pastured.

50,274. You say there are fewer people now than when the houses were built. Does that apply to the whole of Arisaig,—that the population is decreasing?—Yes.

50,275. What became of the population?—They went away to all parts of the world for want of work and for want of land.

50,276. But Arisaig is as wide now as it was then?—Yes, and wider, for the estate of Morar has been put to it.

50,277. These people were not put back upon the land?—No.

50,278. They all had to go away?—Yes.

50,279. Mr Sutherland.—Do you know why these cottars have no boats or nets now?—Because they are just going to other places, to other work.

50,280. Do they do that of their own choice?—Some do.

50,281. And do they all live near the sea, where they could fish?—It would pay them better, because there is no great demand for fish hereabout; they have to send it away a long distance.

50,282. Where do most of these people live?—Just about Arisaig here.

50,283. Round this bay?—Yes; there are a few in the village here, at the head of the bay.

50,284. And do they fish there now?—Not much at the herring fishing.

50,285. Where is the fish that is to be landed at Mallaig?—From all the lochs,—Loch Hourn, Loch Nevis, and a good few on the west side of Skye, and others too numerous for me to tell you, for I am not a fisherman.

50,286. Do many people go from here to the fishing in other places?—Yes.

50,287. Have they boats of their own?—They have not got boats big enough to go very far.

50,288. Do they go then as hired men?—Yes.

50,289. Do many go from this place?—Not a great many.

50,290. Do a dozen go altogether?—I would say about half a dozen.

50,291. Are these men good sailors?—They are that.

50,292. And have a knowledge of the sea?—They ought to have.

50,293. They would not require much training as fishermen, would they?—No.

50,294. Then about the land at Rhuemach; is all that land that was before occupied enclosed?—No.

50,295. There is both land that was under cultivation before, and land that could be now brought into cultivation?—Yes.

Æneas Ronald Macdonell.

ÆNEAS RONALD MACDONELL of Camusdarroch, Arisaig (72)—examined.

50,296. The Chairman.—You are a member of the Scottish Bar?—Yes.

50,297. And you were the proprietor of the estate of Morar?—I was.

50,298. You are now of Camusdarroch, Arisaig?—Yes.

50,299. Have you a statement to make to us?—Well, I am able to speak generally as to the population there used to be in my young days,—in fact, the whole tract of country seemed to be populated and to have numerous houses on all parts of it; but I want to confine my evidence almost entirely to that portion of the district which is now under deer forest. It is now called Rhu-Arisaig, but 100 years ago it was called Dubh-chamus. Although I am only seventy-two years of age, I am able to speak of thirty years beyond that, from 1794. My grandfather occupied the various places or townships in Dubh-chamus or Rudha. These were Dubh-chamus; Rhu, Tirnadrish, Torbae, Rhubrec, Tormor, Rhuemoch, Claggan, Portavullin, Bal-ur, Ardgaserie, and Achagarrailt. The witness, James Macdonald, spoke to most of these places, but he included also Sandaig, which I do not, because at the time I speak of Sandaig was not a portion of the farm of Rhu. I am able to speak concerning that period from an old account-book belonging to my grandfather, to which I had access a good many years ago, and it was in connection with a very melancholy occasion in which I was unfortunately implicated, viz., an emigration from the estate of Loch Sheil in Moidart. In that account-book I found thirty-seven names of individuals in the various families who were paying rent, as subtenants to my grandfather.

Arisaig.

Æneas Ronald Macdonell.

50,300. What was your grandfather's name?—Archibald Macdonald, Rudha, Arisaig.

50,301. When did he die?—I think in 1828 or 1829.

50,302. Where is that account-book now?—I don't know; at that time it was in the possession of my uncle Macdonald of Loch Sheil; and I may as well mention that it was in connection with Rudha that I came to examine the book. First I should mention that these people occupied Rhu as cottars, and they had land for which apparently they paid no rent, but worked the land, of which Mr Macdonald of Rudha cropped a portion. They paid rent for grazing,—a small nominal sum, and he himself paid a very small rent also to the then proprietor, Macdonald of Clanranald. In fact, he, as well as Macdonald of Borrodale and Macdonald of Glen Alladale, came into possession of the various lands as being sons of the then Macdonald of Clanranald. They took these lands with the population on them, and occupied them.

50,303. And were the rents paid to them directly?—The rents were paid to the tenants, to these Macdonalds, at a very small rate, because they themselves were not highly charged. But it so came to pass that in Lord Cranston's time my uncle, Gregor Macdonald, who then occupied Rudha, had to give a large increase of rent, or be quit of it. Well, he could not under the old system on which he held it afford to give more rent; the consequence was that the farm was taken over him; and the cruel thing was, that he was obliged to remove all the subtenants upon it who had been there generations before him or his ancestors. The only thing that he could do was to get his brother Macdonald of Loch Sheil to take the people over to Loch Sheil in Moidart. Times grew black, and the potato famine occurred, and the consequence was that there was a redundant population, for Moidart had previously been well inhabitated, and the addition of so many families from Rudha, Arisaig, quite overwhelmed them when the potato famine occurred. I was then puzzled to know how many came from Rhu, Arisaig, and I got access in that way to the old books from which I took an extract, and I have here a list of the names of the various people and the portions of Rudha that they occupied. In Ardgaserich there were 12, viz., Lachlan Mackinnon, Donald Roy Macinnes, John Macintyre, John Mackinnon, Patrick Maccormack, Neil Mackinnon, Ronald Macdonald, Mrs Macdonald, Donald Macvarish, Duncan Macinnes, John Macdonald, and Allan Mackinnon. In Torbea there were 4, viz., Angus Smith, L. Mackinnon, J. Macdonald, John Macisaac. In Dubh-chamus, ten, viz., John Kinnaird, John Macisaac, Finlay Mackellaig, Archibald Macfarlane, James Macdonald, Widow Maceachan, Patrick Grant, Allan Mackinnon, Dugald Macpherson, and Widow Maclean. In Rudha, eleven, viz., Mrs Donald Macdonald, Donald Macinnes, Roderick Mackinnon, John Maccormack, Rory Smith, Angus Bain Macdonald, Ewan Mackinnon, Peter Macfarlane, Dugald Gillies, Alexander Macleod, Angus Roy Maceachan. These are in all 37, and they are evidently of different families; the rents were given and the payments made and everything in connection with their holdings.

50,304–5. The date of this is 1794?—Yes, but I was going on to explain that these people, or rather the descendants of some of them, had to be removed to Moidart, and in the congested state of the estate it had to be considered what was best to be done. I was then a young man; I had just passed at the Bar, and I and the late respected James Macgregor of Fort-William were appointed trustees to do what was best. We could see nothing for it,—it was impossible for the people to subsist,—but to assist them to emigrate, and we were assisted very materially in carrying out the emigration by the resident Catholic clergyman of that time, Rev. Ronald Rankine, who indeed followed them. So many of them went to Australia and a few of them to America. But never shall I forget until my dying day,—it is a source of grief to me that I had anything whatsoever to do with that emigration, although, at the same time, God knows I cannot understand how it could have been averted. Many of the people have succeeded well and are well-to-do, but if they had remained, they would have been impoverished themselves, and they would have impoverished the few that are still on the estate.

That is my principal evidence; but I may also state as a general fact, connected not merely with that part of Arisaig, but I think your own observations, gentlemen, as Commissioners going through the Highlands will bear it out, that the pasturage is very much deteriorated compared with what it used to be. It certainly is in that portion of Arisaig to which I refer, in my own observation. Of course, I believe that the climate has very much changed and affected the pasture; but more, much more, has the want of cropping done so. The spade husbandry, which was then in vogue, was employed so that every inch of cultivable ground at that time was manured and put into good heart. Even now it is apparent that the land that is cultivated by the crofters in every place has better pasture and is improved by them so that it is superior to what is under either sheep or deer. At the same time even the crofters' pasture is not so good as it was, in consequence of the wetter weather that prevails as compared with what there was in my young days. We used to have deep snow that lay for weeks, perhaps even months, when roads were impassable to any vehicle; but when the sun melted away, the grass sprouted up in abundance, and there was plenty for all the cattle to consume during the winter. I am not going to maintain that the old system of husbandry was the best, or in accordance with our modern ideas; but, I believe, it originated from the necessity of the times to support a very large population, and for that purpose no system was better than the old spade husbandry that then prevailed.

50,306. Are you aware whether there is a demand for land by crofters or cottars in this locality?—If there was land opened to them, I believe that if the whole of Rhu was open to them it would be taken and occupied. I believe that the feeling is so strong that it would be a desirable home for them and a means of livelihood, that they would take it.

50,307. Is there land in Rudha suitable for the purpose?—Without doubt there is, on the old system of working it. I don't say there is under the present system of cultivation; in fact, suppose that a large population were at once now transplanted there, I believe they would suffer very nearly as much as they have to do when they go to the prairies in America at first until they have time to cultivate the ground again. But if they adopted the old system, and cultivated every inch of the good land that is fit for cultivation, there is a great extent suitable for a large population.

50,308. Just tell us what kind of holding you would form if you had the doing of it?—Well, it would be very much on the same system as the old one,—that they should have their cattle ranging over the outpasture, and probably now it would be proper that each should have his own part to himself instead of the runrig system of old. But I think that a very large number of people could be accommodated, and have probably seven or more acres of land to cultivate.

50,309. Do you mean a holding where the man would live partly by his holding and partly by labour?—By his personal labour and that of his family.

50,310. Is there land on Rudha suitable for fishermen's holdings?—Very suitable, because it is surrounded on all sides, the south side and the west side and the north side by the sea; and there used to be very abundant fishing there of the kind that was required for the supply of families,—cod and lythe, and what they call cuddies and saith.

50,311. Now, suppose such holdings established,—crofters' holdings and fishermen's holdings, would these pay the landlord as well as he is paid at present?—That is putting a question to me that I am not able to answer, because I do not know what he is paid at present. Then, of course, you and the Crofter Commissioners have had something to do also with the payment of crofters' rents.

50,312. Might these holdings be expected to yield a reasonable rent to the landlord?—Well, of course, all holdings must be more or less valuable, but to what extent is a point I cannot condescend upon. Probably, the holdings would vary in size and in situation, and in many other respects that would affect the rent.

50,313. How many families do you think Rhu would accommodate just now?—I cannot say that I have given that a thought.

50,314. Would you be in favour of the formation of any holdings of a self-sustaining kind, by which it is to be expected that the crofter would live without having recourse to labour or fishing?—Well, of course, in that case there would not be so many: the crofts would have to be larger. But I should certainly think that on a rough estimate a dozen or more, perhaps fifteen, crofters might be comfortable in Rudha and be almost independent,—certainly independent of spending their time in earning by fishing, because they would always get plenty at their door for their own consumption.

50,315. We heard to-day that there were a large number of cottars?—I have not given note of that; I believe there were, but I have only given exactly those who were paying rent to my grandfather. I know that there were a number of others.

50,316. With regard to the cottars who are to be found here at present, would you be in favour of facilities being afforded for their obtaining holdings?—Without doubt. There are many cottars throughout the country who are quite able to take crofts.

50,317. And carry on the holdings without assistance?—Well, there are individuals who would do that, but I don't know that I should say that was the general case.

50,318. Now, are there any more lands you wish to mention, besides Rudha?—There are others as good as Rudha every bit, in Knoydart. I believe the Commissioners have seen that district; it is one in which there was a very large population at one time. In fact, within the last two or three days I was reading an account in MSS. writing by Macdonell of Lochgarry, who had commanded the Mac-Mhic-Alastair and Glengarry portion of that clan, and who commanded 1200 men at Culloden, Clanranald having 500 and Keppoch 300. Where would you get that number of men now-a-days, or anything like it? Glengarry's men came from between Knoydart, Morar, and Invergarry, 1200 fighting men.

50,319. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Did you hear the evidence given this morning about Rudha?—No, I did not catch a word of it; I am rather deaf.

50,320. We were told this morning that a good many small tenants used to live there comfortably, but you now tell us from documents in your grandfather's possession that they paid no rent for their houses, giving their labour instead, and only a small nominal rent for the grazing?—I believe that was the case; I believe so, although I cannot speak positively about the matter.

50,321. And you further stated that the pasture has since deteriorated?—Yes.

50,322. Therefore, if you were to replace small tenants

Arisaig.
Æneas Ronald Macdonell.

there now on deteriorated pasture and exact a rent from them, they would not be occupying that land under the same conditions as formerly, when they were said to live comfortably?—I have stated that that would be so at first,—it would be like going to America or the prairie.

50,323. Mr Sutherland.—But you propose now to put only ten or fifteen on land that was formerly occupied by 37?—Quite so; that is to say, to cultivate it according to the present mode of cultivation: but if they were to go back to the old mode I would not be afraid of putting as many on as there were.

50,324. The Chairman.—Are you in favour generally of considerable additions being made to the land held by crofters and cottars in this district at the present moment?—There is no doubt that it would be very desirable indeed that such should be the case, but at the same time one would have to consider the possibility of doing so in some of the townships. The only way I could conceive of its being done would be by, as it were, thinning the townships and placing some of them in other advantageous situations.

50,325. Then, suppose you thinned the townships, would you add the land from which certain crofters came to the remaining holdings?—Certainly.

50,326. Then, are you in favour both of the extension of existing holdings and the formation of new holdings?—I am in favour of the extension of the present holdings, and the formation of new holdings.

50,327. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Upon whom would you put the expense of building the houses, and draining and fencing the land?—I would leave that to you, sir, and to Mr Sutherland.

50,328. Mr A. W. Nicholson of Arisaig.—Suppose there were ten or fifteen crofters established in Rudha, in holdings of sufficient size, what rent would you propose they should pay?—That is just a repetition of the question that was put to me, and which any practical man knows will depend upon the size of the croft and its capacity for cultivation, and the amount of pasture that would be attached to it.

50,329. But you have two classes of holding; one class, which I will call self-sustaining, and another where the man lives partly by his holding and partly by his labour. What or about what rent would you propose for a self-sustaining holding; and what or about what rent would you propose for a holding of the other description?—If I were told how many head of cattle he was to keep, and what extent of ground he would have for the best holding, I would tell you at once what I think would be a fair rent.

50,330. I quite understand you with reference to an individual holding; but if the whole of Rhu were divided between these ten or fifteen crofters, as I understand you say it might be, what rent would it produce?—I would have to calculate what quantity of stock it would carry just now, and that is very difficult to do in its present deteriorated condition. I held Rudha myself for some years, after the death of Mr Astley, and I had a large stock of cattle and sheep there; but it would hold nothing like the same number to-day, so much it has deteriorated since then. Of the deer itself I don't believe there is anything like the old number.

50,331. What rent had you in the Valuation Roll at that time?—I cannot tell you.

50,332. On what do you base the proposal for settling ten or fifteen,—is that a number based on any calculation, or is it just a general estimate?—It is a general estimate; of course, in my mind's eye I ran through the various portions of land and I made rough divisions, but without being minute,—it is impossible to be that offhand in this way.

50,333. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to the rents that might be paid, would you be willing that the fixing of such rents should be left to the hand of an independent tribunal?—Certainly, that would be the proper way of satisfying all parties of what would be fair.

50,334. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Your calculation of ten or fifteen crofters is founded on an intimate knowledge of Rhu,—you held it yourself?—Yes, I held it myself.

50,335. So that we could not have a better authority than yourself upon the point?—As far as my practical experience goes.

Arisaig.
Æneas Ronald Macdonell.

James Macdonald Peanmeanach, Ardnish, Arisaig (64).

James Macdonald.

(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

50,336. Mr Sutherland.—Are you a crofter?—No, I have not had land for twenty years: I reside in another man's house.

50,337. Had you land twenty years ago?—My brother and I had land; it was the grazing of three cows. My brother married before I did, and the place was too small for the two of us: his family was young, so I left.

50,338. You did not sub-divide the holding, then?—No, it would be no use for the two.

50,339. Rather than sub-divide it, you left?—I preferred to leave it to himself, as his family was so weak.

50,340. Are there many people in Ardnish?—Yes, a considerable number of tenants; it is all under crofters altogether.

50,341. How many families are in Peanmeanach?—Seven families.

50,342. And are there families without land?—There are none of them altogether without land; some have the grazing of a cow, but those who have land would take more.

50,343. Is the whole of Ardnish land in the possession of the crofters there?—Yes.

50,344. Is there a small farm at Laggan?—Yes; it is small enough for the tenant.

50,345. Can you tell us how much stock the farmer there has?—About 400 sheep, and ten or twelve cows.

50,346. Do you consider that that is the size of farm that should prevail?—That is small enough for himself; indeed it is too small for him.

50,347. Besides the farm of Laggan, how many families share in the remainder of the pasture of Ardnish?—All the rest of the crofters. There are seven in Peanmeanach, two in Glasnacardoch, two in Slochd, and three in Mullochbuie; and all the land in Ardnish is too little for these crofters.

50,348. What is Polnish?—Polnish is a place that was formerly occupied by crofters, but it is not in Ardnish; it is near Kinlochailort.

50,349. Then, do you consider that the promontory of Ardnish is sufficiently well occupied at present?—Yes, and those who have only two cows consider their holdings too small. The land is poor, and will not maintain the stock. They do not take one-half of their livelihood out of the soil.

50,350. Then, where is the land that you think could be obtained?—If Ruhda-Arisaig were allocated, that is the place. My family are scattered all over the ground, because I have no place to keep them at home.

50,351. Do the people in Ardnish do any fishing?—Yes, it is from the fishing they make their livelihood, not on the land.

50,352. What fishing do they follow?—The herring fishing.

50,353. Do the herring come into that loch?—Yes, into Loch-nan-Uamh.

50,354. At what time of the year?—About this time, the autumn.

50,355. How long do they remain?—They may remain there for a fortnight, three weeks, a month, and sometimes five or six weeks each year.

50,356. Is it about the same time each year that they come?—Yes, at the beginning of autumn, as a rule.

50,357. How are they disposed of?—They use some themselves, and they sell the rest.

50,358. Do they sell them fresh, or cured?—They send them both ways, some fresh and some salt. They send them through the district. There are some old men in Ardnish who cannot do any fishing.

50,359. Are there others besides yourself in that district who would be willing to take new holdings if they got them?—Yes.

50,360. How many do you know of?—I know four who would take new crofts there, in addition to myself.

50,361. Is there any other locality you know of which would be suitable for new holdings except Rudha?—No. I have to earn my bread by working between this and the Lowlands, but I am now getting too old, and if I get a place to maintain myself at home it would be better.

50,362. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You said four people in Ardnish want land. Did you hear Mr Macdonell say that if Rudha was divided into small holdings the best division would be into ten or twelve?—Yes, and each holding would be small enough at that rate.

50,363. Therefore, Rudha would not accommodate more than one-third of those seeking land in Arisaig?—No.—I am needful of land seeing that I have not any: I have not even the site of a house.

50,364. We were told this morning that there were at least thirty wanting land, and if Rudha would only accommodate ten, what is to become of the rest?—If only ten could be accommodated in Rudha, the others would be landless.

50,365. Is there good land within 50 miles of this, which could accommodate all those who want land?—There is not much land except the high land; there is very little near the shore except Rudha.

50,366. Therefore, whatever may be done, a considerable portion must still be disappointed in their wish to obtain more land in this neighbourhood?—I don't understand the question.

50,367. Is it possible to find enough land in this district to satisfy all those who want it?—No doubt there is land in the district, but the land is let to farmers.

50,368. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Do you agree with other witnesses that the land in the occupation of farmers is suitable for crofter holdings?—Yes, part of the farms are suitable.

50,369. And there are several large farms in the district of Arisaig?—Yes, there is the farm of Kinloid, and Keppoch, and the farm at Loch-nan-Uamh.

50,370. Would Keppoch be a suitable place for crofters?—Very suitable.

50,371. Do you know how many crofters were there before?—I do not.

50,372. Have the crofters of Ardnish got sheep?—Yes, a few.

50,373. How many have they got among them?—They have from twenty to thirty sheep each; and the crofters have five or six cows each.

50,374. Crofters have been in Ardnish for a long time, have they not?—There were tenants in Ardnish a hundred years before I was born.

50,375. Are there more tenants there than there used to be?—No.

50,376. Do you know of Ardnish ever having been let as one holding?—I never heard of its being a tack; I thought it was always under crofters.

50,377. Were crofters settled there from any other place in Arisaig?—The tenants who were removed from Gaoideal were sent to Ardnish, four in number. Some of them are no longer living, but their descendants are there.

50,378. Were they sent there for their benefit?—I don't know; I don't remember.

50,379. You know Ardnish, and you know Gaoideal?—Yes, I know them very well.

50,380. Which place would you prefer yourself?—I would prefer Gaoideal.

50,381. Can you understand their being put from Gaoideal to Ardnish for their benefit?—I cannot say: I do not know why they were shifted.

50,382. But they were shifted to a worse place than they were in?—I cannot say that, either.

50,383. But you said so already?—There were more tenants: they have more stock now than they had in Gaoideal. They had no sheep in Gaoideal but they have in Ardnish.

50,384. There is more room in Ardnish, but the land was better in Gaoideal?—Yes, better in every way.

Arisaig. — James Macdonald.

50,385. And is Gaoideal now in the Home Farm?—I cannot tell you; I was born in the braes of Arisaig, and I don't know about that.

50,386. But have you not seen Gaoideal?—Yes, I am acquainted with it.

50,387. Don't you know how it is held?—Mr Nicholson has it; it is under deer.

50,388. The Chairman.—Are there crofters' holdings in Ardnish very old and others of more recent formation?—Yes, lands that Macdonald had; his croft is divided among five of the Ardnish crofters, and in consequence of this they got the grazing of a cow each.

50,389. Are there a number of very old holdings in Ardnish and others much more recently formed?—There have been crofters in Ardnish in all my recollection.

50,390. Do you know if there are any crofters in Ardnish transferred from Rudha?—I am not aware of any except those sent from Gaoideal.

50,391. Is it your view that there is available land in this district which would greatly relieve any existing congestion?—There is plenty land in the district.

50,392. And would the occupation of such land by crofters and cottars relieve those who are left in their present holdings?—Yes.

50,393. Do you pay any rent at present?—No, I have nothing for which to pay rent. I have no land.

50,394. But you have a house?—I have not a house of my own: I live in my father-in-law's house.

50,395. Then, how do you earn your livelihood?—By labouring over the world.

50,396. What is your father-in-law's name?—Donald Macdonald.

50,397. How does he earn his livelihood?—He has land.

50,398. Do you know what rent he pays?—About £8 at present, since he got this addition. [The Secretary.—The old rent was £8, 4s. 2d. and the fair rent £4, 12s., but since then they have got the land that Angus Macdonald, Feorlin, had. The fair rent of £11, 10s. on that croft was divided into five shares, I believe. Peanmeanach consists of 20 acres arable, 5 acres 3 roods outrun, and 525 acres of common, divided into eight shares, whereof Donald Macdonald has 1⅛ shares. Since then he got a part of Angus Macdonald's holding.—Mr Nicholson.—His total rent is £4, 12s., plus £1, 1s.].

50,399. Mr A. W. Nicholson of Arisaig.—Your father-in-law is Donald Macdonald?—Yes.

50,400. Who was his father?—Alexander Macdonald.

50,401. What holding had he got at Peanmeanach; was it the same as Donald's?—Alexander Macdonald had the land first, and there were four brothers of them; the land was divided, and each got the grazing of three cows.

50,402. Is it not the case that Alexander Macdonald, the father of these four sons, had the whole of Peanmeanach, and on his death it was divided between Donald, Roderick, Ewen, Allan, and one other?—Is not that what I am telling you?

50,403. Then Peanmeanach was in the hands of one tenant?—Another brother left there and went to Goirtean-a'-Chaolais, and the remaining three were left. He had had the grazing of three cows, and the remaining brothers got his share.

50,404. Alexander Macdonald's holding was, at his death, divided into four or five for the sons?—It was divided among his four sons, but since then one of them left the place, and his share is occupied by the remaining three.

50,405. When Allan went to Goirtean-a'-Chaolais, was not his croft divided among the remaining brothers?—That is so.

50,406. Then the holding has been sub-divided by the tenant, and re-extended by the proprietor?—Yes, that is so.

50,407. Mr Sutherland.—Did the landlord agree to that sub-division of the holding, among the four brothers?—He did; it was done by Mr Nicholson's orders. [Mr Nicholson.—It was years before I came].

Arisaig. —— James Macdonald.

50,408. Mr Nicholson.—How would the tenants have viewed this if the estate had not agreed to sub-divide it, according to their wishes?—I don't know how that would be.

50,409. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—I notice that your father-in-law's rent, before it was settled by the Crofters Commission, was £8, 4s. 2d.?—Yes.

50,410. And it was reduced to £4, 12s.?—Yes.

50,411. How long was he paying £8, 4s. 2d.?—I am sure they were paying at that rate for forty or fifty years.

50,412. And his whole arrears amounted only to £12, 2s. 1d.?—Just so.

50,413. He was paying almost double the fair rent for forty years?—Yes.

Arthur William Nicholson.

ARTHUR WILLIAM NICHOLSON of Arisaig (42)—examined.

50,414. The Chairman.—I believe you have a statement to submit to us?—Yes. I am the husband of Mrs Nicholson of Arisaig, the proprietrix of the estate of Arisaig and South Morar, for whom I desire to make the following statement:—

'On the estate of Arisaig and South Morar, the only 'ground cleared for deer is on the promontory of Rhu. 'The forest has an acreage of about 3500 acres, and 'was formed about 1853. There are about 62 acres in 'the Rudha which are now under cultivation. These are 'fenced against deer, as well as the grazing on Rudha 'Farm. There are 50 acres in the forest, which, from 'appearances, may have been under cultivation at some 'previous date, besides about 13 acres, in the vicinity 'of the Mansion, grazed as part of the Home Farm. The 'arable land is partly worked by the tenant of Rudha 'Farm, and the rest is in the occupation of two stalkers, 'a joiner and a steamboat ferryman.

'The whole of the forest is on a narrow promontory 'of low-lying ground, fenced at the land end. It might 'more aptly be termed a deer park. Its small extent 'and shape are such that, to take any part which might 'appear suitable for cultivation and settlement of 'crofters, would entirely destroy it for use as a forest.

'The farms on the the estate are mostly hill farms 'of moderate size, the largest grazing about 1500 sheep, 'and if their low-lying lands were removed their value 'would be greatly decreased, as the farms would not 'then be able to winter their stock as at present.

'In the event of any pasture lands being offered to 'persons of the status of crofters I do not know of any 'who would be able to stock a new holding properly 'and erect the necessary houses, buildings, and fences, 'and put in the drains. I may remark that better houses 'are required now than formerly when crofters erected 'their own houses as has been stated to-day.

'Even supposing that the land was stocked and 'equipped, I am very doubtful whether it could be 'profitably occupied by small tenants. I am frequently 'told by crofters who have had fair rents fixed by the 'Crofters Commission that their crofts do not pay, and 'I am certainly of opinion that the land could not be 'worked to a profit while paying a rent equal or 'approximating to its rent as a deer forest.

'Although the forest is low-lying ground there are 'no crofts contiguous to it, so no part is suitable for the 'extension of present crofts, and its utilization for 'crofters would entail the establishment of houses, 'buildings, fences, &c., &c., de novo.

'I submit that there are sufficient crofters on the 'estate for all the employment that exists, and that 'the introduction of other crofters would increase the 'supply of labour, and thus prejudicially affect the 'state of these already here.

'I may here contrast the value of Rudha as a deer 'forest and as a possible sheep farm or farms. Esti- 'mating it at 3500 acres and allowing 3 acres per sheep, 'it might graze nearly 1200 sheep. At a rental of '1s. 6d. per sheep, the rent would be £90 as against 'the present £240. Arisaig.

'It must also be borne in mind that the letting value 'of Arisaig mansion-house would suffer if parted from the forest. Arthur William Nicholson.

'In conclusion of my remarks on this head it is my 'opinion that Rudha (promontory) cannot be put to a 'better use than at present looking to the benefit of 'the community here. A better rent is obtained from 'the ground as a forest than could otherwise be got, 'and the whole of this as well as the other rents of the 'estate are spent on the property. It is also within 'my knowledge that the local expenditure of the 'shooting tenant averages fully £400 a year besides 'the rent paid to the proprietrix.

'In submitting this statement I desire to point out 'that both Mrs Nicholson and I have shown ourselves 'by no means averse to the extension of existing small 'holdings when suitable opportunities occur. For 'proof of this I may state that since 1883—from 'which date I have personal knowledge—additions 'have been made from lands tenanted by others than 'crofters to nineteen out of the thirty-seven* crofter 'holdings on Arisaig and South Morar estates, and 'that there also have been thirteen cases of enlargement 'of crofts out of crofting lands falling into the proprietor's 'hands. During this period no crofter has been 'evicted. It should, however, be understood that in all 'cases but three (in which the rent remained unchanged) 'there has been considerable loss of rent where the 'extension has been from farm lands, while the other 'cases have afforded no increase of rents. Potato 'ground has also been found for some of the village 'tenants.

(Signed) ARTHUR W. NICHOLSON.

50,415. Is this forest of Rudha the only forest on your estate?—Yes, I should like to state in this connection that there was a bit of ground on the outside which up to about the year 1882 was cleared for deer, but it was then put under sheep again.

50,416. And is it now part of a sheep farm?—It is now part of a sheep farm.

50,417. Which farm is that?—West Glenbeasdale, which is worked in connection with Kinloid.

50,418. And by whom is it held?—I farm it myself.

50,419. What is the rent of that farm?—It is estimated in the Valuation Roll at £50.

50,420. Is this forest held under lease by a tenant, or is it in the hands of the estate?—It is under lease, but this is the last year of the lease.

50,421. The lease has been running on for some years?—Yes, for five seasons.

50,422. You speak of a rent of £240 for the forest: has that always been the rent?—Since the tenant has had it I have never made any alteration in the Valuation Roll though I may have made private reductions.

50,423. Is there a farm called Rudha Farm held by a tenant?—Yes.

50,424. What rent does he pay?—He is put down in the Valuation Roll as paying a rent of £50, but there was a reduction given him below the rent in the lease.

50,425. The farm is held under lease?—Yes.

50,426. When does the lease expire?—At Whitsunday next.

50,427. Whereabouts is Rudha Farm?—At the end of the promontory.

50,428. It is that piece of land jutting out into the sea?—Yes; and it includes Rhumach.

50,429. Then is Rhumach hill a grazing attached to that farm?—No, it is only a piece of fenced arable land, about 15 acres in extent.

50,430. You referred to the farms on this estate,—may I ask how many farms there are on the estate above the crofter limit of £30 of rent?—There are twelve.

50,431. Could you give us their names?—Kinlochailort, Kinloch-nan-Uamh, Laggan, Rudha, Mains,

* See letter of 28th August 1894, page 1240.

Arisaig Inn, Keppoch, Kinloid, Scamadale, and Goirtean-a'-Chaolais a small farm of £35, on the Arisaig portion; and on the South Morar portion, Traigh and Cross.

50,432. Are any of these farms rented at over £100?—One.

50,433. Which is it?—Kinloch-nan-Uamh.

50,434. What is the rent of it?—£110.

50,435. May we take it that the rents of all these farms have in recent years suffered some reduction?—You may.

50,436. Were any of them let eight or ten years ago at a rent of over £100?—Yes.

50,437. Just give us the names of these?—Kinloch-nan-Uamh, Kinlochailort, and Kinloid.

50,438. And the other farms also have suffered reductions no doubt?—Yes: there is not a farm on the estate which has not.

50,439. What is the average reduction of rent on these farms,—what percentage?—I should say 35 per cent. or something like that; between 30 and 35 per cent. I can give you the actual rate if you like before you leave.*

50,440. If you please. I should be glad to have it. Are all these grazing farms, or are any of them what are called in the low country arable farms?—The Mains Farm is chiefly an arable farm; it keeps only 100 sheep.

50,441. What extent of arable land under rotation, is there on it?—There are about 115 acres of land which has been cropped at some time or other.

50,442. But these 115 acres, may I take it, have not been cropped for a good number of years?—Some parts have been cropped, and others not.

50,443. Has any part not been cropped at all within the last fifteen or twenty years, out of these 115 acres?—No, I think not.

50,444. How far back does your connection with the estate extend?—Eleven years.

50,445. And it has not been cropped within your recollection?—There are pieces which I have not seen cropped, but I think from their appearance and from my own knowledge that these were cropped very shortly before that.

50,446. Then the other farms may be described as grazing farms?—Yes, except that I was going to add Keppoch Farm is a small farm which is chiefly arable.

50,447. That is the farm that lies into the crofters' land pretty closely?—It is backed by the crofters' grazings.

50,448. And, I suppose, some of the other farms are close to the crofter townships, either marching with them or at no distance from them?—No, there are no crofter townships alongside of Kinlochailort; there is a short length between the crofters' march and Kinloch-nan-Uamh, but none at Rudha. Kinloid you have heard about, Glenan Cross you have also heard about; there is some land contiguous to crofters there certainly.

50,449. And Goirtean-a'-Chaolais?—That is a small farm which lies,—well, the march is partly the sea, partly Keppoch Farm, and partly the Keppoch crofters.

50,450. You refer to the crofters who live in what is called Back-of-Keppoch?—Yes.

50,451. Now about houses; have the crofters' and cottars' houses on the Arisaig estate been mainly put up by the tenants or by the landlord, or have they mainly been erected by the tenants with assistance from the landlord?—I may say outright that the houses have been mainly erected by the landlord, and I have not in my recollection any case of a crofter's house which has been erected entirely by the tenant.

50,452. Perhaps you would put it this way, that you cannot recollect any individual case of a dwelling-house and steading having been erected entirely either by the landlord or by the crofter?—No, I would not put it that way, because I know plenty of cases where the houses have been erected by the landlord.

50,453. With crofters' labour?—I was about to add,—some of them with crofters' labour,—the crofter doing the labour and the landlord finding the materials, but I think I am right in saying that there are cases where the whole buildings have been done by the landlord. But such is not the general rule.

50,454. I fancy not; at least it would be very unusual if that were the case.—Well, I fancy more building is done here by the landlord than is usual on most estates.

50,455. Can you tell us any individual case where the whole of the outlay and the whole of the labour has been expended by the landlord?—No, I don't think I can: I have some cases in my mind where the houses have been erected entirely by the landlord, but, so far as I can recollect, most of the other buildings,—barns and byres, &c.,—have been erected partly by the landlord and partly by the tenant.

50,456. In that connection, has there been to your observation an improvement in the houses of the crofters since the passing of the Act, or a building of new houses?—I don't know of any new houses built by crofters since the Act,—we have got one in course of erection now, where the estate is giving materials and the tenant doing the labour; but it is right to add that as the rent in this case had been recently reduced, a low rate of interest is to be paid by the tenant on the estate outlay.

50,457. Where is that?—Port-na-Luchaig.

50,458. Would you say that the houses generally were in a pretty good condition at the date of the passing of the Act?—I believe so.

50,459. Did the late proprietor spend a good deal of money on the estate?—Certainly.

50,460. Including crofters' and other small tenants' houses?—Yes.

50,461. And gave a great deal of work to the tenants on the estate?—While the place was making there was, of course, a great deal of work going on, but after the mansion was completed, and the grounds laid out, the work naturally fell off.

50,462. You mentioned an extension of holdings to some crofters. Are there some townships on the estate which, speaking frankly, you would like to see an extension given to?—I have had that matter under consideration, and I cannot say that, at the present time, I have any extension in view which I think is possible.

50,463. Do you mean possible with reference to existing leases?—No, I meant with regard to other circumstances,—circumstances of farms, and so on.

50,464. I don't want you to disclose anything, but just tell us what you mean,—what kind of circumstances?—I don't know any cases where the crofts could be extended without injury to the farms. That is what I mean.

50,465. You don't know of any case where an extension could be granted without material damage?—Without material damage to a farm.

50,466. But apart from the question of material damage to neighbouring farms, are you of opinion that there are townships which ought to have an extension?—That means that the crofters' holdings would be better if they were bigger?

50,467. Well, it has a twofold meaning, and it is quite right that I should explain it. It means this: whatever the effect of material damage upon a neighbouring farm, would you in certain cases be inclined to advise an extension of grazings, and in individual cases an extension of arable?—I may say, answering generally, if I may do so, that I am as willing now to extend crofts, where I can see that it can be suitably done, as I have been on previous occasions.

50,468. I am taking that for granted: but what I would like to get from you, if you are in a position to answer it, is this: are there cases of townships where, if you could, you would both grant extension of grazings and increase the arable of the individual holdings?—Certainly I would, if I had the land that I thought I could do it with.

50,469. I take it then that you are of opinion that there are cases,—there are townships and there are individual holdings, requiring extension, if such exten-

* Mr Nicholson has since explained that the reduction is 'about 28 per cent. taking into account the capital outlays.'

sion could be reasonably granted by the landlord?—I don't think there are any urgent cases.

50,470. Are there any cases that are requiring consideration? Are there cases where, if you had a free hand, looking to the narrowness of the holding and the small limit of the grazing, you would extend the arable and the grazing too?—Yes, I don't mind saying that I would, it being understood that I am answering a hypothetical question.

50,471. Now, I would like to know from you, is there less employment given on the estate to crofters and other small tenants than used to be given? I ask simply as a matter of fact and not one of feeling?—Certainly, there is less than when Mr Astley was forming the place and building the mansion-house and improving the grounds.

50,472. To what extent do crofters and small tenants get employment just now? Do they get employment in any considerable number?—No, not in any considerable number.

50,473. Is the employment constant employment, or is it a precarious livelihood?—Among the crofters it is not regular. There are certain crofters who do certain jobs for me, fencing and dyking and so on.

50,474. But, I suppose, I may take it that it is intermittent and precarious?—Certainly.

50,475. We heard a great deal about cottars,—thirty cottars, and so forth, who have no land but who apparently have houses that have been built by the estate; and these cottars are asking us now to consider the question of more land. Do you suggest any practical mode of our meeting that complaint, or do you suppose that the existing state of matters should be indefinitely continued?—I do not see any way out of the present state of matters. It has been suggested that Rudha would form holdings for some of these cottars: but grant that Rudha is suitable, where are the houses? Here at the Strath, the nearest holdings on Rudha Farm would be over a mile and a quarter away from the houses. I heard it suggested that these cottars who now live in the village should get holdings on Rudha. Either they are going to live in their present houses, which are suitable for men of their class, and work their land from there, or they will have to have new houses. In the former case I submit that it is not possible for a man to live a distance of 1½ to 2 or 3 miles from his holding; and in the latter case, what is to be done with the present cottars' houses?

50,476. That is the difficulty you foresee?—That is one difficulty which suggests itself to me. Of course, I have already tried by means of the questions which I have put to witnesses to show that there are other difficulties as to buildings and so on; but as regards these individual men who say they want land, I say that even if Rudha were suitable, and if it were to be divided among them, the people could not live in the Strath and work their holdings properly from there.

50,477. But supposing the difficulty arising from their vacating the houses in the village were got over and they got houses or built houses for themselves upon Rudha, are you of opinion that they might get on there very profitably upon the whole in ordinary circumstances?—The present crofters, having had their rents fixed by the Crofters Commission, tell me that the crofts do not pay, and that there is not labour enough in the place for them to make a good livelihood, and I don't see how you are going to improve their position.

50,478. You put that consideration forward as an argument against extending the present crofter system?—Yes, against the increase of this class.

50,479. Then is your solution of the difficulty or problem presented to us by these thirty cottars simply this, that if they cannot get along where they are, with houses built by the landlord, they must go away?—My view of it is that their case is that of the poorer persons in any town, in Fort-William, or in Glasgow, who have no land. If they cannot make their living out of their labour, like people of other places, they must go somewhere else.

50,480. At the same time, in the abstract, I suppose you would concur in this view, that if it could be arranged with due respect to the rights of all concerned, it would be desirable from the general point of view to retain such persons in the localities where they are at present placed?—I am not at all sure of that, looking to their own advantage. I have had it said to me by crofters here,—some of the most hard-working and steadiest of the crofters—that they would not stop a moment if they got a chance of somewhere else to go.

Arisaig.
Arthur William Nicholson.

50,481. But,—dealing again with the matter in the abstract,—would you not be in favour of such a course of procedure adopted as I say with reasonable regard to the rights of all concerned as would tend to preserve that class of the community in the localities where they are placed?—I certainly would not be in favour of increasing it.

50,482. Then, of course, you concede, I daresay, that if it is not to be increased, or reasonable facilities afforded, it must also necessarily in some cases decrease?—Yes, I think so.

50,483. Then, would you be in favour of the continuation of a system which might lead, in course of years, to the entire exodus of such people from a particular district?—This is a very large question, my lord, and one which I can scarcely answer off-hand. Perhaps you may say that I should have been prepared to answer all questions; but I do not pose as an authority on the crofting question. But my own view, sorry though I should be personally to see persons who are attached to the place, and who have lived on it all their lives, go away, is that they should not be treated differently from any other class in the community, whether my own class or any other, if the force of circumstances is hard upon them.

50,484. That is to say, you would allow the force of circumstances to operate, and you would interpose no check by legislation or arrangement otherwise?—I fear that I do not foresee any permanent good.

50,485. Mr Sutherland.—I think most of the questions which I would have had to put have been already disposed of by the frank way in which you have stated your position. But in reference to the matter about which the Chairman has just asked you, I presume from the tenor of your answers that you do not believe in the basis on which the Act of 1886 was passed? Is it unfair to assume that practically your position amounts to that?—Do not believe in it?

50,486. Well, that you consider there was not sufficient justification for legislation on the question?—My experience is small: I have not had any general experience of the question up and down the coast and through the islands, and I only profess to speak of what I have really seen in this small corner; and so far as that goes, I doubt whether there was any necessity for legislation: and I think, if I may say so, that the advantages which crofters have got within recent times have been obtained outside of legislation,—any extension of holdings or improvements have been done apart entirely from the force brought to bear by legislation.

50,487. But you have had very good opportunities of knowing that the chief arguments in favour of the passing of the Crofters Act were mainly historical, arising out of the peculiarities of the history of the people in the Highlands?—I have heard that.

50,488. Well, it has been asserted, and, to my mind, at least, satisfactorily proved, that their treatment in the past has been exceptional; that certain circumstances,—call them what you like,—pressed more heavily upon the people of the Highlands than they did elsewhere, and that the exceptional treatment in the past necessitated exceptional treatment in the present?—I have heard it stated, and I will grant that it was the case in a number of instances; but whether the treatment which brought about this legislation was anything like universal, I doubt.

50,489. It would not of course be similar in every locality,—it would vary in degree, and I grant that you are perfectly consistent in taking the view which you do. So that the position you have stated with regard to the case of cottars not being different from that of poor people in Fort-William or in Glasgow is differentiated by the fact that the history of the past is a little bit different,—at least that has been the justification for the legislation?—That is alleged.

50,490. And besides being alleged, it was sufficient to induce Parliament to pass the Act of 1886?—But that Act does not deal with cottars.

50,491. The crofters and the cottars are the same people however. For instance, we had a cottar here to-day giving evidence, who was a crofter at one time?—I am quite well aware of that, but I only meant that the Act does not give any benefit to the cottar. [The Chairman.—Except that on renunciation of holding he gets compensation.]

50,492. You personally have got no responsibility for the distribution of the population on this estate? The present distribution was practically before you had anything to do with the estate?—Yes.

50,493. But, however, you adopt it?—I do not see my way to make any change, and I am not willing to make any change.

50,494. I want to make it quite clear that you personally had no responsibility in the matter of their distribution?—Oh, no.

50,495. You stated that you thought there were enough crofters on the estate for the work there was for them to do?—That is my belief.

50,495A. Is it then your view that an estate ought to have only as many crofters as it can provide with labour?—No, but my object in stating that is this: it has been stated in evidence to-day that these men do not ask for holdings large enough to support them entirely, but that they ask for holdings from which, in conjunction with other labour they could make a decent livelihood. That was my reason for saying so.

50,496. Your remark then only applied to that particular observation?—Yes, but that I think was stated more than once,—it was the general drift of the evidence.

50,497. And I think I may say that such has not been at all the drift of our evidence elsewhere, speaking generally?—That may be so, but I think I am right in saying that it has been the general drift of the evidence to-day.

50,498. Yes, you are quite right as to that.

50,499. Mr Gordon.—In view of the railway coming to this part of the country, do you anticipate an improvement in the condition of the people generally?—I am in hopes that it will enable, in the first place, those able-bodied men who can work and will work (and I am glad to say there are a considerable number of them) to get a certain sum of money, which if they be careful may enable them to get small holdings, such as a farm, or if they prefer it, to acquire fishing-boats.

50,500. You mean out of the profits of the labour?—Yes. Beyond that, I am afraid it is doubtful how much good the railway will do to the district.

50,501. After the railway is completed, there will always be a certain number of men required as surfacemen,—possibly between this and Kinlochailort, thirty, forty, or fifty men: then there will be another staff of men of a superior class required for the stations in the capacity of porters, and to hire carts, &c. These may not all be drawn from the quarter, but a good many of them will in all probability be taken from the inhabitants of this neighbourhood?—I trust they will.

50,502. That would to a certain extent afford an outlet for the people, and especially for the class of men who occupy small holdings?—Yes.

50,503. Then, do you anticipate that this part of the country might to some extent become a fashionable resort for,—I would not say tourists exactly, but residenters during a certain period of the year?—I take it that we shall see more. Even with the present communications I think that if not every year, every period of five years sees more tourists and people coming to the district; but I must say they come for a very short time in the year.

50,504. We have not seen the place yet, and therefore I am unable to judge myself, but I would like to ask whether those houses which have been built for the crofter or cottar class are of a nature that would be sufficient to accommodate a respectable family for a longer or shorter period?—Some few of them might be, but I don't quite know where the tenant would live in the meantime.

50,505. Possibly they might live in their present houses and build other ones to accommodate the strangers. Now, if the railway comes here and proves a success, one result will be that the fishing of this district will be very considerably developed?—I hope so: I hope there is really some prospect of an improvement there.

50,506. Would you or would the proprietrix be willing to grant small holdings in such a place as Arisaig here for a fishing population,—I mean for men who would devote their time mainly to fishing?—I cannot answer that question: I have not had it in my mind.

50,507. Would you not anticipate that the railway would be a likely means of developing that industry?—Yes, it may be. Of course, Arisaig itself is not a good place; there is not a harbour, and it is an exceedingly bad place to get to.

50,508. Is Mallaig harbour on your estate?—No, it is on the Lovat Estate.

50,509. Are there not good bays on the south shore of Rhu, on the forest ground? Are there not any safe harbours there?—No, I don't think there is one; unless you haul up the boat.

50,510. Is there any place on the south shore where fishermen's holdings could be got?—There are no good harbours.

50,511. But suppose there was such a place as they thought they could utilise for a harbour, would it be possible to find space for a small fishing population along the south shore of the Rhu Forest without material damage to the forest?—No, I maintain most clearly that the whole of the Rhu Forest from its configuration and size, if touched at all, will be spoiled as a forest.

50,512. No doubt, if it was materially interfered with?—If there were any settlements made anywhere along the shore, they would come right into the forest.

50,513. Now with regard to the conversion of larger holdings into smaller holdings, have you any idea of the cost that would be entailed in the division of a holding of say 60 or 70 acres into six holdings of 10 or 12 acres each?—Do you mean the cost of fencing and of buildings?

50,514. They might do without fencing, perhaps, but they cannot do without buildings. How much would it cost to build a small house and steading for a croft of ten acres?—I don't think I can build a house under £100, and the byre and barn I take it will cost at least £40 or £50 more, built of stone and lime and corrugated iron.

50,515. I think that is a moderate enough estimate?—I have put it as low as I could, though in a written estimate I worked it out higher.

50,516. Therefore, if you were to say an average cost of £150, that would mean a total cost of £900, less the value of the present buildings which could be utilised?—Yes.

50,517. Now, would you, as a proprietor, supposing that that money had to be borrowed, be inclined to accept responsibility for the interest?—No.

50,518. You think either the money would have to be found by the crofter himself, or he would have to be responsible for the interest if the money was borrowed?—Yes. I don't think that I should be inclined to undertake that.

50,519. Would you think it fair for a proprietor in a general way to undertake that responsibility?—I do not see why he should be called upon to do so: I fail to see what return he could get for the risk he would necessarily run.

50,520. Therefore you consider that, if this money requires to be borrowed, it would require to come either from Government or whatever other body might lend it, on the absolute responsibility of the tenant?—Yes, I do; and I think, if a great deal of it was not found by the tenant, it would not be worth much as a security.

50,521. So far as your opinion goes as to the crofters or cottars, or other applicants who are likely to ask for land, do you think that the greater part of the money required for buildings would have to be borrowed?—Without professing to know the circumstances of every individual tenant on the place, I think I have a fair knowledge of what they are; and, as I have said, I do not know more than one who could find any sum like £100 to establish himself in a new holding.

50,522. Then there are very few of them hereabout who could start fair on their own resources, even on a croft of 10 acres?—I think there are hardly any; and I think that opinion is borne out by the evidence taken to-day.

50,523. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—You put a question to-day, Mr Nicholson, to bring out the fact that if there was less work the population was getting less on the estate. You say, therefore, that the population is decreasing?—I do not say it, but the witness had stated that the population was decreasing. That was his own statement, and my point was that, on his own showing, though the work was less, the population, as he stated, was also less.

50,524. But if you knew that his statement as to the population was inaccurate, what was the use of founding a question upon it?—I did not say that it was.

50,525. I only want to find out whether it is your opinion that it is decreasing. Is the population decreasing?—Since when?

50,526. Say since the houses were built?—I cannot tell you, because I have no means of knowing what the population was when the houses were built.

50,527. What is the population on the estate just now?—I believe it is about 700, roughly speaking,—between 600 and 700; but the exact figures can be easily got from the returns.

50,528. Are the crofters on the estate getting fewer? Do some give up their holdings?—In eleven years I can recall four cases of holdings which have fallen in through crofters giving up their holdings; and I have a sort of notion that there may have been one or two more cases perhaps.

50,529. How many crofters are there altogether?—Thirty-seven.*

50,530. I see that in a statement made by Mr N. B. Mackenzie, the then factor on the Arisaig estate, before Lord Napier's Commission, he gives an analysis of the tenantry, and he says:—'The following classification 'speaks for itself:—

'Tenants paying over	£100	and under	£200,	3
'	,,	,,	30	,,	100,	10
'Crofters	,,	,,	2	,,	30,	66.'

What do you say to that?—I would suggest that when that statement was made, it was before the Crofters Act was passed, and there was no proper definition of a crofter. Small tenants were spoken of indifferently then as crofters, whether they had land or not.

50,531. But is not this class pretty much in accordance with the definition in the Act, 'Crofters paying 'over £2 and under £30'? Is not that pretty much a description of a crofter?—Yes, it is, but I take it that at that time some of those who were not really crofters but cottars were classed generally as crofters. I think I am right in saying generally that the word 'crofter' was a term applied generally to small tenants in those days, until there was a statutory definition.

50,532. It might no doubt include some who would now be termed cottars, having only a house. How many cottars are there on the estate now?—I cannot tell you the present number, but there has been no alteration. I think the two together would make sixty-six. If you would not mind taking it from me, the cottars are the same in number as they were; there has been no alteration practically in their numbers. We have heard it in evidence to-day that there are thirty cottars on the estate, and I say there are thirty-seven crofters; that gives us sixty-seven.

* See letter dated 28th August 1894, page 1240.

50,533. Quite so; but mark what Mr Mackenzie goes on to say:—

'Cottars on crofts,	15
'Cottars not on crofts,	13
'Cottagers in the village paying £2 and upwards,	26.'

So that you have a vast number of cottars along with those whom he terms crofters?—I do not pledge myself to the number of cottars. I am quite willing, if the Commission would like it, to put in a definite statement. I would prefer to do that.*

50,534. This shows on the face of it a great decrease in the number of crofters?—Well, you have not had any evidence, I take it, to that effect.

50,535. I only show you that this statement of Mr Mackenzie on the face of it, compared with what we have heard to-day, shows a great decrease of crofters; because we have here more cottars than are given by you and more crofters also?—I say that I do not pledge myself to the number of cottars; I do pledge myself to this fact, that there is no material decrease in the number of cottars from that date down to the present time.

50,536. But that won't explain the great difference here?—No, I don't think it does. I don't know whether you attach much importance to it, but I cannot say that I see it is very important myself, from my point of view.

50,537. Whether they are decreasing or not decreasing?—Yes, if you can prove that they are decreasing; but have you had any evidence to prove that?

50,538. This is surely an authority to which I can refer as showing the numbers then on the estate, and I want to find out the numbers there are now?—Well, I am perfectly prepared, as I say, if the Commission would like it, to make up a statement of the number of crofters and cottars on the estate, and then you will be able to see the facts. I should like to do so. [Mr Gordon.—Have you not rated the number of cottars too low? I think we heard it stated as 49 or 50, which would make a total of 86.]—It was not my statement that there were thirty; there may be many more.

50,539. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that there had been thirteen enlargements of present crofters' holdings from other crofters' holdings?—Yes.

50,540. Does that account in any way for a decrease?—No, because though thirteen crofters got enlargements it was not at the expense of other thirteen. Take the case of Angus Macdonald already referred to: his croft gave enlargement to about six other crofters; and the same thing happened in other cases. When one croft fell in, it helped to enlarge more than one other croft.

50,541. Then how many vacancies are represented by these thirteen enlargements?—I have said that I can recall four cases, and perhaps there may be one or two others that I cannot at present name.

50,542. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—What was done with the houses of the six?—In the first case that presents itself to me, the house was turned into a byre for one of the crofters who had a good slated house when he got the enlargement. A similar thing happened in the last case that we are just talking of, that of Angus over at Ardnish. In a third case, where the croft fell in two years ago, the house was made over to the tenant of the croft. I do not quite know what use he is putting it to at present, but he is living in it. Speaking generally, the houses (which were black houses) have been made over to the tenants who got the crofts.

50,543. Were there applications from people in the districts for crofts that were vacant?—Yes, there were in some cases from men who already had crofts and who wanted the whole of the vacant croft added to theirs; and in some cases from persons who had not crofts.

50,544. But may I take it that in every case where a vacancy occurred it has not been filled up by any new crofter?—You may take it that in every case where a vacancy has occurred the croft has been divided among other crofters.

50,545. So that that was the policy, and the policy tends towards a diminution of the number of crofters?

* See Letter of 28th August 1894, page 1240.

—The policy tends towards the enlargement of the crofts.

50,546. And the diminution of the number of the crofters,—that is so, is it not?—Of course it is.

50,547. You stated, I think, that townships would be the better of an extension of their grazing as well as arable land?—I said in the abstract, perhaps, some of them might. The question was put hypothetically by the Chairman, and I said perhaps that might be so. It is not my view of the policy which should be followed, and I have made that quite plain, I think.

50,548. Of course you have made it quite plain; but the question is whether the holdings are not too small, and whether the occupants would not be more comfortable if they had larger holdings. Don't you think they would be more comfortable?—Some of them would, and some of them would not.

50,549. Now, in the neighbourhood of some of these townships is there not land that might be added to their holdings?—No.

50,550. Why not?—I have already said that I do not know of any land which could be divided among any of the townships without serious detriment to farms.

50,551. But if they got the land, it would be a benefit to them? There is land contiguous to them?—In hardly any case is there land actually contiguous.

50,552. Are there crofters contiguous to Kinloid farm?—Yes.

50,553. Is there not land there that would be of benefit if they got the use of it?—If you take away the arable land first, then you will get the hill contiguous, but at present you do not. I do not think that these crofters want more arable land.

50,554. Could they not get grazing ground without touching the arable land?—It is just possible that they could find a way, but that is about all. It would be merely a narrow strip.

50,555. You think, I take it, that it would damage the letting value of the remainder?—I do, because if you go past the arable land you come to the low-lying ground of the farm, and if you are going to take that from the farm for any other purpose you will at once damage the farm.

50,556. You look more to the fact that there would be a greater damage to the farm than benefit to the crofters?—Yes, I take it that the farmer is part of the community, and as such is entitled to consideration.

50,557. In your opinion are the crofts too small? Would not a larger size of crofts be more comfortable, and of benefit to the crofters?—In some cases it might, and in some not. One man is a fisherman, and another is not. We must judge each case on its merits; at least that is what I have tried to do.

50,558. Taking a general view of the crofts here, is it your view that they are too small or too large, or are they the proper size?—Some are small enough, no doubt, but if a man has labour or any trade they are not too small; if he has fishing, they are not too small. Others are bigger, but they are certainly not enough to give a man his livelihood; I grant you that.

50,559. There was one statement which you made, that you heard from the crofters that their crofts did not pay?—The statement has been made to me frequently.

50,560. What do you think is to be conveyed by that?—That crofting is hardly a profitable occupation.

50,561. Might it not be this, that they could not make a living by the croft alone?—I don't know; I only give it as it was given me; that is how I read it.

50,562. What meaning do you attach to the words?—I have given my meaning; that crofting is not a profitable occupation.

50,563. Might it not be a profitable enough occupation although they could not make their living by it alone?—Of course, if you alter the system, you may make it profitable; I am only speaking of the present system.

50,564. I am only speaking of the present system. It might be held that it did not pay, simply because they do not make their whole living by it; but it is quite possible to conceive of its paying in another sense,—that it was a great help, for example, when they could not get work?—I take it that when a man says the place does not pay, he means that he cannot make enough out of it to pay his rent, and pay his own labour. Then I say it is not profitable.

50,565. Are they willing to throw up these crofts?—No, they are not.

50,566. Although they do not pay; so that we must judge of the meaning of the word 'pay' from their conduct. They are attached to their crofts after all?—Exactly; there are certain sentimental considerations which actuate them. Of course, they have my sympathy; they do not wish to leave.

50,567. But would they suffer very material damage if they were deprived of their crofts?—I think you should examine some of the crofters on that point.

50,568. You give the statement here as having a certain weight, and I want to know what weight to attach to that particular statement?—I give the words and the meaning which I attach to them.

50,569. I want to make sure that the wrong meaning is not attached to them by putting the words down simply, and I want to make it clear that although the crofters may have said that to you, at the same time they may consider it a very great benefit to them to have the croft?—I think you had better get that from themselves.

50,570. The extent of the forest, according to your statement, is 3500 acres?—I believe that is about right.

50,571. Was it ever less than it is at present, since it was formed in 1853?—I cannot answer the question except as to my own period.

50,572. How far back does your period go?—Eleven years.

50,573. To 1884?—Say 1883.

50,574. The forest has not been increased since then?—No. I think I am correct in saying that the forest has been decreased,—that certain patches have been taken from it and fenced for cultivation, but that happened prior to 1883.

50,575. And still it extends to 3500 acres?—I said so.

50,576. I observe that before Lord Napier's Commission the following question was put by Mr Fraser-Mackintosh to the factor who had then the management of the estate 'How much of that was under deer until 'lately?' and he answers: 'I should fancy something like '2000 acres.' That seems to show that 2000 acres was the former extent of the forest?—That is his statement. I do not know that there was ever any measurement made, but in any case I had nothing to do with that. [The Chairman.—The answer given by Mr N. B. Mackenzie was not a very confident one.] [Mr Gordon.—Are you sure the extent is 3500 acres?—I would judge it to be only about 3000. I estimated it at the very outside, and I said 'about' 3500.]

50,577. A question is put to the same gentlemen by Mr Cameron: 'Would you tell us exactly the present 'acreage of the ground which is called a deer forest?' and the answer is: 'I have been endeavouring to 'calculate it from the Ordnance Survey, and it seems some-'thing like 1500 acres.' So that if this statement made by the factor is correct, the area under deer must have been doubled since then?—Well, I may state most distinctly that it has not been increased in any way since that time.

50,578. But is it not an extraordinary thing that statements furnished to a Royal Commission by the factor of an estate should turn out to be so very inaccurate that the area was double what he stated it to be?—I am not called on to support that evidence: I I had nothing to do with preparing that evidence.

50,579. This is the factor on your estate?—I had nothing to do with making up that statement. I have had something to do with the making up of my own statement, and I ask that it should be considered on its merits.

50,580. If your statement is correct, then his statement could not have been correct, and it certainly shakes the value of such evidence to find such a great discrepancy as that,—you saying 3500 and he saying

Arisaig.

Arthur William Nicholson.

1500?—Well, as I say, I have put the 3500 so as to be quite sure in my own mind that I was not understating the area.

50,581. The Chairman.—Would you be disposed to ask us, in view of this question, to regard Mr N. B. Mackenzie's evidence as reliable?—I do not know how far you can expect me to answer that question I have no doubt, of course, that Mr Mackenzie gave, as he thought, a correct estimate.

50,582. It does not coincide with your knowledge of the areas so far as your knowledge goes?—It certainly does not, but I am quite prepared for you to find that I have overstated the figures.

50,583. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Then with regard to this forest, I think there is a statement that the rent which it at present gives under deer could not be got if it were put to any other use?—That is my view.

50,584. What do you get for this deer forest?—It is down in the Valuation Roll at £240. At least, it is included in the total of £390, and as the other shootings were let on one occasion for £150 I value the remainder at £240.

50,585. Does that include the house?—No.

50,586. The Chairman.—Suppose money to be advanced to crofters with the view of forming new holdings, would you consider that such money would be reasonably secured?—I cannot say; I have not had any experience to enable me to answer that question.

50,587. Mr Gordon opened the important subject of the railway, and he put a material question to you which I should like to put in another form. Suppose the formation of this line to Mallaig were to lead to considerable employment being available to persons in this neighbourhood, would you, as a matter of estate management, be in favour of considerable facilities being afforded for the formation of holdings suitable to persons employed on the railway?—I most certainly would be most disinclined to do anything to prevent or retard the formation of holdings for an undertaking which may benefit the community so much as that.

50,588. We will suppose the railway made or in course of construction, and that there is employment for a considerable number of people more than at present; also that a demand for holdings on the Arisaig estate suitable to persons employed on the railway were to arise; would you, as a matter of estate management, be in favour of granting every facility possible for the formation of such holdings, so as to enable the employees to live in the locality near their work?—I most certainly would. I have no hesitation in saying that it would be my desire to further the working of an undertaking like that.

50,589. Even though the formation of such holdings might perceptibly affect the value of the lands, farms, or forests or other holdings from which the holdings were taken?—Well, of course I must qualify my statement by saying that I should have to take into consideration, as these proposals were made, every circumstance as to what the loss might be in one way or another, and the gain in another. That would be the business point of view, but I start most distinctly with an inclination to do my best to assist the working of a railway of that kind.

50,590. Or may I put it this way: you would start the consideration of that question with an inclination to cast the balance in favour of the employees?—I would start with a favourable inclination, if I may put it like that.

50,591. Mr Sutherland.—Do you take it, then, Mr Nicholson, that the fixed policy of the estate management is to maintain the present distribution of land,—the one that really exists at the present moment?—No; my policy has been to extend the small holdings where suitable opportunities occur. My policy has been that since I have had anything to do with it and that will be my policy in the future. I am not at all inclined to stereotype the present state of things.

50,592. Then we may take it that the conditions are such that a suitable opportunity very seldom occurs, because practically the distribution is the same ever since you were connected with the estate?—No, I think if you would kindly allow me to call your attention to the fact that I made nineteen extensions of crofts from lands other than those occupied by crofters,—out of farm lands in fact. 'Additions have been 'made from lands tenanted by other than crofters to 'nineteen out of thirty-seven* crofter holdings in 'Arisaig and South Morar estates.'

Arisaig.

Arthur William Nicholson.

50,593. Have you any idea of the area involved in these additions?—No, I admit that it is not very large; some have been small, but others of considerable amount. You heard of Keppoch getting 48 acres additional grazing.

50,594. It struck me that on an estate where the landlord has done so much in the way of erecting houses that perhaps the system of extensions might have been carried advantageously a little further; when you were erecting houses you might further utilise the expenditure by giving them a little more land?—That is what I have had a hand in doing so far; and besides that, there have been thirteen cases of enlargement by consolidation.

50,595. Of course you are aware that there is a provision made for that in the Crofters Act?—Yes, I know that.

RANALD MACDONALD, Samalaman, Glenuig (62). (Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Ranald Macdonald.

50,596. The Chairman.—I see the area of your croft is 1 acre arable, and 2 acres 2 roods outrun, and each crofter in Glenuig and Samalaman is entitled to graze one cow and follower on a portion of the farm of Samalaman adjacent to his holding; the landlord is entitled to winter sheep on the holdings. Your old rent was £3, and your fair rent is £1, 10s.; the arrears were £8, of which £6, 10s. were cancelled and £1, 10s. ordered to be paid?—Yes.

50,597. The proprietor, the late Mr Maclean of Glenuig, had a right of wintering sheep on the crofts?—He was sending them there, at all events.

50,598. Was he doing so at the time of the passing of the Crofters Act in 1886?—Yes.

50,599. Did he winter his sheep on the whole of the Samalaman crofts?—On the Samalaman side the only croft was my croft and the land in his own occupation; but on the Glenuig side there were crofts, and on these he wintered his sheep.

50,600. How many sheep did he usually winter?—We do not know; there was no turning of the sheep stock; they came and went as they chose.

50,601. What length of time did he exercise this right or privilege of wintering?—There was no fence to keep back the stock and they came in to the crops, and the tenants kept them back as well as they could. His own orders were that the sheep were to be there until the 13th or 14th of the first month of summer, and they would be in again in the middle of October.

50,602. Did they often come before the crops were lifted?—Yes, but the tenants would keep them back when the crops were on the ground.

50,602A. Did they do some damage to the crops?—Yes, I would require to be up at three or four in the morning to keep them back, and sometimes I found them on the crop before me.

50,603. Was this a system which the crofters found injurious to themselves?—It was doing us damage and destroying our crops.

50,604. Did any of the crofters at Samalaman or Glenuig complain of that to the late Mr Maclean?—We went once or twice; but the sheep are there to this day.

50,605. Was there at any time any allowance made in the rent or other compensation paid for the injury done to the crops by his stock coming over?—I am not aware of any to whom he gave anything, except one tenant. One night his horses got into this tenant's crop, and he got some compensation from Mr Maclean, but I don't know what it was.

50,606. Apart from this, may we take it that the relations between Mr Maclean and his crofters were very friendly?—Sometimes; sometimes we agreed, and at other times we did not. The crofters always complained, and he used to say that his sheep were doing them no harm.

50,607. Is there a demand in your quarter for more land?—Yes, there are four of us here who want to get land in Glenuig; we are needy of it.

50,608. Who are the four?—John Macpherson, who resides in his brother's house; his brother, Charles Macpherson, may turn him out at any time.

50,609. And who are the other three?—Hugh Macneill, who also lives in his brother's house.

50,610. What is the name of the brother?—Lachlan Macneill.

50,611. Now give us the names of the other two?—Alexander Gillies—he has no holding.

50,612. Is he a cottar?—He has nothing but the bare house, and he has a weak family.

50,613. Does he pay rent?—No; the people of the township gave him admission to the house he occupies.

50,614. Where is that house situated?—In Smearisary, in the midst of the crofters' houses.

50,615. What is the name of the fourth?—A brother of the last named: Angus Gillies, who now lives in his mother-in-law's house.

50,616. What is her name?—Widow Mary Macdonald.

50,617. What rent does she pay?—Two pounds ten shillings, reduced by the Crofters Commission to £1, 12s. She left the land, leaving Gillies and his wife in possession, but he has got no promise of the land from the estate.

50,618. Now just tell us if there is land available for those who desire land in the neighbourhood of Samalaman or Glenuig?—Yes.

50,619. Is it land upon a farm?—It is now in the hands of the proprietor, but formerly there was a large number of tenants also at Egnaig.

50,620. Is it in your recollection when these places were cleared?—Yes.

50,621. When was that?—Forty-two years ago.

50,622. Were you there at the time?—Yes, I used to see the tenants who were there back and fore between Smearisary and Glenuig.

50,623. How many were removed from Eigneig?—In my early recollection, Eigneig was occupied by one tenant, John Donald, married to an aunt of mine, and he went to Australia. There was one there since then. It is twenty years ago since he left of his own accord, and since then it has been in the hands of the proprietor.

50,624. Was it always in the hands of one man?—No; at one time there were four or five tenants.

50,625. But not in your recollection?—No.

50,626. Now, what is the name of the other place in which there were removals?—Glenuig is the place referred to. They were not, however, removed from there: they left of their own accord.

50,627. How many?—There were fourteen crofters or tenants there, and eight of them left. It was Dr Martin who was the proprietor at that time.

50,628. Did they emigrate, or did they get places in the neighbourhood?—They went abroad, and those who remained got portions of Glenuig, those who were able to take them.

50,629. You say they left of their own accord; what made them leave?—There were hard times; crops were not thriving, and there were no prices for stock, and they were hearing great reports of Australia, so they went there.

50,630. Do you ask us to consider lands in the district of Glenuig?—Yes.

50,631. Is the demand or complaint, want of land for new holdings or for extension of existing holdings?—New crofts for those who are landless; if they are removed to these places it is new crofts they will require.

50,632. In the case of those who might not be removed, is there any demand for extension of grazing?—Those who have land already have not said anything to me about it. The three that I have mentioned have no land, and they want holdings. I have a small holding, but I want more. Arisaig. — Ranald Macdonald.

50,633. Would it suffice for those over whose crofts the proprietor has a right of wintering, that that right of wintering should terminate?—They would prefer that, but they are waiting till the Commissioners go round to see what can be done. There are only ten cows in Glenuig now, but the souming of Glenuig, when it was tenanted, was sixty cows, and they had thirty sheep each in addition.

50,634. Would you be satisfied with this right of wintering on the part of the landlord being taken away, or do you desire both that it should be taken away and an additional grazing should be granted?—Yes, both, for we have only a poor place.

50,635. Are these the only lands that you ask us to consider, or are there any other lands?—There is Mr Stewart's land of Kinloch-Moidart—there is only a broken fence between it and Glenuig; and there are the lands of Caolas which are under deer.

50,636. Is there available land there?—Yes, I have seen seven tenants in Caolas, and other two in other places, making nine in all.

50,637. Is that land suitable for grazing or for arable, or for both?—The old tenants had arable land and sheep hill-ground, and Mr Stewart put that land under deer about seven years ago. The land, however, is in the hands of another farmer, and that farmer sends cattle and hoggs to winter there.

50,638. What is his name?—Macgregor.

50,639. And what is the name of his farm?—Kinloch-Moidart.

50,640. Are you here to-day as a delegate from Glenuig?—Yes, but I represent the four who are present, and whom I have named.

50,641. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You have told us that, in the district you first mentioned, forty years ago crofting was not a profitable occupation. Can you give us any reason why it should be more profitable now?—The world was poor at that time, and the tenants felt the hard times more; and those tenants of us who have now got holdings think that if we had more we would be better off.

50,642. Do you seriously think that farming a small farm would be more profitable now-a-days in that district than it was forty years ago?—They were better off at that time, although they left the place, than the tenants who are there to-day.

50,643. But you have already told us that in those days they found prices so low and times so hard that they were glad to go to Australia; and now you tell us that they are in a worse plight to-day?—Yes, but since then, the tenants who remained were restricted to one cow's grazing, and deprived of the right to keep sheep.

50,644. Do you think that working a small farm in that district to-day could be done with more profit to the tenant than it could be done forty years ago, having regard to the prices of stock and cattle?—At that time those who had the old lots paid £7 of rent, and for this they had the right to keep five cows and thirty sheep. But Mr Stewart, who bought the estate from Dr Martin, deprived them of these stocks, and reduced them to one cow's grazing, for which they paid £3. He deprived them of their sheep altogether, and he had the wintering himself.

50,645. [Question repeated.]—We would keep our families together if we had more land than we have; they would go back and fore earning their livelihood, and this would be their home.

50,646. But kindly confine your answer to the farming of the land alone. Do you think that farming a small farm in that district would yield more now-a-days than it would forty or fifty years ago, having regard to prices of crops and stock?—I think it would now: the land there has run out, but potatoes are thriving better now than at that time.

50,647. But if the land is run out, why do you think farming would pay better now-a-days?—The land could be brought in and re-drained.

50,648. Then there would have to be a considerable

Arisaig.
Ranald Macdonald.

outlay before any profit could be looked for?—It would take some years before he got it into proper order, but he would get a crop from parts of it very soon after getting possession.

50,649. Mr Gordon.—In answer to the Chairman you stated that one of the objects of relief you have in view was to get rid of the landlord's wintering. If you got rid of the landlord's wintering, would you be inclined to pay more rent for your crofts?—If judges of the land considered that proper, we would not be against it; but we would, in any case, like to be relieved of the wintering of sheep.

50,650. It would appear that the fact of the sheep being wintered on the crofts was taken into account when your rent was fixed?—Yes, that is so.

50,651. Mr Sutherland.—Are you in the same place as you were forty years ago?—No. It was on my father's land I was at that time; since then I am on a small piece of my own. It is twenty-seven years since I got the piece of land I now occupy; the house was built by myself, and I reclaimed the land.

50,652. Are there tenants in Glenuig now?—There are none at present in Upper Glenuig, but there are some in Lower Glenuig.

50,653. And the land you are referring to is the land that is lying idle at present?—Yes, the land in Upper Glenuig; it is under rushes and water.

50,654. How many tenants were in it at the time they went abroad?—There were fourteen families in Upper Glenuig.

50,655. And there are none now?—Upper Glenuig is clear, but there are tenants in Lower Glenuig, and these are reduced to a cow each.

50,656. So that the people are not on the same land now as they were on forty years ago?—Yes, those who remained are on the same land.

50,657. But when some went abroad, was the land set free given to the remainder?—No; Mr Stewart then came in, and those of them who were able to put a stock of two cows got the right, and paid £3 for the grazing of each cow; but after a time they were obliged to give that up.

50,658. Was it exactly forty years ago that these people left?—So far as I know, it is forty-two years ago. At that time the estate was divided into two, and the hill-ground was sold to Professor Blackburn. It is now the Roshven Estate.

50,659. The land you were speaking to was Upper Glenuig?—Yes.

EWAN MACMASTER, Shepherd, Letter-Morar, Glen-Alladale Estate (40).
(Examined in Gaelic through an Interpreter.)

Ewan Macmaster.

50,660. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

50,661. Are you engaged as a shepherd at present?—Not at present.

50,662. How do you earn your livelihood just now?—Working back and fore and sometimes staying at home assisting my parents.

50,663. Were you a shepherd at one time?—Yes.

50,664. Where were you employed?—I was in different places, in Glenfinnan and in Meoble.

50,665. What is it you wish to say to us to-day?—I would like to get a piece of land.

50,666. Where would you like to get it?—In any suitable place.

50,667. Do you mean about Letter-Morar?—Yes; there are places there which were formerly tenanted.

50,668. You are appearing on your own account, I suppose, and not as a delegate?—For myself and other members of the family.

50,669. What are the names of the places on the Glen-Alladale Estate that were formerly tenanted?—There is Retlan on the Colonel's property; it is on Loch-Morar side.

50,670. Any others?—Scamadale, Dalalamaidh.

50,671. Is that upon Loch-Morar?—Yes, on the south side.

50,672. Where is it from Letter-Morar?—West of it.

50,673. Any other place?—Yes, other places east of that: Refern, Clachaig, Torr-na-h-Airidh up the river Meoble between Loch-Morar and Loch-Beoraid.

Arisaig.
Ewan Macmaster.

50,674. Is there land on any other estate you wish to mention?—There is Meoble itself; there used to be tenants there.

50,675. But that is also on the Glen-Alladale estate, is it not?—No, it is on Mrs Cameron-Campbell's estate.

50,676. Is there anywhere else on her estate formerly occupied?—Kyles, up opposite Loch Beoraid.

[ADJOURNED.]

Following on his undertaking in answer to question 50,533, Mr Nicholson sent the following communication:—

'Arisaig, Fort-William, 28th August 1894.

'SIR,—I have now the honour to send you a statement as to cottars on Arisaig and South Morar according to request of the Commission on 21st inst.:—

'The number of cottars, viz., tenants of houses without land paying a rent of under £2, according to the definition of 1883, is 23 against 28 mentioned by Mr N. B. Mackenzie before the Royal Commission on the Highlands and Islands. [See Note A]. It should be explained that this latter figure did not include cottars on crofts paying no rent to the proprietrix. These were given in a separate Return re crofters showing the number of houses on each croft. They are not included in the 23 cottars mentioned above, and they are, I believe, above 5 in number. [Vide P.S.]

See p. 2119 Evidence, R. Commission, Highlands and Islands, Q. 33,260.

See Appendix B., R. Commission, Highlands and Islands. Return No. 1, pp. 516–7.

'The number of 'cottages in village, &c.' (of Arisaig) paying a rent of £2 and upwards given as 26 by Mr N. B. Mackenzie, is the same now as then. Some of these should perhaps now be classed as cottars, although not so defined in 1883. There are also in other parts of the estate 4 tenants of houses without land paying rents of from £2 to £3 per annum.

Ibid. Q. 33,260.

'I should have stated the number of crofters now on the estate as 48 instead of 37, which figure I gave on 21st inst. When making up my statement I inadvertently took the number of crofters (viz., 37) who applied to the Crofter Commission for fair rents, instead of the whole number on the estate.

'It will perhaps be noted that Mr N. B. Mackenzie, in 1883, mentioned 66 as the number of crofters (which should, I think, have been given as 65). This included 6 cases of double tenancies (viz., widows and sons, &c.), and 5 small tenants who have not now a legal status as crofters (i.e., the Roman Catholic priest and tradesmen). From this it will be seen that the number of crofts surrendered since 1883 is in accordance with what I stated in my evidence.

Ibid. Q. 33,260.

'The tenant of the Mains Farm informs me that all that part of the farm which has been previously cultivated is now under cultivation, with exception of two pieces. One of these he intends ploughing in the course of the next two seasons, and the other is not, in his opinion, a cultivable subject.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

'ARTHUR W. NICHOLSON.

'The Secretary,
'Royal Commission (Highlands and Islands, 1892).'

'P.S. referred to on page 1.—I have given this figure to the best of my belief, but as the houses in question pay no rent they do not appear on the Estate Rent Sheet. I could not therefore be certain as to exact number without inquiry at the outlying township of Penmeanach. This would entail delay in sending this letter which I think best to avoid.

'A. W. N.'

'NOTE A.—This decrease has resulted thus. Two were paupers in houses of a nominal rent of 1s. per annum. One of these houses, on the removal of the pauper by the Parochial Board to another house on the estate, was in so bad a condition that it was pulled down, the other was occupied by a pauper till last year, since whose death it awaits a similar occupant. The 3rd and 4th houses were very old and of the poorest type, and, on their occupants becoming tenants of other houses on the estate, were taken down. The 5th case I fail to trace.'

FIFTY-NINTH SITTING.

INVERNESS, August 30, 1894.

Present:—

DAVID BRAND, Esq., Advocate, Sheriff of Ayr, and Chairman of the Crofters Commission, Chairman.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Esq., Secretary.

WILLIAM MACGILLIVRAY, Balnaberran, Errogie, Stratherrick (30)—examined.

50,677. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I am a farmer.

50,678. What rent do you pay?—£100.

50,679. Are you appearing here as a delegate?—As a delegate.

50,680. Appointed at a public meeting?—Yes.

50,681. Was the meeting held recently?—A few months ago.

50,682. Have you a written statement?—I have taken notes, my lord.

50,683. The Secretary has handed me a petition from the crofters in your district which is in these terms:—

To the Chairman of the Royal Commission (Deer Forests, &c.).

'The petition of the undersigned crofters, cottars, 'farm-servants, and others, in the Stratherrick district '(including the parishes of Boleskine and Dores, and 'part of the parish of Dunlichity, in the county of 'Inverness), humbly declares that, at a meeting held at 'Errogie of those desirous of taking advantage of the 'opportunity now given them of laying evidence before 'the Royal Commission as to the suitability of land, 'presently under deer and sheep, of being formed into 'small holdings, delegates were appointed to give 'such evidence; and, that at a subsequent meeting, it 'was moved, seconded, and unanimously carried, that 'the Commission be petitioned to have a sitting at the 'earliest opportunity, at a convenient centre, in order 'to hear evidence concerning the said district of 'Stratherrick; and, in support of said petition, the 'following reasons, which, to the petitioners, appeared 'sufficiently weighty to warrant the Commission to 'take more urgent steps regarding it than otherwise 'would be necessary, were adduced:—

'(1) That certain lands in the district are at present 'being cleared of people, apparently for the 'purpose of being formed into a deer forest.

'(2) That large tracts of the best land in the district 'are already under deer and sheep.

'(3) That many of your petitioners are prepared to 'take new holdings, or an extension of their 'present ones; while several are possessed of 'means to stock such new holdings.

'(4) Your petitioners further suggest that the full 'and immediate attention of the Commission to 'the several points above-mentioned would be 'an efficient means of suspending for a time the 'utilisation of land for the purposes of afforest-'ment or sheep-holdings.'

50,684. You appear in support of this petition?—Yes.

50,685. If you have some written notes we shall be glad to hear them?—There are two farms in particular which I think very suitable for the purpose of being formed into small holdings in the district for which I appear. The name of one farm is Balchraggan on the estate of Mr Fraser-Tytler of Aldourie, and it was occupied formerly by six tenants.

50,686. What was the rent of Balchraggan, do you know?—The rent is £250. Then there is the farm of Balnedan tenanted by James Forbes; Mid Balnedan, by John Macdonald; Balnagarline, John Fraser; Balnuilt, John Macdonald; Balnachraggan, John Fraser; Balnafettock, Murdo Mackintosh; Balinroich, Donald Macdonald. All these farms are now included in Balchraggan.

50,687. Can you mention the rents of these different farms?—No, I have not ascertained the particular rents; but there were from three to six cows, one pair of horses, and a number of sheep kept by each tenant.

50,688. How is that land occupied now?—Part of it is cultivated and part of it is under sheep.

50,689. And belongs to what farm?—To the farm of Balchraggan.

50,690. Are all these holdings that you have been describing situated on what is now the farm of Balchraggan?—Yes.

50,691. Can you tell me to what extent that land formerly so occupied is under rotation?—I would say there are about 100 acres under rotation and as much under sheep.

50,692. Is that the only land to which you invite our attention?—In this farm; but again there is the farm of Dunchea on the estate of Balnain.

50,693. What can you tell us about it?—It was formerly occupied by five tenants whose names I have not ascertained, but I have ascertained the names of three tenants who were removed from that place when it was put under sheep.

Inverness.

William Macgillivray.

50,694. Can you give us the date when it was put under sheep?—Not the exact date, but it was about 35 years ago. It was leased by one man, Mr Fraser, tenant of Abersky, and factor for Balnain at the time. That place was tenanted at the time by John Fraser, Duncan Fraser, and Thomas Fraser, each of whom had from five to six cows, a pair of horses, and a sheep stock in common, employing a shepherd to herd the sheep.

50,695. Can you tell us what rents they paid?—No, I cannot give you the rents.

50,696. But at any rate you say that land which is now part of the farm of Dunchea was occupied as separate holdings and tenanted by those individuals?—Yes.

50,697. How is it occupied now; is it under rotation or grazing land?—A few acres are under rotation and all the rest is grazing.

50,698. Do you place it before us as land suitable for occupation again?—Yes, very suitable.

50,699. Any other locality?—There is the farm of Aberchalder on the estate of Dunmaglass,—I mean Easter Aberchalder. It was at one time tenanted by Alexander Mackenzie, Ewan Fraser, Alexander Shaw, William Macgillivray, William Macpherson, Donald Macpherson, John Fraser, John Macgillivray, Alexander Fraser, Donald Fraser, Alexander Fraser. Altogether they had about 60 milk cows with followers. Some of them had a pair of horses, and others only one horse, but none of them less than 40 sheep.

50,700. Can you tell me when these people left their holdings?—I have not ascertained the exact date, but the farm was taken over by one Mr Mactavish who had the farm of Migovie I understand, and was a Solicitor in Inverness.

50,701. You are not giving that information I suppose from your own knowledge?—No.

50,702. Where does it come from?—From witnesses still living.

50,703. Do you mean old people?—Yes, old people.

50,704. Who cannot come here?—Who are unable to come here.

50,705. None of the information you have given as to these former tenancies, I suppose, depends on your own knowledge?—No.

50,706. It is all got in the way you describe?—Quite so.

50,707. Is there any other locality you wish to mention?—There is the farm of Dunmaglass.

50,708. What do you say of it?—About a year ago there were two tenants removed from that place who had about six or seven cows each, a pair of horses, and 200 or 300 sheep. At one time (I cannot give the exact date) it was occupied by a large number of small farmers or crofters, about twenty in all, I am led to understand. It is now in the hands of the proprietor solely.

50,709. Were the two who were removed about a year ago crofters?—Yes, or small tenants.

50,710. Then, I suppose they had fallen behind with their rents?—No, they did not: they were well-doing people.

50,711. How many occupants were there altogether, in former days?—About twenty, I am led to understand.

50,712. That also is information you have obtained from others, I suppose?—So far as regards those twenty tenants who occupied that place formerly.

50,713. But this matter that happened a year ago, you were cognisant of yourself, I presume?—Yes.

50,714. Is that land suitable for cultivation or advantageous occupation now?—It is, very suitable.

50,715. Any other place you have to mention?—I think these are all in the district that are suitable for the purposes of the inquiry.

50,716. And that district is, I understand, the only district for which you speak?—Yes.

50,717. You were appointed at a public meeting, and you know the feeling of the people, I daresay. Is there a strong desire among those you represent for new holdings?—Yes, there is a strong desire.

Inverness.

William Macgillivray.

50,718. Is there any congestion in the district you represent?—Among the crofters there is. They occupy small patches of very poor soil, very inferior soil.

50,719. Is their desire for new holdings, or for extension of grazing?—Partly for extension and partly for new holdings.

50,720. And suppose such individuals got new holdings, could they take them up and carry them on without assistance?—Several of them can do so.

50,721. And do you say others cannot?—I believe others are not in a position to stock the holdings without aid.

50,722. Or to put up buildings?—No.

50,723. Mr Sutherland.—You stated that there were certain parts of the district you are here to speak for, where there was congestion. Could you indicate more particularly the place or places where there is such congestion of population?—Well, there were some representations made to me from Mr Cuninghame's estate at Loch-Garthside; two or three parties from that place told me that they wished larger holdings than their present ones, which were too small they thought.

50,724. Have they got any pasture behind their arable holdings on Loch-Garthside?—No, not those parties.

50,725. That is those holdings along the road?—Yes.

50,726. And do you say they have got no hill pasture behind their grazing lands?—Not those parties who spoke to me.

50,727. And how many were they?—They were two, I think, or three.

50,728. Had these parties small arable holdings?—Yes, small crofts.

50,729. Without hill grazing?—Without hill grazing.

50,730. Do you know how many of the whole people at Loch-Garthside are in that state,—having simply arable holdings without any grazing?—I really cannot say, but there is another delegate coming after me who, I think, could give fuller information about the matter. But there are a few crofters on the estate of Balnain who are desirous of an extension; they wish some pasture added to their present holdings.

50,731. Is there good and suitable pasture contiguous to them?—Yes, on the farm of Farraline.

50,732. Is that a very large farm?—The rent is about £200, I think. I believe it has about 1800 acres of hill ground.

50,733. Do you know anything about these holdings at Loch-Garthside,—when they were made?—I cannot very well go into that.

50,734. Was it before you had any recollection?—Yes, it was, in the case of most of them.

50,735. And has any additional land been reclaimed within your memory?—Yes, there has, but I cannot say to what extent.

50,736. What I wish to know is, have you seen the land in the process of being made there?—Yes, I have in different parts.

50,737. What sort of subject was it before it was reclaimed?—The worst kind of soil, from an agricultural point of view.

50,738. What made it unfavourable for reclamation, do you think?—I believe the people were driven off all the best land, and had to settle down in places where the land was inferior even as pasture.

50,739. What was the characteristic of the land that made it, in your opinion, unfavourable for reclamation?—The nature of the soil; it was a kind of moor, and nothing growing on it but heather.

50,740. And was it strewn all around with boulders?—Yes, in most places strewn with stones.

50,741. Were all those stones that we saw lying on the road-side taken off the land by the people?—Yes, so I understand.

50,742. Was it the people of Garthside themselves who reclaimed the land, or was it done for them?—It was the people themselves that reclaimed the land.

50,743. Do you know in that neighbourhood any land far more suitable for reclamation than the land that was given to the people?—There is; that land I have mentioned at Aberchalder, I think an acre of it will be worth three acres of what they presently occupy.

50,744. What sort of crops do they generally raise on this reclaimed land at Loch-Garthside?—Fairly good crops in a good season, but I think a good deal of it is due to their own skill and industry.

50,745. And is it your opinion that equally good crops could be raised in any place round about there as at Loch-Garthside?—Much better crops than at Loch-Garthside.

50,746. Have you any idea where the people were before they were put there?—A good many of them lived on those farms that are now large farms under sheep.

50,747. Do I understand you to say that some of the small tenants that occupied these farms got the pieces of moor on Loch-Garthside to reclaim?—Yes, some of them did.

50,748. When they were removed?—I understand so, when they were removed. I do not mean that the present occupants got it, but their predecessors in occupation.

50,749. And I may take it generally to be your opinion that if an opportunity were given in better localities than this Loch-Garthside to make new holdings, the people would succeed far better?—I have no doubt about that.

50,750. But you contemplate new holdings with a sufficient amount of hill grazing attached?—Yes; and fairly large holdings; I think from 20 to 30 or 40 acres would be most suitable.

50,751. But you are not able to speak, are you, with any knowledge of the arrangements that were made when the people were put there, such as building of houses or advances of money? Did they get advances of money, do you know?—I cannot go into that.

50,752. Mr Gordon.—You say about 30 or 40 acres would be a suitably sized holding?—Yes, in some cases; I would not make them all of that extent.

50,753. How many of that size would you get on Aberchalder?—I would say from three to four, at any rate.

50,754. Would you take the whole farm?—Well, I believe there could be more land reclaimed there.

50,755. You would have to reclaim the land?—Of course, a good deal of the land there just now was cultivated at one time, but along with that, there is land that would make very good agricultural land, I think.

50,756. Does the farm of Aberchalder include the old township called Ballindalloch; or do you know that country?—There is no place in Aberchalder called Ballindalloch that I am aware of. There is a small holding on the Balnain estate called Ballindalloch.

50,757. But does the Balnain estate cross at the parish march?—The two estates join there, at the parish march.

50,758. And the small place called Ballindalloch is on the Balnain estate?—Yes.

50,759. Now, in your proposals, would you do away with the farm of Easter Aberchalder altogether, and convert the whole farm into small holdings?—Well, there are some farms more suitable for the purpose than others, I think. In the case of Aberchalder, a good deal of capital has been sunk by the proprietor in the shape of buildings; but those farms upon which very little capital was sunk are more suitable, I think.

50,760. If you convert the whole farm into small holdings, what would you propose to do with the buildings?—They would be quite useless.

50,761. What capital do you suppose has been expended on the building?—I really cannot say, but it means a good deal in the rental.

50,762. Would it be something like £1000 or £1200?—Quite likely.

50,763. Possibly more?—Possibly.

50,764. Therefore, if you break up that farm in small holdings, the buildings would be practically valueless?—Yes, I think so.

50,765. Supposing then that you convert the farm into four small holdings, what capital would be required to equip them with the necessary buildings?—That would depend upon who erected them. If the tenants themselves erected them they would not cost so much.

50,766. It does not depend on who erects them; the money would have to be paid either by the proprietor or by the tenant, but the cost would be the same?—I think those who would erect them themselves could erect them for a much lower sum than the proprietor.

50,767. Of an inferior class?—Yes, of an inferior class, perhaps, but suitable enough for the purpose.

50,768. But suppose now you take the inferior class; what do you suppose the buildings would cost the tenant?—I am not prepared to state definitely what they might cost; I am not a builder, and I cannot go into the matter very carefully.

50,769. But you are here representing a very important subject to-day, and you would require to be able to tell us that. Is there much land other than what is presently arable upon the farm of Easter Aberchalder that could be reclaimed?—Yes, there is a good deal, I think.

50,770. Would it be difficult to reclaim?—No.

50,771. Is there not a good deal of the same class of land you described to one of the other Commissioners as full of boulders?—It is quite different land; most of it is green pasture.

50,772. But is there not a good deal of stony dry land?—In some parts, but in other parts very little.

50,773. Would there be any difficulty with regard to this land on which there are no stones, in consequence of the water from Loch-Garth and Loch-Farraline?—Part of that land is presently under cultivation, and I think the part that is not under cultivation was under cultivation quite recently.

50,774. To what do you attribute the fact that the water is so high now?—I don't think it is higher than it was formerly.

50,775. Does that land not get flooded in winter?—It does; but so does my own farm, and yet I cultivate it.

50,776. But you would surely not propose to put down houses on land subject to flooding?—There is no necessity for that; there is land contiguous which is highly situated, and there is no danger of buildings being flooded.

50,777. Could you give us any idea of the cost to a tenant or a proprietor of breaking up a farm into small holdings? Suppose you have a farm rented at £200, and that you want to break it up into six small holdings?—Do you wish me to state what it would cost the proprietor?

50,778. What would it cost,—I don't care whether it is proprietor or tenant, but what would be the total cost of breaking up say a £100 farm into three holdings of £33 each, or a farm of £200 rent into six holdings of the same rent?—I have no doubt there would be a good deal of expense in the erecting of the buildings.

50,779. And you would have in all probability a good deal of expense in connection with fencing, would you not, in an open country?—Yes, if the particular holdings were enclosed; but if they occupy them as formerly there would be no expense incurred, I think.

50,780. But is fencing not the order of the day?—In some parts of the country it is, in others not. For instance, part of the farm of Dunmaglass to which I have already referred was tenanted by two farmers who had not their holdings fenced. They held their sheep stock in common.

50,781. Fencing is considered if not an actual requisite still very essential?—I do not think it is necessary. I have known cases in which club farms have worked very well.

50,782. I am not speaking exactly of hill grazing, but of the lower ground, the arable land. Do you think you could break up the farm of Easter Aberchalder into six holdings or four holdings without a very considerable amount of fencing?—It would be desirable, I think, to fence the particular farms.

Inverness. — William Macgillivray.

50,783. Have you any idea what the buildings and the fences would cost, breaking up the farm of Aberchalder into four holdings?—I can give a rough idea, I think.

50,784. Well, roughly, what would it cost to provide the buildings and the fencing?—I am not going into the buildings; but, I think, a matter of £30 would meet the fencing.

50,785. But you would have to put something on the buildings; some one would have to pay money?—Certainly; the proprietor or the small tenant.

50,786. Would you think it fair to ask the proprietor of Easter Aberchalder to build the steadings?—I think it would be fair to ask the proprietor. I think it would be more desirable to call upon a proprietor who has got land under sheep, good land suitable for the purpose, and land upon which very little capital has been expended in the shape of buildings.

50,787. Then, would you go away from Easter Aberchalder and take a hill part?—No, I would not; e.g., I would take the farm of Dunchea, upon which there are no buildings at present.

50,788. Would you go away from Easter Aberchalder?—In the first place I would leave Aberchalder until such farms as Dunchea were taken up.

50,789. There are not buildings in Dunchea at present?—No, not suitable to the farm there.

50,790. You would first propose to deal with the outlying farms that are not fully housed?—Yes.

50,791. Now, you mentioned Loch-Garthside. Who are the crofters there? Are they labourers?—They are crofters who depend upon employment during the summer season.

50,792. They are rather small crofters, most of them?—Most of them are.

50,793. Who derive their living from labour in the neighbourhood?—Quite so, and a few of them are tradesmen.

50,794. Where would you propose to get the pasture for these crofts?—I do not think there is pasture contiguous to the crofts there. There may be a difficulty in that. I understand there is a farm, Dalcrag, presently under sheep, not far from these crofts: but I do not want to go into that matter because another delegate coming after me knows the country better than I do.

50,795. Mr Sutherland.—But you said it was not possible to get grazing; what makes it impossible? It is contiguous to something, is it not?—Yes, there are part of the crofts contiguous to other crofts.

50,796. But I am talking of the hill pasture behind?—There is very little hill pasture behind: it is mostly young plantation. A good deal of it is now planted.

50,797. And the remainder?—There is very little pasture, I think.

50,798. Mr Gordon.—It is mostly black dry heather?—Black dry heather.

50,799. And rather rocky?—Yes.

50,800. It would not be of very much use to them if they got it?—I don't think so.

50,801. And there is no other pasture. There is that black rocky heather on the Inverness side, and the loch on the south-east side; and that is all?—Yes.

50,802. Suppose you were to find places for these people otherwise, do you think they would leave the small holdings they have there and go and build houses upon other land?—Some of them have told me they would.

50,803. I don't want you to mention names; but were the people who told you so, tradesmen?—Yes, one of them was a tradesman, quite prepared to erect a building and to stock the holding.

50,804. In a more central place?—Yes.

50,805. But that would not be on hill ground; a tradesman would not naturally go to a hill ground?—He would take a holding, a part of which would be arable and part hill ground.

50,806. But he would require to be beside some accessible district, near a public road?—Well, I think he would settle down on the holding if he got it.

50,807. What class of tradesman is he?—He is a mason.

50,808. You would not describe Loch-Garthside as congested, would you?—Yes, I would, because the people cannot now get the employment they were getting at one time, and the crofts are too small.

Inverness. — William Macgillivray.

50,809. What were they employed at formerly?—Some were employed by the shooting tenants at this time of the year, and one way or another there was more work in the district than now.

50,810. Going back for one moment to the capability of the crofters in that district to take larger holdings, I may fairly assume that before he could start a croft and provide fencing and a reasonable sum for building, say on a £30 holding, a man would require to have a capital of not less than £300?—I think that would meet the case.

50,811. Are there many crofters up there who could raise that money?—I have not asked them what they might raise or what they have got; they have just told me, some of them, that they have it.

50,812. What is your own opinion?—I know several of them were in a position to lay out that expenditure.

50,813. In other words you know a good few of them who have money?—There are others who, I think, have not got the necessary money for a holding of that size, but there are some of them who are prepared to take a smaller holding than one of 33 acres,—15 or 20 acres.

50,814. Fifteen acres you say?—Fifteen to twenty, thirty, thirty-five, or forty.

50,815. You would approve of a gradation of holdings?—Yes, I would.

50,816. Mr Macleod.—Would there be anything to prevent the Loch-Garthside tenants from holding a club farm although it might happen to be a short distance away from their present holdings? You do not think there would be any insuperable difficulty, do you?—No; if they were confined to sheep it could be easily worked.

50,817. With regard to this farm of Dunmaglass, I do not think you told us if it is presently under crop or whether it is being grazed by sheep?—I think there is a proportion of the arable there presently under rotation, but evidently it is the intention to allow it to run out under sheep.

50,818. How much is under rotation at the present time, do you think?—I cannot state positively the proportion.

50,819. Can you give us any idea?—No, because it was only last year that Mr Sopper of Dunmaglass took it into his own hand.

50,820. So that you cannot give us any information as to the proportion under crop?—No, except that the area under crop is reduced.

50,821. And is it the general impression in the district that it is intended to allow it all to go out of rotation?—Yes, the general impression is that he is to convert the hill ground into a deer forest.

50,822. Then, what were the names of those two tenants that were removed a year ago?—Alexander Macgillivray and Donald Macgillivray.

50,823. Do you know the rents they paid?—From £37 to £40, I think each.

50,824. Did you say that there were more than these two tenants at one time?—There were a great many more.

50,825. You don't know how many?—No; I would say about 20 at one time.

50,826. Mr Munro.—You mentioned that a number of holdings in Stratherrick were cleared to make room for Mr Mactavish?—Yes, that is on the farm of Aberchalder.

50,827. You do not remember that yourself, I suppose?—No.

50,828. Mr Mactavish was then the Town Clerk of Inverness; you have heard that, I suppose?—Yes.

50,829. So that these men were deprived of their small holdings in order to make room for a man who earns his living from other sources than farming?—That is so.

50,830. Do you remember the circumstances attending the eviction of these people?—I do not remember it, but I can give it as explained to me by people who were living at the time. Of course, I cannot vouch for the truth of it; it is all hearsay.

50,831. Were they evicted under circumstances of severity?—Yes, that is so.

50,832. Now, returning for a moment to this farm of Easter Aberchalder upon which Mr Gordon has been putting several questions to you. Supposing that that farm was divided into six small holdings, would they, in your opinion, be readily taken up by people resident in Stratherrick at present?—I think so; I think they would.

50,833. And could these people erect the necessary buildings?—Some of them could, and others perhaps could not.

50,834. Others could with help?—Yes, so I understand.

50,835. Is there any shooting on the farm of Aberchalder?—Yes, there is shooting on the hill ground.

50,836. So that the present farm-house might be converted into a small shooting lodge, could it not?—There is already a shooting lodge at Dunmaglass; if the shooting were divided into two parts it should serve the purpose of another lodge.

50,837. But could the existing farm-houses be utilised for any purpose in connection with small holdings?—They might be used for the purpose of two holdings, perhaps.

50,838. Mr Sutherland.—With regard to this matter of the erection of houses, have you ever seen a new holding made?—No, I cannot say I have.

50,839. The tendency has been the other way within your memory, has it?—Exclusively the other way.

50,840. To make small holdings into larger ones?—Into larger ones.

50,841. Let us take this case of Loch-Garthside, however. Was that not a case of making new holdings?—It was.

50,842. Was there any difficulty about the putting up of the houses and the fencing?—I don't think there was the least difficulty; the houses are there, and I understand they were built by the people themselves.

50,843. You are certain they were built by the people, are you?—Yes, but lately, I understand, some assistance has been given by Mr Cuninghame.

50,844. But subsequently the houses were built by the people themselves?—Yes.

50,845. I was very much surprised to hear that there was no grazing to give to the people of Loch-Garthside?—Not contiguous to their crofts.

50,846. But is this the reason that the land was so poor that it is not worth giving to them?—It is very poor, but then there is very little of it.

50,847. And is it the fact that the people were planted down to make new holdings on land that is practically not worth the taking?—Yes, that is so in almost every case where there is a township of crofters.

50,848. So that this result, that we saw ourselves, of the crops in Loch-Garthside is produced on land that is practically not worth taking?—That is so.

50,849. Admittedly, according to your evidence, the worst subject that could be given to the people?—Yes.

50,850. And they erected their houses, made their fences, and supplied their stock without any assistance whatever?—And expended a good deal on drainage.

50,851. Is it your opinion that, whatever has been done on the worst subject, could be far more profitably done on a good subject?—Yes, that is my opinion.

50,852. Have you ever seen two large farms made into one?—Not in my day, I think.

50,853. You spoke here to-day of the farm of Dunchea?—Yes, I did.

50,854. Did you ever see that a separate farm?—No.

50,855. Was it a separate farm?—It was tenanted, I understand, at one time by six tenants.

50,856. And who holds it now?—Mr Rose.

50,857. What other holding has he?—He has Abersky also.

50,858. Is the building upon Abersky quite sufficient to work the two holdings together?—I think not, if the farm of Dunchea were cultivated.

50,859. Quite so; but, as a matter of fact, is it cultivated?—Very little of it; a few acres.

50,860. Are the buildings upon Abersky alone found sufficient to carry on the two adjoining farms?—I don't think so.

50,861. Is Dunchea farm-house or steading occupied in any way?—There is no dwelling-house there.

50,862. Is there a steading?—There is one building only, quite insufficient for the purpose of a steading for that farm.

50,863. But was it a sufficient building when Dunchea was a separate holding?—No, it was not.

50,864. Why was not another house put up?—I understand it was the intention to put up a steading.

50,865. But here there was a farm carried on with only one house?—As a pastoral farm.

50,866. That at least is one case where they would not require to put up additional buildings supposing it were given to one tenant?—They would require to lay out a great deal on buildings.

50,867. What it amounts to is this, that it was found not necessary to erect a farm steading on Dunchea?—That is so, because it was a pastoral farm.

50,868. Then, did you ever hear any difficulty with regard to these farms when they were being cleared? Did you ever hear of any difficulty being made as to the erection of the new steadings?—None whatever.

50,869. Is it not a fact that when these small farms were put into one, there was one big central steading erected?—Of course, it was the practice at first when those small farms were occupied and cleared, they were made into one farm, and then a large steading was erected.

50,870. Who bore the expense of that?—The proprietor.

50,871. And did these, in every instance, give him a return, do you know?—They might have done so sometimes; I don't think they give a good return to-day.

50,872. Do you think that the fact that they made an investment that ultimately does not pay ought to stand in the way of making small holdings, even if it were an obstacle?—I think small holdings would pay the proprietor better to-day than large holdings.

50,873. Mr Shaw Stewart.—I want to be quite clear about those houses that you have just been asked about. Did the tenants erect them entirely by themselves, or did they receive some help from Mr Cuninghame?—I understand they erected them entirely by themselves, but a few years back they got some assistance from Mr Cuninghame which helped them to build better houses than they formerly had. Some of them took advantage of that, and others did not.

50,874. In the cases where they got assistance from Mr Cuninghame it cannot be said that they erected the houses themselves?—As I understand, the assistance was very small in proportion to the general outlay.

50,875. But if they got any assistance at all to help them to build their houses, it cannot be truthfully said that they erected these houses entirely themselves?—It cannot, of course, be said that they erected them entirely themselves.

50,876. The Chairman.—Are the new holdings which persons in your district desire to get, self-sustaining holdings, or holdings where the occupant lives partly by his holding and partly by labour?—Do I understand, my lord, that you refer to the new holdings that the people would like?

50,877. Yes; are these new holdings that the people wish to get, self-sustainiug holdings, or holdings of such a kind as they have already, where they live partly by the holding and partly by labour?—Some of them want self-sustaining holdings, and others smaller holdings.

50,878. Such as exist already?—Yes.

50,879. Is that a kind of holding of which you are in favour?—A few.

50,880. You are in favour of that sort of holding?—In favour of a few of them existing. I think there ought to be a gradation of holdings.

50,881. You would have both holdings which are

Inverness.

William Macgillivray.

merely homes, where the man lives mainly by labour, and self-sustaining farms?—Yes.

50,882. And is there land in the district you come from suitable for the formation of both classes of holding?—Yes, there is.

50,883. And sufficient in area to meet the wants of all those who desire new holdings?—Quite so: that is my opinion

50,884. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—Of course, you know that this inquiry has no concern with land that is regularly cropped?—I do not refer to such land.

50,885. In regard to the steading you spoke about, do you think that when steadings existed upon land that is wholly pastoral, these steadings should be any obstacle at all to the breaking up of these farms? You see the steadings cannot be used for the purpose for which they were put up if the land is being pastured?—That is so, but it is quite possible that those holdings might be let again and cultivated, and I think it would be desirable in the first place while there are holdings without houses, that they should be utilised for this purpose before touching those holdings upon which a great deal of capital has been expended.

50,886. You think that those that have gone out of cultivation simply because there are steadings on them, should be allowed to stand until some person should come to take the holdings; is that your view?—It is not my view that they should be allowed to stand; but they should not be touched until the others were taken up,—those on which the landlord or proprietor has made very little outlay.

50,887. But would you not hold that as a proof of the failure of large farms, when these large steadings are not utilised for a series of years so that the land had to be let as sheep farms? Does not that prove to you the failure of the system of large farming?—Yes, in a good many cases it would.

50,888. And would it not be, primâ facie, probable that the land on which those large steadings were erected is the most suitable for small farms?—It is in most cases. But, I believe, a good many of these large farms presently pastured are allowed to run out of cultivation because there is a great difficulty in finding hands to work them,—labourers and farm servants.

50,889. And what remedy have you for that?—I would think if there was a larger number of small holdings, good farm servants could be got from among those families occupying such holdings.

50,890. So that you think that even for the success of moderately large farms it is necessary to have a large number of small holdings?—Yes, I think so.

John Macdonald.

JOHN MACDONALD, Wester Muirnich, Mussady (40) —examined.

50,891. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—Yes.

50,892. Was your case dealt with by the Crofters Commission?—Yes.

50,893. Is your croft No. 16 Mussady?—Yes. [The Secretary.—The area is 6 acres 3 roods 15 poles arable, 5 acres 1 rood 10 poles outrun, and no common pasture. The old rent was £5, 0s. 6d.; the fair rent £4; and the arrears £5, 11s., of which £4 were cancelled, and £1, 11s. ordered to be paid.]

50,894. Were you appointed a delegate to give evidence?—Yes.

50,895. At a public meeting?—Yes.

50,896. Have you a written statement?—No.

50,897. Well, tell us what you came here to say.—I came here to say that the farm of Mains of Foyers is at present under pheasants and rabbits.

50,898. And what about the land?—The land would be very suitable for two or three crofters.

50,899. With what size of holding?—About 15 acres each.

50,900. Of arable, do you mean?—Yes.

50,900A. Is the land suitable for being turned into arable?—It is arable; it is cultivated for game.

50,901. Do you mean that it is under rotation of crop?—Yes, some of it.

50,902. But our remit does not extend to land that is under regular rotation of crop. Is there grazing land there?—Yes. Inverness. John Macdonald.

50,903. What extent of grazing land is there on the farm of Mains of Foyers?—I am not quite sure, but I should think about five hundred acres.

50,904. Is that land that was formerly under cultivation, or has it always been pasture land?—About 70 acres of it is old arable.

50,905. Is that the land that you think might be formed into new arable?—Yes, it would do.

50,906. How many new holdings would you put there?—About three; two in Foyers and one in Ardarroch.

50,907. Suppose such holdings were established, would they have hill grazing?—Yes.

50,908. On the high ground above?—On the west side of it.

50,909. Are there individuals ready to take such holdings on the estate?—I cannot say.

50,910. You do not know that?—No.

50,911. But are there individuals there who are in need of new holdings?—A few.

50,912. How many?—About half-a-dozen that I know of.

50,913. But you cannot tell whether they could take such holdings without assistance or [illegible]?—No, my lord.

50,914. Are these holdings that you have in view, holdings by which the occupants would live, or where they would have to labour outside?—Very little labour; the holdings would support the tenants.

50,915. The land which could be made arable is good land, is it?—Very good.

50,916. Would it grow all the ordinary crops?—Yes, it has a first-class climate.

50,917. The climate is very good, and the rainfall not excessive?—No.

50,918. Is there any other land that you wish to speak of?—Yes, the farm of Glenlea; it is held by the proprietor too. I forgot to tell that the farm of Foyers is in the hands of the proprietor.

50,919. How long has it been in his hands?—About ten years.

50,920. Who was the former tenant?—One Mr Meikle.

50,921. Then you were mentioning another farm?—Yes, the farm of Glenlea, which is also held by the proprietor.

50,922. Is it near the Falls of Foyers?—Yes.

50,923. How long has it been in the hands of the proprietor?—About ten years.

50,924. Who was the last tenant there?—Mr Fraser.

50,925. Do you remember what rent he paid?—I think it was about £113.

50,926. Is there old arable land there that could be made into new holdings?—Very suitable for new holdings.

50,927. What extent of it?—About 50 acres, I would think.

50,928. That is land lying between the woods there and Loch-Garthside?—Yes.

50,929. How many holdings would you put there?—Three holdings; one in Glenlea, one in Dalbreck, and the third at the east end of Glenlea.

50,930. Are there individuals you know ready to take such holdings and set the crofts agoing at their own expense?—No.

50,931. Anywhere else?—The estate of Gorthlick is held by the proprietor too, and the whole of South Lyne, and a part of Tomvoit.

50,932. And the hill grazing of Duhallow?—Yes, but Lyne and Tomvoit are on the estate of Foyers, not on the estate of Gorthlick.

50,933. Who is the proprietor of Gorthlick?—Mr Cuninghame; he holds it along with the estate of Foyers.

50,934. Is there much land there?—I think the former tenant was paying about £500.

50,935. Was that the rent he paid?—Yes.

50,936. The tenant of the farm of Gorthlick?—Yes.

50,937. And was his land mainly between Loch-Garthside and the woods fringing Loch-Ness?—It is on the east side of Loch-Garthside, between Loch-Garthside and Loch-Farraline,—a little to the west of Loch-Farraline.

50,938. What extent of land is there in that locality? How many holdings would you put there?—I would put two or three in Gorthlick, and one in Duhallow.

50,939. And where else?—West Altnagoire.

50,940. How many there?—One, and one in Alltcumhang.

50,941. That makes seven altogether. Now, what sort of rents would you have for these holdings?—Fair rents, of course.

50,942. You do not condescend upon a particular amount?—No.

50,943. Are the holdings you have in view self-sustaining, or holdings where the man would labour a good deal?—He would live always on them.

50,944. He would occupy his whole time on the holding, and be enabled to live by it?—Yes.

50,945. But you cannot say that you know anybody ready to take such a holding?—No.

50,946. You yourself have a holding of over 12 acres; you do not want a new holding, do you?—No.

50,947. You have no pasture?—No.

50,948. Have you no stock?—Yes, I have stock.

50,949. Where do you keep it?—I keep all that I have on the croft.

50,950. And buy your provender in winter?—No.

50,951. Do you get as much off the croft as to keep you going?—Yes.

50,952. Are you a tradesman?—No, I am employed at the present time by the shooting tenant at Garrogy, on the Foyers estate.

50,953. Are you employed by him every year during the shooting season?—Yes.

50,954. And that considerably supplements, I daresay, what you make from the holding?—Yes.

50,955. In what capacity are you employed?—As a giffie, or anything that I am wanted to do. There is another farm too, the farm of Compass, which is held by the proprietor also. It is above Whitebridge,—between Whitebridge and Badenoch.

50,956. Who is the farmer there?—The proprietor.

50,957. Is that on the Foyers estate?—Yes.

50,958. Do you know the extent of the farm?—No, but there were a great many crofters on it at one time; it was all held by crofters at one time.

50,959. I see it is entered in the Valuation Roll at a rent of £270. You say a great many crofters were there at one time; you got that information from somebody else, I suppose?—The old ruins are to be seen to-day.

50,960. Can you tell me how many crofters would be there?—About twelve, I think, and one in Garrogy.

50,961. Can you tell us about what time they left their holdings?—I cannot tell, but the ground is green yet, almost all.

50,962. It is now used as grazing land?—Yes, not cultivated; none of it except the shepherd's and gamekeeper's crofts.

50,963. And it is good shooting ground, I daresay?—Very good indeed.

50,964. That land you say is suitable for holdings?—Very suitable.

50,965. How many would you put there?—About twelve between Compass and Garrogie.

50,966. That is to say, you would re-form twelve holdings similiar in size to the holdings that were done away with?—Yes.

50,967. And do you think that would be a good plan?—Yes.

50,968. You think that would be a better course to adopt than forming a smaller number of holdings with a larger area?—Yes.

50,969. Then do you contemplate that the occupants of such new holdings would live partly by labour?—Oh, the land would keep them going.

50,970. Do you know whether the land kept the former tenants going?—I was not born at that time.

50,971. No, but you know all about it, I suppose?—Oh, I think so.

50,972. Is there a good deal of labour got along Loch-Ness through the districts you have been speaking of?—Very little labour.

50,973. Is there any other locality you wish to mention?—Meallagy, also on the estate of Foyers.

50,974. Is there available land there?—Yes.

50,975. How many holdings would you put there?—Two.

50,976. Had there been holdings there before?—Yes.

50,977. But they have not been there, I suppose, for a length of time?—No.

50,978. Anywhere else?—The estate of Wester Aberchalder is let to a large farmer.

50,979. Do you know what rent he pays?—No, I do not know.

50,980. But there is land there under grass, is there?—Yes.

50,981. Which you think we ought to consider?—Yes. And there is the hill grazing of the south side of Glenmarkie.

50,982. Is it also on the estate of Foyers?—It is an estate by itself.

50,983. Would you be in favour of new holdings being put there also?—Yes.

50,984. Is the land suitable?—Very suitable for summer grazing.

50,985. Is there any other place?—Not on the Foyers estate.

50,986. Are you able to speak of any other estate?—Yes, there is the farm of Garthbeg on the Lovat Estate.

50,987. Is that a large farm?—Yes.

50,988. Do you know the rent paid for it?—I think about £500.

50,989. What is the name of the tenant?—Mr Campbell.

50,990. Is the land on that farm to which you refer under rotation or under grazing?—Some of it is under rotation.

50,991. Well, never mind the land under rotation; but what is the extent of the land under grazing that you would like us to consider?—Well, it is a large farm; I think it would keep about 20 crofters.

50,992. Is there a shooting tenant there?—Yes.

50,993. You do not work for him, I suppose?—No.

50,994. Whereabouts is that land from the dwelling-houses and buildings on Wester Aberchalder?—It is all round the buildings.

50,995. You do not, I suppose, include in the land you mentioned any land under wood?—No.

50,996. You say about 20 crofters could be planted there. Can you give us any notion of the extent of it?—From 20 to 30 acres each of arable.

50,997. There is an extent of land available sufficient to afford 20 to 30 acres?—Well, I would say 15 to 20 acres.

50,998. For 20 crofters?—Yes.

50,999. Is that land at a moderate, or at a high elevation?—Neither very high nor very low.

51,000. Is there a desire among those you represent for land in that particular quarter?—Yes, a part of it for the township I am in just now.

51,001. That is Mussady?—Yes.

51,002. Is it a congested township?—Yes.

51,003. How many are in the township?—There will be about twelve or so; some would like to go there, and others to South Lyne, to Dalcraig and Tomvoilt.

51,004. Have the crofters of Mussady no pasture?—No.

51,005. They are all in the same position as yourself?—Yes.

51,006. Do they all keep stock on their own holdings?—Yes: we generally send a stirk or so away to summering.

51,007. Where do you go for summering?—I put mine up to a place called Drummond.

Inverness. — John Macdonald.

51,008. And you pay something for that, I suppose?—Yes.

51,009. Is there any high ground near the township of Mussady suitable for an extension of grazing?—Yes, Dalcraig on the Lovat Estate.

51,010. Would it provide extension of grazing to a sufficient extent?—Yes. There is also the estate of Knockie.

51,011. Who is the proprietor there?—Grant of Glenmoriston. It is let to an absentee tenant.

51,012. Who is the tenant?—I do not know his name.

51,013. Is there land there?—Yes, very suitable for crofters.

51,014. How many could be accommodated there?—Six or seven.

51,015. With areas such as you have already mentioned?—Yes, with pasture attached to every one of them.

51,016. There is land that could be made arable, and a corresponding hill pasture?—Yes.

51,017. Now, anywhere else?—I do not remember.

51,018. But I may ask you this general question. Do you know personally, from having often traversed them, the whole of the lands of which you have spoken?—Yes, I have traversed them all my days.

51,019. Partly as a crofter and partly engaged by the shooting tenant?—Only for six or seven weeks in the year with the shooting tenant.

51,020. And for how many years have you been so engaged by the shooting tenant?—For 17 or 18 years.

51,021. You are very familiar with the whole of that ground?—Yes, all my days.

51,022. Mr Munro.—Would the lands you have mentioned be readily taken up by the crofters if offered to them in small lots?—I think so.

51,023. You know that yourself from your intercourse with the crofters?—Most of the people in my district have holdings already, but they are very small.

51,024. Would they be able to stock new holdings if they got them?—Yes, some of them.

51,025. But some of them could not?—No. The people in my country will have to leave it if they cannot get a holding of their own; there is no labour going.

51,026. Mr Macleod.—You are on the Foyers Estate?—Yes.

51,027. Can you tell us anything about the assistance that has been given for the building of houses in your district by the proprietor?—There was a lot of assistance given.

51,028. Was it in the shape of money, or what?—For buildings and reclaiming land.

51,029. When did those payments begin first?—When they got it, about seven or eight years ago,—perhaps more.

51,030. How many years is it since the holdings were formed?—Mostly about 30 years ago. Some of them are older than that; some are about 70 years.

51,031. You had a house and buildings, I think, before any assistance was given?—Yes.

51,032. Can you tell us anything about the farm of Tullich in Strathnairn?—No; but the farm of Aberarder in Strathnairn is in the proprietor's hands.

51,033. You cannot speak of Tullich from your own knowledge?—No, I don't know Tullich, but I know Aberarder.

51,034. What particulars can you give us with regard to Aberarder?—I can give no particulars except that it is in the proprietor's hands, and that it is not under rotation at all.

51,035. Are there any buildings upon it?—They are falling down; they are almost in ruins.

51,036. How is it held at the present time?—There is no one stopping in the house.

51,037. Are there sheep on the place?—I cannot say.

51,038. You say you know about it; is there a stock of any kind upon it?—Very likely, it is let for summer grazing.

51,039. Then about this land that you have been speaking about further up,—is there much of it high ground?—There is some of it very high ground.

Inverness. — John Macdonald.

51,040. Would you propose to attach that very high ground to crofters' holdings?—Yes.

51,041. You think that it could be properly used by them?—Yes, for summering.

51,042. And would they have a sufficiency of wintering for the stock they might put on it?—Yes, if the holdings below were enlarged.

51,043. If the holdings were of the size you spoke of, you think the high ground could be properly used?—Yes, for so many.

51,044. And you know the locality well?—Yes, the low ground; but it is very stormy on the high ground; it would only do for summering.

51,045. But you think it could be profitably used for summering?—Yes.

51,046. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Is there a steading on the Mains of Foyers Farm?—Yes.

51,047. And is the land worked in connection with it?—Yes, the land is round about it. The steading is in Foyers, but Ardarroch is on this side of the river.

51,048. I am speaking of Mains of Foyers: is that under cultivation now?—Yes, it is cultivated for game.

51,049. In what state are the fields,—in crop, or in grass?—Some of them are in crop for rabbits or pheasants.

51,050. Do you mean that the crop is not reaped?—Not for the benefit of human beings.

51,051. Are you sure of that?—Quite certain.

51,052. None of the corn is taken to the mill?—No.

51,053. And what becomes of the green crop?—It is eaten up by game.

51,054. As it lies on the field?—It will not get time to lie on the field; it is eaten before it comes on the field.

51,055. Then you mean that the turnips and potatoes are not lifted off the field?—I don't think there is either turnips or potatoes planted; but there is corn sown, which is eaten up by game. Perhaps it is lifted, but it is given to the pheasants again during the winter months.

51,056. You say it is good land?—Very good.

51,057. And would you be ready to take a holding there yourself?—I have a holding already.

51,058. But I understand you to say your holding is too small?—I would be glad if I could get it enlarged where I am.

51,059. And is it good land?—It is myself that made it good; it was not good when I got it.

51,060. But the farm you are telling us about, the Mains of Foyers, is it good land?—Yes, very good land.

51,061. What rent per acre could be given?—A fair rent.

51,062. What would you call a fair rent per acre?—Just what it would be worth.

51,063. Would you kindly be a little more particular,—that is a very general statement, you know. Do you know the land yourself?—From 12s. to say 7s. or 8s. an acre. I would consider that to be a very fair rent.

51,064. What size of holding would enable you to live entirely by a small farm there?—That would depend on the quality of the ground.

51,065. But you have just told us the ground is very good?—Very good in Foyers, but some is better than the rest.

51,066. Supposing you had your choice of a piece of that farm of the size you wanted, could you live entirely by that?—Yes.

51,066A. At present you are not able to live entirely by your holding?—No; you would not expect me to live on a £4 croft.

51,067. I want to know on what size of holding you could live?—If it was just double the size and had a few acres of pasture I could live.

51,068. Now, as to the farm of Ardarroch, you say it has 50 acres arable?—I said 70 acres, between Ardarroch and Foyers.

51,069. I understood you to say there were 50 acres in Ardarroch alone?—No, I did not say that.

51,070. How many acres arable are in Ardarroch alone?—I think 20 to 25; it is under rabbits, pheasants, and gamekeepers.

51,071. Not under crop?—No: if it is under crop, it is for the use of game.

51,072. But is it under crop?—I don't think there is a bit of it this year under crop; it is a rabbit warren.

51,073. You don't know whether it is under crop or not?—Whether it is or not does not matter if—

51,074. It matters very much. You are asked the question and you say you know the land, and it turns out you cannot tell us whether it is under crop or not?—It is under crop, but it is for game.

51,075. But it is under crop?—Yes. There is a servant kept on the farm to cultivate it.

51,076. Then as to the Knockie Estate, is it largely planted?—I don't think it is planted at all; there is a small patch of it planted, about five or six acres.

51,077. Is that all the extent that is under wood on the Knockie Estate?—No, there is a large amount of it under natural wood.

51,078. Did I understand you to say that in your neighbourhood, you did not know of any of your neighbours who were ready to take up these new crofts that might be made out of these farms?—Well, I don't know; maybe there are some, but they did not say so to me. But they would all like to get an enlargement of their present holdings.

51,079. You do not know any who would be willing to remove to others?—No.

51,080. Mr Sutherland.—Your present holding consists of six acres of arable?—It is ten acres now; I have improved it since I was in the box before.

51,081. Since your rent was fixed by the Crofters Commission you have increased your arable holding to about ten acres?—Yes.

51,082. In what year was your rent fixed?—Three or four years ago. [The Secretary.—The Order is dated 13th May 1891.]

51,083. So that since then you have increased the area of your holding by taking in land from a state of nature?—Yes.

51,084. Then we can safely call you an improving tenant?—Thank you for calling me that.

51,085. You have raised your arable area from six acres to ten in a space of three years?—Yes.

51,086. Did you ever know a sheep farmer to do anything like that?—No: I have never seen one of them yet.

51,087. And is it practically the same land as the people of Loch-Garthside have got?—Yes, but their land was taken in a long time before.

51,088. But it is practically the same locality?—Yes.

51,089. You are up from the loch, behind them?—Yes, just so.

51,090. You have done that to land which previous witnesses described as land not worth adding to them as pasture,—is it the same sort of land?—Yes.

51,091. Have you a crop on the additional arable land this year?—Yes.

51,092. How is it looking?—Very good, some of it, and other bits not so good.

51,093. How many tons of stones have you taken off the four acres; have you any idea?—I believe a thousand tons; it was full of stones.

51,094. And you have no pasture at all, you say?—That is so.

51,095. For these six acres of arable land that you had before you reclaimed any, you had to pay £5 of rent, I suppose?—I got some money for improvements; and it is for interest on that money that I was paying 15s. 6d. I got the croft in 1881 for £4, 5s., and I was paying the rent and interest.

51,096. At what rate per cent. was the interest to be?—Five per cent.

51,097. You were paying 5 per cent. on the money that had been advanced to you to reclaim the farm?—Yes.

51,098. At what rate per acre were you able to reclaim that land? I am speaking to a man who has done it, and I wish to get precise information that cannot be gainsaid. You have done this work?—Yes.

51,099. I want to know from you authoritatively and finally, what did you pay per acre for reclaiming that?—I ploughed some of it and trenched some.

51,100. How much have you got from the landlord per acre for reclaiming the land?—I got nothing for reclaiming the land: it was before my fair rent was fixed that I got the money for it.

51,101. I thought you said money was advanced to you for which you paid 5 per cent.?—That was before my fair rent was fixed.

51,102. But was there not an understanding?—I was paying 5 per cent.

51,103. You had got no assistance at all before your fair rent was fixed?—No.

51,104. Then you did it yourself entirely?—Yes, entirely.

51,105. That is not mere theory?—No, it is not theory; I have done it.

51,106. Now, I wish to ask you a question with regard to the farm of Mains of Foyers. How much arable land do you think is on that farm?—I think about 70 acres.

51,107. How does that land compare with the land that you have got?—It is far superior to the land I have got.

51,108. Is it down on the level of the loch?—It is almost down to the level of this place.

51,109. On the shores of Loch Ness?—Just so. Neither frost nor winds will do harm to it.

51,110. And do you say deliberately that that land is being used for the purpose of raising crops for game?—Yes.

51,111. It is actually cultivated for that purpose?—Yes.

51,112. And for no other purpose than that?—No.

51,113. Do you know the rabbit-warren along the road coming down here?—Yes.

51,114. Is that part of it?—There is a rabbit-warren at Glenlea.

51,115. And is it joined with this farm of Foyers?—Yes.

51,116. It is close to it?—Yes; but it was made a warren when the tenant had Glenlea Farm; the low side of it is open now.

51,117. Do you know how many large holdings are on the estate of Foyers altogether?—Well, the proprietor has all the large holdings in his own hands, except Wester Aberchalder.

51,118. He has the whole place in his own hands?—Yes.

51,119. Has he to your knowledge tried to let them?—I cannot say; I don't think so, but I am not sure.

51,120. But it is a fact that with the exception of Wester Aberchalder he has the whole of the large holdings on his estate in his own hands?—Yes.

51,121. You cannot give us any information as to whether he attempted to let them?—No.

51,122. Does he carry them on as large farms himself?—Yes.

51,123. You have stated that you know the farm of Garthbeg?—Yes.

51,124. It is also called Garthmore?—Yes.

51,125. How does that come about?—There was a tenant in Garthmore, and a tenant in Garthbeg, and a tenant in Bunchegovie.

51,126. Do you recollect a time when there was a tenant in each of these farms?—No: I remember when there was a tenant in Dalcraggie which is also along with it.

51,127. And they are all now in the one farm?—Yes.

51,128. The Chairman.—How many shooting tenants are on the Foyers Estate?—There is only one, I think.

51,129. You say that you have been reclaiming land since the fair rent was fixed?—Yes.

51,130. So that you have been reclaiming rather over an acre a year on an average?—Yes.

Inverness. John Macdonald.

51,131. You say that you reclaimed some by ploughing and some by trenching?—Yes.

51,132. How much of the reclaimed land did you reclaim by ploughing?—I reclaimed the most of it by ploughing except bits that were too stony.

51,133. How much of it did you reclaim by trenching?—About three quarters of an acre.

51,134. Then the cost of the reclamation by ploughing was simply that you put the plough through the land after lifting out the stones?—Yes.

51,135. And had you much trouble in getting the stones out?—Yes.

51,136. Now, as to the trenching, can you tell us what the cost of the trenching was, or whether it cost anything beyond your own labour?—It was not any cost except my own work.

51,137. How deep did you trench?—About 18 inches, or maybe less.

51,138. And is all that land under cultivation now?—Yes.

51,139. And, in your opinion, the result has been to show that it was worth your while to reclaim the land?—It was.

51,140. Mr Charles Innes, Solicitor, Inverness, Agent for Foyers Estate.—Where is this land that you say you have reclaimed?—It is on my croft.

51,141. On what part of it?—The whole of it, except a small bit at the furthest corner.

51,142. And all since the fair rent was fixed?—Yes.

51,143. Was there no arable under the plough before the fair rent was fixed?—Yes, there were six acres and some poles.

51,144. And how many are there now?—Over ten.

51,145. What portion of the croft have you reclaimed since the fair rent was fixed?—Just the west side of it; the east side was reclaimed before.

51,146. You say the most of the land you reclaimed by ploughing?—Yes.

51,147. What do you mean exactly by that? What condition was it in before?—Just black ground.

51,148. No crop had ever been taken out of it?—Never.

51,149. But it was reclaimed simply by putting the plough through the land?—Yes.

51,150. Most of the four acres has been reclaimed in that way?—Yes.

51,151. Is it not in your knowledge that prior to the fixing of the fair rent a certain proportion of your land was to be reclaimed?—Yes.

51,152. Including the land you have since reclaimed?—Yes.

51,153. That was the arrangement on the estate?—Yes.

51,154. In the event of any additional land being provided at the suggestion of the Commissioners to enable small holdings to be created, would you apply for one of them?—I am quite content where I am, if I can get an enlargement of my holding in the way of grazing.

51,155. Where would the most convenient place for you be?—Dalcraggan, on the estate of Lord Lovat.

51,156. Mr George Malcolm, Secretary, Highland Property Association.—You have told us of, I think, four or five farms which are in the possession of the proprietor, Mr Cuninghame, at present. Can you tell us if a farm stock is kept on these farms?—Yes.

51,157. There is a stock of cattle kept on each of these farms?—On Gorthlick Estate.

51,158. And it is a very good class of cattle, is it not?—Yes, a very superior class.

51,159. Can you tell us where the provender is got for the support of these cattle?—I was never asked.

51,160. Can you tell me where Mr Cuninghame feeds those cattle off the farms?—Very likely; I don't think I have anything to do with that.

51,161. You stated that those farms were at present cultivated for the support of game?—Foyers and Glenlea only.

51,162. And those two farms still support a stock of cattle. I want to know from what source those cattle are fed. I put the question whether they are fed from the produce of the farm?—Very likely at Gorthlick they are fed on the produce of the farm; I did not say anything about game at all in the case of Gorthlick.

Inverness. John Macdonald.

James Macdonald.

James Macdonald, Duhallow, Aberarder (45)—examined.

51,163. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—No.

51,164. What is your employment?—I am not employed at present; I am a pensioner.

51,165. You have been in the Ordnance Survey?—Yes.

51,166. Are you appointed as a delegate to appear before us to-day?—No.

51,167. You are appearing as an individual?—Yes.

51,168. Are you able to speak to particular lands anywhere in this locality?—Yes.

51,169. What are the lands you know most of?—The estate of Aberarder.

51,170. Who is the proprietor?—I really do not know: I think Mr Sutherland is the proprietor, but the estate is under trustees.

51,171. The estate belonged to Mr E. C. Sutherland?—Yes.

51,172. Is it not occupied at present?—A good deal of it is not occupied.

51,173. Do you live upon that estate?—Yes, I was born upon that estate.

51,174. How many farms are upon it?—I think now there are only about half a dozen farms altogether: there used to be several more,—at least, there used to be several more people on the estate than now.

51,175. You mean there used to be small tenants?—Yes, a great many more tenants.

51,176. How many were there on that estate at one time?—On one particular farm there used to be five tenants.

51,177. What is the name of that farm?—Glenbeg.

51,178. And is the land which was occupied by these small tenants in former days, in your opinion, land that could be profitably occupied again?—Yes, there is not the least doubt about that. It is one farm; I really do not know whether it is the proprietor or a farmer who occupies it.

51,179. Do you know whether that particular farm is let to a tenant?—No, I do not know, but there is a man occupying the farm.

51,180. You cannot tell whether he is there as tenant, or whether he is managing the farm for behoof of whom it may concern?—No.

51,181. What is the area of land there that you think might be re-occupied?—The whole estate really.

51,182. Confine your attention for a moment to this particular farm where you say there were some small tenants in former days, Glenbeg. Can you give us the extent of land which you think might be profitably or advantageously occupied by such similar tenants?—Between 60 and 70 acres, I think.

51,183. Is that land under crop, or is it under grass?—Under crop and grass.

51,184. How much of it is under grass?—I think they work it on the five-shift system—that would be divided into five.

51,185. Do you know particularly about it, or are you only giving general impressions?—I know all about it; I was born on the place, and know all about it.

51,186. Leaving out the land that is under rotation, how much of it is left that you think might be so occupied?—Only the place that was occupied before; it is worked now.

51,187. As arable land?—Yes, excepting the hills. Of course, there are a lot of hills with it which are not occupied.

51,188. It is not a large farm; it appears from the Valuation Roll to be let to a tenant called Peter Brown at a rent of £68?—Yes.

51,189. And there is another farm called Cairnban, —did you refer to it?—No, it is a croft.

51,190. It is let to a man named William Maclean at a rent of £12?—Yes.

Inverness. — James Macdonald.

51,191. Then there is another farm called Wester Croachy?—Yes.

51,192. Is that one of the farms you had in your mind?—Yes; it is let.

51,193. I see the tenant is Donald Shaw and the rent £40?—Yes.

51,194. Then there is Bridgend let to Donald Fraser at a rent of £10?—Yes.

51,195. That is a crofter's holding?—Yes.

51,196. Then there is the farm of Tighanruich and Gort-nan-Gobhar let to William and Donald Macgillivray at a rent of £64?—Yes. There used to be three people in that place. All the alterations have been made since 1860. These three people have been removed, and there are only the Macgillivrays left. The Macgillivrays used to be in Glenbeg, and now they occupy the two farms. Tighanruich was at one time occupied by two tenants, brothers, and Gort-nan-gobhar by a separate tenant.

51,197. Do you know what rents they paid before?—I should say they would be £30, or so,—perhaps less.

51,198. Then there is a small holding on Clarkston let to Margaret Macgillivray or Macmillan, at a rent of £1, 10s., and Wester Croich let to Miss Nairn at a rent of £1?—Yes, there used to be a croft attached to that cottage until within a few years ago.

51,199. Then there is on the farm of Duhallow let to Widow Margaret Maceachan and Miss Macdonald at a rent of £2, 7s.; that also is a crofter's holding, I suppose?—That is the farm I was born on: it was let up to 1880 at £26 or £28.

51,200. The farm of Duhallow?—Yes.

51,201. It has undergone some changes since then?—Yes, and before that.

51,202. Mr Shaw Stewart.—Can these farms that you speak of be properly described as moderately-sized or small arable farms, e.g., Glenbeg?—Yes, I should think it would be a moderate size.

51,203. Any others of a small or moderate size?—They are really all small farms excepting Aberarder, which is not let at all.

51,204. Mostly cultivated in rotation?—No. Duhallow and Milton (Balavullin) have been under grass for some years now.

51,205. But I am speaking of the farms that you told us of just now. Could they not be described as either moderately-sized or small arable farms?—Yes, I suppose you could not call a 70 acre farm a large one.

51,206. Is that not the correct description of them?—Yes, to a certain extent; but you cannot alter the fact that the people were removed.

51,207. Mr Sutherland.—You did not mention the farm of Aberarder, did you?—Yes, I did.

51,208. How is that farm occupied now?—It is not occupied at all; the grass parks are let in summer-time, but that is the only occupation.

51,209. But is it cultivated?—No, it is under grass.

51,210. Does it not comprise more arable land than any other farm on the estate?—Yes, it does.

51,211. It is the largest farm on the estate?—Yes.

51,212. And has a greater area of arable land than any other farm?—Yes, I should think it is twice the size of any other farm.

51,213. And there is no tenant on it at all?—No, not for some years now.

51,214. Is that, in your opinion, a favourable subject for our consideration?—Yes, the whole estate is.

51,215. What are the particular circumstances that you have in your mind when you form the opinion that the present is a favourable time?—The place is unoccupied.

51,216. And do you think the most is not being made of the land on the estate of Aberarder generally?—No, I should think not. The most may be made of it for the landlord, to be sure.

51,217. But I am talking of the public good?—I should not think so, seeing it is not occupied; of course, the most cannot be made of it.

51,218. How long is it since the Ordnance Survey of that locality was made?—I should think it would be about 1867, or so; but the publication will tell you.

51,219. The date on the map is 1873?—It would be surveyed three or four years before it was published. Inverness. — James Macdonald.

51,220. I find from the Ordnance Survey six houses in 1873: how many are there now?—Only one. I should think at the time the survey was made there must have been about six houses there, and previous to that there would have been more.

51,221. And now there is only one?—Only one.

51,222. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—What are the other Dubesides Aberarder that are in pasture?—There is farms hallow and Balavullin, and there are all the hills,—they are unoccupied.

51,223. On these two farms is there arable land that is pastured?—Yes, they are all under pasture.

51,224. With these exceptions, are all the farms cultivated?—Yes, all except these two, or rather these three.

51,225. How did these fall out of cultivation? What is the reason of their being uncultivated do you know?—Because he would not let people have the land, I suppose. He would not let them have the land because they could not pay the rent he wanted for it. He wanted double the rents it carried previous to 1880, and, I suppose, the people really could not afford to give that, and they were obliged to leave.

51,226. And so the land has gone out of cultivation. Do you know what sort of rent that land now pays?—I have not the least idea. The grass parks are put up to auction. I never troubled myself going into what they got.

51,227. You cannot tell us then whether these people have been put out for the profit of the landlord,—whether he has profited by their removal?—I do not know at all. He may have a profit for all I know, but the people were removed.

51,228. The Chairman.—There is one farm not mentioned in the Valuation Roll,—Balavullin. Do you know about it?—Yes.

51,229. It is on the estate of Aberarder?—Yes.

51,230. Is there a tenant on it?—No, there is nobody in it except a man who occupies the house. He has been there since last term, I think.

51,231. Is it a farm called the Home Farm?—It is called Milton: Balavullin (Baile-a'-Mhuilinn) is the Gaelic for Milton.

51,232. Do you know anything of that farm?—Yes, I know that farm; it adjoins the farm that my father had.

51,233. Is there land there available?—Yes, certainly, it is under grass. There is no one occupying it, so, of course, it must be available.

JOHN GRANT, Blacksmith, Dalarossie (63)—examined. John Grant.

51,234. The Chairman.—Are you a crofter?—I have the Glebe of Dalarossie at present from the minister of Moy, Mr Simpson.

51,235. Have you a written statement?—No.

51,236. Are there any lands to which you wish to invite our attention?—Yes.

51,237. Where are these lands?—The same place that I was occupying myself, Banchoruan on the estate of Dalmigavie.

51,238. Is it grazing land?—It is all under sheep now.

51,239. Is it let to a tenant?—It is.

51,240. What is his name?—Donald Watson.

51,241. Do you know what rent he pays?—I am not quite sure; he has got the whole estate now.

51,242. What is the extent of his farm?—I cannot exactly say: there are about 41 acres in Banchoruan itself.

51,243. Has it any other name?—Banchoruan is the farm that I was on. There were three farmers when I was there; I and my father had the half of it, and other two farmers had the other half.

51,244. What rent did your father pay?—When we entered there in 1854 the rent was £14 for the half, and the other two were also paying £14 between them.

Inverness. John Grant.

The place was in very bad order, with poor buildings; we put up new buildings and improved the place, and it was valued at £515, 0s. 2d. Then it was put in the market as one farm, and it was then a friend of my own happened to come in, and took it over at £90.

51,245. Is it now called Dalmigavie Mains?—No, Banchoruan.

51,246. All that land, I understand, is now under sheep?—All under sheep.

51,247. And is it suitable for re-occupation now?—Undoubtedly it is.

51,248. It is good soil?—Yes, good soil.

51,249. What is the extent of it?—There will be about 41 acres.

51,250. Under permanent grass?—It is all under grass now.

51,251. And has it been so for many years?—For three or four years now. This farmer only occupied it for about three years, and he had to give it up; it was too much rented. Myself and my father were paying £38 when we left, and then he came in and got the whole farm for £90 and kept it for only three years.

51,252. Upon that land you are now speaking of, how many new holdings do you suppose could be made?—It would answer very well for two farms, with splendid pasture.

51,253. Farms of a self-sustaining kind, where the person could live upon his holding?—Perfectly well.

51,254. Is there a desire for such holdings?—Undoubtedly, they might be let.

51,255. Is there any other land you would wish to speak of?—Yes, Dalmigavie. The present tenant, Mr Watson, occupies the whole estate except what the proprietor keeps for himself.

51,256. He pays a rent of £135?—He does not pay that now; he has entered on a new lease this season.

51,257. Do you know what rent he is paying?—The rent is smaller now than that. He has just entered on a seven years' lease.

51,258. Is the land there suitable?—It is grand land,—very good land.

51,259. How many holdings could be planted there, do you think?—I myself recollect seeing five farms upon it.

51,260. What rents were paid for these farms, do you know?—I am not sure about the rents.

51,261. Would they be under £20?—They would be more than £20, but some not so much, for there are two very small ones. But Dalmigavie is a very large farm.

51,262. Supposing such holdings were formed and occupied, is there plenty suitable hill grazing at hand?—Oh, yes. This land is suitable for carrying about 2000 sheep,—Dalmigavie and Banchoruan together. The latter is put out for 300, but taking the two together they would hold 2000.

51,263. All these holdings of which you are speaking are holdings by which a man could live, I suppose?—Perfectly.

51,264. How many acres arable have you in view for each holding?—I could scarcely say; perhaps there will be about 130 or 140 acres in Dalmigavie Mains.

51,265. How many would you allocate to one tenant?—There might be three tenants perfectly well.

51,266. You would put three tenants on an area of 140 acres arable?—Yes. There was a farm called Tullich once.

51,267. Where is Tullich from Dalmigavie?—It is between Banchoruan and Dalmigavie.

51,268. What was the size of it?—It might be about 30 acres.

51,269. And do you remember the rent?—No, I do not remember.

51,270. Was it occupied at one time as a small farm?—It was occupied by two farmers at one time.

51,271. How long ago is that?—I have just a slight memory when they left that place.

51,272. You have only a vague impression about it?—Just so.

51,273. But is the land there suitable for re-occupation?—Yes, it is splendid land, and part of the buildings are still to be seen. Inverness. John Grant.

51,274. Is there any other land you know about?—Not on that estate.

51,275. Well, in any district?—Turn to Coignafearn and the lands on The Mackintosh's estate.

51,276. Do you mean grazing farms?—Grazing farms and lowland ground.

51,277. What farm do you refer to particularly on The Mackintosh's estate?—Coignascallan and Coignafearn.

51,278. Are they occupied by tenants at present?—No, they are under deer.

51,279. Do you remember a time before they were under deer?—Oh, perfectly, the whole of them.

51,280. When was that land afforested?—I think about ten years ago.

51,281. Added to what forest?—To The Mackintosh's forests. There are about 52,000 acres of hill ground.

51,282. What was the extent of land afforested about ten years ago?—These two farms that I mentioned, Coignascallan and Coignafearn.

51,283. What would be the total area thus added to the forest?—Perhaps about 200 acres.

51,284. That is of low ground?—Of low ground.

51,285. And before that land was afforested I suppose it was all under sheep?—Not the whole; Coignascallan was occupied by the tenant who is there just now, Mr Macrae, who had the hill grazing, about five miles to the river-side following these two farms.

51,286. Could that land which you say has been recently afforested be advantageously re-occupied now?—Perfectly well.

51,287. By tenants of the crofter class?—There are two splendid large steadings on it in grand order.

51,288. When were these steadings built?—They were there before my memory.

51,289. What state are they in now?—In a very good state.

51,290. How far away is the nearest crofter from this land that was afforested?—It is just adjoining that shooting lodge.

51,291. Are there crofting tenants adjoining that ground?—The river divides them: there are eight tenants across the water.

51,292. Is there a township there?—Yes.

51,293. What is the name of it?—Lower and Upper Coignashee and Coignafiontarnach.

51,294. Do you know the rents paid by these people?—Not exactly; they got their rents reduced when some ground was taken from them eight years ago.

51,295. What size of holdings had they?—Perhaps 20 acres each, some smaller and some larger.

51,296. And had they hill grazing?—A lot of hill grazing.

51,297. As I understand, however, you were not appointed to represent their views?—No. But the hill ground is not suitable for anything but deer; it is very high ground. I was for six years with one gentleman there, and I know the hill ground of Coignafearn.

51,298. In what capacity were you acting?—As a gamekeeper to a gentleman there.

51,299. So you know the ground very well?—Perfectly well.

51,300. Can you give me the total area of The Mackintosh forest as it exists now?—I was there at the time Mr Mackay, the surveyor, was there, and he told me there were about 52,000 acres.

51,301. And possibly it is more now?—No, it cannot be more.

51,302. You know that forest very well. Can you tell me if any other land has been added to the forest in recent years besides what you have mentioned?—Not on The Mackintosh estates.

51,303. You have mentioned the only land that has been added to the forest?—Yes.

51,304. Now, is there any other land that you wish to speak of?—Just following down again,—Sir John Fowler's land at Glenmaseran; it is now all under deer.

51,305. Speaking of the land of Glenmaseran belonging to Sir John Fowler, is there any land there that was recently added to forest?—Yes.

51,306. What extent of land?—I could scarcely say, but there is a lot of very good low land; they are just cultivating a small bit of it for grazing for the shooting tenant.

51,307. And has the rest of it been added to the forest?—The whole estate is added to the forest.

51,308. Can you tell us the extent of Glenmaseran?—No.

51,309. Do you remember when it was added to the forest?—Perfectly well,—three years ago.

51,310. Had there formerly been a grazing tenant there, a farm tenant?—Yes, there were four there within my own recollection.

51,311. What is the name of the last farm tenant?—Andrew Clunas.

51,312. Were the sheep cleared off when he left the ground?—He gave over the sheep at a valuation to Sir John Fowler.

51,313. And then the land was added to the forest?—Yes. But this is a different forest from that of The Mackintosh; it is a forest by itself. The whole estate of Sir John Fowler is now under deer.

51,314. And do you say that the whole of that forest of Glenmaseran has been recently made a forest?—Yes.

51,315. Within the last few years?—Within three years.

51,316. In order to the formation of that forest, was there any arable land included,—land that had been under rotation?—Yes.

51,317. To what extent?—Perhaps about 200 acres.

51,318. Of land that had been recently under the plough?—Yes; a lot of it was waste ground for a long time, for a period of 40 years, and then it was turned into forest.

51,319. Is there any other land that you wish to speak of?—Next is the land of Mr Mackenzie of Farr and Glen-Kyllachy.

51,320. What land is there that you wish to speak of?—There is one farmer there at present.

51,321. What is his name?—William Macgillivray.

51,322. What is the name of his farm?—Garbole.

51,323. Can you give us the extent of that farm?—I think about 130 acres arable.

51,324. Land under rotation?—So far as I can judge, there is about that amount of arable land; and half of the hill ground or so is let out for deer forest again, and the other half is with Mr Macgillivray under sheep.

51,325. When was the half of the hill ground put under deer?—It will be six or seven years ago.

51,326. And was that land taken off what had been farm land before?—Yes.

51,327. And added to the forest?—It is all the one farm now. I recollect seeing six farmers there myself.

51,328. What rents did they pay?—I cannot remember the rents.

51,329. But were they of the crofter class?—Yes.

51,330. And is all the land they occupied under forest now?—Oh, it is not in the forest; all the cultivated land is kept in reserve for the present tenant at Garbole. He has got the whole.

51,331. But a considerable portion of ground which was formerly part of that farm is now added to the forest?—Yes, the hill ground.

51,332. Do you happen to know the extent of that ground?—No, I cannot say.

51,333. But that took place within recent years?—Yes.

51,334. Mr Sutherland.—Does it amount to this, that practically the whole of the upper reach of the Findhorn valley is now in deer forest?—Yes, on the north side; and part of the south side too.

51,335. And is that what is called the forest of Glenmaseran?—The highest part is The Mackintosh's, which is also a forest.

51,336. Are the two forests marching?—Yes, Glenmaseran and Coignafearn.

51,337. And was Glenmaseran made entirely out of sheep farms?—Yes.

51,338. There was no deer forest there before, to which a farm was added?—No.

51,339. But it was made to march with The Mackintosh forest?—Yes.

51,340. You were a gamekeeper, I think you said?—Yes; I was there as a keeper for six years.

51,341. You know something about the making of deer forests?—Oh, surely.

51,342. On what principle are they made?—Well, I will tell you: the ground of The Mackintosh is fit for nothing else, the very top of it, but for deer. Speaking roughly, all the ground that is under deer up there, with the exception of the low-lying ground, is suitable for nothing but for grazing in summer; but I know that there would be between 15,000 and 16,000 sheep on the two forests that are now under deer.

51,343. And they lived there, these 15,000 to 16,000 sheep?—For a number of years.

51,344. And thrived there?—Yes.

51,345. And would do so still?—Undoubtedly, in summer-time; it is a grand grazing place.

51,346. I asked you about the principle on which deer forests were made: what I want to have from you is this—Do you think the proprietor was induced to turn this upper part of the Findhorn valley into a deer forest because there was already another deer forest in existence that he could tack his on to?—Well, perhaps that was not the intention at that time: I think he was expecting that deer foresting would pay better than the grazing.

51,347. What do you think would make it pay better?—The fact that the gentry are so fond of deer shooting. One of the gentry told me he would rather give the whole rent, if he could kill one stag. But that place was not a forest.

51,348. And could you kill one stag, when it was not a forest?—Oh, yes, you could generally get one.

51,349. And are there more there now?—Yes, they are almost as plentiful as sheep.

51,350. Where did they come from?—They came from Gaick forest, and they will soon rear up.

51,351. Is that The Mackintosh's forest?—Yes. [Mr Allan Macdonald.—Gaick is not The Mackintosh's forest.]

51,352. Suppose a deer was going from Gaick forest to Glenmaseran, what ground would it have to pass through?—They might come through many ways.

51,353. Could it come on deer forest altogether?—Yes.

51,354. Then, don't you think that the proprietor in making this deer forest would have in his mind that he could tap another deer forest?—Oh, probably. The Mackintosh was rearing them there, and he had taken them from Gaick, and reared them on the estate there for many years.

51,355. Do you know of deer forests anywhere that are surrounded entirely by sheep farms?—None but this one; I don't know any other.

51,356. But this one is not: it marches with other deer forests. Do you know at the present moment one single deer forest that is surrounded entirely by sheep farms?—No.

51,357. But you know several deer forests that are clustered together, don't you?—Yes, they generally are.

51,358. Is that then the principle on which they are constructed?—Probably it is: probably enough, that is the case.

51,359. Have you ever looked at the deer forests on a map, and observed the tendency they have to grow?—Yes.

51,360. Do they all cluster round each other?—Very often they do.

51,361. And you say you know of no exception to that rule, that in every case one forest hangs on to another forest: we are talking just now of the making of this forest of Glenmaseran?—Well, it is mostly closed on the one side by The Mackintosh forest, but on the other side there is no fence at all; the deer can go where they like.

Inverness. — John Grant.

51,362. So that a deer forest is generally made in the hope of taking deer from another forest which already exists?—Probably that is the case.

51,363. You have been a gamekeeper, and should know?—The animals that are here to-day might be a hundred miles away by to-morrow.

51,364. You say the top part is fit only for deer?—Undoubtedly.

51,365. Why did they take the lower part?—The lower part did not belong to The Mackintosh.

51,366. But the high mountain tops are best suited for deer?—Yes, of course, where there is any green pasture.

51,367. Are the deer better there?—Undoubtedly, where there is plenty grass.

51,368. Then the rearing of deer on the low ground is against the rearing of good deer?—Yes, I think so.

51,369. As subjects of sport?—As subjects of sport.

51,370. As subjects of sport, will the deer reared and kept on the high mountains be better than those that are reared in the valleys?—I think they are.

51,371. Did you ever hear that the low lands were added to the deer forests for the purpose of supplying them with wintering?—Yes.

51,372. So that they are obliged to winter deer as well as sheep?—Yes, they cut grass and corn to feed the deer in winter, if a heavy storm should come.

51,373. And they are just treated in all respects like sheep?—Yes.

51,374. And like domestic animals?—Yes, with turnips and artificial feeding.

51,375. In your early days, do you remember when they did not winter deer?—There was no word about it in the beginning of my time.

51,376. And was there good sport?—Plenty sport.

51,377. Was it better sport than is to be got now?—Much about the same, I think.

51,378. Did you ever in your former days see men sitting on a rock or on a chair and shooting deer?—Not often.

51,379. Did you ever see it at all?—It might happen occasionally, when stalking, and so on.

51,380. You have seen stalking?—Yes.

51,381. Is stalking as common as it used to be?—Much more so; if there are deer they will require to be stalked.

51,382. But is it as difficult as you have seen it, at first?—Not half so difficult.

51,383. You are no doubt an authority on sporting; you are a practical sportsman?—Of course, I have been trying my hand at it.

51,384. And is it your opinion that sport is not at all what it used to be?—They will get good sport, undoubtedly.

51,385. I am not asking as to the amount, but as to the nature of it?—I know that it is more valuable than it was in the beginning of my days.

51,386. There are two aspects of the question, the one of sport, and the other of value: there is the value to the landlord, and the sport to the man who shoots?—Yes.

51,387. You said that stalking is now twice as easy as it was within your memory?—Yes.

51,388. But does not the value of sport to the sportsman consist in its difficulty and its danger?—I think that makes it more valuable.

51,389. And you say it is not half what it used to be?—Just the half.

51,390. In other words, people can shoot stags now who were not able to do it before?—Well, they were not so practical as they are now; they were not so practised in handling guns.

51,391. That is quite possible; but, as a matter of fact, sporting is far easier now than it was in your memory?—Indeed it is.

51,392. And people can do it now who have not half the skill or strength that used to be required?—Not half the skill.

51,393. So that sport is very much degenerated?—Yes.

51,394. Now I wish to ask you a question about the tenancy of this forest that has been formed. All the people have been cleared out of the sheep farms?—They were not cleared out.

Inverness. — John Grant.

51,394A. I am talking of the new forest of Glenmaseran?—They are all left.

51,395. Are all the shepherds left?—Yes.

51,396. Are they turned into gamekeepers?—Well, one of them died.

51,397. Are there as many families left in the place as a deer forest as there were when it was a sheep farm?—There is none now but the one keeper, and a farm servant who keeps a small bit of it cultivated.

51,398. That man is there in addition to the gamekeepers?—Yes.

51,399. So that after changing it into a deer forest, is the population practically what it was before?—Oh, no; the people left.

51,400. Do you think the population is the same as it was before the place was made into a deer forest?—Oh, they are not so numerous, surely.

51,401. Do you know anything then about how it was occupied before it was made into sheep farms?—Yes.

51,402. How was it occupied?—There were farmers on it; it was placed into three if not four farms.

51,403. Do you see any remains of smaller holdings than that in the district?—Oh, yes; plenty.

51,404. Do you see ruins of old houses, and traces of old cultivation?—Plenty of them; too numerous indeed.

51,405. So that first of all it was under small tenants; then it was put under larger tenants, sheep farms; and now it is all under deer forest?—All turned to sheep now.

51,406. I want you to follow the case of Glenmaseran; first it was in small tenancies, the remains of which are still visible?—Yes.

51,407. Then it was made into one or two sheep farms?—Yes.

51,408. And now all the sheep farms are swallowed up in a deer forest?—Yes.

51,409. That is the process which has been followed?—Yes.

51,410. Mr Gordon.—How many sheep were upon the farm latterly?—It would hold about 2000.

51,411. Was that the summer stock, or the winter stock?—It was the summer stock; they had to put most of them, the hoggs, to wintering, and get them back in spring.

51,412. Did they send any sheep to winter except the hoggs?—Some years,—it depended on the crop of hay to winter them. If they had a good crop of hay, they did not send so many away.

51,413. They required either to be sent away or hand-fed during the winter?—Yes.

51,414. Is that part of the country subject to very heavy falls of snow?—Yes.

51,415. How would you propose to re-occupy it now?—By turning it into small farms again.

51,416. Is there arable land in it sufficient for several small farms?—Yes.

51,417. Or land that could be reclaimed?—Oh, yes, plenty that could be reclaimed.

51,418. How many small farms could be placed in Glenmaseran?—Three.

51,419. What was the old rent of Glenmaseran?—It was different rents; I think Mr Clunas was at one time paying £300, but he got a reduction of £50 from Sir John Fowler.

51,420. Then the place would make three farms paying about £80 each?—It might just come in about that.

51,421. Suppose this glen were offered to three farmers, do you think it would be readily taken up?—Oh, there is no doubt about that.

51,422. What would be the probable amount of money required to stock it?—It would take a good deal to stock the whole.

51,423. Would it take £3000?—Less than that would stock it.

51,424. In addition to the sheep, would you propose to have a cattle stocking?—Mr Clunas kept 14 or 15 milk cows.

51,425. That would be five milk cows for each of the smaller places?—Yes.

51,426. And a pair of horses?—He kept four horses.

51,427. But the three smaller tenants would each require a pair of horses?—Yes. He was not cultivating all he might have done.

51,428. Then, they would have to provide that stock in addition to their sheep stock?—Yes.

51,429. They would, of course, have the buildings to provide?—Yes.

51,430. Do you suppose you could find people willing to go there and to put up the buildings themselves?—There are few people in the glen now, but I know that if it were put out, it would soon be taken up.

51,431. But would you propose that the proprietor should rebuild the houses, or the tenants?—It would just depend upon how they would be rented.

51,432. Could they build the necessary houses, and pay £80 of rent each?—Yes, if they got it at a fair rent, they could build themselves.

51,433. We are taking it for granted that the last rent, £250, was a fair rent; and dividing it into three makes a rent of rather over £80 on each new tenant. Now do you think you could find three people willing to go there and stock the farms and build the houses, and pay £80 of rent?—They might come from other places.

51,434. It does not matter where they come from?—I well believe if that was the case, it would soon be filled up.

51,435. You would find people ready and willing to go there and to build the necessary houses?—Yes.

51,436. What is the average height of the ground there?—Really, I cannot tell you.

51,437. Is it subject to frost?—Some years.

51,438. Are you personally acquainted with the country?—Perfectly well; I was born there.

51,439. Did you ever see the corn there frosted?—Several times.

51,440. Then it is not a place you would set down for small tenants?—Farther down there is plenty land that is quite suitable for small farmers.

51,441. But you would not propose to put small tenants into a place where their crops would be liable to be frosted?—That is what they cannot help; some years might come good enough, and another year's frost might take it all away.

51,442. But I am asking you a plain question; would you propose to put small tenants into a country where their crops are liable to be frosted?—They would need to take their chance of that.

51,443. You would recommend that being done?—I know that I did it myself, and I could not complain.

51,444. Mr Macleod.—About this farm of Tullich, is there much green land on it?—It is all green, the low-lying ground.

51,445. How many acres would you say?—Perhaps about 20 or 25, I could not be very sure.

51,446. Was it under crop before?—Yes.

51,447. How is it held now?—It is all under sheep now.

51,448. Who is the tenant?—Donald Watson; he has the whole of it.

51,449. You said you held some land yourself?—Yes.

51,450. Is it the glebe of Dalarossie?—Yes.

51,451. What extent is it?—About seven acres.

51,452. Is it under crop?—No, it is under grass.

51,453. Have you got any pasture?—A small bit, about two acres.

51,454. Do you march with the deer forest?—No, not quite; there is about half a mile between us.

51,455. Are you troubled with the deer there? Do they come down upon this land you have got?—No, I never saw any of them upon this very spot.

51,456. Do the deer come down upon the arable land in the district?—Yes, they do.

51,457. And is there much destruction to the crops thereby?—A great deal very often.

51,458–59. Mr George Malcolm, Secretary, Highland Property Association.—Are you able to tell the Commissioners with regard to Glenmaseran whether, before it was afforested, the proprietor tried to re-let it as a sheep farm?—No, he did not try.

51,460. It was not advertised, was it?—No. [The Chairman.—You mean that it was immediately turned into forest, without any endeavour to re-let it as a sheep farm?—He wanted to turn it into a forest, and did so.]

51,461. And was that also the case with reference to The Mackintosh's lands?—The man who had that part of the low land failed, and was not able to keep it; and The Mackintosh did not advertise for another farmer, and it was turned under deer.

51,462. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—Yes.

51,463. How long were you a gamekeeper?—For six years.

51,464. You were never a deer forester?—No.

51,465. Just a general gamekeeper?—Just a gamekeeper.

51,466. And never specially employed in the management of a deer forest?—No. [Mr Sutherland.—Have you ever stalked deer?—Yes.]

51,467. Mr Allan Macdonald, Solicitor, Inverness, Commissioner for The Mackintosh.—What extent of arable land did you say was in the forest of Coignafearn?—Between Coignafearn and Coignascallan, about 200 acres so far as I could judge.

51,468. I have got the book of contents of the estate here and it shows that there are only 97·8 acres of arable between Coignascallan and Coignafearn. [Mr Sutherland].—Is that land under cultivation, or land possible to be brought under cultivation? [Mr Macdonald].—Land that may possibly be brought under cultivation. [Mr Sutherland].—That is the figure according to the opinion of the estate people? [Mr Macdonald].—Yes, it is taken from the estate contents. [To Witness].—You said the extent of the forest was 52,000 acres?—Yes.

51,469. Would you be surprised to hear that the whole extent of the Monadh-liath is 38,000 acres, from which you have to take 10,000 acres that is let to tenants for pasture, so that practically the forest only covers about 28,000 acres? [Mr Sutherland.—We have a return giving the acreages of all the deer forests in the country.]

51,470. You said 15,000 or 16,000 sheep used to live there?—Yes.

51,471. But you know they only lived there a month or two in the summer?—They would not be more than perhaps two months.

51,472. And only in summer?—Only in summer.

51,473. That land is not suitable for wintering sheep?—Oh, indeed, no, it is not safe to winter sheep.

51,474. Do you know the Coigs tenants?—I do.

51,475. Do they winter sheep?—Very few indeed.

51,476. And you know why practically it was given up as a grazing land?—Well, it was asked, at all events; The Mackintosh asked it, and they did give it up.

51,477. Why did the whole of this land which used to carry 15,000 sheep cease to be grazing land?—As to that I cannot say.

51,478. Would you be surprised to learn it was very difficult to get tenants?—I well believe they were kept on; they were coming from Badenoch as you know to the grazing of Craig-Uanach, and from Strathnairn and Strathspey.

51,479. Would you be surprised to learn that at last it was difficult to get them to come from anywhere; and that even those who did come did not pay more than one-half the rent which was paid ten or twelve years ago?—I well believe the land pays better under deer.

51,480. The sheep rent fell by at least one-half within ten years preceding the afforestment?—It might.

51,481. You talked about Coignascallan and Coignafearn being added to the forest; but what really took place was that the land was afforested all at the same time?—Yes.

Inverness. — John Grant.

51,482. The farm of Coignascallan is outside the forest fence?—Part of it.

51,483. Almost the whole of it?—Not at all.

51,484. What part of it?—The west part is all fenced into deer forest. It goes up to the dyke crossing at the end of the bridge near the lodge.

51,485. The fence comes up to the bridge?—Further up than the bridge: the fence starts from the bridge.

51,486. That is what I am saying?—And the other part between that and Coignafearn is all on the forest.

51,487. How much land is there between the bridge and Coignafearn?—I should say close upon 30 acres.

51,488. Is there any arable land there?—It is all arable land.

51,489. Do you know about the steading?—Yes.

51,490. There is cultivated land there at present?—Very little.

51,491. The Mackintosh cultivates some himself, and Donald Macrae cultivates some?—That is down at Coignascallan.

51,492. That is what I am talking about. How much arable land is there there? I thought that was the bulk of the arable land at Coignascallan?—Oh, no, not at all.

51,493. You said that the farm of Coignascallan was vacant because the tenant Macrae failed?—I think that was the cause.

51,494. And that it had not been advertised or occupied as a farm since?—No.

51,495. Don't you know that Alexander Macbean, who is now at Ballachraggan, took it for some time?—Yes, but he did not farm it, he had sheep on it.

51,496. He had sheep on it since Macrae failed?—Yes.

51,497. Now, could you tell me what other forest marches with Coignafearn except Maseran which was made since it was afforested?—There is the forest of Lord Lovat which adjoins it on the west side.

51,498. Does it march with it?—Yes.

51,499. You said that deer could come from Gaick all the way?—I said that deer might come there from the Gaick forest, and I have no doubt they would.

51,500. I thought you also said they might come from Gaick to Coignafearn walking through forest all the way?—Oh, no, I did not mean that.

51,501. Would you just tell me what you mean by saying that sport is much easier now than it used to be?—How would it not be easier, seeing you may get a hundred deer for every one that used to be got.

51,502. That is not what was put to you. Is it less fatiguing to go stalking now than it used to be?—It is. When I was there, there was no road at Coignafearn at all; there was not a yard of road then, but now there is a carriage road from Coignafearn on to Dalbeg.

51,503. Tell me anything else that makes sport easier?—That is one point.

51,504. Tell me another point. [The Chairman.—Did the formation of bridle paths make it easier?—Yes.]

51,505. Are there any bridle paths in Coignafearn?—Yes, there are bridle roads there.

51,506. But is it much easier to shoot a stag now?—Yes. I might go ten miles without seeing a stag then, but now perhaps I might not go a hundred yards from the house to see one,—I might even shoot one from the window of my house.

51,507. Then, what makes it so much easier in your opinion is that there are so many more stags on the ground?—Yes, they are far more numerous. I was in a house not very long ago, and I counted 38 head within 150 yards of the lodge.

51,508. Where was that?—Just up at Glen-Kyllachy.

51,509. The Chairman.—Have you any general knowledge of the forests in Scotland other than those you have mentioned?—Oh, yes.

51,510. Which other forest do you know well?—I know one in Strathspey, the forest of Kinveachy.

51,511. Is that a deer forest, or a deer park?—It is a deer forest.

51,512. Has there been afforestment there recently?—Very little of cultivated land.

Inverness. — John Grant.

51,513. But grazing land; has any grazing land been added to it?—Not any.

51,514. Just to take that forest as an illustration, is there much of that forest suitable for deer and nothing else?—Well, no; that forest is quite suitable for sheep, all over.

51,515. For summer grazing?—For summer grazing of sheep.

51,516. Is any part of it suitable for winter grazing?—Not much of it; there is some low land that is quite suitable.

51,517. Do you remember when that forest was under sheep or any part of it?—Yes, I remember when the whole of it was under sheep.

51,518. When was that forest formed?—About 15 years ago.

51,519. Prior to that, was it wholly under sheep?—Wholly under sheep.

51,520. Now, do you know any other forest in the country which has been similarly treated?—Glenmore and Rothiemurchus.

51,521. Have been turned from sheep land into deer forest?—It was once under sheep.

51,522. Was it under sheep in your recollection?—I recollect it before it was turned into a forest, when Lord Stamford took it; it was he who made it a deer forest.

51,523. Which forest is that?—Glenmore.

51,524. Do you make the same remark with regard to Rothiemurchus?—The top parts of it are in the Grampians, but there is fine grazing for sheep on the low parts.

51,525. Do you remember when these lands were under sheep?—I do.

51,526. How long ago is that?—It will be over 40 years ago.

51,527. Is there any other forest that you are well acquainted with?—No, none that I am well acquainted with.

51,528. Speaking as a man who has skill and experience in matters relating to a deer forest, do you say that there are considerable tracts of land in these forests suitable for deer and for no other purpose?—Not except in this forest of The Mackintosh.

51,529. How many years' experience of forests have you had?—This Kinveachy was the first one, then Rothiemurchus and Glenmore, but I was not so well acquainted there.

51,530. But how long have you been employed in connection with forests?—About ten years.

51,531. How were you engaged before that?—I was a farmer.

51,532. May I ask how you are engaged now?—I am in many trades; I am a blacksmith, and at steam-engine works. With all these deer forests around, the blacksmith trade could not keep me alive, so I bought an engine and am now sawing timber.

51,533. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You say you have had skill in deer forests for the last ten years?—Yes.

51,534. In what way have you had such experience in the forest?—I have been with gentry who took me out to stalk for them.

51,535. In how many forests?—Only one.

51,536. Mr Charles Innes, Solicitor, Inverness.—You gave the Commissioners some evidence about the farm of Garbole upon the estate of Glen-Kyllachy?—Yes.

51,537. And, I think, you said there was one tenant there, William Macgillivray, who held 130 acres of arable land and half of the hill?—Something about that.

51,538. You said also that you knew a time when there were six tenants on that property?—Yes.

51,539. How long ago was that?—About 45 years ago, I daresay.

51,540. Long before the time of the present proprietor?—Oh, long before.

51,541. How long has he been in possession?—Mackintosh of Holm was the proprietor then: I think Mr Mackenzie has had the property about ten or eleven years.

51,542. Do you know what stock Mr Macgillivray keeps?—I think between 700 and 800 sheep.

51,543. And how many cattle?—About 20 milk cows.

51,544. He has rather a famous breed of Highland cattle?—Yes, it is Highland cattle he keeps.

51,545. But you know they are good stock?—They are good stock, undoubtedly.

51,546. Does he now hold all the arable acres that were ever cultivated upon that estate?—Not the whole; part of it.

51,547. Where?—There is a bit that Mr Mackintosh of Holm kept in reserve when he sold the estate that was joined into Garbole.

51,548. But I am talking of the estate as it now exists. Has not Mr Macgillivray, the tenant, in his possession all the arable land that ever was cultivated upon that farm?—No, there is part of it in the hands of Mr Mackenzie.

51,549. Where is that?—On the west side of the lodge.

51,550. How many acres?—Perhaps four or five acres.

51,551. The landlord keeps four or five acres that were arable land at one time in connection with the lodge?—Yes.

51,552. How is it grazed?—It is under deer.

51,553. Is it not in the possession of the game-keeper?—He has got a pony off Mr Mackenzie and a cow; that is all.

51,554. Four acres I suppose is not more than sufficient to feed a cow and a pony?—He has got all the land round the lodge.

51,555. How many acres are there?—I could not say; perhaps two acres.

51,556. Would you like to keep your pony and a cow all the year round upon these two bits of land?—I would do it nicely if I got the liberty his cow and pony have.

51,557. But it is not more than sufficient? He uses all that grows on it?—He just uses what will keep the pony and cow.

51,558. He does not sell anything from it?—No, not so far as I know.

51,559. With that exception Mr Macgillivray now has all the arable land upon the estate of Glen-Kyllachy?—Yes.

51,560. Do you know that Mr Macgillivray has sometimes to purchase fodder to feed his cattle and sheep?—I don't think he ever bought any yonder, so far as I know: he is always selling off the farm, but taking in none.

51,561. You are sure of that?—Quite sure.

51,562. How many sheep does he winter on the farm?—It is not the same number every year; some years he does not put away but the hoggs.

51,563. What proportion of the sheep does he send away on the average?—Perhaps about 200 lambs.

51,564. Could he keep a greater stock than he has?—Well, the stock would not be so good: he is rearing good stock, and if he was to get more they would not feed so well.

51,565. So that the place is just stocked for the quantity of food there is?—Just so.

51,566. Do you know the height of the lands of Glen-Kyllachy, the highest up?—No, I cannot tell you.

51,567. Will it be 2000 feet?—Oh, no.

51,568. In the portion of the estate which is in the proprietor's own hands, I mean the hill part, is there any land that ever was cultivated?—Yes.

51,569. Is there any land in Mr Mackenzie's hill which he does not let which was at one time cultivated?—Yes, I know one place where there was a family.

51,570. Where was that?—It was up the burn of Glen-Kyllachy. I saw the ruins there.

51,571. What was the extent?—I do not know.

51,572. Two acres?—Not so much; perhaps less than one.

51,573. Was that where a shepherd lived?—No.

51,574. Who lived there?—It was a daughter of the shepherd.

51,575. Give us the name and the date when the people lived there?—I do not remember it; but I was told about it, and I have seen the ruins of the house where they lived.

Inverness. John Grant.

51,576. It was before you were born?—Yes.

51,577. There was a quarter of an acre added to a cottage. And is that the only place in the portion of the estate in the proprietor's hands that you ever heard was cultivated?—Yes, with the exception of what was round the lodge.

51,578. Has the bit round the lodge ever been cultivated—the park?—Yes.

51,579. It has been in permanent grass for a good many years?—Since a long time.

51,580. For how many years?—Forty-eight years, I daresay.

51,581. And you know it is simply a paddock in connection with the lodge?—Yes.

51,582. You never saw a tenant there?—It was joining with the tenant in Garbole.

51,583. But the two acre bit in front of the lodge,—was that ever cultivated by a tenant?—Yes, I recollect seeing it under a tenant.

51,584. How many years ago?—About 45 years ago, when the Macqueens were there.

51,585. Do you say that a landlord when his servant has a cow and a pony is not entitled to keep that for his servant's use?—Oh, undoubtedly.

51,586. You would not divide that up?—Oh, no, that is just what is fair and reasonable.

51,587. There is no more cultivable land in the proprietor's hands than you know is fair and reasonable?—Not a bit.

51,588. Then knowing the country as you do, and as I do, do you think the climate is better or worse than it was in your young days?—Much about the same, but the land is better. When the lime quarries were opened it made a different country of it altogether.

51,589. But we are speaking now of Glen-Kyllachy, not of the whole strath. Is the climate there better or worse than it used to be?—Just much about the same.

51,590. Is there as much snow now as there used to be?—Just something similar.

51,591. Did you ever see on this very farm of Garbole the crops covered with snow to the depth of a foot?—Oh, several times.

51,592. Then on the portion of the estate in the proprietor's hands, how many sheep could be carried?—It would carry something like what it has got just now.

51,593. That is 700 sheep?—Between 700 and 800.

51,594. Could they be kept on that portion of the ground all the year?—Not with safety, unless there was a good crop of hay.

51,595. But there is no arable land to get a crop of hay from?—There is plenty, on the low ground.

51,596. But that is let?—Yes.

51,597. I am talking now of the portion of the estate which is in the proprietor's hands. Is it not so high that it would be impossible to keep sheep alive summer and winter?—It would not be safe to have them there; they would need to go to the low ground.

51,598. They would need to be wintered somewhere else?—Just so, or on the farm.

51,599. You said that the high tops were only available for deer,—that no other animal would live there?—Not in the winter time.

51,600. Do not deer as well as sheep require to live in the winter time?—Deer are stronger, and can stand a storm better than sheep.

51,601. But don't they require to live in the winter time?—When there is plenty of grass, there is no fear.

51,602. Is there a plentiful supply of grass on the Monadh-liath during the winter months?—Oh, plenty.

51,603. In the winter?—In the winter.

51,604. What depth of snow have you known there?—It is not the same; it will drift away, perhaps.

51,605. But I want to know what is the average depth to which the snow lies upon that high country of the Monadh-liath?—Perhaps some winters three feet depth, and perhaps some places six or ten feet.

51,606. Have you never seen even that extent of snow upon the road along the strath?—I did see it there too; it will drift on to it.

51,607. Is that road not impassable every year?—Not every year.

51,608. How often in an average of ten years?—Perhaps not once every five years.

51,609. Are you sure about that?—Quite sure.

51,610. Do you know these farms along the strath there?—Perfectly.

51,611. Do you know that the rents have been considerably reduced in the last 10 or 15 years?—I think it is reduced.

51,612. Why was it reduced?—The tenants were complaining that it was too highly rented.

51,613. Why was it so?—Owing to the fall in prices of cattle and sheep.

51,614. Had the season nothing to do with it?—The season also might have an effect on it.

51,615. Don't you know that they had a very great effect on it?—Yes, I know.

51,616. And that that was the reason among others why the rents were lowered. Then knowing that the seasons had been so bad as sometimes to lose the greater portion of the crops of the existing tenants, whose farms are situated at a lower elevation, would you propose to put new men altogether on the bit of land which is now in Mr Mackenzie's possession?—Yes, if they were to get the low-lying ground and break up that farm which is in one man's possession, and which once had five men.

51,617. You would not call 130 acres a big farm?—It is not a small one; if I had a third of it I would be very pleased.

51,618. It is considerably bigger than the half-acre croft you told us about, which your father or grandfather told you about?—Yes.

51,619. Are there many young men in your parish?—Very few indeed.

51,620. Why do they go away?—Through rack-renting, probably. I remember 16 farmers leaving us all at once.

51,621. I am talking of the young men; why do they leave the parish?—Because they were over-rented in their farms, and had just to leave.

51,622. I am talking of the men who had no farms, the young men?—They had not the opportunity of taking a farm when their parents were too much rented at that time.

51,623. Do you deliberately say that the young men have left the upper end of the parish simply because they thought they could not get farms of their own?—Perhaps that would not be the opinion of the whole of them, but there are some of them of that opinion. [The Chairman.—Do you know of men who have tried to get farms for themselves and did not succeed in doing so?—That is so.]

51,624. Give us the names of these people, and the estate?—I may tell you that I saw them leaving from The Mackintosh estate and from Balnespick and from Strathnoon and Banchor, which is all under one tenant now.

51,625. Have you ever known anybody on Glen-Kyllachy estate apply for a farm and be refused?—Oh, they could not get the chance of it, when it was all turned into one farm. They were driven away to the other side of the water at that time when Mr Mackintosh, Holm, put them away.

51,626. The other side of the water belonged to him then, did it not?—Yes, at that time.

51,627. So that they were migrated from one side of his estate to another?—Some of them; but some had to leave and go to The Mackintosh's estate.

51,628. But they found places in the district?—Some of them did not.

51,629. You are talking of what happened forty-five years ago?—It is not forty-five years ago.

51,630. Are you sure?—It may be about forty-five, I daresay.

51,631. Do you know of anybody there now who wants a new holding upon this piece of Glen-Kyllachy?—I would take it myself.

51,632. Do you come here as a delegate or as an individual?—As an individual. Inverness. — John Grant.

51,633. You do no represent anybody but yourself?—No.

51,634. Do you know that there were always deer in your time on Glenmaseran?—Not on Glenmaseran.

51,635. You remember a time when there were none?—I recollect there were none to be seen at all.

51,636. Have you ever had any sport in that forest?—I daresay I have at times.

51,637. Do you remember on one occasion being caught there without authority, shooting or in search of deer?—I know I was punished in this house for it.

51,638. Then on that occasion, were you discovered sitting upon a rock?—No.

51,639. Have you ever been convicted of poaching deer?—Never, until then.

51,640. And of poaching birds, or other animals of sport?—I was once here about birds.

51,641. You have only been convicted twice?—Yes.

51,642. Is that all?—So far as I remember.

51,643. Your recollection of other things was very good; surely you can remember that? (No answer).

51,644. Mr Sutherland.—You were asked questions to show that this land that has been afforested was so changed because it was not capable of wintering sheep?—Oh, that was not the case.

51,645. Do you know any sheep farm in Scotland where they do not remove some of the sheep for wintering?—Very few.

51,646. If, then, that was the reason for changing this land into deer forest, the whole of the sheep farms in Scotland might equally well be changed into deer forests?—But I don't think that was the case here.

51,647. What do you think was the case?—I think the case was that it was to pay the landlord better under deer than under sheep.

51,648. But you have heard it stated to-day that the rent had afterwards to be reduced, when certain tenants were turned away?—Yes.

51,649. Did the landlord afterwards get the rent he wanted from the tenants he turned away in these cases?—He did, but those parties that would take that perhaps would not stop long.

51,650. Are the rents the same in that case on the tenants to-day as the rents the old tenants were paying?—They are reduced a few years since.

51,651. It comes to this, that the tenants were put away, and the landlord has not got the rent he wanted after all?—After all.

51,652. You were asked also if snow fell there. As a matter of fact, snow falls everywhere in this country?—Everywhere, in the streets of London too.

51,653. You said you had seen snow to the depth of a foot there; did you never see snow to the depth of a foot in the town of Inverness?—I have.

51,654. Have you seen the railway communication interrupted in the town of Inverness through snowstorms?—Yes, I remember perfectly there was a snowstorm there as well as with us.

51,655. But no one would think of turning the town of Inverness into a deer forest on that account?—Oh, no.

51,656. There are no special snowstorms in the country you speak of?—No.

51,657. So that any drawback with regard to that exists only when it applies to other places as well?—To other places just the same.

51,658. Then with regard to the grass that grows in this deer forest, have you ever seen grass rotting year after year in a deer forest?—Yes, when there was not enough stock of deer to eat it up.

51,659. And because of that, the herbage gets rank and wilder?—Yes.

51,660. And certainly deteriorates as pasture?—Once it rots in the ground, it makes the ground fatter, and the grass will grow next year.

51,661. But the grass grows ranker when it is not cropped by any animal?—Yes.

Inverness. John Macdonald.

JOHN MACDONALD, late Ballimore, Dochfour (47) —examined.

51,662. The Chairman.—I understand you have something to say?—I have given a statement before, at Beauly.

51,663. And what do you wish to say now?—Since then, of course, the bills made their way as far as Dochfour, and I was appointed a second time, that is how I come before you again.

51,664. And now you are to give evidence for Dochfour?—I gave my evidence at Beauly last year.

51,665. Have you any further evidence to give?—No, just the same.

51,666. So that we may take the evidence you are asked to give us to-day as a repetition of the evidence you gave at Beauly?—Yes, I gave all my evidence at Beauly.

51,667. Then we need not take your evidence again.—That is what I think. Of course, having been appointed, I thought it my duty to attend.

51,668. I quite understand; but I think it is unnecessary to examine you further.—I could only give the same evidence.

James Ross.

JAMES ROSS, Solicitor, Inverness, factor for Raasay (55) —examined.

51,669. The Chairman.—Do you wish to read a statement?—I wish to read a statement to your lordship and to the Commission.

51,670. You are factor on the Raasay estate?—Factor and Commissioner on the Raasay estate.

51,671. And it is with regard to that estate that you desire to give us evidence?—Yes.

51,672. You were not able to attend the sitting we held in Portree last year?—There was some misunderstanding about the time it was to be held: I arrived too late, but I had the permission of the Commission to attend here.

51,673. Kindly read your statement.—

STATEMENT by James Ross, Solicitor, Inverness, Factor and Commissioner for Mrs Wood of Raasay, as to the estate of Raasay, in the parish of Portree, and county of Inverness.

The following statement, in so far as it refers to matters happening prior to 1876, when the late Mr Edward Herbert Wood purchased Raasay, has been prepared from information carefully gathered from estate rentals and other documents, and also from the examination of old residents on the island; and it is believed to be substantially, if not completely, accurate. The facts relating to matters since 1876 are largely within my own knowledge.

The estate of Raasay,—which comprises the islands of Raasay, Rona, Fladda, and Isle Tigh,—is altogether about 18,000 acres in extent. The whole estate is about 18 miles in length, as the crow flies, and it varies in breadth from half a mile up to about three and a half miles.

At the date of Mr Wood's entry in 1876, it was approximately divided as follows:—

	Acres
Approximate area of sheep farm,	10,000
Approximate area of land held by crofters,	6200
Approximate area of Home Farm, pasturage, woods, and policies of Raasay House,	1800
Total,	18,000

The Home Farm extends to about 120 acres.

Prior to 1843 it was owned for centuries by the family of Macleod of Raasay, but in that year it was placed under trustees, from whom Mr George Rainy, a West India merchant, bought it in 1846, and entered into possession at Whitsunday of that year. The price paid by Mr Rainy was £27,660. Inverness. James Ross.

At that time the population was between 1000 and 1100, chiefly crofters and cottars. The crofting townships on the estate with the number of crofters and cottars in each were about this time as follows:—

Fearns,	26 crofters	8 cottars
Leac,	9 "	2 "
Lower Hallaig,	9 "	2 "
Screpidale,	9 "	3 "
Castle,	6 "	2 "
Torran,	4 "	2 "
Arnish	4 "	2 "
Umachan,	5 "	1 "
Kyle Rona,	10 "	3 "
Manish,	4 "	2 "
Balechourn,	6 "	– "
Fladda,	4 "	4 "
Isle Tigh,	1 "	– "
Dornaguilla,	3 "	2 "
Bigharbour,	1 "	1 "
Dryharbour,	11 "	3 "
Total,	112 crofters	37 cottars

Some ten years prior to 1846 Suishnish and Ayre were also occupied by crofters and cottars, but there were none on this part of the estate when Mr Rainy took possession.

As a good deal of sub-division of land had taken place among the crofters before 1846, it is difficult to say how many of the tenants given in the foregoing list of townships occupied whole crofts, but the full souming of each whole croft was as follows:—

	Cows	Calves till one-year old	Sheep
*Lower Fearns,	3	3	–
*Upper Fearns,	3	3	–
*Leac,	3	3	–
*Lower Hallaig,	4	4 2 two-year olds	–
*Screpidale,	3	one-year old 3	–
Castle,	6	6	10
Torran,	3	3	30
Arnish,	4	4	30
Umachan,	4	4	30
Kyle Rona,	2	2	20
Manish,	4	4	20
Balechourn,	4	4	8
Fladda,	4	4	20
Isle Tigh,	4	4	40
Dornaguilla,	5	5	20
†Bigharbour,	8	8	80
Dryharbour,	4	4	20

The larger holdings on the estate in 1846 were the following:—

Holding.	Rent.
Suishnish and Borrodale,	£105
Ayre,	77
Glaum and Brae,	100
Upper Hallaig,	36
Total,	£318

These farms were then held by single tenants under lease.

The whole of Raasay lying to the north of Castle, as well as Fladda, Isle-Tigh, and Rona, has been

* The sheepstock of these townships cannot now be ascertained correctly. They held all the hill ground in the middle of the island in common, along with tenants of Ayre and Suishnish, &c. The cottars had often more sheep on the ground than the crofters.

†Bigharbour is more a small farm by itself than a croft, but it was not held by the tenant at any time on lease.

Inverness. — James Ross.

wholly occupied by crofters and cottars as far back as we have any record, the old divisions and marches of townships remaining the same to the present day.

The people lived on the produce of their crofts and by fishing; fish-buyers and curers coming to the lochs and harbours in the district at the fishing season and buying up the fish caught and curing them on board their vessels. At other seasons when no curers were at hand, the people merely fished and cured for home consumption.

The estate having been for some years under trustees, before it was bought by Mr Rainy, no work was provided for the people during that time, and very few of them left to seek for work elsewhere. The price of cattle and sheep was very low, a cow or two year old being sold for £3; a stirk £1 to £1, 5s.; a ewe and lamb 6s.; a wedder 6s. Wool was also very cheap, but as the people manufactured all their clothing themselves out of their wool, very little was sold.

The arable land being limited in extent, the congestion of population began to be felt at the time Mr Rainy bought the property, more especially in the townships of Fearns, Leac, Hallaig, and Screpidale, all of which were thickly peopled.

The failure of the potato crop, as well as the partial failure of the small local fishing in the summer of 1846, reduced the people of these townships to the verge of starvation. To avert the calamity which then threatened the greater part of the Western Highlands and Islands, Destitution Committees were formed in Glasgow and Edinburgh to collect money for the purchase of meal to be sent to the districts where want was most pressing. This meal was distributed to the people through Local District Committees, and was given gratis to the most needy the first winter. In the following spring an attempt was made by the Central Committee to relieve the people by starting relief works in the form of road-making, &c., and for this work payment was made in meal, the allowance being 1 lb. for each able-bodied man employed, 1 lb. for his wife, if married, and ½ lb. for each of his children per day. These relief works in so far as carried on in Raasay, while averting actual starvation among the people, do not seem to have been of much permanent benefit to the estate, two small pieces of unfinished roads at Kyle Rona and Balechourn being the only traces left of the committee's work.

The population in the different townships in Raasay lying to the north of Screpidaile and in the Islands of Fladda and Rona being more sparse, the destitution did not reach the acute stage in these places that it did in the over-crowded townships lying to the south of Castle, but all the crofters and cottars on the estate were relieved more or less by the Destitution Committee. Altogether there seems to have been a good deal of mismanagement and waste in connection with the working of this Destitution Committee, and it only continued in existence for eighteen months. In the spring of 1847, Mr Rainy began general estate improvements, such as reclamation of waste land, draining, fencing, planting, road-making, building, &c., and these improvements were gradually extended till every man and woman on the estate, who cared to work, got employment.

The people were now paid in money wages, able-bodied men getting from 1s. to 1s. 6d., and women 8d. per day, but higher wages were generally earned by those employed at piece-work.

Between 1847 and 1851, owing to the difficulty of getting food supplies, Mr Rainy imported several ship loads of meal, which he kept in store, and sold to the people at a price that barely covered the cost and expense of storage and sale, as much as 1200 bolls passing out of the storekeeper's hands in five months.

In 1851 four families in Fearns applied to Mr Rainy for assistance to emigrate to Australia. He promised to assist, not only these four families, but all who cared to go. On this offer becoming known, a good many people from the townships of Fearns and four cottars from Hallaig took advantage of it.

In 1851 Government-assisted passages were granted to able-bodied men with their families, from this country to Australia, the fare for adults under 55 years of age being £2.

Inverness. — James Ross.

The people had by this time sunk into such a state of poverty that only two families out of all those who wished to emigrate could raise sufficient money by the sale of their stock and other effects to provide the £2 of passage money and the necessary outfit for the voyage. Mr Rainy took the cows belonging to the tenants of Fearns which they were unable to dispose of otherwise, as part payment for outfit and passage money, which he paid for all, except the two families already mentioned. He also paid full fares and expenses for them all to the port of embarkation, and full passage money to Australia for all those over 55 years of age. He likewise gave up all the arrears of rent due by those emigrating, which were very heavy.

Family connections being a good deal broken up by this emigration, most of those remaining in Fearns, as well as those in the townships of Leac and Hallaig left for Australia in 1853. These last were granted free passages to Australia, and had outfits provided and all expenses paid by the emigration agent, acting on behalf of the Australian Government. In these cases Mr Rainy also gave up all claim to the arrears of rent due. After the emigration of 1853, only nine families remained in Screpidale, Hallaig, Leac, and Fearns. Of these, four families went to Balechourn, taking the crofts there vacated by four crofters who left that township for America the same year. Other two families went to Umachan, one to Dryharbour, and two to Snizort, Skye.

Of the families then in Screpidale and Castle, two only were natives of Raasay, and these two went to Tote, Skye; the others going to different parts of Skye and the Mainland.

The four tenants in Manish in 1853 all went to Skye in that year.

During the time the Macleods held the property, the different factors, who were resident in Skye, were in the habit of constantly transferring tenants from Skye into holdings in Raasay and vice versa.

On the expiry of the leases of Glam, Suishnish, and Ayre in 1849, the proprietor took these holdings into his own hands and held them for one year.

They were then let to Mr Royston Mackenzie in 1850, as one sheep farm at a rent of £250 a year. In 1853 the arable and pasture lands of Fearns, Leac, Hallaig, Screpidaile, Castle, and Manish were added to this farm; and, two years later, part of the Balechourn hill pasture was also added, the rent of the township being reduced by £9. The various additions brought the rent of the sheep farm (known as Suishnish) up to £650 per annum, at which figure it remained till 1869, when, on the termination of the tenants' lease and the granting of a new one, the rent was fixed at £973. The estate improvements already referred to as carried out by Mr Rainy were continued, giving work to the people, up to his death in 1863. In that year Mr George Rainy was succeeded by his only son, Mr George Haygarth Rainy, but he being a minor for several years after succeeding to the estate the improvements may be said to have ceased at his father's death, only a sufficient number of people being employed as was necessary to keep the place in order. On Mr G. H. Rainy's death in 1872 the estate passed into the hands of the late Mr G. G. Mackay, the price paid being £55,000.

During the two years Mr Mackay owned the property, a good many men were employed, chiefly in making walks and bridle paths on different parts of the property, but these improvements were not of a substantial character, and were of little permanent benefit to the estate. Soon after entering into possession Mr Mackay took the township of Balechourn, consisting of six crofts and pasture land, together about 500 acres, into his own hands.

Though deprived of their lands the tenants of this township continued to occupy their dwelling-houses. Hitherto, or as far back as we have any record, the crofters' rents on Raasay estate remained practically unchanged, but during Mr Mackay's ownership they were raised all over, from 17 to 66 per cent. In one township—Arnish—the increase was 73 per cent., the average increase over all the crofter townships on the estate being 43 per cent. Soon after this, and before the increased rents came due, Mr Mackay sold the estate for £62,000 to Mr W. J. Armitage, who took possession at Martinmas 1874.

Mr Armitage provided no work for the people. He restored the land at Balechourn to the crofters dispossessed by Mr Mackay at an increase of £1 per croft, on the original rent. He also let Isle Tigh, which had been vacant for a year, to a tenant at £10 rent per annum, being an increase of £2 on the rent paid by the former tenant.

Mr Armitage then sold the property to the late Mr E. H. Wood in 1876 at the price of £65,000, and Mr Wood entered into possession at Whitsunday of that year. At that time the population was about 650. In 1881 it was 707. In 1891, 678. It may here be stated that the number of paupers in 1883 was 16. In 1894, the number is 19.

On the estate near Raasay House, there is a range of buildings, consisting of six houses of two rooms each, entirely occupied by poor widows. Each widow sits rent free, and gets 4 bolls of meal, 2 tons coals, and ½ boll of potatoes per annum, and a money allowance of 1s. per week.

The increase of population between 1876 and 1881 may be accounted for by the introduction of extra farm servants, tradesmen, &c. to the island. A good many of the extra workmen engaged at work on the estate in 1881, left after Mr Wood's death in 1886, which mainly accounts for the decrease of population when the census was taken in 1891. There has been little, if any, increase since 1891. In 1892 the deaths registered exceeded the births by one. Mr Wood took the sheep farm into his own hands at his entry to the estate at Whitsunday 1876, taking over the sheep stock numbering 3200 from the representatives of the late tenant at valuation.

Immediately after entering into possession Mr Wood began very extensive building operations as well as other estate improvements, giving full employment to all the people of Raasay, &c., who had any desire for work, no man, woman, or child who asked work being refused. These estate works (apart from building) consisted chiefly of planting, road-making, trenching, draining, fencing, &c., on each of which large sums of money were spent. From the first, Mr Wood took great interest in his crofter and cottar tenants, and soon took steps to ameliorate their condition. Many of their dwelling-houses were in a ruinous condition, and he set about building new houses for them. Experience, however, showed that such a system would be both expensive and unsatisfactory. He consequently came to the resolution to furnish the tenants with timber, lime, doors and windows, &c., with a certain money allowance for building, leaving themselves to do the work. This course was carried into effect with considerable success. The value of timber for roofing and inside partitions, also doors, windows, lime, &c. for each house was about, . . . £6 0 0
Cash allowance given for building, . . . 10 0 0

Total for each—about £16 0 0

Over 30 crofters' houses were rebuilt in this way costing the proprietor about £480. At Arnish a slated house was built for one of the tenants there, on which the proprietor expended £98. This was done at the request of the tenant who promised to pay interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, on the extra outlay, but this interest was never charged to him or his successors in the holding.

In all cases the proprietor offered to lay concrete floors in these new houses at his own expense if the tenants would provide the gravel and sand necessary for the purpose, but although, in most cases the gravel and sand could have been got on the sea-shore not far from the houses, none took advantage of the offer.

Inverness. — James Ross.

Besides those houses wholly rebuilt, others were repaired and improved by grants of timber and money made by the proprietor. While better houses were thus provided for most of the crofter tenants, six new cottars' houses were built, and six old houses rebuilt at Mill Place and Clachan, costing altogether £530. As much sub-division of crofts had taken place in the north end of Raasay and in Rona, Mr Wood had a desire to consolidate the crofts again as opportunity offered. With this object in view, the township of Brae was formed out of the sheep farm, and three tenants placed on it; one being taken from Umachan, one from Arnish, and one from Balechourn, where he was living on his father's croft. The lands occupied by the first two were added to the adjoining lots. New buildings were erected on Brae by Mr Wood at a cost of over £50.

The township of Oskaig was also formed by Mr Wood in 1878, six slated cottages being built at a cost of £1200. Mr Wood's object in building this class of houses was to induce tradesmen, such as a tailor, shoemaker, weaver, &c. to settle down in Raasay as well as to accommodate his yachtsmen or other servants who were paid a higher rate of wages than ordinary labourers. There was a piece of garden ground, and land sufficient to keep a cow, attached to each cottage. These cottages were not taken up by tradesmen as expected. So tenants from Kyle Rona, Dry Harbour and other places in the north end of the island, who made application for these houses and were given estate work at the south end of Raasay, were placed in them. A piece of pasture land, about 188 acres, was subsequently taken off the adjoining hill belonging to the sheep farm and added to this township. The total cost to the proprietor in forming the township of Oskaig was :—

Barns, byres, and other outhouses,	82	18	0
Cost of taking spring water into township, with lead pipe, .	12	16	0
Iron and wire fences enclosing gardens, ...	20	10	0
Excavating and levelling about houses, making roads, drains, &c., ...	47	0	0
Total, .	1363	4	0

Notwithstanding this large outlay it must be confessed that the township of Oskaig has not served the purpose Mr Wood had in view, the houses being unsuitable to the habits and mode of life to which the occupants had previously been accustomed, and to which they still cling as far as their present surroundings will permit. As disputes frequently arose between the different townships on the island as to the herding of stock at the marches and the up-keep of township dykes, Mr Wood offered to put iron and wire fences in some of the marches, provided the tenants on either side would keep up the fences afterwards, and pay interest on the outlay. This they readily consented to do, and so he erected in all about 9662 yards of iron wire fencing, at a cost of £474, 6s. 11d. The interest on this outlay has never been paid or charged against any of the tenants. Loans were granted from time to time to the tenants for the purchase of fishing boats, nets, cattle, &c., to the extent of £407, 8s., which was never charged against, or paid by the tenants. The severe gale and high tides of 22nd November 1881 destroyed many of the small fishing boats on the coasts of Raasay and Rona, and as the people were unable to replace them, Mr Wood did so, paying two-thirds of the cost, the owners paying one-third. The summer of 1882 was very wet and stormy, which spoiled the potato crop, and, in consequence of this, there was a great scarcity of seed potatoes in the following spring. In order that all his tenants might have a thorough change of seed, Mr Wood purchased 63 tons of potatoes from Fife-shire and Easter Ross, at a cost of £360, and gave seed to all the tenants free, in quantities of from ¼ boll to 2½ bolls each.

Inverness. — James Ross.

He also granted an abatement of one-third of the year's rent due at Martinmas 1882, which amounted to £135, 10s. 5d.

All the crofter tenants on the estate have had the free use from the proprietor of well-bred Highland bulls for their stock during the past 16 years, and the improvement made in the quality of their cattle in that time has been very marked.

Their value would be still further enhanced if more attention was given to their housing, feeding, and general management.

In order that those of the tenants who prosecuted the herring fishing might be able to take full advantage of the best markets for the sale of their fish Mr Wood had a salt store built at Oskaig which was fully stocked with salt and barrels. These were sold to the people at cost price, but the privilege was not taken much advantage of. A good part of the stock had to be given out on credit and was never paid, and the store was ultimately discontinued.

The cost of this store to Mr Wood was about £123.

Glaum Farm.

In order to meet the requirements of his large house establishment for dairy produce, and with the view of saving the large expenditure made from time to time in supplementing the supplies from the Home Farm, Mr Wood began in 1878 to reclaim a tract of waste land at Glaum, about 4½ miles northward from the Home Farm.

The soil at this part of the island is clay and peat, the former of a friable nature and easily worked. The exposure of the land is westerly, and the altitude varies from 500 to 600 feet above the sea-level.

Owing to the difficulty of getting suitable materials for the erection of the necessary farm buildings it was decided to construct them of corrugated iron on strong concrete foundations. The buildings were finally completed by the spring of 1881.

By ploughing, trenching, and draining 70 acres of the land was brought into cultivation and afterwards fenced.

The total cost of buildings and reclamations, road-making, fencing, &c. thus far, was as follows:—

Excavations for foundations of buildings, concrete foundation walls, cement floors, cartage and contract price for erection of farm buildings and four labourers' cottages,	£2065	8	0
Making roads,	181	7	0
Ploughing and trenching 70 acres,	482	0	0
Draining 70 acres, including cost of drain, tiles, and cartage,	592	0	0
Fencing,	85	14	6
Forming mill dam and conduit,	57	0	0
Wages to day labourers apart from contract and piece-work,	462	12	0
Seeding for the first year,	16	0	0
Total,	£3942	1	6

As the buildings were erected to suit a farm of 200 acres I have deducted one-half of the first item in the account,—which gives cost of buildings,—amounting to £1032, leaving the sum of £2910 or £41, 11s. 5d. per acre for the 70 acres reclaimed.

As already stated, this farm was only made to supplement the supplies from the Home Farm, consequently no farm dwelling-house was necessary. In the occupation of a resident farmer a further sum of £450 or so would fall to be added as the cost of a dwelling-house, thus considerably increasing the cost per acre. Of the above total expenditure about £1350 was paid directly to the people of Raasay for day's wages and contract and piece work. The cultivation of this farm was continued by Mr Wood for three years at a heavy loss. The grain crops, though heavy, never ripened properly, and had to be cut in a half green state and dried for winter fodder for the cattle. Turnips grew well up to the middle of August, but did not bulb well. Potatoes were a failure, and even now, the shepherd who resides on the farm, though unrestricted in the quantity of ground he may plant, has given up the growing of potatoes altogether, and prefers to buy them of better quality from the low country. There is room to extend the farm to about 200 acres, which was the size Mr Wood at first intended to make it; but the climatic conditions were found to be altogether so unfavourable that the reclamations were not extended beyond 70 acres, and these are now going back into a state of nature again.

Inverness. — James Ross.

About 200 acres of hill ground in the neighbourhood of Suishnish and Oskaig were planted by Mr Wood with forest trees (larch and fir) at a cost, including draining, of about £5 per acre = £1000. Altogether, there are about 1200 acres of wood on the estate.

A tabulated statement, marked No. I, made up from the estate factory accounts, showing the annual expenditure by Mr and Mrs Wood on the different departments of the estate for the 17 years from 1876 to 1893, is produced herewith. (See below, page 1263.)

From the abstract appended to that statement, it will be seen that the total amount of expenditure for that period was £133,736; or an annual average, for the 17 years, of £7867.

To meet that large sum, the gross amount contributed from the estate itself (without making any charge for rent of the sheep and arable farms in the proprietor's own occupation), was only £50,182; leaving £83,554, or an annual average of £4915, which had to be contributed by Mr and Mrs Wood from sources outside the estate altogether.

It should also be noted that the above mentioned expenditure is exclusive of the sum of £14,803 for building additions to mansion house and offices; manager's house; extension of farm buildings, &c., &c. paid direct by Mr Wood, and not passed through the factory accounts of the estate.

There are also produced herewith tables (marked No. II.—see page 1263) showing the rents and arrears at different dates between 1827 and 1893 of the various townships occupied by the crofting tenants of Raasay. From the first of these tables it will be observed that the crofting rents of the townships remained practically unchanged between 1827 and 1870, and also that the increase in the rents was made between 1870 and 1876 by Mr G. G. Mackay as before mentioned. Apart from the temporary deduction of one-third, which was made by Mr Wood in 1882, the table also (in the column for 1884) shows the permanent reduction made by him in the following year of about 15½ per cent. on the crofting rental of the estate.

In 1889, prior to fair rents being fixed by the Crofters Commission, there were 84 small tenants (crofters and cottars) on the estate paying a total gross rental of £368, 11s. 6d., showing an average of £4, 9s. 2d. each.

Of the crofters on the estate, 50 applied to the Commission to have fair rents fixed. The old rents of these 50 amounted to £248, 7s.

The fair rents fixed were £153, 4s., being a reduction of about 38 per cent.

Immediately after the fair rents had been fixed, Mrs Wood applied the same principle to the reduction of the rents of those crofters who had not gone before the Commission, and, of course, the whole rents at present remain the same as in 1889 after the Crofters Commission decisions had been issued.

The second statement in table No. II gives the arrears due by the crofting townships on various dates between 1827 and Martinmas 1893. (See page 1263.)

Notwithstanding the temporary and permanent reductions of rent made by Mr Wood in 1882 and 1883, the arrears of the 50 applicants to the Crofters Commission amounted to £677, 16s. 10d. Of this sum £448, 2s. 3d. was cancelled, leaving £229, 14s. 7d. ordered to be paid, a reduction of 66 per cent.

The arrears due by the remaining small tenants on the estate were immediately reduced by Mrs Wood on the same principle. At present the total arrears of the whole of the small tenants amount to £353, 1s. 1d.

The third statement in table No. II, gives the amount of the rents at 1827 of the townships which were included in the sheep farm in 1853–54, and of the arrears due by the crofters in these townships at 1827 and 1831.

No removals have taken place at the instance of the proprietor since the late Mr Wood acquired the estate in 1876, and difficulties or differences with the crofters have been exceedingly few during the same period. The Raasay sheep farm comprises a high rocky ridge running north and south, the western slope of which, with the exception of Glaum, is bare moorland. Along the south and east sides lie the patches of old arable land, at one time in the occupation of those crofters who emigrated in 1851 and 1853, and to whom reference has already been made. To the north by Castle and Manish are several patches of low-lying pasture land, intersected by rocky ridges more suitable for deer and black cattle than for sheep.

Such being the nature and configuration of the lands comprising the sheep farm, it will be seen that if the scattered patches of old arable and low-lying pasture land were taken from it, its value as a sheep farm would be wholly destroyed.

There is no exclusive deer forest on Raasay estate; sheep and deer are on the same ground, which is completely fenced off from the crofters' holdings, with the exception of the common pasture of Oskaig township.

The farm would carry a stock of 3000 sheep and 50 cattle. For personal reasons the late Mr Wood transferred part of the sheep stock to his English estate, thus reducing considerably the stock on Raasay. Since that time the stock has been gradually brought up again, the present number being 1800 sheep and 50 cattle, but the present and future prospects of sheep farming are not such as to warrant the expenditure of the large sum of money required to bring up the stock all at once to its full limit. The climate of Raasay, where the annual rainfall sometimes exceeds 70 inches, and the average is about 62, makes arable farming where pursued as an occupation by itself, altogether unprofitable, even with the assistance of the best modern appliances for reaping and securing the crops, while low prices of farm stock and produce, occasioned by foreign competition have to be contended with just the same as by the arable farmer in more highly favoured localities.

The distance from market increases the cost of all purchases, and reduces the profits on all sales of stock or produce taken from or sent to market. The crofter or small cultivator is likewise affected by the foregoing adverse conditions and that in proportion as he relies on the produce of his land for a livelihood.

(Signed) JAMES ROSS.

51,674. Mr Gordon.—In reference to this large outlay, amounting to a very considerable sum, I think you stated in connection with the farm of Glaum that only 70 acres had been reclaimed?—Yes. It was intended to take in 200, but it proved such a losing matter that we stopped at 70 acres.

51,675. I need not ask you how that land is now occupied?—It has gone all back to the condition of nature; it would not pay the reclamation.

51,676. May I ask how long you have been connected with the island?—Eighteen years.

51,677. Then the improvements were carried out in your time?—I may tell you at once that I was averse to these improvements,—I opposed them, and it was the opinion of the manager, and Mr Wood, that carried the day there.

51,678. You have made upon a farm of 70 acres an outlay of £3942?—Yes, most unfortunately that is true.

51,679. We in this part of the country consider it rather extravagant when we go beyond eight years' rent of a farm in the erection of buildings; but I find that in this case you have only 70 acres, which I suppose you would not even in the dearest time value at more than £70 a year?—I do not value it at all.

51,680. But assuming that that is the case, that would mean that there has been an outlay of over twenty years' rent of the farm on buildings alone?—The ground upon which the expenditure was made was this. Competent parties were of opinion that about 200 acres could be taken in with advantage to the estate. They not only meant to take it in, but to drain it and put it into such a condition as to grow crops. Climatic influences were against them, and I may say the opinion was a wrong one. But that expenditure was made, and a large portion of it went into the pockets of the people in the island, as wages for work performed.

51,681. How was the land reclaimed,—by trenching or ploughing?—By trenching and draining.

51,682. Was any ploughing done there?—There was ploughing done afterwards, but not for the purposes of the reclamation.

51,683. You say that the stock has been gradually improving?—Yes, decidedly.

51,684. Is it better than it was some years ago?—Such is our opinion. The fresh blood which was imported into the country is believed to have improved the stock.

51,685. Is it not the fact that the sheep on that farm were at one time noted for their excellence?—That is quite true.

51,686. Is that the case at present?—We have had them in the market here, and got the highest prices for them.

51,687. The whole lands on the island of Raasay are at present in the hands of the proprietrix?—No, there is a large proportion of it in the hands of crofters.

51,688. The island of Rona is in the hands of crofters?—Yes, but a large portion of Raasay as well. Rona is entirely in the hands of crofters.

51,689. The best part of the island of Raasay is at present wholly in Mr Wood's own hands?—If you include the Home Farm, yes.

51,690. I include more than the farm; I include up to that neck. Does that not include almost the whole value for pastoral purposes?—I should not say the whole value, but I would say the better part.

51,691. Now, along the southern end of the island there were a good many old holdings?—Yes.

51,692. Which are at present either in ruins or unoccupied?—Well, I went over it the other day, and I could see very few traces even of foundations, but there were a number there.

51,693. The places speak for themselves: we saw a good many ruins, but the whole of the townships in the south end of the island with one or two exceptions are at present occupied as a Home Farm or as grazings by Mrs Wood?—Yes.

51,694. Do you think that any part of these lands could again be occupied profitably by crofters?—I do not think profitably; you have several elements to consider. You would have to rebuild your houses and you would have to take a certain time to bring the land into proper cultivation; and in addition to that you would have to give a bit of hill grazing as well. The arable land is limited in extent, and I hardly think a crofter would care to do it.

51,695. Was there not, at one time, a fishing population on Raasay?—As I say in my statement a great number of the tenants made their living not only by land but on the sea, by fishing.

51,696. Then in regard to the expenditure, that is a matter which may now be described as ancient history; and the profits arising from the labour have now ceased to exist?—There is no doubt that is the case, except where we made permanent improvements in the shape of roads and bridle paths which yield a return.

51,697. There are not many labourers employed on the estate at present?—No.

51,698. In fact, labour on the estate is practically stopped?—Except for domestic requirements that is so.

51,699. You say you are of opinion that this part of the island which was formerly peopled could not now be advantageously re-occupied?—No, I think not. I consider that any man of energy who is capable of going down there and erecting a house and getting a croft into cultivation would go somewhere else and get a better place. I don't think a plucky man would think of settling there.

51,700. But you know that part of the island is very much congested?—We have got about 710 of a population on the whole place.

51,701. You will also admit that there is a considerable demand for land?—That is so, all over the west coast.

51,702. Where would you send the surplus population?—Really, I think that is rather a question for the Commissioners to decide and not for me.

51,703. Do you not think that a portion of them could be accommodated on the island of Raasay?—I think it would be a mistake, first for the island of Raasay, and second for the people themselves.

51,704. Are there any harbours near the south of the island?—No. There are three harbours, one a particularly good one; Isle Tigh, Dornaguaille, Big Harbour, and Dry Harbour, at the north end of the island.

51,705. Would you suggest the advisability of forming small fishing townships in or near these places?—I think decidedly it would be a very good thing if you could improve the fishing; I think it would be the first thing that would lead to a radical benefit for the people of that island if you could improve their harbours. For one thing, I consider the very first thing that ought to be done is to improve the lighting of these harbours. At present, in the short days, fishermen are obliged to run to the ports two hours before the sun sets, simply because there are no lights to steer by after dark. If lights were put up at the various harbours, it would add two hours a day to the fishermen's time.

51,706. That is a matter that is rather outside the remit to this Commission; I have no doubt that these facilities may yet be given. But do you not think it would be possible to improve the position of a number of crofters in the north of Raasay and in the island of Rona by the construction of one or more fishing villages at the south end of Raasay?—Do I understand that you want to do away with what you call the congested places in the north and remove people to the south, making fishing stations there?

51,707. Certainly?—I would answer the first part of the question by saying that whatever relieves the congested part of the island must be improving it; but I do not know whether you could make a harbour on the south with any possibility of success. There is not a single place on the south or east that is suitable; it is one severe coast line, thoroughly exposed all the way.

51,708. Are the places you have mentioned near any part of the old arable land of the island; or is there any old arable land near them?—Do you mean the north end of the island?

51,709. Yes?—They have got arable land of their own as well as the hill land.

51,710. But going a little southwards: are any of the places you have mentioned near the centre or south of the island?—There is no possible harbour in the south.

51,711. There is a harbour in the centre, where the steamer calls?—That is not the south; it is the west. The only harbour we have is the bay of Raasay, where you land.

51,712. Is there not a bay of Hallaig?—That is further north; but they could not make a pier there, the coast line is so severe.

51,713. Would you recommend that the congestion in the northern part of the island should be relieved by the formation of fishing villages on some part of the south end?—I would recommend the construction of fishing villages where they could be made in such a place as to have the benefit of a good harbour.

51,714. If a harbour could be found for them in the south, you would recommend it?—I would.

51,715. And would you also recommend that in the cases where these crofting fishermen's townships might be formed, the holdings should be small, suited for those who follow the fishing,—I mean small fishermen's crofts?—Where would you put them exactly?

51,716. I would put them near some place where a harbour could be formed; that is the general principle. —If you take the point where the steamer calls, then you could not give them crofts, because that is surrounded by the Home Farm and all the arable land,—you have to pass through all that, and through the woods.

51,717. I could quite understand that that would be an objection: I don't want to be too specific, but to get a general answer, either an admission or a denial, that small crofts for fishermen, if they could be got, would be an advantage in the way of relieving the distress in the north end?—I quite admit that if you could get small fishing stations where each man would have a little croft, it would be a very wise proceeding.

51,718. Mr Sutherland.—I think your statement comes to this, that you would be very glad to give the people holdings, provided the present arrangements would not be touched?—Raasay is a somewhat peculiar place, and—

51,719. You have no theoretical objection to enlarging the holdings of the crofters provided the present distribution of the land were maintained,—do I fairly state your position?—I am just thinking it over for one moment.

51,720. You admitted to Mr Gordon that you would like to see the people getting larger holdings, but you objected to every proposal he made, because it would interfere with the present arrangements; is that your position?—My position is this, that if you give a crofter such an amount of ground as will take up his time very much in the working, then he cannot follow the fishing.

51,721. You stated to Mr Gordon that you would have no objection to these people getting larger holdings provided the present arrangement of the land in Raasay were left as it is?—I should have no objections to that, if the land were left as it is.

51,722. Do I correctly describe your position when I say that?—That so long as the present arrangement of land is not interfered with I have no possible objection to what you propose.

51,723. Then, of course, that amounts to this, that you want matters to be left as they are?—I think we are doing as much as we possibly can for them.

51,724. Now, I would like to ask you some questions with regard to the very interesting historical statement you have made. You stated, I think, that what happened since 1776 was within your own knowledge?—Since 1876, I said.

51,725. I thought you could speak with authority from documents regarding that period?—Oh, no. I went back beyond 1876 on documents: of course, I could not say what took place before I had anything to do with the estate.

51,726. But you quoted from documents long prior to that?—Yes, I made up information from the old ledgers, &c.; and on the subject of the destitution and the supplies and so on, I examined old witnesses and satisfied myself on the point.

51,727. Do you find any evidence of destitution that required special provision before 1847?—Well, I heard a very strange instance of how hardly the people lived, when I was there the other day, from an old inhabitant, I think it was in the case of Fearns. The people were so poor that they lived for a considerable time on limpets or shell-fish taken off the rocks, with a sprinkling of meal on it; that is all they had to eat.

51,728. Where was that?—Fearns or Leac.

51,729. When did it happen?—Previous to the destitution in 1847.

51,730. It was just a part of the destitution that was all over the country?—It was coming at that time.

51,731. That was an incident of the destitution known as the 1847 destitution?—Yes.

51,732. But you know that the destitution was general, all over the country,—it was not confined to Raasay?—No, nor to Skye; it was all over.

51,733. It was a year of destitution in Scotland and even in Ireland?—Yes.

51,734. You gave us very interesting information, with regard to the people who existed there before: but the distribution of the people on the land was very different then from what it is now?—I say so in my paper.

51,735. You did not deny that there was congestion in the island of Raasay?—There is no doubt about it, and the consequence was this proposal to emigrate.

51,736. Of course, congestion will depend upon the acreage of the land, and upon the population?—The means of supply, and the population.

51,737. There may be a large population in a small area, and yet a large area near without any people at all?—Yes.

Inverness. — James Ross.

51,738. Is not that what you have got in Raasay at present? What congestion of population is there in the south end of Raasay?—There is none in the south.

51,739. It is all in the north?—It is all in the north.

51,740. Are the people there of their own accord?—As far as I know, they are.

51,741. How can you call an island congested which has an area of 18,000 acres and a population of 700?—It depends, as far as I can see, on what the supply of the island is. Of course, if you take the whole of the Home Farm and cut it up you would doubtless make these people much more comfortable and able to earn their living; that is self-evident.

51,742. Is it not the case that congestion arises from the manner in which the population is distributed?—Partly.

51,743. I think you candidly admitted that the experiment in reclamation failed because certain things were not suitable?—Quite so.

51,744. But you can easily imagine a state of matters where experiments in reclamation could be skilfully conducted, and adapted to the circumstances?—Yes.

51,745. We had instances of the kind to-day?—But the difficulty we have is that of climate. We had splendid crops up to a certain point, but they would not ripen, owing to the climate. That was where we made the mistake.

51,746. And did it not also strike you that it was in one of the most exposed places in the island?—Yes, we found that out from experience; the steading was blown down twice before we got it up.

51,747. I think the most casual observer would have found that out?—There is no doubt about it.

51,748. But even in the island of Raasay if experiments were made in the reclamation of land with a due regard to the circumstances of the case, do you not think they would be successful?—We have not found it so. Even in our own Home Farm, which is quite close to the sea, we have always a difficulty in getting the crops ripened; it is always uncertain.

51,749. You also quoted the amount of arrears that small tenants have in the island of Raasay. Did you refer to the rents before the reductions, or after?—Both. I put in large arrears before the Commissioners reduced the rents. Only a certain proportion of the crofters went to the Commission, and we thought it was only fair to reduce the others in proportion: but still, after all that was done, the arrears have been running up again.

51,750. But still does it amount altogether to two year's rent in arrear?—No, I don't think it amounts to two years.

51,751. Does it include any arrears carried forward from the time before the reduction of rent?—No.

51,752. Are all the arrears of rent adjudicated upon by the Crofters Commission paid up?—No, there is an arrear going forward that was adjudicated upon; but a large amount was swept away; and twice, I think, in my experience, the arrears were entirely swept away by Mr Wood.

51,753. I think you said the rents of these people were reduced by the Crofters Commission to the extent of 38 per cent.?—Yes.

51,754. Had they any arrears before that?—Oh, yes, very large arrears, but we swept them off. We never pressed the people for them, but just humoured them and tried to make the most of them.

51,755. Did not the Crofters Commission order some arrears to be paid?—Yes: they only struck off a certain proportion of the arrears.

51,556. And those arrears so ordered to be paid are included in what is in arrear now?—Yes.

51,757. You spoke about the rainfall, which is a subject we have very often had before us. Can you tell me how much of your annual rainfall falls in winter and how much in summer?—No, I cannot say.

51,758. Do you see the important bearing that has on the case?—I do.

51,759. Without that information, what value do you attach to the statement of the rainfall?—Well, the climate of Raasay is naturally a moist climate.

51,760. A moist climate all the year round?—Yes.

51,761. Does not the larger proportion fall in winter and in autumn?—In spring particularly, I should think.

51,762. So the greater part of the rain falls at a time when there is no crop on the ground?—It falls pretty well over the year, as I have found to my cost pretty often.

51,763. Does not the greater part fall when the crop is not on the ground?—The greater part falls in spring.

51,764. And in winter and autumn?—Yes, and a large portion in summer too.

51,765. I was rather surprised to hear what you said regarding the inhospitable nature of the sea-coast of Raasay. Are you sure you did not over-estimate that aspect of it?—I did not intend to do so.

51,766. Did we not see some grand indentations on the west coast?—I mentioned those I knew of; there is one very fine harbour on the north end, which is considered a very good harbour of refuge.

51,767. A large amount of the expenditure on the estate you say is unremunerative?—I daresay a good deal of it could have been saved, but the object of the proprietor was to deal liberally with the people and to employ them as largely as possible.

51,768. Do you think it fair to hold the climate and the people responsible for the result?—I do not say it was altogether a wise expenditure; I say he might have saved a good deal by exercising economy.

51,769. But if that large expenditure of money were made in a way suitable to the circumstances of the island, is it not possible,—nay, is it not probable that there would be an adequate return, remunerative to both parties?—I doubt it; it is a very large sum,—£133,000 less £50,000,—upwards of £80,000.

51,770. Very well: take a smaller sum wisely spent,—would that not have been better, granting that the motive was perfectly good?—Supposing you restrict it in every way and brought tradesmen from this part of the world to do all the work, the local people would not have the benefit of the expenditure.

51,771. That is a very small detail in connection with it: but when you adduce a large expenditure of money on an estate of this size, and say that there has been no adequate return on it, is not that rather an impeachment of the system under which that was done, than the local circumstances?—My own notion is that supposing you only spent £50,000, I don't see how you can get any return for it in the shape of rent. The interest on £50,000 at 4 per cent. would be £2000 a year; and I don't see how it would be possible to get an additional return of £2000 a year by any expenditure I might make.

51,772. Supposing the money were given to the people to reclaim the land, as was done up at Loch-Garthside, and 5 per cent. charged upon it,—is not 5 per cent. a fair return?—I frankly confess to you this that if any proprietor was going to do anything for the crofters, I should like to see the crofter expend the money himself. I don't think it is wise to lend money.

51,773. But the fault that in this case there was no adequate return upon this large expenditure on the island of Raasay cannot be laid to the people at all?—No, and we did not anticipate a money return; it was not made with that object.

51,774. So that the fact that occurred here does not in any way prejudice any rational attempt that may be made?—No; nor am I imputing anything to the people.

51,775. Mr Shaw Stewart.—You were questioned about the rainfall. Is it the case that a good deal of the rain falls before the crops are reaped?—Yes.

51,776. Is that one of the drawbacks to farming in the island of Raasay?—A very great drawback. A farmer knows quite well that if it rains incessantly, the crop is injured and will not ripen. Take the case of Glaum where we manured and did everything as liberally as we could. We had magnificent crops up to a certain point, but the rain came on and everything went bad, and we had to cut the crop for fodder. Our turnips looked very well up to a certain stage, but the bulb never developed itself, simply because of the constant wet.

51,777. So that the rainfall which does the most damage is that which falls in July and August?—Yes.

51,778. Does it frequently happen that there is a heavy rainfall in those months?—Oh, yes.

51,779. Rev. Mr Maccallum.—As a matter of estate management, you did not, I think, expect a return for the outlay you made on the estate?—No; the intention was to improve as best we could, and to give the people work. Of course, there is a return in this sense that if we give them money for work done, they will pay their rent.

51,780. The expenditure was incurred not altogether to make the place more productive, but to make it more beautiful from a residential and sporting point of view?—Round about Raasay house, undoubtedly; but in Glaum there was no such intention: it was purely for the sake of getting farm supplies. That is four or five miles distant from the mansion-house.

51,781. But a great deal of the money which you have spoken of here has been spent on purposes which had nothing to do with the productiveness of the land?—That is quite true.

51,782. And which were of no permanent benefit, and sometimes just simply to give the people employment?—To some extent. For instance, we put up fences separating the various crofters' settlements; well, that did them good, for, of course, it saved them herding; and we made roadways, which also did them good. I admit that the payment was a large one.

51,783. The object of the management was not to make the expenditure productive?—I must demur to that; what we want to do is to make the best return within our means.

51,784. Now, you have by far the best land in your own hands, and still it is not half stocked?—Do you mean the sheep farms?

51,785. Yes.—But you must bear in mind that we have a certain number of deer there. We have about 100 deer altogether, and we could not have the same number of sheep and the same number of deer on a small farm. Our intention is to work up the stock by-and-bye.

51,786. But still you said the sheep reared on it fetched the highest price?—At the last two or three markets, the sales of Macdonald, Fraser & Co., we topped the market for some of them.

51,787. And still that farm is overrun with rabbits?—There is a large number of rabbits.

51,788. In fact, the island is in an insanitary condition from the dead rabbits that are to be seen all over it?—I have not seen that.

51,789. We saw the carcases ourselves when we went over the place. Do you still think it is putting the land to the best use, to allow the rabbits to run all over the island?—No, it is a mistake to do that, but you must bear in mind that we have a large amount of the rental from a shooting tenant at this moment,—it is let on a three years' shooting lease.

51,790. Then, you would not describe it as a sheep farm at all, I suppose?—Oh, yes, it is a sheep farm from which we draw supplies and sell them to the shooting tenant.

51,791. Is it mainly a sheep farm, or mainly a forest?—I give you the facts. I look upon it as a sheep farm, and also as a small forest,—the two combined.

51,792. Is it returned in the Valuation Roll as a forest?—It is returned as a shooting, not as a forest.

51,793. You have also shown this, that the best land is not with the crofters; and surely if they manage to make a living at all upon the barren island of Rona, they would make a much better living on the south of Raasay, where the good land is?—A man ought surely to make a better living on good land than on bad; that is quite undoubted.

51,794. So that it would be undoubtedly an improvement for them to be removed to Raasay?—Oh, yes; and it would be an improvement for them, I think, to come to the neighbourhood of this country.

51,795. You have made a long statement giving various reasons why there should be no interference with the present condition of affairs in Raasay; but you end with a statement which, if it can be taken as reliable, would be sufficient and would render all the rest of the statement unnecessary, for you say. 'The 'climate of Raasay where the annual rainfall sometimes 'exceeds 70 inches, and the average is about 62 inches, 'makes arable farming where pursued as an occupation 'by itself, altogether unprofitable, even with the 'assistance of the best modern appliances for reaping 'and securing the crops.' Well, of course, if the climate is so bad that no arable farming can go on, there is no need of the rest of the statement,—the climate endsthe whole thing?—We simply say that you cannot make it pay.

51,796. On account of the climate; so that you have that as one sufficient argument, making all the other arguments unnecessary?—I am simply saying that you cannot look upon arable land in Raasay as a thing that you could cultivate, and make pay, as you could look upon arable land on the east coast where the rainfall is not anything like so large.

51,797. But you say 'makes arable farming where 'pursued as an occupation by itself altogether unprofitable'?—Yes.

51,798. That is a very sweeping statement?—Yes.

51,798A. And one which, of course, does away with putting forward other reasons?—I said you must take all the circumstances into account. We have to compete with foreign production, we have to compete with transit of cattle, and these together with the climate make it unprofitable.

51,799. How can you state, as a fact, that the climate of Raasay is so much wetter than that say of Renfrew?—Well, I don't know about Renfrew.

51,800. You have heard of Greenock on the west coast?—No.

51,801. Do you not know that Greenock is noted for being wet?—No.

51,802. How much do you know of the west coast of Scotland at all? Can you compare it with any other part?—I have been going to the west coast for the last 18 or 19 years, and I have just expressed an opinion on the subject: of course, I may be wrong.

51,803. Do you know the climate in Ayrshire? Is the rainfall there much lower?—I cannot tell you.

51,804. Do you know Campbeltown and that district?—I don't know that part of the country at all so far as that is concerned, I have simply travelled through it.

51,805. Have you any reason to suppose that Raasay is wetter than these places I have mentioned where agriculture is successfully prosecuted?—I have no reason as far as that is concerned; but I found my reasoning upon the experience of the last 16 years. Our manager is the son of an Aberdeenshire farmer, and no money has been spared to make that place a success; and yet we find that he cannot work it to satisfaction, and certainly not to profit.

51,806. Don't you think some west coast men have managed to make a living by agriculture?—You are asking me a very critical question. I don't think agriculture on the west coast is in a very first class position,—I mean the cultivation of the land and ploughing it.

51,807. Then, with regard to Raasay, is not there a beautiful garden on the island?—Yes.

51,808. Where fruit is grown?—The fruit is not very successful; the apples and pears are not very successful; but it has got a large hothouse which grows beautiful grapes and hothouse flowers and vegetables: perhaps that is what you refer to. The flowers outside are of a more hardy character.

51,809. We have seen ourselves that it is quite possible to have a most beautiful garden?—Oh, so it is; I hope it is.

51,810. Mr Macleod.—I would like this question of the amount of arrears due cleared up. Would you give us first the present crofter rental of the island?—The crofter rental at last Martinmas was £262, 5s. 6d.

51,811. Then the amount of arrears?—Payments made at Martinmas last were £101, 5s., which would leave about £150 roughly.

51,812. A little more than half a year's rent?—Just about that, I should think.

Inverness. — James Ross.

51,813. Then as to the improvements at Glaum;—apart from the buildings and road-making and fencing, I think you were able to give us a figure for the reclamation of 70 acres,—what it cost actually to reclaim it. Would you kindly give the amount again?—For making roads £151, 7s.; ploughing and trenching 70 acres £482; draining ditto, including cost of drains, tiles, and carting, £592; fencing £85, 14s. 6d.

51,814. What I want to get at is the actual cost of the reclamation of the land. As you can understand, the buildings were put up for a 200 acre farm, and probably there was a considerable amount of fencing and road-making that would not have been gone about for a smaller holding?—The items for reclamation were:—

Ploughing and trenching 70 acres, . . .	£482
Draining, including cost of drain tiles and carriage, ...	592
Wages to day labourers apart from contract and piece-work, ...	462
Total, .	£1536

The wages to day labourers we paid ourselves.

51,815. For what kind of work?—I could not say without looking up the ledger.

51,816. Does the amount set down there for draining include the wages of the workmen who made the drains?—Yes, it does.

51,817. Roughly, the land cost £1000 for ploughing, trenching, and draining, or about £15 per acre?—Yes.

51,818. That is not an excessive sum for the reclamation of land?—Not putting it that way.

51,819. Did you give us the present sheep stock?—Yes, 1700.

51,820. What would you say is the full stocking?—We paid for 3500 when we went in.

51,821. Then is the difference repaid by the deer you have upon the ground?—At this moment it is. I don't say that we might not put a larger sheep stock on it; I think possibly we could.

51,822. How many stags are shot annually?—Eighteen; I have been told there are about 50 stags and the rest hinds, making up nearly 100 between them on the island altogether.

51,823. So that the difference between 1700 sheep and 3500 is represented by 100 deer?—Actually it is; but I did not say we could not put more sheep stock on; I simply say that is a part of the consideration.

51,824. Can you tell us how many rabbits are killed annually?—Last year about 9000, and one former year about 11,000.

51,825. So that you would have to take into account their food as well?—No doubt; they eat up what would otherwise go to the sheep.

51,826. Then, I suppose, it is not open to argument but that the southern portion of the island is better than the northern?—No doubt it is; it looks better, at any rate, and I have no doubt it is. We have got all our policies and our Home Farm as good as we can possibly make them, and naturally we would have chosen, or the people before us would have chosen as good a place as possible.

51,827. Then with regard to growing a crop on the Home Farm, do you find any difficulty in getting it to ripen?—Yes. Some years we do very well indeed, but other years we have difficulty,—we make the best of it by housing it and leaving it open to the air and doing what we can; but we have to import an immense quantity of hay and everything we want from the east country.

51,828. You have heard of variable seasons in other parts?—Yes. They have had a bad time of it this year here.

51,829. But on the whole would you say that there are very fair crops grown on the Home Farm?—Fair crops, yes.

51,830. Mr Munro.—Going back for a moment to this question of the reclamation of land on the farm of Glaum, I think you stated that the late Mr Wood expended a sum of £3942 in trying to reclaim land which resulted in failure?—Yes.

Inverness. — James Ross.

51,831. I suppose that the deduction you make from that is, and you wish us also to infer from it, that similar results would attend the attempt to reclaim land by crofters?—Of course, that is the contention.

51,832. The late Mr Wood bore the reputation, and I believe justly so of being a very generous man, and I suppose he would be governed by the same generous principles in his well-meant efforts to reclaim this land?—Yes, and I would add this much more, that it has always been the wish both of Mr and Mrs Wood to do everything that could possibly be done to promote the happiness and welfare of the people in the island, and anything that they ask, if reasonable, is granted.

51,833. So that, to a large extent, the reclamation works were entered upon to provide a certain number of people with employment?—Largely.

51,834. Were these reclamations carried on in your time as Commissioner?—Yes, under Mr Stewart who is present.

51,835. But, I suppose, I may take it that supposing similar works had been done by the crofters themselves at their own expense, more thrifty methods would have governed them?—I have not the slightest doubt about that; that is self-evident.

51,836. But the sum total of this experiment of yours in the farm of Glaum is this, that after spending that large sum of money you have allowed the land to go back into a wild state?—That is so.

51,837. So that if the reclamation of the land had cost you as many pence as it has cost you thousands of pounds the position would have been exactly the same?—That is so. [Mr Sutherland.—Is the pasture not better?—It is better at this moment, but it is going back to the exact position it was in before we touched it.]

51,838. How do the crops ripen in the island of Raasay?—Sometimes we get on very well; at other times it is a very anxious and uncertain matter. It gets wet, and the turnips and the crop get bad, and we have sometimes to use a portion of it as fodder instead of threshing it out.

51,839. I think you said that you had 76 crofters in all, on the island?—Yes, about that number.

51,840. Have any of these crofters themselves ever made application to you or to the late Mr Wood to increase the size of their holdings?—Not to me; I do not remember any case of it. I have had an application made when I was collecting rents—I cannot remember by whom—for an increased hill grazing, but that is the only case I can remember. It comes back to my mind that such an application was made, but I do not remember the name. The manager informs me that no such application was ever received.

51,841. Do the same cordial relations exist between the proprietrix of the island as formerly existed under the late Mr Wood?—Oh yes.

51,842. Supposing that these crofters made application to Mrs Wood for more land, do you think she would be disposed to comply with the request, provided she thought it would be attended with advantage to themselves, and not disadvantageous to her?—I have not the slightest doubt she would give her very favourable consideration.

51,843. Do many of the crofters on the island follow the fishing?—Nominally they do, but they do not really work very hard at it. They have so many local difficulties that I always feel inclined to excuse them. We have no telegraphic communication; sometimes it is so stormy that a steamer cannot land passengers for days. These men are living in an out-of-the-way place; supposing there is good fishing at one point they may not know for a week afterwards, whereas if they had telegraphic communication they would know of it immediately. Their work is thus rendered very uncertain, and they must just find out as best they can where to go.

51,844. You say you have no telegraphic communication. Have you ever tried to get it?—Three times we applied to Government for it. There was a man sent down two years ago, who laid out a scheme of telegraphic communication, but nothing further was done. Mr Wood was very anxious indeed to have the communication established, both on account of the facilities for fishing, and because there is no resident doctor in the island. When Mr Wood came first, he made a bargain with a medical man in Portree to come to the island once a week, and paid him £50 for this, without any charge to the people.

51,845. So that the lack of telegraphic communication operates against the prosecution of the fishing industry?—It puts it to serious disadvantages.

51,846. Do you think the crofters can pay attention to the crofts and follow the fishing successfully at the same time?—No; I think a man must be either a fisherman or a crofter.

51,847. The Chairman.—How many crofters are in Rona as distinct from Raasay?—About sixteen.

51,848. The arable part of their holdings consists largely of discontiguous patches, pockets in the rock?—Yes.
